which we have under consideration it appears that O'Connor assigned his claim to West solely for the purpose of collection. In his evidence, O'Connor admitted this, at the same time stating that the arrangement was that West was to receive for making the collection 20 per cent of the amount thereof. It is true the court in which suit was brought by West had jurisdiction of the garnishee, which operated its line of railroad as well in Iowa as Nebraska, and that, therefore, the amount was lost to Walter, beyond recovery, as against the garnishee. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Moore, 81 Neb. 629. But why should this operate in favor of O'Connor, who was the prime mover in this garnishment proceeding? In all respects the deprivation of this exemption was as harsh and effectual as in the case of Albrecht v. Treitschke, supra. Let us suppose the exemption was of a specific article of personal property. It would be unquestioned that, if he appropriated it to his own use in this state, O'Connor would be liable to Walter for its value. Instead of its being appropriated in this state, let us suppose that this property was found and appropriated by O'Connor in Iowa. Would his liability for its value in the courts of Nebraska be in any way modified by that fact? Would it at all relieve of liability for him to show that his duly-authorized agent in Iowa converted the property to the use of O'Connor? Certainly not; and there is no appreciable difference, in principle, between the cases supposed and that at bar. If the judgment creditor, directly or indirectly,—no matter where, or by what process,—appropriates to to the payment of a debt due him the exempt wages of a debtor, without such debtor's consent, such creditor is liable to the debtor entitled to such exemption to the full amount of the misappropriation. In this case, however, it was urged that the judgment of the Iowa court was res judicata, and therefore unassailable. An estoppel of that, as well as of any other, nature, requires mutuality between the parties to render it effective. If O'Connor is entitled to the benefit of the judgment pleaded it must appear that a judgment against him would have been likewise binding. This could not have been, for, purposely, he was not a party to the Iowa proceeding, in any way.

Under the proofs no other verdict could properly have been returned than that which was rendered, and the judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

The other Commissioners concur.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

FIDELITY & DEPOSIT CO., of Maryland, Appt.,
v.

Hanson H. HAINES et al.

(.....Md.....)

1. A deed in trust for the benefit of creditors vests the title of personal property in the trustee, under Code, art. 16, § 206, when the deed is recorded and the bond filed in the county in which the grantor resides; and such title is not affected by the fact that the bond is subsequently filed in another county in which real estate of the grantor is located.
2. A counterclaim existing against the assignor cannot be interposed to a claim arising in favor of the assignee after an assignment for the benefit of creditors.
3. A note given for the purchase price of chattels is not a good set-off against a demand by the maker's assignee for creditors upon the seller for damages for wrongfully replevying the chattels after they had passed into his possession.

(January 12, 1894.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court of Baltimore City in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to enforce defendant's alleged liability as surety on a replevin bond, the condition of which had been broken. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. F. C. Slingluff for appellant.

Messrs. E. H. Gans and B. H. Haman for appellees.

Briscoe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellees sued the appellant, a corporation, in this state, in an action of debt, as surety on a replevin bond. The following facts arise on the pleadings: On the 1st of December, 1889, the Bolton Mines Company of Baltimore city, sold a certain lot of fertilizers or phosphates to the Waring Manufacturing Company, of Cecil county, Md. The goods were delivered, and a note, dated the 15th of March, 1890, was executed and delivered for the contract price. Afterwards, on the 23d of May, 1890, the latter company, being financially embarrassed, made a deed of trust to the appellees for the benefit of creditors. This deed of trust was recorded in Cecil county, the place of domicile of the corporation, and the bond of assignees filed on May 30, 1890, in the same county. On the 9th of June following, the Bolton Mines Company replevied the identical goods of the appellees, and took possession of them. The replevin suit was not prosecuted with effect, or the property returned, but was dismissed by order of the plaintiff in the replevin suit; and this action was brought against the appellant, as surety on the replevin bond.

NOTE.—The right of set-off between an insolvent's obligation and a claim in the hands of his assignee for creditors is shown in a note to Merrill v. Cape Ann Granite Co. (Mass.) ante, 313. That note does not include cases like the present in 28 L. R. A.

which the claim of the assignee is one which has arisen since the assignment. The decision in the present case states the doctrine generally accepted in respect to this latter class of cases.

The questions to be passed upon by us arise upon demurrers and exceptions to the various prayers. It is contended upon the part of the appellant that, when the fertilizers were replevied, on the 9th of June, 1890, the appellers had no title to them, because, while the deed of trust was recorded in Baltimore city on the 5th of June, 1890, the assignee's bond was not filed there until the 11th of June, two days after the goods had been replevied. This contention can be disposed of by a single reference. In the case of Stiefel v. Barton, 73 Md. 411, we passed upon the identical question, and in construing the 205th section of article 16 of the Code, which provides "that every trustee to whom any estate, real, personal, or mixed, shall be conveyed for the benefit of creditors, . . ." there said that a deed conveying real property for the benefit of creditors must be recorded in the county or counties, or in the city of Baltimore, in which the land lies; and, if it conveys personal property, it must be recorded in the county or city in which the grantor resides. We said also that, as the property in dispute in Barton's Case was personal property, the deed ought to have been recorded in the county where the grantor resided, and the bond of the trustee ought to have been filed with the clerk of that county for his approval; and until the deed was so recorded, and the bond of the trustee so filed, no title to the property could vest in the trustee. There can be no question, then, that as the deed of trust in the case now under consideration was recorded, and the bond of the trustees was approved and filed in Cecil county, the place of the domicile of the grantor prior to the issuing of the writ of replevin, and in the absence of fraud in the sale, which charge is abandoned by the appellant, the legal title to the personal property of the Waring Manufacturing Company passed to the trustees, under the deed of assignment, and the taking of this property was a wrongful and unlawful interference with the possession of the assignees. The subsequent recording of the deed and filing of the bond in Baltimore city was manifestly for the purpose of passing title to the real estate, and could in no wise affect the title to the personal estate. The demurrer, therefore, to the defendant's third plea, which raised this question, was properly sustained. Wilson v. Carson, 12 Md. 77; Stiefel v. Barton, supra.

We come now to the second question in the case,—that is, the appellant claims to recoup or set off against the plaintiffs' demand the amount of the note made by their assignor, which demand arose out of matters altogether subsequent thereto. It is well settled that recoupment is a species of common-law set-off for damages due the defendant growing out of the same transaction, and is allowed in this state, in actions both ex contractu and ex delicto, in order to avoid circuity and multiplicity of actions. Baltimore Marine Ins. Co. v. Dalrymple, 25 Md. 309; Dowler v. Cushman, 27 Md. 387; Warfield v. Booth, 33 Md. 63. And while it is true that an assignee for the benefit of creditors stands in the place of the assignor, and is merely such for the payment of pre-existing creditors, and takes the property under the assignment subject to all existing equities, yet it is clear that a liability subsequent to the assignment cannot be set off against the assignee. Burrill, Assignm. § 403. The reason of this is that the assignee, in virtue of the assignment, becomes a trustee for the creditors. The status of the assignors, debtors, and creditors is fixed by the assignment in trust for the creditors. The case of Seldner v. Smith, 40 Md. 602, relied on by the appellant, is entirely distinguishable from this case. The principle recognized and applied in that case was that, a replevin bond being one of indemnity only, a surety on said bond is entitled to be subrogated to the right of his principal, and to avail himself of the same defenses which were open to him. In Seldner's Case the plaintiff was the party to whom the goods had been sold, and the title had not passed to a third party, as, in this case, to an assignee for the benefit of creditors. The claims were mutual, and arose out of the same transaction; whereas, in the case at bar, the liability on the bond arises out of transactions subsequent to the assignment, and for a claim also subsequent thereto. In Thompson v. Whitmarsh, 160 N. Y. 35, it was held that upon new contracts made by an executor or administrator, and never existing in favor of the decedent, but growing out of the dealing of the former alone, a debt against the decedent cannot be made the subject of a counterclaim. And the same rule has been established by this court in the cases of Scott v. Scott, 17 Md. 78, and Schwabenberg v. Jennings, 43 Md. 554. To sustain the contention of the appellant would destroy the principle of equality among creditors in the settlement of insolvent estates, and establish an inequitable preference in the administration of estates, entirely at war with the established doctrine of this court.

For the reasons we have stated, the demurrers to the pleas were properly sustained. The plaintiff's first prayer fairly submitted to the jury the finding of every fact essential to their right to recover, and was properly granted. The second prayer relates to the measure of damages, and was correct. The third prayer was conceded. The defendant's first prayer, relating to the recoupment and set-off, was properly rejected, for the reasons we have heretofore given. The third prayer, in reference to the measure of damages, was fully covered by the plaintiffs' third prayer, which was correct. The rulings of the court below will therefore be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

CHICAGO & NORTHWESTERN R. CO.,
Plf. in Err.,

E. H. PRESCOTT.

(59 Fed. Rep. 287.)

1. One attempting to cross a railroad track at a street crossing is not, as matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence because the rear end of a train occupies all but fourteen feet of the width of the driveway, where other vehicles have safely passed through and he is driving an old and gentle horse not in the habit of jumping or shying when in proximity to engines, and is invited by the flagman to make the crossing.
2. The doctrine of voluntary assumption of a risk as distinguished from contributory negligence does not apply to the case of one passing along a highway partially obstructed by a railroad train projecting across it.
3. It cannot be held as a matter of law that a person who travels over a defective street with knowledge of the defects therein or who drives by an obvious obstruction in a public thoroughfare, thereby assumes the risk of injury and is precluded from recovering against one who is responsible for the defect or who has negligently caused the obstruction. He is not deprived of the right to recover unless in view of all the circumstances he failed to exercise that degree of care which persons under similar circumstances ordinarily exercise and was guilty of contributory negligence.
4. A license to lay a railroad track across a street in a large city or town does not carry with it the right to use the crossing for the purpose of standing trains of cars thereon for such period as suits the convenience of the railroad company or to use the highway as a depot-yard.
5. A railroad company which assumes to stop a train across a public street in a large town or city without express authority for so doing must be prepared to show, as against one who has sustained a special injury by the obstruction of the street, that there was some overweighing necessity rendering the blockade justifiable, especially where the street is heavily burdened with traffic.
6. The issue as to whether a street was rightfully obstructed by a railroad train should be submitted to the jury if the circumstances attending the blockade are such that reasonable persons might entertain different views as to whether the action of the company was justifiable or not.
7. It is not a valid excuse for the obstruction of a street by a railroad train that the depot of the company is located at the corner of that and another street and that trains coming from one direction and halted at the station will necessarily project to some extent into the street as it is the company's duty so to locate its depot that trains can be stopped thereat without obstructing travel on the public thoroughfare.

8. The sudden shying of a horse driven past the rear end of a train projecting into and obstructing a highway cannot be regarded as the sole proximate cause of the injury occasioned by the wagon coming into contact with the rear car and throwing the driver to the ground, but the obstruction directly contributes to the accident.

(December 4, 1903.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Iowa to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Caldwell and Sanborn, Circuit Judges, and Thayer, District Judge.

Messrs. N. M. Hubbard, N. M. Hubbard, Jr., and F. F. Dawley, for plaintiff in error:

The question of proximate cause is one of law for the court, and the court should have held that the presence of the car was not the cause of the injury. It was merely a condition—its presence rendered such an injury possible, but it did not cause it. The cause was plaintiff's attempt to drive through and the sudden swerving of the horse to one side.

Gerhard v. Bates, 2 El. & Bl. 400; Scheffer v. Washington City, V. M. & G. S. R. Co. 105 U. S. 249, 28 L. ed. 1070; Williams v. Central Railroad of Iowa, 43 Iowa, 396; Sikes v. Sheldon, 58 Iowa, 744.

Plaintiff knew and understood the situation, and he must be held to have known whatever dangers were likely to be incurred in attempting to cross.

He took the chances, with full knowledge of all the dangers, when there was no necessity or urgency to excuse him.

It will not excuse him to say that men of ordinary prudence might do the same thing, or that ordinarily no accident would happen.

Hickey v. Boston & L. R. Co. 14 Allen, 429.

One who knowingly drives upon an obstruction in a highway and is injured cannot recover.

Butterfield v. Forrester, 11 East, 60; Beach, Contrib. Neg. 2d ed. § 9; Yahn v. Ottumwa, 60 Iowa, 429; Tuffree v. State Center, 57 Iowa, 538; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Hutchinson, 39 Kan. 485; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 81 Ind. 264; Whitney v. Maine Central R. Co. 69 Me. 208; Goldstein v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 46 Wis. 404; Hill v. Tionesta Twp. 146 Pa. 11; Pittsburgh Southern R. Co. v. Taylor, 104 Pa. 806.

Messrs. Charles A. Clark and John C. Leonard, for defendant in error:

A railroad company must use the streets with due regard for the rights of the public.

Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Converse, 189 U. S. 469, 35 L. ed. 216; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 10 U. S. App. 473, 58 Fed. Rep. 219.

NOTE.—While the questions of negligence and contributory negligence at railroad crossings arising in endless variations of circumstances are most often in respect to collisions with running trains, the present case is one of a kind quite likely to occur. As to liability for obstruction of crossings see note to Sellick v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (Mich.) 18 L. R. A. 154.

Public highways, from side to side and end to end, belong to the public.

State v. Berdette, 78 Ind. 193.

The construction of a railway merely across a highway without proper authority constitutes an obstruction for which the company is liable to indictment.

Com. v. Nashua & L. R. Corp. 3 Gray, 54; Com. v. Old Colony & F. River R. Co. 14 Gray, 98; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Reich, 101 Ill. 157; State v. Troy & B. R. Co. 57 Vt. 144; Nanning v. Osborne, 102 N. Y. 441.

Grants against the public are strictly construed.

Rauch v. Lloyd, 31 Pa. 358, 72 Am. Dec. 747; Murray v. South Carolina R. Co. 10 Rich. L. 227, 70 Am. Dec. 219.

They have no right to use the street as a freight yard.

Gahagan v. Boston & L. R. Co. 1 Allen, 190, 79 Am. Dec. 724.

A railway company has no right to leave its hand-cars within the limits of its right of way at the side of a highway.

Pittsburgh, B. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sponier, 85 Ind. 165; Vers v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 28 U. C. C. P. 148; Brownell v. Troy & B. R. Co. 55 Vt. 218. See also Jones v. Housatonic R. Co. 107 Mass. 261; Rez v. Russell, 6 East, 427; People v. Cunningham, 1 Denio, 524, 48 Am. Dec. 709; Rez v. Jones, 3 Campb. 280; State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 4 L. R. A. 298, 77 Iowa, 443; State v. Morris & E. R. Co. 25 N. J. L. 441; Duffy v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 82 Wis. 375; Roberts v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 Wis. 684; State v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 35 Minn. 131, 59 Am. Rep. 318; Cooke v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 183 Mass. 185; Manley v. St. Helen's Canal & R. Co. 2 Hurlst. & N. 840; English v. New Haven & N. Co. 82 Conn. 241; Cohen v. New York, 4 L. R. A. 406, 118 N. Y. 532; Bussian v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 56 Wis. 325; Young v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 56 Mich. 430; Ogle v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 3 Houst. (Del.) 287; Foshay v. Glen Haven, 25 Wis. 288, 3 Am. Rep. 78; Corey v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 82 Minn. 457.

An unlawful obstruction or defect in a highway is the proximate cause of injury, even where a horse becomes unmanageable and runs away, if such defect directly contributes to the injury.

Manderschid v. Dubuque, 25 Iowa, 110; Palmer v. Andover, 3 Cush. 600; Hinckley v. Somerset, 145 Mass. 320; Titus v. Northbridge, 97 Mass. 258, 98 Am. Dec. 91; Clark v. Lebanon, 63 Me. 393; Aldrich v. Gorham, 77 Me. 287; Houfe v. Fulton, 29 Wis. 297, 9 Am. Rep. 568; Allen v. Hancock, 16 Vt. 280; Winship v. Enfield, 42 N. H. 197; Baldwin v. Greenwoods Turnp. Co. 40 Conn. 238, 14 Am. Rep. 38; Burg v. Cohoes, 77 N. Y. 83, 83 Am. Rep. 574; Hull v. Kansas, 54 Mo. 601, 14 Am. Rep. 487; Hey v. Philadelphia, 81 Pa. 44, 22 Am. Rep. 733; Pittsburgh v. Grier, 23 Pa. 54, 60 Am. Dec. 65; Sherwood v. Hamilton, 37 U. C. Q. B. 410; Bassett v. St. Joseph, 55 Mo. 295, 14 Am. Rep. 446; Aurora v. Pulfer, 56 Ill. 275; Langworthy v. Green Twp. 95 Mich. 95.

If the locus in quo was a highway, there can be no doubt, under the evidence, that the standing car was an unlawful obstruction, and that this was the proximate cause of the injury.

Skjeggerud v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 88 Minn. 56; Andrews v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. 77 Iowa, 672; Powell v. Deveney, 3 Cush. 305, 50 Am. Dec. 788, citing Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29; Peterson v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 64 Mich. 621.

It is only when the inference of negligence, or the absence of it, is necessarily deducible from the undisputed facts and circumstances proved that the court is justified in taking the case from the jury.

Hoye v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 63 Wis. 672, 67 Wis. 14; Greany v. Long Island R. Co. 101 N. Y. 419; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Hutchinson, 120 Ill. 587; Pennsylvania Co. v. Frana, 112 Ill. 405; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Killips, 88 Pa. 405; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 606, 36 L. ed. 893; Jones v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 128 U. S. 448, 32 L. ed. 478; Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 4 8, 36 L. ed. 485; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Pollock, Torts, p. 381; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Foley, 10 U. S. App. 587, 53 Fed. Rep. 459; Chaffee v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 104 Mass. 114.

The fact is of importance that he was invited to pass over the crossing by defendant's flagman.

Staley v. London, B. & S. Coast R. Co. L. R. 1 Exch. 21; North Eastern R. Co. v. Wainless, L. R. 7 H. L. 12; Lunt v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 1 Q. B. 277; Warren v. Fitchburg R. Co. 8 Allen, 280, 85 Am. Dec. 700; Sweeney v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 10 Allen, 877, 87 Am. Dec. 644; Chaffee v. Boston & L. R. Corp. supra; Wheelock v. Boston & A. R. Co. 105 Mass. 208; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Sikre, 96 Ill. 162; State v. Boston & M. R. Co. 80 Me. 430; Cincinnati, O. C. & I. R. Co. v. Schneider, 45 Ohio St. 878; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Clogh, 184 Ill. 563; Peck v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 57 Mich. 8; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Fyndt, 78 Ind. 373, 41 Am. Rep. 580; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Killips, supra; Ernst v. Hudson River R. Co. 35 N. Y. 9, 90 Am. Dec. 761; Kissenger v. New York & H. R. Co. 56 N. Y. 538; Beisiegel v. New York Cent. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 638, 90 Am. Dec. 741; McGovern v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 67 N. Y. 417; Dolan v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 71 N. Y. 285; Casey v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 78 N. Y. 522; Buchanan v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 75 Iowa, 393.

Under all of the circumstances, it is perfectly idle and preposterous to claim that the alleged question of contributory negligence should not have been submitted to the jury.

Bussian v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 56 Wis. 325; Bryant v. Randolph, 133 N. Y. 70; Eddy v. Powell, 4 U. S. App. 259, 49 Fed. Rep. 814; Corey v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 82 Minn. 457; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Kitley, 118 Ind. 152; Peterson v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 64 Mich. 621; Gereke v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 57 Mich. 589; Skjeggerud v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 88 Minn. 56; Young v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 56 Mich. 430; Continental Imp. Co. v. Stead, 95 U. S. 165, 24 L. ed. 406.

Thayer, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a writ of error to reverse a judgment which was recovered by the defendant in error in a suit brought by him against the Chicago & Northwestern Railway Company. The facts on which the recovery was predicated are not in dispute, and they are, substantially, as follows: The defendant company maintains and operates a double track railroad through the city of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and for some distance within the limits of that city its tracks are laid in and along Fourth street, and across First avenue, at the point where Fourth street crosses that avenue. The passenger depot of the defendant company is located at the southwest corner of First avenue and Fourth street. On the morning of April 4, 1890, the plaintiff, with his two sons, was driving down First avenue, towards Fourth street, in a one horse delivery wagon. As they approached the railroad crossing on Fourth street, they found the street partially blockaded by one of the defendant company's west-bound passenger trains, which had recently arrived from the east. First avenue, at that point, is about 80 feet wide, from curb to curb; but so much of the street was taken up by the standing passenger train that it only left a roadway about 14 feet in width between the rear end of the train and the east sidewalk, for the passage of vehicles. After the plaintiff reached the crossing, he halted on the north side of the train for a few moments, whereupon the defendant company's flagman, who was standing on the track at the rear end of the train, said: "Hurry up. Come on. You are all right." The gates across First avenue were at the time elevated, and several vehicles that were going in the same direction as the plaintiff had already crossed the tracks in safety. The engine of the passenger train was detached therefrom, and had moved to an adjoining track to take up a mail car which was to be coupled to the train; and a switch engine was standing on the same track as the passenger train, at the rear end thereof, and about 40 or 50 feet distant from the rear car. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff attempted to cross the tracks by the narrow roadway at the rear end of the train. While making such attempt, his horse, for some reason, suddenly shied to the right, bringing the wagon in contact with the buffers of the rear car. By reason of the sudden shock, plaintiff was thrown from his seat to the ground, and sustained serious injuries, for which a jury awarded him damages in the sum of $1,500.

It is contended by the defendant company that as the plaintiff had an unobstructed view of the entire situation at the time he attempted to cross the tracks, and as the situation was not altered before the accident happened by any act of the defendant company, he should be held to have voluntarily assumed whatever risk was incurred in making the crossing, and should also be adjudged guilty of contributory negligence. These propositions were submitted to the trial court in the form of instructions, and its refusal to so charge constitutes one of the errors complained of. In view of all of the circumstances to which we have ad-verted, we find ourselves unable to hold, as a matter of law, that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. The passageway at the rear end of the train was wide enough to permit a team to be driven through, with ordinary safety. Other vehicles had passed through before the plaintiff attempted to cross the tracks. The plaintiff testified that the horse which he was driving was an old and gentle horse, that had been driven about the city for seven or eight years by himself for the purpose of delivering groceries, and was not in the habit of jumping or shying when in proximity to cars or engines. Moreover, the plaintiff was invited by the defendant's flagman to make the crossing, which was an assurance that the train would not be immediately moved, and that the crossing could be made in safety. Under these circumstances, it was clearly the duty of the trial court to submit the question of contributory negligence to the determination of the jury. In other words, on the state of facts disclosed by the record, the plaintiff's attempt to cross the tracks on the occasion in question cannot be said to have been attended by such obvious dangers to life or limb that all reasonable men would declare him to have been guilty of culpable negligence. Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Ives, 144 U. S. 408, 36 L. ed. 485; Hoge v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 62 Wis. 673; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Killips, 88 Pa. 405; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Hutchinson, 120 Ill. 587; North Eastern R. Co. v. Wanless, L. R. 7 H. L. 12; Wheelock v. Boston & A. R. Co. 105 Mass. 203; Eddy v. Powell, 49 Fed. Rep. 814, 4 U. S. App. 259.

With reference to the further contention of counsel,—that the plaintiff voluntarily assumed the risk of crossing the tracks, and should be precluded from recovering on that ground,—it seems sufficient to say that the rule invoked has no application to the present case. As the jury found that the plaintiff exercised ordinary care and circumspection in attempting to drive around the rear end of the train, the railway company is not released from liability for an injury occasioned by a negligent obstruction of the street, which rendered plaintiff's act necessary, merely because the plaintiff had full knowledge of the situation when he undertook to make the crossing. The doctrine of "voluntary assumption of a risk," as distinguished from contributory negligence, is generally applied in cases arising between employer and employé, where an employé, without any valid excuse for so doing, voluntarily undertakes to work with a tool or an appliance which is known to be defective, and by so doing assumes the risk of getting hurt, and thereby releases his employer from liability. It is no doubt true, as a general proposition, that a person is not entitled to claim compensation for an injury which he has sustained by voluntarily encountering a known danger, which there was no occasion to encounter, and that might as well have been avoided. But this general proposition must be accepted with the qualification that where one negligently places an obstruction in a public street, which occasions an injury to a traveler upon the highway, he will not be absolved from liability to the injured party merely by showing that the latter had knowledge of the obstruction before the injury was sustained. In all such cases, to relieve the wrongdoer from liability for the injury, it must be made to appear that the injured party failed to exercise ordinary care in attempting to pass by the obstruction at all, or in the manner in which the attempt was made. The streets and sidewalks of large towns and cities are frequently obstructed to some extent, and it is not an uncommon occurrence to find defects therein. People who reside in such places often have occasion to travel over defective streets, and to drive around temporary obstructions that are found in the public thoroughfares; and they cannot be expected to refrain altogether from using a street which they find it convenient or necessary to use, because it is not as safe as it might be, or wholly free from obstructions. In a given case the circumstances may be such as to justify a man in attempting to drive over a defective street, or past an obstruction therein, though in so doing he incurs some risk. It cannot be held, therefore, as a matter of law, that a person who travels over a defective street, with knowledge of the defects therein, or who drives by an obvious obstruction in a public thoroughfare, thereby assumes the risk of injury, and is precluded from recovering against one who is responsible for the defect, or who has negligently caused the obstruction. The better view is that a person is not deprived of the right to recover damages, in such cases, unless it be made to appear that, in view of all the circumstances, he failed to exercise that degree of care which persons under similar circumstances ordinarily exercise, and was therefore guilty of contributory negligence. Monongahela Bridge Co. v. Bevard (Pa.) 11 Atl. Rep. 575; Kendall v. Albia, 78 Iowa, 241; Millcreek Twp. v. Perry (Pa.) 12 Atl. Rep. 149; Dewire v. Bailey, 181 Mass. 169, 41 Am. Rep. 219; Montgomery v. Wright, 73 Ala. 411, 47 Am. Rep. 423; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Gascamp, 69 Tex. 545; Spearbracher v. Larrabee, 64 Wis. 573, 578; Kelly v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 9 N. Y. Supp. 90; Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 87. From what has been said, it follows that no error was committed by the circuit court in refusing the several instructions to which we have heretofore referred.

It is next insisted that the trial court erred in refusing to charge, as it was requested to do, that there was no evidence that the railway company "unnecessarily blocked the crossing, nor for an unreasonable or unlawful length of time." In support of this contention, it is claimed that the court should have declared, as a matter of law, that under the circumstances disclosed by the testimony the railway company had an undoubted right to obstruct travel on First avenue for the length of time that it appears to have occupied the crossing on the morning of the accident, and that there was no evidence tending to show that the company was guilty of any fault or neglect. It is not claimed, however, and the record does not disclose, that there was any local law or ordinance of the city of Cedar Rapids, then in force, which permitted the company to halt its trains on First avenue, or to occupy the crossing for any greater length of time than would ordinarily be consumed in moving a train of cars across the street. The contention on the part of the railway company that it had the right to stop its trains on the crossing, and to temporarily obstruct travel, seems to be founded altogether on the fact that it had been authorized to lay its tracks for the movement of its trains in and along Fourth street and across First avenue. But as the streets of a city are primarily designed for the use of persons who have occasion to pass over them, either on foot or with vehicles, it cannot be inferred that a license to lay a railway track across a street in a large city or town carries with it the right to use the crossing for the purpose of standing trains of cars thereon for such period as happens to suit the convenience of the railway company, or to use the highway as a depot yard. We would not be understood as holding that a railway company cannot, under any circumstances, lawfully halt a train across a public thoroughfare, over which it has been permitted to lay its tracks, so as to obstruct travel thereon. A case might be supposed where it would, no doubt, be justified in so doing. But when a railway company assumes to stop a train across a public street in a large town or city, without express authority for so doing, it must be prepared to show, as against one who has sustained a special injury by the obstruction of the street,—especially if it is a street that is heavily burdened with traffic,—that there was some overweighing necessity which rendered the blockade justifiable. And, according to well established rules, the issue as to whether a street was rightfully obstructed, should be submitted to the jury, if the circumstances attending the blockade are such that reasonable persons might entertain different views as to whether the action of the company was justifiable. Gahagan v. Boston & L. R. Co. 1 Allen, 190, 79 Am. Dec. 724.

In the case at bar the evidence tended to show that First avenue, where it is crossed by the defendant company's tracks, was more heavily burdened with traffic than any other street in the city of Cedar Rapids. The blockade occurred in the daytime, during business hours, and may have lasted six or seven minutes, and possibly longer. The engine of the passenger train had stopped in front of the depot, a short distance east of a switch, so that it might move through the switch to an adjoining track, and pick up a mail car. This left the rear end of the train on the crossing, which it effectually blockaded for some 60 or 70 feet. In view of these facts, we are not prepared to say that all reasonable persons would necessarily conclude that the railway company was without fault; that it exercised its right of transit across the street in a reasonable manner, and with due regard for the rights of the public. It seems to have been using the highway, when the accident occurred, as a depot yard,—to stand its cars, and to make up its train,—and it can hardly be contended that, under a license to lay its tracks across the street, it could lawfully devote the highway to such uses. Nor was it a valid excuse for the obstruction of the street that the depot had been located at the corner of Fourth street and First avenue, and that trains coming from the east, when halted at the station, would necessarily project to some extent into the avenue. It was the defendant's duty to so locate its depot that trains could be halted thereat without obstructing travel on the public thoroughfares, and it cannot plead the faulty location of its depot or switches as a justification for incommoding the public. State v. Morris & E. R. Co. 25 N. J. L. 441; State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 77 Iowa, 448, 4 L. R. A. 298; Jones v. Housatonic R. Co. 107 Mass. 264.

We are therefore constrained to hold that the issue concerning the negligence of the railway company was properly submitted to the jury, and that no error was committed in refusing the instructions to which we have last above referred.

With respect to the suggestion that the injuries complained of were immediately occasioned by the sudden shying of the horse which the plaintiff was driving, it is only necessary to say that the shying of the horse cannot be regarded as the sole, proximate cause of the injury. The obstruction which had been placed in the highway directly contributed to the accident, and the jury was justified in so finding. Andrews v. Mason City & Ft. D. R. Co. 77 Iowa, 672; Skjeggerud v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 88 Minn. 56; Corey v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 82 Minn. 457.

The result is that the judgment of the Circuit Court must be affirmed, with costs; and it is so ordered.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (In Banc).

William T. HICKMAN, Respt.,

v.

CITY OF KANSAS, Appt.

(.....Mo.....)

1. A constitutional provision that property shall not be damaged for public use without compensation is self-enforcing.

2. A statutory remedy for a constitutional right to damages in a condemnation case cannot be made exclusive, where the owner of the property is given no power to initiate such proceeding or to enforce payment after the damages are assessed.

3. Damage occasioned by establishing a grade in a street on first raising the grade above the natural surface, as well as damage by

NOTE.—Damage to abutting owner by first grading and improvement of street.

Prior to the existence of constitutional or statutory provisions upon the subject the rule had become firmly established that in the absence of negligence or trespass a city could change the grade of its streets at pleasure without liability to abutting owners for the consequential injuries thereby inflicted upon them. See note to Seiden v. Jacksonville (Fla.) 14 L. R. A. 870. And this rule with some few exceptions was held to apply to the original establishment of a grade and bringing the surface to such grade. In fact, as will appear from cases cited below, there has been some tendency to discriminate against the original establishment of grades and refuse damages in such cases where they would be allowed in cases of change of grade.

In England no distinction seems to have been made so far as the common-law rule is concerned. In Governor & Co. of British East India Mfrs. v. Meredith, 4 T. R. 794, the right to damages for injuries caused by the raising of the grade of a street was distinctly denied, and the accuracy of the report of Leader v. Moxon, 3 Wils. 461, in which such a right seems to have been recognized, is questioned.

In New York the right to damages for consequential injuries in the opening of a street was apparently recognized in Re Furman Street, 17 Wend. 649.

But whatever implication of that nature is to be found in that case seems to have been completely ignored in Radoliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 35 Am. Dec. 387, where Re Furman Street, is cited as denying liability for consequential damages.

And the common-law rule is nearly uniform that there is no liability for injuries caused by grading. Simmons v. Camden, 23 Ark. 276, 7 Am. Rep. 620; Rome v. Omberg, 28 Ga. 46, 78 Am. Dec. 743; Roll v. Augusta, 34 Ga. 326; Snyder v. Rockport, 6 Ind. 237; Terre Haute v. Turner, 36 Ind. 523; Wels v. Madison, 75 Ind. 241, 39 Am. Rep. 135; Oreal v. Keokuk, 4 G. Greene, 47; Lee v. Minneapolis, 22 Minn. 12; 23 L. R. A.

Alden v. Minneapolis, 24 Minn. 254; St. Louis v. Gurno, 12 Mo. 414; Taylor v. St. Louis, 14 Mo. 20, 55 Am. Dec. 89; Nebraska City v. Lampkin, 6 Neb. 27; Wilson v. New York, 1 Denio, 555; Green v. Reading, 9 Watts, 839; Philadelphia v. Randolph, 4 Watts & S. 515, 39 Am. Dec. 102; Re Levering Street, 14 Phila. 349; Humes v. Knoxville, 1 Humph. 403, 24 Am. Dec. 657; Kehrer v. Richmond City, 51 Va. 745.

So there can be no recovery for an establishment of a grade. Kelly v. Baltimore, 65 Md. 171.

And this is so, although the two sides of the street are constructed at different levels with a retaining wall between them. Yanish v. St. Paul, 50 Minn. 518.

And the city is not liable for injury to buildings by the removal of the soil in the street by the process of grading. Quincy v. Jones, 76 Ill. 231, 20 Am. Rep. 243.

In Ohio, however, a somewhat different rule has been recognized. And it has been held that the city may be liable for cutting the street down to grade to the injury of buildings erected on adjoining property. McCombs v. Akron, 15 Ohio, 474; Akron v. McComb, 18 Ohio, 229, 51 Am. Dec. 453.

For the present state of the Ohio doctrine, see the cases cited below.

Liable for negligent or illegal act.

The above rule only applies, however, in the absence of negligence and when the city has acted regularly and has committed no trespass on the adjoining property.

The municipality may be liable for negligence. Wallace v. Muscatine, 4 G. Greene, 373, 51 Am. Dec. 181.

The city is liable if the acts were illegal. Smith v. Cincinnati, 4 Ohio, 514.

The city may be liable for piling dirt above a retaining wall in such a way as to crush it and cause it to fall on the property below to its injury. Gardner v. Scrantom, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 574.

For bringing the road to a grade illegally established the city is liable. Cromett v. Janceville, 38 Wis. 429.

raising or lowering a grade previously established, must be compensated under a constitutional provision for compensation in case of property taken or damaged for public use.

4. The rule that benefits deducted in measuring damages in a condemnation case must be special and peculiar and cannot include general benefits shared in common with other property in the neighborhood instead of taking the difference between the value of the property before and after as the measure of damages, applies as well to a case of damaging as to one of taking property.
5. Damage for change of grade of a street includes the injury resulting from the raising of a portion of the street by a railroad company in obedience to the ordinance fixing the grade.
6. A person is not estopped from claiming damages because of the change of grade of a street, because after a portion of the street had been raised by a railroad company in accordance with the ordinance fixing the grade, he requested that the grading of the street might be finished.

(February 12, 1894.)

CERTIFICATE by the Kansas City Court of Appeals for the opinion of the Supreme Court of an appeal from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jackson County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for injuries to plaintiff's property alleged to have been caused by the establishment of a grade for a street in front of it, which compelled plaintiff to change the grade of his lot and raise his buildings. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. W. Quarles, W. A. Alderson, F. F. Rosselle, W. S. Cowherd, and James Black for appellant.

Messrs. Scarritt & Scarritt and Karnes, Holmes & Krauthoff, for respondent:

The act of the legislature in permitting a municipal corporation to damage private property first, and pay compensation therefor afterwards, is contrary to the provision of the constitution to the effect that, "until the same [compensation] shall be paid to the owner, or into the court for the owner, the property shall not be disturbed" [damaged].

There is not a word in the act relating to the ascertainment and payment of the compensation before the damage is done, but it requires in express terms that the compensation shall be ascertained and paid after the damage is done. This is in direct conflict with and repugnant to the provisions of the constitution.

Mo. Const. art. 2, § 21; Sess. Acts 1885, p. 49; Blanchard v. Kansas City, 16 Fed. Rep. 444; McElroy v. Kansas City, 21 Fed. Rep. 257; Johnson v. Parkersburg, 16 W. Va. 402, 37 Am. Rep. 779; Chambers v. Cincinnati & C.

There may be a recovery if the lower grade has not been properly established before the contractor proceeds to cut down the street. Delphi v. Evans, 33 Ind. 90, 10 Am. Rep. 12.

In Parke v. Seattle, 20 L. R. A. 68, 5 Wash. 1, causing abutting land to slide into the street by negligent grading was held to be a taking within the meaning of the constitution.

Damages must be paid to the abutting owner if dirt from the street is cast on his property so as to cause injury to it. Broadwell v. Kansas, 75 Mo. 218, 42 Am. Rep. 403.

There may be a liability for causing water to flow on the adjoining premises. Ellis v. Iowa City, 29 Iowa, 229.

Nevins v. Peoria, 41 Ill. 502, 39 Am. Dec. 392, held the city liable for grading a street so as to turn a stream of mud and water upon adjoining premises. And the principle in that case was followed in Pekin v. Brereton, 67 Ill. 477, 16 Am. Rep. 629.

The city will be liable for throwing water back on an adjoining lot if it could have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care. Smith v. Alexandria, 83 Gratt. 208, 36 Am. Rep. 783.

As to the liability of a municipality for damages from surface water caused by a change of grade, see note to Gray v. McWilliams (Cal.) 31 L. R. A. 593.

The effect of statutes.

Statutes have been passed providing for damages for injuries for change of an established grade, which do not appear to apply to grading for the first time. Columbus v. Hydraulic Woolen Mills Co. 33 Ind. 435.

Under such statutes a city is not liable for consequential injuries from the grading of a street unless there is negligence. North Vernon v. Voegler, 108 Ind. 314.

A lotowner is not entitled to damages resulting from the original grading of a street. Anderson v. Bain, 120 Ind. 254.

To authorize a recovery, the change must be from an established grade. Morris v. Council Bluffs, 67 Iowa, 343, 56 Am. Rep. 343.
23 L. R. A.

Original grading will not give damages, under the Kansas statutes. Inverstate Consol. Rapid Transit R. Co. v. Early, 46 Kan. 197.

Injuries caused by raising or lowering the surface in repaving a street will entitle an owner to damages, under the Massachusetts statutes. Woodbury v. Beverly, 153 Mass. 245; Brown v. Lowell, 8 Met. 172; Fernald v. Boston, 12 Cush. 574; Burr v. Leicester, 121 Mass. 241.

But in Snow v. Provincetown, 109 Mass. 123, in which the surface of a street, which had been previously widened, was afterward raised, the court in sustaining the right to damages says the damages paid for the widening no doubt included compensation for changes in the surface of the street injurious to the owners, and which were contemplated as necessary in its original construction.

As far as acts of the city commissioners are concerned, the only damages for change of grade that can be allowed are those rendered necessary by the original construction. Murphy v. Boston, 120 Mass. 419.

There is no liability except for a change of previously established grade. Re Germantown Ave. Change of Grade, 15 Phila. 413.

Under the Rhode Island statutes, there is liability for damages caused by changing grade, but not by establishing a grade or bringing the road to grade. Aldrich v. Providence Board of Aldermen, 12 R. I. 241; Gardiner v. Johnston, 16 R. I. 94.

The New York act providing damages for injuries resulting from a change of grade does not apply to a city. Folmabee v. Amsterdam, 66 Hun. 214.

Constitutions giving damages for property injured or damaged.

Under constitutional requirements for damages in case of property injured or damaged for public use, compensation may be required in case of injuries caused by grading. Atlanta v. Green, 67 Ga. 386; Moore v. Atlanta, 70 Ga. 611.

Giving compensation for property damaged covers the case of damage inflicted by bringing the Railroad, 69 Ga. 320; Thompson v. Grand Gulf R. & Bkg. Co. 3 How. (Miss.) 240, 34 Am. Dec. 81; Oakley v. Williamsburgh, 6 Paige, 262, 3 L. ed. 978; Walther v. Warner, 25 Mo. 277; Provost v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 57 Mo. 256; State v. Lubke, 15 Mo. App. 164; Vanderlip v. Grand Rapids, 3 L. R. A. 247, 78 Mich. 522.

The court laid down the proper measure of damages.

Mississippi River Bridge Co. v. Ring, 58 Mo. 491; Springfield v. Schmook, 68 Mo. 395; St. Louis & St. J. R. Co. v. Richardson, 45 Mo. 466; Sheehy v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 94 Mo. 574; Quincy, M. & P. R. Co. v. Ridge, 57 Mo. 600; Wyandotte, K. C. & N. W. R. Co. v. Waldo, 70 Mo. 629; Lee v. Tebo & N. R. Co. 53 Mo. 179; Pacific Railroad v. Chrystal, 25 Mo. 544; Newby v. Platte County, 25 Mo. 275; Taylor v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 88 Mo. App. 671.

Damages may be claimed for the grading of a street to the first established grade.

Werth v. Springfield, 78 Mo. 110.

If an impediment or defect exists in the remedy marked out by the legislature by reason whereof that remedy is of no avail or is inadequate to the suitor it is not the exclusive remedy. It is no remedy.

Jamison v. Springfield, 58 Mo. 224; Johnston v. Louisville, 11 Bush, 527; Merriam v. Moody, 25 Iowa, 170; Ryan v. Gallatin County, 14 Ill. 83; Dunlap v. Gallatin County, 15 Ill. 9.

Plaintiff should enforce his common-law remedy and not seek relief by mandamus against the common council and mayor of the city.

People v. New York, 25 Wend. 680; State v. Coleman, 83 Mo. App. 470; American Casualty Ins. & Security Co. v. Fyler, 60 Conn. 448.

If the natural surface of the ground has been used or improved for street purposes and that surface or grade is changed by authority of the city and private property is damaged thereby, the municipality is liable for such damage.

Bloomington v. Pollock, 88 Ill. App. 183, 141 Ill. 846; Schaller v. Omaha, 28 Neb. 325; Harmon v. Omaha, 17 Neb. 548, 52 Am. Rep. 420; Ft. Worth v. Howard, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 537; Werth v. Springfield, 78 Mo. 110.

The damage to property is placed upon the same basis as the value of the property taken, and neither can be done without compensation first made.

McElroy v. Kansas City, 21 Fed. Rep. 257.

This rule as to the measure of damages is not only recognized as a fundamental principle by our courts, but by the legislature and people as well.

Neenan v. Smith, 50 Mo. 525; Ferrar v. St. Louis, 80 Mo. 394; Allen v. Krenning, 23 Mo. App. 569; Kansas City v. Morton, 117 Mo. 446.

Brace, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action, commenced in the circuit court of Jackson county, for damages street to grade. Beardon v. San Francisco, 66 Cal. 422, 56 Am. Rep. 109.

Damages to property by grading a street are within a constitutional provision that property shall not be damaged without making compensation to the owner. Blanchard v. City of Kansas, 5 McCrary, 217, 16 Fed. Rep. 444.

Injuries done in bringing the street to grade for the first time must be paid for under a constitution prohibiting the damaging of property without compensation. Bloomington v. Pollock, 141 Ill. 346, affirming 38 Ill. App. 133.

The city is liable if it permits a railroad company to fill up the street so as to make access to an adjoining lot difficult. Pekin v. Winkel, 77 Ill. 56.

Under the constitution of Nebraska, damages caused by bringing the street to the first established grade are recoverable. Harmon v. Omaha, 17 Neb. 546, 52 Am. Rep. 420; Schaller v. Omaha, 28 Neb. 325.

Damages are recoverable if the road does not pass over plaintiff's land but merely alongside of it, if by reason of bringing the road to grade his property is injured. Hutchinson v. Parkersburg, 25 W. Va. 224.

Establishing grade on paper.

How far the mere establishment of a grade will entitle to damages does not appear to be definitely settled. The general language of some of the cases would seem to imply that the damages are payable when the grade is established.

When property is damaged by establishing the grade of a street, it is damaged for public use within the meaning of the Missouri constitution. Werth v. Springfield, 78 Mo. 170.

Although that statement is a dictum in the Werth case, it is recognized in Sheehy v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 94 Mo. 574; Gibson v. Owens, 115 Mo. 258.

When property is damaged by establishing the grade of a street, it is damaged for public use. McElroy v. Kansas City, 21 Fed. Rep. 257.

The charter of Newark provides for damages in 2 N. J. R. A.

the case of the establishment of a grade. Book v. Newark, 38 N. J. L. 129.

A constitution prohibiting the damaging of property without compensation applies to the original establishment of the grade. Hammond v. Harvard, 31 Neb. 638.

Some of the cases go so far even as to state that the damages must be settled at the time the land is taken for the street for whatever injuries will be occasioned by bringing the street to a probable grade, although no grade has been designated at the time.

In Montgomery v. Townsend, 50 Ala. 486, 60 Am. Rep. 112, it is held that a requirement of compensation for property taken, injured, or destroyed, does not apply to the changes which must have been in contemplation of the parties when the property was taken or dedicated, but only applies to extraordinary changes which may not be due to the natural formation of the surface nor to the mode of original construction as then deemed sufficient.

The damages for opening and grading must be assessed at the same time. Pusey v. Allegheny, 38 Pa. 522.

Cutting to the original grade is covered by the compensation for the taking. Van Riper v. Essex Public Road Board, 38 N. J. L. 23.

So under the Massachusetts statutes no recovery can be had for bringing a street to the established grade, as it is presumed that they were awarded at the time the street was laid out. Brady v. Fall River, 121 Mass. 262.

When land is taken for a street, abutting owners are entitled to damages for such changes in the surface as must necessarily have been contemplated on the construction of the public street. Ryan v. Boston, 118 Mass. 248; Geraghty v. Boston, 120 Mass. 416.

The city in taking the property is presumed to compensate the abutting owner for necessary change of grade. Fellowes v. New Haven, 44 Conn. 240, 26 Am. Rep. 447.

to plaintiff's property occasioned by a change of the grade of Ninth street, in said city, in which the plaintiff obtained judgment for $1,000, from which the defendant appealed to the Kansas City court of appeals, and the case is certified here, under the constitutional amendment, as involving the decision of a constitutional question. Plaintiff's property, which he claims was damaged by the action of defendant, abuts on Ninth street. Previous to the extension of the city limits in 1885, Ninth street was a county road, which had been graded and used as such for many years, both sides of which, in the vicinity of plaintiff's property, had been built up with residences and stores for a considerable distance beyond the city limits. The plaintiff bought his property in 1883, and the next year built upon and improved it with reference to the then existing grade. In October, 1884, the Kansas City & Independence Railway Company obtained the consent of the county court to build and operate a cable street railway on said road or street; the court, in its order, providing that the company should build its line of railway upon the grade of the street as then maintained, and should in no wise disturb the surface of the street in such manner as to impair its usefulness, or prevent the flow of water along and across the same. In the latter part of 1885 the limits of the city were extended so as to take in that part of said road or street in front of plaintiff's property. By ordinance approved April 15, 1886, the city changed the grade of said street in front of plaintiff's property to the present established grade, which raised the grade in front of said property about 8½ feet. In the mean time all the rights and franchises of the Kansas City & Independence Railway Company, which had never availed itself of the privilege aforesaid granted by the county court, passed to the Kansas City Cable Railway Company, which latter company, soon after the passage of said ordinance, constructed the line of road on the grade established by said ordinance, filling in the street in the center thereof up to said grade to the width of about 20 or 22 feet. Afterwards, the city, under an ordinance approved November 19, 1886, filled up and graded the street on each side of this roadbed to the full width of the street (50 feet). The evidence tended to show that after the railroad company constructed its road, and before the city finished the grading, the street in front of plaintiff's property was left in such a condition as to render it impassable, and to necessitate the completion of the grading by the city; that the

Under the constitutional provision for compensation for property damaged, the abutting owner cannot recover for injuries caused by a reasonable grade or improvement of a street in a careful manner. Denver v. Bayer, 7 Colo. 112.

But damages may be recovered if the grading is an act separate and distinct from the opening of the street. Jones v. Bangor, 144 Pa. 633.

And the fact that a grade had been fixed at the time the street was opened will not prevent the recovery of damages for bringing it to the grade, if the street was opened on another grade which was recognized and followed for a number of years afterward. Cambridge v. Middlesex County Comrs. 135 Mass. 529.

What is regarded as establishing a grade.

The establishment of a grade requires an order of the common council involving a general plan. Mattingly v. Plymouth, 100 Ind. 545.

Use of an adopted country road for thirty years at its old grade may establish that to be the grade of the city street, so that it cannot be changed without paying damages. Youngstown v. Moore, 30 Ohio St. 133.

Purchasing a turnpike road by a city is not an adoption of the grade of the road. Re Germantown Ave. 14 Phila. 361.

Merely working streets or otherwise improving them is not sufficient to establish a grade. Kepple v. Kekuk, 61 Iowa, 653, 2 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 447.

A city need not pay damages for change from grade established by the town prior to its becoming a city. Wabash v. Alber, 33 Ind. 423.

Change from natural surface.

Injuries by change from the natural grade are within the meaning of a constitutional provision giving damages for property injured. New Brighton v. United Presby. Church, 96 Pa. 331; Hendrick's App. 103 Pa. 363.

There is a liability for changing the grade from the natural surface. Davis v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (Mo.) Dec. 23, 1893.

Under the New York act, the fact that the existing grade was that of a highway which was taken by the municipality as one of its streets, and that the only change made was from the grade of the highway, does not defeat the right to compensation. Bartlett v. Tarrytown, 52 Hun, 380.

The statute does not require the abutting owner, damaged by change of grade, to show that a grade had been previously established by the municipality in order to entitle him to recovery. Bartlett v. Tarrytown, 55 Hun, 422; McCall v. Saratoga Springs, 121 N. Y. 704, affirming 29 N. Y. S. R. 699; Re Church of Our Lady of Mercy, 32 N. Y. S. R. 967.

Damages may be recovered for change of the natural physical grade of the old highway. O'Brien v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 559.

Damages may be given for change of surface, though no grade had previously been established. Ft. Worth v. Howard, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 537.

Building after establishment of grade.

There can be no recovery for damages to houses in cutting to the grade established before they were erected. Groff v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 594.

The Ohio doctrine.

As shown above, McCombs v. Akron, 15 Ohio, 474 Ohio at first refused to follow the general rule refusing compensation for injury to property by grading. But subsequent decisions reached the same result as those which followed the rule and Ohio must now be classed among the less progressive states. It was held that the owners of unimproved lots cannot recover, and those making improvements must do so with view to a reasonable and proper grade. And no recovery can be had for injuries, if the city uses reasonable care in bringing the street to a reasonable grade. Crawford v. Delaware, 7 Ohio St. 459.

Subsequently the doctrine was established that the owner of unimproved property improves it at his peril. Akron v. Chamberlain Co. 34 Ohio St. 323, 32 Am. Rep. 367; Cincinnati v. Penny, 21 Ohio St. 503, 3 Am. Rep. 72; McGee v. Avondale, 31 Ohio L. J. 163.

H. P. F.

raising of the grade necessitated the filling of plaintiff's lot, the raising of his house and other structures, and the readjustment of all of his improvements to conform to the established grade, at a cost of about $1,000. The court, after refusing certain instructions asked by defendant, among them two instructing the jury that on the pleadings and evidence the plaintiff could not recover, submitted the case to the jury on other instructions, which it is noted, as far as necessary, in the course of the opinion.

1. By the Constitution of 1875 it is provided "that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation. Such compensation shall be ascertained by a jury or board of commissioners of not less than three freeholders in such manner as may be prescribed by law, and until the same be paid to the owner, or into court for the owner, the property shall not be disturbed, or the proprietary rights of the owner therein divested." Const. art. 2, § 21. Prior to the adoption of this Constitution of 1875 (although the doctrine was vigorously attacked in Thurston v. St. Joseph, 51 Mo. 510, in the opinion of Judge Adams), it was uniformly held that any damage resulting to an abutting property owner from a change of grade was damnum absque injuria, for which the municipality was not liable unless the injury could have been shown to have resulted from the negligent or improper manner in which the work was done. St. Louis v. Gurno, 12 Mo. 415; Taylor v. St. Louis, 14 Mo. 23, 55 Am. Dec. 89; Hoffman v. St. Louis, 15 Mo. 651; Schaltner v. City of Kansas, 53 Mo. 162; Imler v. Springfield, 55 Mo. 119, 17 Am. Rep. 645; Wegmann v. Jefferson, 61 Mo. 55; Svenson v. Lexington, 69 Mo. 157; Stewart v. Clinton, 79 Mo. 603. To uproot this doctrine, and provide for compensation when property is damaged as well as when it is taken for public use, the eminent domain clause in the Constitution of 1885 was amended by the Constitution of 1875 to read as quoted, and since it has been considered the settled law in this state that "when property is damaged by establishing the grade of a street, or by raising or lowering the grade of a street previously established, it is damaged for public use, within the meaning of the constitution." Werth v. Springfield, 78 Mo. 10; State v. City of Kansas, 89 Mo. 84; Householder v. City of Kansas, 83 Mo. 488; Sheehy v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 94 Mo. 574; Gibson v. Owens, 115 Mo. 258. It is also well-settled law that this article of the constitution gives an absolute right, and is self-enforcing; and, although the legislature may have enacted no law providing a mode for the ascertainment and payment for the compensation provided for, resort may be had, by the party entitled to the right, to any common-law action which will afford him adequate and appropriate means of redress. Householder v. City of Kansas, 83 Mo. 488; Sheehy v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 94 Mo. 574; Keith v. Bingham, 100 Mo. 300.

2. The defendant's first contention is that this action, commenced on the 19th day of September, 1887, is not maintainable, for the reason that by a law then in force, being an act entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of, and payment for, damages done by municipal corporations to private property for public use, as directed by section 21, article 2, of the State Constitution," approved March 26, 1885 (Sess. Acts 1885, p. 47), amended by an act approved March 31, 1887 (Sess. Acts 1887, p. 37), provision was made for the recovery of damages in cases like the one in hand, and that by section 8 thereof it was provided that "the above proceedings shall be exclusive of all other remedies in the courts of this state for the recovery from any municipal corporation of damages done to any private property for public use, within the meaning of section 21, article 2, of the State Constitution." The rule is that if the statute gives a remedy in the affirmative, without containing any express or implied negative, for a matter which was actionable at common law, this does not take away the common-law remedy, but the party may still sue at common law as well as upon the statute. In such cases the statute remedy will be regarded as merely cumulative. But where a new right or means of acquiring it is given, and an adequate remedy for violating it is given, in the same statute, then the injured parties are confined to the statutory remedy. State v. Bittinger, 55 Mo. 596; Baker v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 86 Mo. 543; Soulard v. St. Louis, Id. 546. As we have seen, the right which plaintiff had in this case was not a common-law right. It was a new right; not a statutory right, strictly speaking, but a constitutional right,—to have his damages ascertained and paid to him, or into the court for his use, before his property was disturbed. Unquestionably, the legislature might have provided a mode of procedure for ascertaining and paying the owner his damages, under the constitutional provision giving the right, that would not have been exclusive; but the Act of 1885-87 did not undertake to enforce this constitutional right. Its whole scope was an attempt to provide a remedy for its invasion. The constitution, ex proprio vigore, has already provided the owner remedies through the courts of its creation for the protection of that right. These courts were at all times open to him, either to restrain the municipality from damaging the property until compensation therefor is ascertained and made (Gates v. Kansas City Bridge & Terminal R. Co., 111 Mo. 28), or having damaged it, to compel the municipality to respond with the amount thereof, ascertained by such courts in a constitutional manner (cases cited supra). While it may be conceded that it was in the power of the legislature to provide an exclusive special remedy for determining the compensation for the property damaged within the meaning of the constitution, and for securing the payment thereof to its owners, yet such remedy, in order to be exclusive, must be commensurate with the constitutional right, and the remedies which, by force of the constitution, the owner is entitled to for its protection. The mere declaration of the legislature could not make the remedy provided by the act a substitute for the remedies to which the owner was entitled under the constitution, unless, in point of fact, it was an adequate substitute. Leaving out of view entirely the injunctive remedy, by which the owner had a constitutional right to have his compensation measured and paid before the damages were inflicted, and for which the statute of 1885-87 undertook to substitute no remedy whatever, was the proceeding therein provided for him to obtain compensation for the damages suffered an adequate substitute for the remedy afforded him by an action for such damages, under the constitution, independent of the statute? In view of the facts that section 8, which contains the legislative declaration aforesaid, was left out in the revision of 1889, and the exclusive character of the act removed by a new section (1821, Rev. Stat. 1889), it will be necessary to point out only one or two particulars in which the enactment failed to come up to the measure of an adequate substitute for the owner's remedy under the constitution. The act does not give the owner the right of initiating the proceedings or process, or other means of obtaining payment, after the amount of his damages has been ascertained. It is true the original act did provide that the application to the circuit court for the ascertainment of the amount of damages by petition might be made, "either by the city authorities, or the owner of the property for which damages are claimed," but the Amendment of 1887 (page 38) required that, before the filing of such petition, the city authorities must first define a benefit district. It is also true that section 7 of the original act did provide for execution against the municipality in the event that damages were not paid within six months after they were finally ascertained by the court; but this section was repealed in the amended Act (page 39). Thus, the owner was left without the power of initiating the statutory proceeding for the ascertainment of his damages, and without process to compel their payment after they were ascertained; and although the plaintiff in this case, by reason of the fact that no benefit district was ever defined by the defendant, was deprived of the poor privilege of testing its efficacy for his relief, yet this statute is invoked to defeat his action, secured to him by the original law of the state. That under it the city might have had the plaintiff's damages ascertained might be conceded; but having failed to do so, and to provide the means to pay the same, it cannot be permitted to interpose this statute and its own neglect to defeat his action. Elgin v. Eton, 83 Ill. 535, 25 Am. Rep. 412; Lafayette v. Wortman, 107 Ind. 404; Jamison v. Springfield, 58 Mo. 224.

8. It is next contended that, as the effect of the ordinance establishing the grade of Ninth street was for the first time to raise the grade above the natural surface, the defendant is not liable for any damages that may have resulted from the establishment of such grade; and in support of this contention Dillon on Municipal Corporations, and other cases from our sister states, are cited in support of the doctrines favored by the learned author in section 9955 (4th ed.) of his valuable work, where he says: "It seems to us that, on principle, the mere provision of the constitution imposing a liability for property damaged for public use does not create a liability on the part of the municipality for reducing the natural surface of the street, in the course of its normal and ordinary improvement for street purposes proper, to a grade line for the first time established." The instruction of the court on this subject was in harmony with what has been understood to be the Missouri doctrine, as announced and recognized in the cases cited supra,—that the municipality is liable for damage occasioned by establishing a grade, as well as for damage occasioned by raising or lowering a grade previously established. In Davis v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (decided Dec. 28, 1893, in division No. 1, not yet officially published), 24 S. W. Rep. 777, the precise question was presented, and, after mature consideration of the subject and a discussion of the authorities, the conclusion of that division of the court was expressed by Macfarlane, J., as follows: "We are of the opinion, therefore, that the rule which allows compensation for consequential damages to property caused by a material change of grade from the natural surface is the most equitable to the property owners, and best conserves the public interest; and this rule is generally adopted under similar constitutional provisions,"—citing cases from other states, to which may be added Groff v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 594. Without going over this ground again, it is sufficient to say that we adhere to the doctrine as it has hitherto been recognized by this court, and so recently and directly in Davis v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., supra, and hold that the court committed no error in predicating a right of recovery thereon.

4. It is next urged that the court committed error in the instructions on the measure of damages, which were, in substance, that the plaintiff should be allowed such a sum as would compensate him for the damage sustained by him by reason of the grading of the street in front of his premises, less any special and peculiar benefits to the property resulting from such grading, in which, however, was not to be included general benefits shared in common with other property in the same neighborhood. It is insisted for appellant that the true measure of damages in such cases is the difference between the value of the property before, and the value after, the change of grade,—a rule that would charge the owner with general, as well as special, benefits, and which has received the support of the courts in some of the states, as appears by the cases cited in the brief of counsel for appellant. When the Constitution of 1875 was adopted, it was settled law in this state that, in adjusting the compensation to be made to owners of land taken for public use, the benefit to be deducted from the damage which the owner sustains by such taking is the direct and peculiar benefits that would result in particular to the owner's land not taken, and not the general benefit that such land would derive, in common with the land of other owners, in the neighborhood, from the public use for which it was taken. Newby v. Platte County, 25 Mo. 258; Louisiana & F. Pl. Road Co. v. Pickett, 25 Mo. 585; Pacific Railroad v. Ohryntal, 25 Mo. 544; St. Louis & St. J. R. Co. v. Richardson, 45 Mo. 466; Lee v. Tebo & N. R. Co. 53 Mo. 178; Quincy, M. & P. R. Co. v. Ridge, 57 Mo. 600; Hooper v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 60 Mo. 308. In the decisions of these cases the constitutional provision applied reads: "That no private property ought to be taken or applied to public use without just compensation." Const. 1820, art. 18, § 7; Const. 1865, art. 1, § 16. While a slight change in the phraseology was made in the Constitution of 1875, the only change in the meaning was effected by inserting the word "damaged," and coupling it with the word "taken," and thereafter "just compensation" was to be made for property "damaged," as theretofore it had been made for property "taken." The compensation for property damaged was made just as broad, and no broader or narrower, than compensation for property taken. The standard for the measurement of the one had been already settled by judicial action, and by the same standard is the other to be measured, under the Constitution of 1875. In the language of Brewer, J., in McElroy v. Kansas City, 21 Fed. Rep. 257: "The damage to property is placed upon the same basis as the value of property taken, and neither can be done without compensation first made. In other words, uniting 'property damaged' with 'property taken' in the same clause, and subject to the same prohibition, places them in the same category as to judicial action. . . . When the constitutional convention met, the rule of protection against the taking of private property had long been settled, and must have been familiar. It did not attempt to prescribe two rules. It did not even make two enactments, but simply added 'property damaged' to 'property taken'; and for the courts to now hold that under the same language two rules were prescribed is to create a distinction with no just foundation, and would be mere judicial legislation." In the course of the establishment by this court of the rule in regard to the benefit to be taken into consideration in determining the compensation to be made to the landowner, and since, it has, from time to time, been noted in the opinions that a different rule obtained in some other jurisdictions. But this court has consistently maintained its position from the beginning, through a long line of decisions, down to the present day. Wyandotte, K. C. & N. W. R. Co. v. Waldo, 70 Mo. 629; Combs v. Smith, 78 Mo. 82; Allen v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 84 Mo. 646; Springfield & S. R. Co. v. Calkins, 90 Mo. 588; Daugherty v. Brown, 91 Mo. 26; Kansas City, C. & S. R. Co. v. Story, 96 Mo 611; McReynolds v. Kansas City, C. & S. R. Co. 110 Mo. 484; Ragan v. Kansas City & S. R. Co. 111 Mo. 456; Spencer v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. (Mo.) 22 L. R. A. 668; Kansas City v. Morton, 117 Mo. 446. These cases show that the rule obtains, and has been applied in the same manner, regardless of the character of the public use for which the property of the owner was taken or damaged, whether for the purposes of a railroad, a county road, or a street. It has, in fact, become a fundamental rule, universally recognized by the legislature, by the courts, and the people, in the measurement of damages sustained by the landowner for the public benefit. We have heretofore been urged to make a distinction in the measure of damages between cases wherein the land of the owner was appropriated and damaged without being previously condemned for public use, and when the damages were to be ascertained in such proceedings; but the court would have none of it, replying that "the damage was the same, and the compensation should be the same." McReynolds v. Kansas City, C. & S. R. Co. and Ragan v. Kansas City & S. R. Co. supra; Doyle v. Kansas City & S. R. Co. 118 Mo. 28. We have also been pressed to make a distinction between a case in which a part of a tract of land is taken and one in which the tract is damaged only; it being insisted that in the latter case the damage would only be the diminution in the actual pecuniary or market value, to obtain which all benefits, whether general or special, would have to enter into the calculation. In Kansas City v. Morton, supra, which was a proceeding to assess the damages which would result to an abutting proprietor from the grading of an alley, division No. 1, through Macfarlane, J., replied that, "while the rule had been thus declared in some of the states under constitutional and charter provisions similar to ours, we do not think it consistent with our decisions. Our constitution secures to the property owner the right to compensation when his property is damaged in the same terms as when it is actually invaded and taken. No reason is seen why the rule for assessing the benefits should be different." And in Spencer v. Metropolitan Street R. Co., supra, which was an action for damages to an abutting lot owner, division No. 2, speaking through Burgess, J., said: "While contrary opinions have been maintained with great ability in courts of other states, and by elementary writers of much distinction, the rule in this state is well established that, in cases of this kind, in estimating benefits, the jury should be restricted, in estimating such benefits, to peculiar and direct benefits or increase of value as result to the lots in controversy, in which other lots in the same locality do not participate." It would be a work of supererogation to add anything to what has been so well said, in many of the cases cited, in support of the justice and reasonableness of the Missouri rule on this subject, or to further show that the case in hand is within its principle. The rule is founded on the broad and equitable doctrine that every citizen should share the common benefits of a government whose common burden he is required to bear; in the spirit of which axiom, while we maintain, on the one hand, that the abutting landowner whose property is damaged for the public use should have only such damages as are peculiar to his property, on the other hand we maintain, as illustrated in the cases cited, that in ascertaining damages it shall not be reduced by benefits other than those that are peculiar to his property. The vitality of the rule in either case is to be found in its inherent equity, and furnishes a sufficient reason for its adoption and maintenance. The instruction of the court upon the measure of damages in the present case was in harmony with this rule, and therefore not erroneous.

5. The railroad company, under its license from the county, had authority to lay its track upon the road. When the city extended its limits, it succeeded to the relation formerly sustained by the county to the road, and took municipal jurisdiction of the territory, subject to all rights acquired under its predecessor. When thereafter the city established the grade of the street, as it had the power to do, the only way possible for the railway company to exercise its right was to lay its tracks in conformity to such grade. In bringing their roadbed to that grade for the purpose of laying their tracks, they were simply obeying the command of the municipal government expressed by an ordinance. The damage for which plaintiff recovered was for the injury to his property resulting from the raising the grade in front of his property by the employes of the railroad company and those of the city, in compliance with the requirement of that ordinance. The damage was the result of the exercise of the city's power, for which it is liable. Sheehy v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 94 Mo. 574, and cases supra. The Sheehy Case is cited by counsel for appellant in support of the measure of damages for which they contend, but it is not at all in point for that purpose, and we know of no Missouri case that does give it support, except Taylor v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 83 Mo. App. 668, the ruling in which, upon that question, we do not approve. The fact that the plaintiff, after the grading of its railroad had been completed by the cable company, requested that the grading of the street might be finished, ought not to estop him from recovering damages for his injury. If any error is to be found in the instructions upon this issue, it is in favor of the defendant. We find no error in the record calling for a reversal, and the judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

All concur.

Rehearing denied.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Mary F. VAN MATRE, Appt.,

v.

John SANKEY et al.

Henry L. GLOS et al., Appts.,

v.

Caroline C. SANKEY.

(148 Ill. 538.)

1. The jurisdiction of proceedings for the adoption of a child in another state cannot be attacked collaterally on the ground that the adopting parent had only a temporary residence in that state, where this question was passed upon by the court in the adoption proceedings, and also on subsequent petition to set aside the decree of adoption.
2. A determination upon a direct proceeding by the court of last resort of the state that the trial court had jurisdiction to enter a decree of adoption must be given full faith and credit in courts of another state, which will preclude impeachment for irregularities.
3. The jurisdiction of a court in another state to hear an appeal cannot be collaterally questioned, where it rendered a judgment of confirmation on the appeal.
4. The character of a proceeding for the revocation of an adoption is not so summary as to prevent the decision from being conclusive upon the rights of the parties in the courts of another state, if all the parties interested were before the court, and with every material fact before it the court proceeded to adjudicate the questions raised upon their merits.

5. The fact that a child adopted was not personally present in court, or notified of the proceeding, where this is not required by statute, will not be ground for collateral attack on the decree of adoption in another state.
6. Real property may descend to a child, who, by adoption in another state, has become there the lawful heir of the owner of the property.
7. Diligent inquiry, required by statute for the owners of land sold for taxes before the expiration of the time for redemption is not shown by affidavits of diligent inquiry "in the county" where the land is situated.

(October 26, 1898.)

APPEALS by plaintiff in the original bill, and one of the defendants in the cross bill, from a decree of the Circuit Court for Cook County in favor of Caroline C. Sankey, in a suit brought to obtain the partition of certain real estate, in which a cross-bill was exhibited setting up sole title to the property in said Caroline, and seeking to set aside certain tax deeds of it. Affirmed.

Statement by Shope, J.:

Mary F. Van Matre filed her bill in chan-

NOTE.—On the subject of the legal status of an adopted child, see the note to Warren v. Prescott (Me.) 17 L. R. A. 435.

For other cases as to validity and effect of proceedings for adoption, see Delano v. Bruerton (Mass.) 2 L. R. A. 698; Ferguson v. Jones (Or.) 8 L. R. A.

R. A. 620; Helms v. Elliott (Tenn.) 10 L. R. A. 538; Markover v. Krauss (Ind.) 17 L. R. A. 806; Fosburg v. Rogers (Mo.) 19 L. R. A. 201; Nugent v. Powell (Wyo.) 20 L. R. A. 199; Re Johnson's Estate (Cal.) 21 L. R. A. 380; Schultz v. Roenitz (Wis.) 21 L. R. A. 428.

cery, in the Cook county circuit court, alleging that she and others named in the bill, including Caroline C. Sankey, were the heirs at law of Samuel Sankey, who died intestate in November, 1886, without issue or widow surviving him, and seised of certain lots and lands in said county, of which partition was sought among said alleged collateral heirs of said decedent. The bill also set up that appellant Henry L. Glos and others claimed some interest in certain of the lands under tax deeds, which were alleged to be void, and were asked to be removed, as clouds upon the title of complainant and her co-heirs. Caroline C. Sankey answered the bill, denying that others were interested in said land and lots, and claiming title in fee to the whole, as heir-at-law of the said Sankey, and filed her cross-bill, alleging that by virtue of certain adoption proceedings in the court of common pleas of Lycoming county, Pa., she was adopted by said Samuel Sankey, deceased, on the 2d day of January, 1879, and that said Sankey having died without issue, and leaving no widow him surviving, his estate descended to her, as heir-at-law. The cross-bill also alleged that said Glos and others held certain tax deeds, which were a cloud upon her title, and alleging in the cross-bill, as amended, certain defects therein, and praying that the same be removed, as a cloud etc. Upon the issues joined upon the original and cross-bills, the court found and decreed in accordance with the prayer of the cross-bill, dismissing the original bill; finding that the tax deeds alleged were void, and upon the terms of payment by complainant in the cross-bill of the taxes for which the tracts were severally sold, interest and costs, etc., removing them, severally, as clouds, etc. From the decree dismissing the original bill, and quieting the title in the complaint in the cross-bill, Mary F. Van Matre appeals. From so much of the decree as finds the several tax deeds void, and clouds, etc., Henry F. Glos appeals.

The statute of Pennsylvania under which the adoption proceedings were had was as follows: "It shall be lawful for any person desirous of adopting any child as his or her heir, or as one of his or her heirs, to present his or her petition to such court in the county where he or she may be resident, declaring such desire, and that he or she will perform all the duties as a parent to such child; and such court, if satisfied that the welfare of such child will be promoted by such adoption, may with the consent of the parents or surviving parent of such child, or if none, of the next friend of such child, or of the guardian or overseer of the poor, or of such charitable institution as shall have supported such child for at least one year, decree that such child shall assume the name of the adopting parent, and have all the rights of a child and heir, of such adopting parent, and be subject to the duties of such child, of which the record of the court shall be sufficient evidence." Act May 4, 1855, § 1 (Purd. Dig. p. 78, pl. 1).

It appears that Caroline C. Sankey was a minor of about the age of nine years; that her father and mother were both dead; that she and they, up to the time of their death, resided in Lycoming county, Pa. It is not questioned that the court of common pleas had jurisdiction, in that state, of the adoption of children, authorized by the statute quoted. On the 11th day of November, 1878, Samuel Sankey filed in said court his petition, duly verified by his oath, in the words following:

"State of Pennsylvania Lycoming County. In the court of Common Pleas of Said County. To the Honorable the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas and of the Orphans' Court of the County aforesaid: The petitioner, Samuel Sankey, shows to this honorable court that he is a married man, without children now living, and a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, in the state of California, and he is now a temporary resident at Williamsport, in the county aforesaid, and as such resident he is desirous of adopting Caroline Sankey, often and commonly called 'Carrie Sankey,' as his heir-at-law. And your petitioner represents that he will perform the duties of a parent to said Carrie Sankey. And your petitioner further represents that said Carrie Sankey is an orphan, and is the daughter of Cyrus K. Sankey and Caroline, his wife, and that said Cyrus K. Sankey was the brother of your petitioner, and that he and his wife died interstate and wholly insolvent, and that your petitioner is next of kin to said Carrie Sankey, and as such he desires to adopt said orphan child, as stated above. Your petitioner further represents that all the brothers and sisters of said C. K. Sankey cheerfully consent that your petitioner shall adopt said child, who is now of the age of nine years, for the purpose of caring for her, educating her, and protecting her as his own child. Your petitioner shows to the court that the kinfolks on the part of the mother of said child are not so situated and circumstanced that they can care for said child. Respectfully submitted. [Sig.] Samuel Sankey."

It also appears that L. G. Huling had before then been appointed guardian of said infant, and on November 11, 1878, a rule was granted on such guardian to show cause why the prayer of the petition should not be granted, returnable the following day, and a commissioner was appointed to take testimony. The record in that case shows that on application of the guardian the time for taking testimony was twice extended by the court, and finally the following order was entered in said cause: "January 2, 1879, the appointment of L. G. Huling as guardian of Caroline C. Sankey is revoked, and Samuel Sankey is allowed to adopt the minor child." Then follows an order appointing Samuel Sankey guardian of the person and estate of said infant, minor child of Cyrus K. Sankey, deceased; and then follows the final order and decree, viz.:

"January 2, 1879. Order and Decree: Samuel Sankey, Esq., at present resident in said county of Lycoming, presented his petition to the said court, declaring his desire to adopt Caroline C. Sankey, a minor child of Cyrus K. Sankey, deceased, and promising to perform all the duties of a parent, and confer upon her all the rights of a child and heir; and it appearing to the court that both parents of said minor child are dead, and that the uncles and aunts, as next of kin, on the father's side, of said minor child, consent and approve of said adoption, and after careful investigation and inquiry, it appearing to the court that the interests and welfare of the said minor child will be promoted by being adopted as the child and heir of the said petitioner, therefore, it is ordered and decreed as follows: And now, to wit, January 2, A. D. 1879, at an adjourned court held at Williamsport, in said county, it is ordered and decreed that Caroline C. Sankey, a minor child of Cyrus K. Sankey, late of said county, deceased, be and she is hereby declared to be adopted by Samuel Sankey, Esq., with all the rights of a child and heir of the said Samuel Sankey, and that she be also subject to all the duties of such child, and shall assume the name of the adopting parent, and, to all intents and purposes, have, enjoy, and inherit all the rights and privileges, and be subject to all the duties, of a lawful child of said adopting parent, of which a copy of this record shall be sufficient evidence, agreeable to the provisions of the act of the general assembly of Pennsylvania approved May 4, A. D. 1855. By the Court. James Gamble, P. P."

No appeal was taken from, or writ of error prosecuted to reverse, said decree. But after the death of Samuel Sankey, which occurred November 23, 1886, all the parties alleged to be collateral heirs of said Sankey, except said Caroline C. Sankey, by Aaron Wolf, their attorney in fact, and as administrator of the estate of Samuel Sankey, deceased, on November 3, 1887, filed a petition entitled in the adoption proceeding above mentioned, in the court of common pleas of Lycoming county, Pa., setting forth as follows: "(1) That Samuel Sankey, the petitioner in said proceedings, was a resident and citizen of the state of California at the time of the filing of said petition, and afterwards, to the day of his death, to wit, on the 23d day of November, A. D. 1886, and that the said Caroline C. Sankey is now about eighteen years of age, and now a resident of the city of San Francisco, in the state of California. (2) The petitioner's appointment as attorney in fact, etc.; the names and residences of the heirs; the petitioner's appointment as administrator, etc. (3) A copy of the decree of Hon. James Gamble, heretofore recited. (4) That the said order and decree was made on a petition signed by Samuel Sankey, and duly filed in said number and terms, wherein it is stated that the petitioner is a resident of the state of California, and, further, that the brothers and sisters of said Cyrus K. Sankey cheerfully consented to the adoption prayed for. (5) That your petitioner is informed and believes that he can establish by evidence, on the hearing of this case, that the brothers and sisters of Cyrus K. Sankey never consented to, and had no knowledge of, said application for adoption, except that the brother James W. Sankey may have had some knowledge thereof, and, further, that the uncle of said Caroline C. Sankey—L. G. Huling, Esq., residing, at the time of the application, in the county of Lycoming, and who was the brother of the mother of the said minor child, and nearest of kin to said child on the side of the mother—objected most strenuously to the decree of adoption. (6) That your petitioner is informed and verily believes that the aforesaid order and decree of adoption were obtained by a misrepresentation of the facts of the case, and, further, your petitioner is informed by counsel the court has no jurisdiction in the premises, the said Samuel Sankey not being a resident of the county of Lycoming, in the state of Pennsylvania, at the time of the application so as aforesaid made. Your petitioner therefore prays your honor to grant a rule to show cause why said order and decree should not be revoked. And he will ever pray, etc. [Sig.] Aaron Wolf, Administrator and Attorney in Fact."

A rule was granted thereon, and Caroline C. Sankey, by her guardian, filed answer and demurrer to the petition. The court sustained the demurrer, dismissed the petition, and discharged the rule to show cause, with costs. On appeal to the supreme court of the state, the judgment of the court of common pleas was affirmed.

Mr. H. S. Mecartney, with Mr. F. W. S. Brawley, for appellants.

Messrs. Hamline, Scott & Lord, for appellee Caroline C. Sankey:

The decree is binding and effectual in Pennsylvania.

Wolf's App. (Pa.) April 23, 1888.

If the decree is binding and effectual in Pennsylvania, where it was rendered, according to its laws, and the decisions of its highest courts, then it is binding everywhere.

Adams v. Adams, 18 L. R. A. 275, 154 Mass. 290; Colt v. Colt, 111 U. S. 578, 28 L. ed. 525; Cheever v. Wilson, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. ed. 604; Christmas v. Russell, 73 U. S. 5 Wall. 302, 18 L. ed. 478; Kirrihan v. Kirrihan, 15 N. J. Eq. 147; Nichols v. Nichols, 25 N. J. Eq. 63; Kinnier v. Kinnier, 45 N. Y. 540, 6 Am. Rep. 182; Shumway v. Stillman, 6 Wend 447; People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 83, 83 Am. Rep. 274; Van Orsdal v. Van Orsdal, 67 Iowa, 85; Bimler v. Dawson, 5 Ill. 536, 39 Am. Dec. 430; Jones v. Warner, 81 Ill. 348; Renaud v. Abbott, 116 U. S. 288, 29 L. ed. 632.

This is particularly so with respect to judgments or decrees affecting the status of a person, they being in the nature of judgments in rem, which are binding on the whole world.

Roth v. Roth, 104 Ill. 45, 44 Am. Rep. 81; Hood v. Hood, 110 Mass. 463; Hoes v. Van Alstyne, 20 Ill. 202.

Courts have uniformly taken notice of the construction given to foreign statutes by the foreign tribunals; and to enable them to do this, they have always been in the habit of looking to the reports of such tribunals.

McDeed v. McDeed, 67 Ill. 548; Colt v. Colt, and Adams v. Adams, supra; Stark v. Ratoliff, 111 Ill. 81.

Independently of the decision of the supreme court the original decree was valid, because the court had jurisdiction (1) of the subject-matter; (2) of the parties, and its decree was within the powers granted it by the statute.

Jurisdiction of the subject-matter is power to adjudge concerning the general questions involved and is not dependent upon the state of facts which may appear in a particular case.

Barnard v. Barnard, 119 Ill. 92; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 129; Stark v. Ratcliff, supra; Ross v. Himely, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch, 241, 2 L. ed. 608.

The law of Pennsylvania gave the court of common pleas jurisdiction of the subject-matter of adoption laws of Pennsylvania, 1855, sub voce adoption.

The court of common pleas had jurisdiction of Samuel Sankey so far as his residence was concerned, for he was a resident of Lycoming county, Pennsylvania, within the meaning of the law of that state.

Wolf's App. (Pa.) April 23, 1888.

Residence may import temporary sojourn or permanent domicile. The precise meaning depends upon the purpose and phraseology of the statute.

Anderson, Law Dict. 892; Tyler v. Murray, 57 Md. 441.

Domicil is distinguished from residence. Domicil is defined to be a residence at a particular place accompanied with positive or presumptive proof of an intention to remain there for an unlimited time.

Whart. Conf. L. § 21; Collinson v. Teal, 4 Sawy. 241.

The word "resident" may have different meanings even in the same act.

Brundred v. Del Hoyo, 20 N. J. L. 828.

While a man may have but one domicile he may have several residences, and his domicile may even be in one state and his residence in another.

Way v. Way, 84 Ill. 406; Hayes v. Hayes, 74 Ill. 312; Stout v. Leonard, 87 N. J. L. 495; Frost v. Brisbin, 19 Wend. 11, 32 Am. Dec. 428; Greene v. Greene, 11 Pick. 415; Wells v. People, 44 Ill. 40; Re Wrigley, 8 Wend. 184; Tazewell County Supra. v. Davenport, 40 Ill. 197; Laham v. Gibbons, 1 Bradf. 69; New York v. Genet, 4 Hun, 487; Crawford v. Wilson, 4 Barb. 504; Chapman v. Chapman, 129 Ill. 390.

The words "residence" and "domicil" standing alone, and not limited or qualified by the subject are not in law equivalents in meaning. Thus viewed the former does not require the animus manendi, the latter does.

2 Bishop, Marriage & Divorce and Separation, § 107; Dicey, Domicil, p. 77.

Even though a party to a decree or judgment is not domiciled in the jurisdiction of the court which rendered it, yet appearance will give jurisdiction to such court.

Re Waite, 99 N. Y. 433; Whart. Conf. L. § 285; Jones v. Jones, 108 N. Y. 415; Bissell v. Briggs, 9 Mass. 464, 6 Am. Dec. 88; Randolph County v. Ralls, 18 Ill. 30; Kinnier v. Kinnier, 45 N. Y. 540, 6 Am. Rep. 182; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217, 28 Am. Rep. 129; Ginn v. Rogers, 9 Ill. 183; Fleischman v. Walker, 91 Ill. 820; Peak v. People, 71 Ill. 278; Jones v. Warner, 81 Ill. 346.

And having sought and submitted himself to such jurisdiction he may not afterwards question it.

23 L. R. A.

Re Waite, Randolph County v. Ralls, and Bissell v. Briggs, supra.

The court of common pleas had jurisdiction of the minor child, Caroline C. Sankey, as the domicile of her last surviving parent was within its jurisdiction.

The domicile of an infant without parents is the domicile of his last surviving parent.

Jacobs, Domicil, § 266; Lamar v. Micou, 112 U. S. 452, 28 L. ed. 751; Holjoke v. Haskins, 5 Pick. 20, 16 Am. Dec. 372; Lewis v. Castello, 17 Mo. App. 593; Louisville v. Sherley, 80 Ky. 71; Mills v. Hopkinville, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 164.

Neither the infant himself nor his guardian can change his domicile.

Lamar v. Micou, supra; Lewis' Succession, 10 La. Ann. 789, 68 Am. Dec. 600; Story, Conf. L. § 506; Whart. Conf. L. §§ 41, 42; Woodworth v. Spring, 4 Allen, 322; Re Feyh's Estate, 5 N. Y. Supp. 90.

Notice to the child was not required, and hence was not necessary to the validity of the adoption; nor was it a jurisdictional fact.

Kurts v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 43 Minn. 389; Luppie v. Winans, 37 N. J. Eq. 245; Barnard v. Barnard, 119 Ill. 92; Gibson, Appellant, 154 Mass. 378.

The Illinois law of adoption is "taken directly from the Massachusetts acts."

Hence the courts of Illinois will look to the construction of that law by the tribunals of Massachusetts, from which it was adopted.

Bishop, Written Law, § 79; Gage v. Smith, 79 Ill. 219; Rigg v. Wilton, 13 Ill. 15, 54 Am. Dec. 419; Campbell v. Quinlin, 4 Ill. 288; Keegan v. Geraghty, 101 Ill. 83.

Appointment of guardian of child under fourteen years of age does not require notice to child.

Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 64, § 1; Gibson, Appellant, supra.

Nor in case of sale of its property is notice required to be given him, except it is specifically required by the law under which such sale is made.

Spring v. Kane, 86 Ill. 583; Mulford v. Stalzenback, 46 Ill. 808; Mulford v. Beveridge, 78 Ill. 455.

It is not necessary that the person who consents as next friend to the minor should have received an appointment as such from legal authority.

Com. v. Roach, 1 Ashm. 27.

Failure to appoint guardian ad litem or next friend would not make the decree void, but only voidable, and that only by the infant, at her election.

Gage v. Schroder, 78 Ill. 47; Barnett v. Wolf, 70 Ill. 82; Goudy v. Hall, 36 Ill. 313, 37 Am. Dec. 217; Millard v. Marmon, 116 Ill. 653; Cott v. Cott, 111 U. S. 578, 28 L. ed. 525; Sewall v. Roberts, 115 Mass. 263; Peak v. Shasted, 21 Ill. 187, 74 Am. Dec. 83; Harris v. Ross, 112 Ind. 314.

The court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and parties, and acting within its powers, the decree, even though erroneous, must stand until reversed in some direct proceeding. It is not open to collateral attack. It will be presumed that the court heard facts which required it to decree as it did.

Barnard v. Barnard, 119 Ill. 92; Young v.

Lorain, 11 Ill. 625, 53 Am. Dec. 463; Stow v. Kimball, 28 Ill. 107; Postwick v. Skinner, 80 Ill. 147; Fitzgibbon v. Lake, 29 Ill. 177, 81 Am. Dec. 302; Spring v. Kane, 86 Ill. 580; Housh v. People, 66 Ill. 181; Henline v. People, 81 Ill. 271; Schnell v. Chicago, 38 Ill. 390, 87 Am. Dec. 304; Moffitt v. Moffitt, 69 Ill. 646; Cott v. Cott, supra.

In Pennsylvania and Alabama orphans' courts are courts of record, and would seem to stand nearly on the same basis as to presumptions, etc., as other courts of superior jurisdiction.

Orepps v. Durden, 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 9th Am. ed. p. 1012; Freeman, Judgm. 3d ed. § 129.

A decree of adoption being for the benefit of the child adopted, the court will consider its welfare on any attack upon it.

Baker v. Strahorn, 33 Ill. App. 59; Sewall v. Roberts, supra.

The doctrine of res judicata embraces not only what has actually been determined in the former suit, but also extends to any other matter properly involved, and which might have been determined in it.

Bennitt v. Wilmington Star Min. Co. 119 Ill. 9; Litch v. Clinch, 136 Ill. 425; Kelly v. Donlin, 70 Ill. 878; Riverside Co. v. Townshend, 120 Ill. 9; Harmon v. Auditor of Public Accounts, 123 Ill. 122; Neff v. Smyth, 111 Ill. 100; Lyons v. Cooleage, 89 Ill. 529; Rogers v. Higgins, 57 Ill. 244; Bailey v. Bailey, 115 Ill. 557; Morgan v. Beloit, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 617, 19 L. ed. 205; Stickney v. Goudy, 132 Ill. 281; Crabill v. Crabill, 22 Or. 588.

Persons on whose behalf and under whose direction the suit is prosecuted or defended in the name of some other person, are bound by the adjudication.

Bennitt v. Wilmington Star Min. Co. supra; Cole v. Favorite, 69 Ill. 457; Freeman, Judgm. § 174.

When the protection of the principle of res judicata is invoked it is not necessary that it should be between exactly the same parties or in the same mode of action, as in the former case.

Hanna v. Read, 102 Ill. 607, 40 Am. Rep. 608; Davenport v. Barnett, 51 Ind. 829; Webber v. Mackey, 31 Ill. App. 376; Pepper v. Pepper, 24 Ill. App. 820; Moore v. Williams, 182 Ill. 589; Garrick v. Chamberlain, 97 Ill. 620; Hawley v. Simons, 102 Ill. 115; Hamilton v. Quimby, 46 Ill. 98.

The fact that a judgment or decree is entered on a demurrer does not render its effect less conclusive.

Nispe v. La Parle, 74 Ill. 309, citing Gould, Pl. 4th ed. pp. 43, 44; Gould v. Evansville & C. R. Co. 91 U. S. 526, 23 L. ed. 416; Bigelow, Estoppel, p. 33; Doughty v. Doughty, 27 N. J. Eq. 815.

An estoppel of record arising out of a judgment which determines the status of a person is operative and conclusive as to all the world.

Hood v. Hood, 110 Mass. 465.

A judgment of a court of last resort cannot be attacked collaterally in that or in any other state.

Bigelow, Estoppel, p. 22; Sturgis v. Rogers, 26 Ind. 1; Lucas v. San Francisco, 28 Cal. 591; Roundtree v. Turner, 36 Ala. 555; U. S. Const. 38 L. R. A.

art. 4, § 1; Act of Congress, May 26, 1790; U. S. Rev. Stat. p. 171, § 90; Mills v. Duryee, 11 U. S. 7 Cranch, 481, 3 L. ed. 411.

The only question that can be inquired into is, whether the court which pronounced the judgment had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the persons of the parties.

Zepp v. Hager, 70 Ill. 227; Chippes v. Yancy, 1 Ill. 3; Cott v. Cott, 111 U. S. 578, 28 L. ed. 525.

The full faith and credit required to be given in each state to the judicial proceedings of other states will prevent any evidence to contradict the facts which show a jurisdiction, if such appear on the record.

Hall v. Williams, 9 Pick. 282, 17 Am. Dec. 356; Zepp v. Hager, supra; Westcott v. Brown, 13 Ind. 88; Bi-sell v. Briggs, 9 Mass. 463, 6 Am. Dec. 88; Borden v. Fitch, 15 Johns. 121, 8 Am. Dec. 225; Cott v. Cott, supra; Kinnier v. Kinnier, 45 N. Y. 540, 6 Am. Rep. 132; People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 83, 32 Am. Rep. 274; Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 225, 28 Am. Rep. 129; Doughty v. Doughty, 28 N. J. Eq. 581; Nichols v. Nichols, 25 N. J. Eq. 65.

If the record falsely shows on its face that it had jurisdiction, then it must be "set aside by an audita querela, or on petition and motion, such being the familiar practice in similar cases."

Landes v. Brant, 51 U. S. 10 How. 369, 13 L. ed. 458.

Shope, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented by the appeal of Mary F. Van Matre is whether there was a legal adoption of Caroline C. Sankey by Samuel Sankey, in his lifetime, in Pennsylvania, by which, under the laws of that state, she became his heir-at-law. It is insisted that there was no legal adoption, for the reason that the court was without jurisdiction to enter the decree—First, because said Samuel Sankey was not at the time a resident of the county of Lycoming and state of Pennsylvania, where the same was entered, within the contemplation and meaning of the statute of that state; and, second, that it does not affirmatively appear from the record that said proceedings were had with notice to the child proposed to be adopted. Many minor and collateral objections made may be appropriately considered under these headings.

The question of whether Samuel Sankey was a resident of Lycoming county, Pa., within the meaning of the statute, was directly presented in the proceedings for adoption, and was determined adversely to the contention of appellant. It will be seen from the foregoing statement that the verified petition presented alleged that he was a resident of the city and county of San Francisco, Cal., "and that he is now a temporary resident at Williamsport," in said county of Lycoming, Pa. By the recitals in the decree of adoption, it appears that the court found he was such temporary resident; that he was "at present resident in said county of Lycoming." And the court necessarily held that such temporary residence in the county gave it jurisdiction to hear and determine the adoption proceedings. Again, the same question was raised and determined in the application made by this appellant and other collateral heirs to that court to revoke the order and decree of January 2, 1879. It was there expressly alleged that the court was without jurisdiction for the reason that said Sankey was a resident of the state of California at the time of the application for adoption. In passing upon that question, that court, in an able opinion by Cummins, P. J., said: "The court is asked to set aside this decree of adoption on two grounds: First, want of jurisdiction; second, misrepresentation of facts. The jurisdiction of the court in this case must appear in the petition presented by Samuel Sankey to the court, asking for the decree of adoption." And after setting out the petition, in substance, and its verification, it is further said: "It is as a 'temporary resident' at Williamsport, in the county of Lycoming, that the petition invokes the powers of the court of that county."

Does the word 'resident,' as used in the Act of May 4, 1855, supra, include a temporary resident? And, after showing that the word "resident" has received various interpretations, it is said: "The purpose of our adoption act is to promote the welfare of the child to be adopted, and any one desirous of adopting a child may invoke the power of the court of the county in which he or she may reside. It does not require that the petitioner shall be a citizen, a freeholder, or an inhabitant, nor does it require that he shall reside any certain length of time. It does not say that he shall be a permanent resident, which has been held to be synonymous with 'inhabitant,' nor that he may be a temporary resident, which has been held to be synonymous with a 'sojourner.' After a careful examination of all the authorities cited (they are too numerous to be classified or referred to here), I am of opinion that the word 'resident,' as used in the Act of May 4, 1855, includes both a permanent and a temporary resident and the jurisdiction of the court is therefore sufficiently set forth in the petition." An appeal having been prosecuted to the supreme court of Pennsylvania from the judgment rendered by the court of common pleas, that court, after setting out in full, and, in effect, adopting, the opinion of the learned judge of the court of common pleas, affirmed the order sustaining the demurrer to the petition to revoke the decree of adoption. Wolf's App. (Pa.) 13 Atl. Rep. 760.

By the Act of May 4, 1855, of the state of Pennsylvania, as will be seen in the foregoing statement, it is provided that if any person is desirous of adopting any child as his or her heir, or as one of his or her heirs, it shall be lawful to present his or her petition to the proper court, "in the county where he or she may be a resident," etc. We are now called upon, by the same parties who sought to have the decree of adoption set aside in the courts of Pennsylvania, where it was made, and who claim title under and through said Samuel Sankey, to place upon the statute of that state a construction differing materially from that put upon it by these courts, and to hold that Samuel Sankey was not, at the time of the adoption, a resident of Lycoming county, Pa., within the meaning of said statute, and that, therefore, the court was without jurisdiction to enter the decree. Neither in the petition of the collateral heirs, filed in the court of common pleas of Lycoming county, Pa., nor in the original bill filed in this case, is the allegation of the original petition filed by Samuel Sankey—that he was, at the time of the application for adoption, "a temporary resident at Williamsport," in the county of Lycoming, etc.—controverted. It will thus be seen that the question there and here presented was whether a temporary residence was sufficient to authorize the adoption under the statute of Pennsylvania. When a statute of a state has been given construction by the highest tribunal of the state, such construction will, ordinarily, in the court of a sister state, be adopted as binding and conclusive. Hunt v. Hunt, 72 N. Y. 217 28 Am. Rep. 129; Gilchrist v. West Virginia Oil & O. L. Co. 21 W. Va. 115, 45 Am. Rep. 555; Gunn v. Howell, 35 Ala. 144, 78 Am. Dec. 484; McDeed v. McDeed, 67 Ill. 545; Kingsley v. Kingsley, 20 Ill. 208. The same rule has been recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States. Walker v. Marks, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 648, 21 L. ed. 744; Bailey v. Magwire, 89 U. S. 23 Wall. 215, 23 L. ed. 850; Galpin v. Page, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 850, 21 L. ed. 959; Secombe v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 108, 23 L. ed. 67; Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 90, 37 L. ed. 859; Bucher v. Chesire R. Co. 125 U. S. 555, 31 L. ed. 795. And this, although the examining court finds that upon similar language, in a statute within their own sovereignty, they would place a different, or even reverse construction.

We should here notice the objection that the decree of adoption was entered without the consent of the parties required by the statute. The petition filed by Samuel Sankey alleged that the minor was the child of his brother, that her father and mother were dead, that all the sisters and brothers of her deceased father consented to the adoption, and that her kindred on the mother's side were not so situated or circumstanced that they could properly care for the child. The record discloses that evidence was taken, and it must be presumed that the court found the material allegations of the petition to be true. By the act, as will be seen, the court is required to be satisfied that the interests and welfare of the child will be promoted by the adoption. The guardian, the legality of whose appointment by the court is not questioned, contested the adoption proceedings, and the court, in what must be presumed to be the exercise of its lawful powers, removed him previous to the entry of the decree, and appointed said Samuel Sankey as guardian in his stead. The court had in the contest made by the former guardian, "after careful investigation and inquiry," found all the facts necessary to justify the decree. It found that the uncles and aunts of the child, on its father's side, as next of kin, approved and consented, and that the interests and welfare of the child would be promoted by the adoption; and it was expressly held by the court, on the application of the collateral heirs before mentioned, that "it was not necessary that all of the uncles and aunts should consent." Moreover, as said by that court, "on the day the decree was entered, Huling's appointment as guardian was revoked, and Samuel Sankey, the petitioner in the adoption proceeding, was appointed guardian of the child, and not only consented, but sought the adoption of his ward." By reference to the statute set out in the foregoing statement, it will be seen that the adoption may be had with the consent of the guardian. While it might have conformed more nearly to the practice in this state, after the appointment of the petitioner as guardian, to have formally appointed a guardian ad litem, or "a next friend," who, under the statute, could have given the required consent, the failure to do so would, at most, be an irregularity, only, which would not subject the decree to collateral attack. At most, it could render the adoption voidable only. Prak v. Shasted, 21 Ill. 137, 74 Am. Dec. 83; Millard v. Marmion, 116 Ill. 653. This question was necessarily before the Pennsylvania courts, both in the original proceeding and upon the petition to revoke and set aside the decree of adoption, and it was held that sufficient was shown upon the record to warrant the entry of the decree in the common pleas court. Wolf's App. supra.

Moreover, the courts of Pennsylvania, in the later proceeding, held,—as we think, properly,—in considering this and similar contentions, that Samuel Sankey, if living, would be, and the parties now seeking to disregard that decree, claiming under and in privity with him, were, estopped from questioning the validity of the adoption. We do not find it necessary to pursue or determine that matter here. It having been determined, upon direct proceeding, by the court of last resort of the state in which the decree was rendered, that the court of common pleas had jurisdiction to enter the decree, we are required to give it full faith and credit. The Pennsylvania court of common pleas having jurisdiction of the person of parties, and subject-matter, as was necessarily held by the supreme court of that state, it had power to adjudicate the questions involved, and its decree cannot be impeached by showing irregularity in its procedure, or that errors intervened in its rendition. Kinnier v. Kinnier, 45 N. Y. 542, 6 Am. Rep. 182. Jurisdiction conferred power upon the court to judicially determine the questions involved, and incorporate its determination in a decree fixing the right of the parties,—the status of each towards the other; and it will, unless attacked for fraud, be held valid, and conclusive upon the parties and their privies, until reversed or set aside in the jurisdiction in which it was rendered. 2 Story, Const. Lim. 1813; Cheever v. Wilson, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. ed. 604; Nichols v. Nichols, 25 N. J. Eq. 63; People v. Baker, 76 N. Y. 88, 32 Am. Rep. 274; Adams v. Adams, 154 Mass. 295, 13 L. R. A. 275; Jones v. Warner, 81 Ill. 348; Roth v. Roth, 104 Ill. 85, 44 Am. Rep. 81.

It is contended that the decision of the 28 L. R. A.

supreme court of Pennsylvania in Wolf's Appeal, supra, cannot be regarded as an authoritative exposition of the law, for the reason, as it is contended, that no appeal lies from the court of common pleas to that court, and that the appeal to Wolf, therefore, conferred no jurisdiction: There is nothing in this record, or the adjudications of that court, as we understand them, to warrant the contention. The statutes of that state upon the subject were not proved or introduced in evidence, and in rendering its judgment of affirmance the court necessarily, determined its own jurisdiction. It was expressly held in Lewis' App. (Pa.) 10 Atl. Rep. 128, by that court, that, upon appeal from a decree of adoption rendered by the court of common pleas, that court could "review the record," and doing so, and finding no error, affirmed the decree. Here, every question presented arose upon the record, and the question determined was whether the matters alleged in the petition for vacation were sufficient to require the setting aside of the original decree. It being the court of last resort, it must be presumed, in the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, that it would not adjudicate unless it had jurisdiction to render judgment in the cause. Its jurisdiction must therefore, upon this record, be presumed. Davis v. Packard, 33 U. S. 8 Pet. 323, 8 L. ed. 961; Cooley, Const. Lim. 508; 2 Black, Judgm. 896; Horton v. Critchfield, 18 Ill. 133, 65 Am. Dec. 701; Dunbar v. Hollowell, 84 Ill. 168; Osgood v. Bluckmore, 59 Ill. 261.

Nor, in view of this decision of the Pennsylvania court, will it be necessary to determine whether the court of common pleas was exercising a special statutory jurisdiction, and therefore the rules applicable to courts of inferior jurisdiction applied, or not. Sufficient appearing upon the face of the record, as held, the jurisdiction must, in any event, be maintained. Nor were the proceedings for revocation of that summary character which will not be regarded as res judicata, or as conclusive upon the rights of the parties. The application was made by all of the persons interested in the revocation of the decree of adoption and who are here seeking to avoid it, and against the adopted child. All were before the court. Every material fact now insisted upon, as sufficient to avoid the decree, was there presented, and the sufficiency challenged by the demurrer to the petition. The court, upon their petition, every material averment of which as admitted by the demurrer to be true, assumed jurisdiction to determine the questions upon the merits, and did so. And, as we have seen, the supreme court of the state, adopting the reasoning of the opinion of the judge of the lower court, affirmed the judgment. The application was properly made to the courts of that state. Rae v. Hulbert, 17 Ill. 572; Ambler v. Whipple, 189 Ill. 311. And, those courts having assumed jurisdiction to pass upon the merits, it must be presumed that the proceeding was in conformity with the practice in such cases in that jurisdiction.

It is urged that the court of common pleas of Lycoming county, Pa., was without jurisdiction, and its decree is void, for the reason that the child adopted was in Illinois, and out of the jurisdiction of that court; and (3) that it is not shown that there was notice to the child proposed to be adopted. It is said this question was not presented by the petition for revocation of the decree, and was not, therefore, passed upon by the courts therein. Without pausing here to determine this latter contention, it may be again said that the question of the jurisdiction of the court to render the decree was necessarily before the court in the later proceedings, and must have been determined. But if this was otherwise, the contention is without merit. Caroline C. Sankey, at the date of the adoption, was of about the age of nine years. She was born in Lycoming county, Pa., where her father and mother were domiciled, and which was also the domicile of her parents, severally, at the time of their decease. There is substantial uniformity of decision that an infant cannot, of its own volition, change its domicile. Jacob, Domicil, §§ 228-229. See cases cited, note 1, p. 886, 5 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law. The rule of law is universally recognized, that every person, at birth, has his or her domicile in the country or place in which, at the time, the person on whom the infant is legally dependent is then domiciled, whether it be at the place of the birth or elsewhere. This domicile of origin, which, in case of legitimate children, is the domicile of the father, if living, and if not, that of the mother, continues to be the legal domicile of the child, unless changed by the parent during infancy, until he or she, upon attaining majority, or, perhaps, after being emancipated by the parents, acquires another. During dependency, the legal home or place of domicile follows that of its parents. And it is well settled that if both parents be dead the domicile of the child will be that of its origin, or, if that has been changed by the parents, that of its last surviving parent. Story, Conf. Laws, §§ 46, 506; 2 Kent, Com. § 227, note b; Woodworth v. Spring, 4 Allen, 328; Lewis v. Costello, 17 Mo. App., 598; 5 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, title, "Domicil." The infant had, as already seen, been committed by the court of common pleas to the care and custody of a guardian, who was amenable to that court for the discharge of that duty. The guardian was duly notified, appeared, and contested the adoption. The statute of Pennsylvania does not require that the child shall be personally present in court, or that it be notified of the proceeding. Notice to it would in no wise add to or detract from the power given or the duty imposed by law upon the court, of determining the question of adoption in the interest and for the welfare of the child. It could neither consent nor object to the power exercised by the state, through the instrumentality of the court, over its person. The power and duty of the state to care for the estates and person of infants, so far as necessary for their protection and education, has been generally recognized. It is in cases of this sort, of the same character of jurisdiction as that exercised by courts of chancery, which is an exercise of the prerogative of the sovereign, springing from its power and duty, as parens patria, to guard the interests of dependents, and protect and control them. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 1838-1841; Re Ferrier, 103 Ill. 367, 43 Am. Rep. 10. The precise point arose upon a similar statute in Gibson, Appellant, 154 Mass. 378. The decree of adoption was made "without notice, by publication or otherwise," to the child "her parents, relatives, or next of kin." It was held, the statute not requiring it, no notice was necessary; the guardian of the child appearing, and consenting to the adoption. That the child was domiciled in Lycoming county, Pa., and, for the purposes of adoption, under jurisdiction and control of the court to which the state had committed the performance of its duty, and the exercise of its power, in such cases, does not seem to admit of doubt.

It is insisted that the decree of adoption, although valid in the state of the domicile of the child, and, pro tempore, of the person adopting her, cannot affect the descent of real property in Illinois; and McCartney v. Osburn, 118 Ill. 403, is cited as supporting that contention. This is a misapprehension of the case cited, as well as of the effect of the decree of adoption. In the Osburn Case, the courts of Pennsylvania had given construction to clauses of a will, as affecting property situated in that state, and the question was whether the parties were estopped by the construction there given in proceedings in this state affecting real property in this state. It was held that they were not, and that the courts of each state must construe the will, as affecting lands within their respective jurisdictions, for themselves, and might do so, as if the several properties were devised by separate wills. The real property passed under the law of its situs, and not by the law of the domicile of the testator, and therefore the will must be construed under the laws of this state, and that construction control its disposition. That case was expressly distinguished from Hanna v. Read, 103 Ill. 596, 40 Am. Rep. 608, and like cases, in which it is held that the right to relitigate is concluded by the former adjudication. The proceeding in this case was in the nature of a proceeding in rem, the purpose being to change the status of the child, in her relation to said Samuel Sankey. The decree of adoption was a declaration by competent authority, operative to change her status and, ipso facto, to render her that which she was declared to be,—the heir-at-law of Samuel Sankey, and capable of inheriting from him, in all respects, as if she had been his child born in lawful wedlock. 2 Black, Judgm. 792 et seq. The statute, under which the adoption proceedings were had, provides that the child shall be decreed to take the name of the adopting parents, "and have all the rights of a child and heir of such adopting parents, and be subject to the duties of such child." The decree, by force of this statute, established, eo instanti its rendition, the relation of parent and child, imposed upon the parties the reciprocal duties and obligations of that relation, and impressed upon and invested the child with the rights and qualities of a child and heir-at-law of Samuel Sankey. This we understand to be the construction of the statute by the courts of that state. Wolf's App. supra. The status of appellee, having been established under, and existing by virtue of, the lex domicilii, is to be recognized and upheld in every other state, unless such status, or the rights flowing therefrom, are inconsistent with, or opposed to, the laws and policy of the state where it is sought to be availed of. This court, in Keegan v. Geraghty, 101 Ill. 26, quoted with approval the language of Mr. Justice Gray, in Ross v. Ross, 129 Mass. 248, 87 Am. Rep. 331, as follows: "It is a general principle that the status or condition of a person, the relation in which he stands to another person, and by which he is qualified or made capable to take certain rights in that other's property, is fixed by the law of the domicile; and that status and capacity are to be recognized and upheld in every other state, so far as they are not inconsistent with its own laws and policy." And the principle announced, with its limitations, was expressly approved. Roth v. Roth, supra, and cases cited. In the Keegan Case, supra, the child, adopted under the laws of Wisconsin, sought, in this state, to take, not from the adopting parent, but from collaterals, and by representation. This court expressly recognized the status established in Wisconsin, so far as it related to the right to inherit from the parent by adoption, because consistent with the laws of this state relating to descent to adopted children, but denied the right to take by representation from collateral kindred of the parent, for the reason that such taking was prohibited by, and inconsistent with, the laws of this state. Rev. Stat. § 5, p. 132. No inconsistency with our laws, or their policy, exists in this case. The rights claimed under and by virtue of the adoption in Pennsylvania are those, and none other, that would exist upon the creation of the same artificial relation in this state. We are of opinion, therefore, that, upon the death of Samuel Sankey without other children, the estate in Illinois descended to appellee, Caroline C. Sankey, as his child and heir-at-law, and that the court correctly decreed, in dismissing the original bill.

It remains to consider the errors assigned by appellant Glos. He claimed title, as alleged and admitted, under four several tax deeds, to lots 58 and 59 in Mather & Taft's addition, etc., being parcel of the property in controversy. The cross-bill, as amended, alleged the invalidity of these deeds, and set out various defects in the proceedings, precedent to their issue, and prayed that they be severally removed, as clouds, etc. To sustain these allegations, the cross-complaint, among other things, introduced in evidence the affidavits made, under section 217 of the Revenue Act, by the purchaser or his assignee, as compliance with the requirements and conditions prescribed by section 216 of that Act in respect of each of said tax deeds. These several affidavits, in the respect here considered, are the same, and the objection is common to all. By section 216, the purchaser or his assignee is required among other things, as a condition precedent to his right to a deed, to serve the notice therein prescribed "on the owner of, or the parties interested in said land or lot, if they can, upon diligent inquiry be found in the county." And it is further provided that: "If . . . the owners cannot be found in the county," then such purchaser or his assignee shall publish such notice in some newspaper, etc. It is clear that personal service of the notice upon the owner, etc., is required, when, by diligent inquiry, he or she can be found in the county, and resort to publication of the notice can avail, or be held to be sufficient to entitle the purchaser or assignee to a deed, or to authorize the clerk to execute the same, only when the owner cannot, upon such inquiry be there found. This provision requiring personal service, if to be found in the county, was, as said in Wilson v. McKenna, 53 Ill. 48, "intended for wise purposes,—to prevent owners of land from being deprived of their titles except upon actual notice, if practicable to give it." And it is only when the presumption that the owner is an absentee from the county is raised by a failure to find him, after diligent inquiry, that constructive notice by publication is authorized. By the next section of the statute (217), the purchaser or assignee, by himself or agent, is required to make and file with the proper officer authorized to execute the deed an affidavit of compliance with the conditions of section 216 stating particularly the facts relied on as such compliance. It is upon this affidavit the clerk acts. If it shows strict compliance with the statute, his act in executing the deed will be lawful. If it does not, it will be unauthorized, and the deed void. Wilson v. McKenna, supra; Wisner v. Chamberlin, 117 Ill. 568; Stillwell v. Brammell, 124 Ill. 339. So much of these affidavits as is important here is as follows: That, "during the two months next preceding the last three months prior to the expiration of the time of redemption from said sale, affiant made diligent search and inquiry in said county for said S. Sankey [the person in whose name assessed], and, upon such diligent search and inquiry, was unable to find him in said county," and that affiant, "made diligent search, and inquiry in said county for the owners of said premises, and, upon such diligent search and inquiry, was unable to find any of the said owners, and, upon such diligent search and inquiry, affiant was unable to find the names of any of said owners, except," etc. (naming six persons). There is no other statement in the affidavit, that aids the part quoted. We are of opinion that the affidavit failed to show compliance with the letter or spirit of the statute. The proceeding resulting in the execution of the tax deed is stricti juris, and no intendments in aid of it can be indulged. The act is silent as to where the "diligent inquiry" shall be made, but it must be of such character that it will enable the party to swear that, upon diligent inquiry the owner "cannot be found in the county." The statement that the affiant made diligent inquiry "in the county," and upon such diligent inquiry the owner cannot be found, may be and is, very different from the statement that, upon diligent inquiry, the owner cannot be found in the county. The first statement may be true, and still, by resorting to those means within the power of the party, and which an ordinarily diligent person would resort to, the place where the owner could be found, in the county, be readily known. "Diligent inquiry," as used in the statute, means such inquiry as a diligent man, intent upon ascertaining a fact, would usually and ordinarily make,—inquiry, with diligence, and in good faith, to ascertain the truth. Undoubtedly, inquiry in the county is proper, and ordinarily, perhaps, if sufficiently extended, in good faith, all that would be required to constitute "diligent inquiry." It is apparent that this affidavit may be entirely true, i. e. that, upon diligent inquiry "in the county," the owners could not be found, and yet the purchaser or his assignee, or his agent making the affidavit, have known that, without expense, inconvenience, or delay, he could readily ascertain the place "in the county" where the owner could be found, by inquiry just across the county line, or in some locality easy of access. Prudent and diligent men, who, in good faith, are seeking to find, pursue those lines of inquiry open to them, which may lead to the ascertainment of the fact, and exercise at least ordinary diligence therein; and, for aught that is shown, if the person making this affidavit had, with ordinary diligence, pursued inquiry where the fact might have been found, he would have found the owners in the county. As before said, the statute does not prescribe that diligent inquiry in the county will suffice, but requires that the inquiry shall be diligent, so that, prima facie, at least, the parties sought cannot be found in the county; so that the party making the proof can state that, upon diligent inquiry, he cannot be found in the county. Other objections are made to the tax deeds, some applying to all, and others to the deeds severally, which we do not deem it necessary to discuss. The objection already examined, which we regard as fatal to their validity, applies to all of them, and was sufficient to authorize the decree setting them aside on the terms imposed.

Finding no error in this record requiring a reversal, the decree of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

Harrison WATTS

v.

NORFOLK & WESTERN R. CO., Pf. in Err.

(.....W. Va.....)

- *1. When one grants to a railroad company a strip of land for its use in the construction of its railroad, all damages to the residue of the tract arising from construction which can be taken into consideration in the assessment of compensation under proceedings for condemnation are released, and he cannot recover therefor against the company, nor can his subsequent alienee of such residue.
2. Principles for assessment of compensation in condemnation proceedings discussed.
3. Injury to a private ferry in case of such grant as above supposed, arising from obstruction of one of its approaches by the proper construction of the railroad, cannot be the subject of an action by the landowner against the company.
4. In case of such grant, injury to a private way from such construction is not the subject of an action, but injury to a public road, peculiarly affecting such landowner, is.
5. In case of such grant, injury to a dwelling house upon such residue from the careful blasting of rock in construction is not the subject of an action: but rock so deposited on such land must be removed within a reasonable time, else it will form the basis of an action.

*Headnotes by BRANNON, P.

6. A fill or bar made in a stream by blasting and throwing into it rock and other refuse material in the work of construction of such railroad, which fill is not necessary for the construction and maintenance of the railroad, and which entails injury to a mill situate on such residue, is a private nuisance, and ground of action against the company.

7. Where the cause of injury is in its nature permanent, and a recovery for such injury would confer a license on the defendant to continue it, the entire damage may be recovered in a single action; but where the cause of injury is in the nature of a nuisance, and not permanent in character, but such that it may be supposed that the defendant would remove it rather than suffer at once entire damages, which it might inflict if permanent, then the entire damages, so as to include future damages, cannot be recovered in a single action, but actions may be maintained from time to time as long as the cause of the injury continues.

8. Where an actionable wrong by the defendant is shown, the plaintiff may recover nominal damages from the mere fact of such wrong; but, if compensatory damages are asked, the plaintiff must in some way show, by evidence, data and means by which the jury can ascertain and fix the amount of damages. The jury cannot go by merely arbitrary conjecture.

9. A dam erected in a floatable stream to furnish power to operate a mill useful to the public, under authority duly had from a county court, is not a public nuisance, though without sluice, and though it obstruct navigation; and a railroad company which, by an unlawful act in the construction of its road, inflicts injury upon the mill, cannot excuse itself for the case of a voluntary grant or conveyance for railroad purposes, on which the authorities have been very few.

NOTE.—The above illustrates unusually well the law as to consequential damages caused by railroad construction in several particulars, and also applies the doctrine of condemnation cases to the 23 L. R. A.

wrong by the plea that such dam is a public nuisance.

10. Public nuisance,—right of private abatement discussed.

11. A new trial will not be allowed because the jury disregarded an instruction erroneous in law.

(March 31, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in a proceeding brought to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been wrongfully inflicted upon plaintiff's property by the construction of defendant's road. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Campbell & Holt, for plaintiff in error:

The company may use its location for all the purposes of a railroad, and may exercise its discretion while keeping within such purposes. Pierce, Railroads, pp. 159-161, 496.

Where a railroad is located across a person's land by license such license carries with it full authority to do all necessary acts for the construction of the railway as would have been derived from a condemnation of the land.

2 Wood, Railway Law, p. 761; Babcock v. Western R. Co. 9 Met. 568, 48 Am. Dec. 411.

Where land is conveyed to a railway company for railway purposes it is presumed that all contingent damages which would have been included in an assessment of damages by commissioners were considered in determining the price.

1 Wood, Railway Law, p. 601, and cases cited.

The damages caused by the débris if any, should have been confined to the period preceding the suit. The débris is in the nature of a continuing nuisance, and every day it is permitted to remain a new cause of action arises, for which as many new suits may be prosecuted.

Wood's Mayne, Damages, p. 141; Sedgw. Damages, 5th ed. p. 155; 8 Sutherland, Damages, §§ 1084, 1089, 1041.

Messrs. Marcum & Peyton for defendant in error.

Brannon, P. delivered the opinion of the court:

In an action of trespass on the case by Harrison Watts against the Norfolk & Western Railroad Company in the circuit court of Wayne county, Watts recovered judgment for $1,074, and the company brought the case to this court by writ of error. In his declaration Watts complains of several wrongs done him by the company. The first wrong complained of is that the railroad company built a stone wall below his milldam, extending into and above the same, and filled in on both sides of said wall with earth, stones, and other substances, whereby the current of Twelve Pole creek was diverted, impeded, and obstructed, and caused to run against the plaintiff's gristmill and sawmill, and that caused the bank on which the same are built to be cut away and undermined, thereby diminishing and destroying the capacity of the water wheel to operate and propel the machinery of said mills, and their capacity to grind grain and saw lumber, and injuring his land. Let us take up first this ground of action. By deed dated March 20, 1890, Chapman Fry conveyed to the West Virginia & Ironton Railroad Company a strip of land for the construction of its railroad, which strip was transferred to the Norfolk & Western Railroad Company, being a strip out of land owned by Fry; and afterwards on May 5, 1891, Fry conveyed to the plaintiff, Watts, the said land, reserving and excepting the right of way conveyed to said railroad company by said deed of March 20, 1890. Thus the company had the older and better right to the land conveyed to it for right of way, with all rights and privileges going with it under the law. It had the right, as owner of said strip, to use it as it pleased for the purpose of the construction of its road, so it used it in a prudent, reasonable way, considering the nature of its use, and not in an improper, negligent way, inflicting unnecessary injury on others. It had the right, as against Fry, to build a wall to stay and support its roadway and protect it against the inroads of the stream. Suppose this wall, if built in a proper manner, did entail permanent injury upon Fry in diversion of the stream's current against his mills, lessening their capacity, or injuring the banks, he can recover no damage on that score. If, instead of acquiring the right of way land by purchase, the company had caused it to be condemned for its use, the compensation to Fry would include, not simply pay for the land actually taken, but damages to the residue of the tract. I will not enter upon any elaborate argument to prove that such injuries or damages as are complained of as resulting from said wall would be considered and taken into the assessment of damages upon an inquisition in a condemnation proceeding under section 14, chapter 42, Code 1891, they being such as might be reasonably anticipated from the use to which the land was to be devoted, and naturally, directly, and proximately resulted from such use of the land. I will refer to the following authorities touching the subject of what elements are to be considered in fixing compensation, not for the land taken, but damages to the residue: Shenandoah Valley R. Co. v. Shepherd, 26 W. Va. 672; 2 Wood, Railway Law, §§ 258, 259. The sum is to cover past, present, and prospective damages to such residue that are the natural, necessary, or reasonable incident to the work. 8 Sedgw. Damages, 164. From such damages to the residue, but not from compensation for the land actually taken, may be deducted peculiar benefits to be derived in respect to such residue from the work; not benefits of a general character, shared by the owner of the residue in common with other owners. Authorities bearing on the question of what benefits may be so deducted: James River & K. Co. v. Turner, 9 Leigh, 313; Muire v. Falconer, 10 Gratt. 18; Mitchell v. Thornton, 21 Gratt. 164; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Tyres, 7 W. Va. 693; Grafton & G. R. Co. v. Foreman, 24 W. Va. 662. Injury, though unforeseen, is yet presumed to have been considered in the assessment. 2 Wood, Railway Law, 1034; Aldrich v. Cheshire R. Co. 21 N. H. 359, 53 Am. Dec. 212. As Fry could not recover for injury from such wall, neither can Watts, as he purchased from Fry later, and in law, and by the reservation in his deed, in fact subject to the railroad company's right. The fact that the company claims, not under condemnation, but under a purchase or grant, does not alter the case, and entitle Watts to recovery for injury from the wall, because a grant of right of way is a waiver of all such damages as are assessable under an inquisition, as, in such case, if the grantor did not intend to waive damages, he should provide against injury. Opinion in Hortman v. Covington & L. R. Co. 18 B. Mon. 222; Mills, Em. Dom. § 110; Norris v. Vermont Cent. R. Co. 28 Vt. 99; Babcock v. Western R. Co. 9 Met. 553, 48 Am. Dec. 411; 1 Wood, Railway Law, 698; Hatch v. Vermont Cent. R. Co. 25 Vt. 49, 69; 2 Redf. Railways, 28; Pierce, Railroads, 133; Conwell v. Springfield & N. W. R. Co. 81 Ill. 232; Boothby v. Androscooggin & K. R. Co. 51 Me. 318. Though, in such case, there be damage, it is damnum absque injuria,—damage without violation of a right. Rood v. New York & H. R. Co. 18 Barb. 80.

The case of Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Smith, 111 Ill. 363, is very apt in this case. It held on common-law principles that, "when anything is granted, all the means to attain it, and all the fruits and effects, are granted also, by presumption of law, and will pass inclusive, together with the thing, by the grant of the thing itself, without the words, 'with its appurtenances,' and any like words;" that when the grant is for a certain use, neither the grantor nor one claiming under him can object to such use and recover damages resulting therefrom; that "where a person conveys a right of way over his land, it will be conclusively presumed that all the damages to the balance of the land, past, present, and future, were included in the consideration paid him for his conveyance, the same as an assessment of damages on a condemnation would be presumed to embrace." It was a grant of a right of way to a railroad. What can be the difference for present purposes? The one is a voluntary grant, the other is a legislative grant. They both equally divest the owner of his rights. The voluntary alienation should go at least as far as the compulsory one, and be favorably construed in favor of the alienee. In reason, the above proposition must be so, since it would be unreasonable to say that a free and voluntary grant of right of way would not confer immunity against damage incident to its proper use, while a compulsory condemnation would do so. If this wall had been built in a negligent and improper way, imposing injury upon the residue of the land, which, in the exercise of due and proper care, could have been avoided, it would be different; for neither a right of way conferred by grant nor one conferred by condemnation will give exemption from damages consequential upon the improper or negligent exercise of the rights, and not from the fair, proper, and reasonable exercise of it, for the reason that neither in making such grant nor in the assessment upon an inquisition are damages contemplated or included that are to be solely attributed to such misuse of the right. The grant is a defense as to all acts done within it, not outside of it. Southside R. Co. v. Daniel, 20 Gratt. 344, 375; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 432; Mills, Em. Dom. § 230; 2 Wood, Railway Law, 1004; 3 Sedgw. Damages, § 100. Authorities that for negligent construction the party is liable outside of the statute by common-law action, unprotected by the condemnation, are found everywhere; and as Mr. Sedgwick says, ubi supra, the rule is universal. There is no evidence that such wall was not in itself a prudent construction in building the railroad, or that it was not properly constructed, or that any injury it worked was avoidable. No damage could be recovered on account of it.

The second wrong imputed by the declaration to the defendant is that a private ferry over the milldam in Twelve Pole creek had long existed, used by the patrons of the mill in passing to and from the mill with grain, and its products when ground, and by the construction of the road the approach to it on one side of the creek had been destroyed. The principles above stated apply to this private ferry. Damage to it, as incident to or consequential upon the use of the right of way, was covered by its grant. No recovery could be had for the destruction of this ferry. These principles were not observed in the instructions given in the case, at least as to the wall. In instruction No. 8, given as one of three in lieu of certain ones asked by plaintiff which the court rejected, the court tells the jury that if the defendant in building its road "committed any of the acts set out in the declaration," whereby the channel of the creek was diverted from its natural course, and thereby caused the water to flood the water wheels running the machinery of the mills, diminishing their power and usefulness, they must find for the plaintiff. This included the wall as a factor in the work of injury in the very wide and general statement of the hypothesis of the instruction, and, without regard to the question whether it was properly or improperly constructed under the grant of right of way, seeming to brand it as an unlawful structure imperatively calling for damages. Instruction 10 is that, if the defendant committed "any other act" complained of in the declaration, injuring the plaintiff's property, it was liable. What other acts are referred to? Instruction 9 spoke of injuries to the ferry and to the road below spoken of, and perhaps "other act" refers to acts other than those injuring the ferry and road; but it is indefinite, and not plainly intelligible by a jury. But, give it that construction, and it is wrong, for the additional reason that it includes all other acts, including the wall, propounding unreservedly the proposition of the absolute liability of the company for any act injuring the property.

A third wrong complained of is that a public road crossed said creek just below the mills, affording a crossing to the public, and enabling patrons of the mills to reach them, and that in constructing its road the company had destroyed this road and crossing. Neither a condemnation by law nor grant of right of way will justify destruction of a public highway in the construction of a railroad. The statute on the subject (clause 6, § 50, chap. 54, Code) provides that, when the work interferes with a highway, it shall be restored to its former condition. State v. Monongahela R. Co. 37 W. Va. 108. As the law thus contemplates that the company will provide for the continued usefulness of the highway, of course, at the time of condemnation it is not anticipated that a highway will be destroyed or left materially injured in the work, and nothing is or can be assessed for damages thereto, except the proceeding be to condemn it as a highway under clause 6, § 50, chap. 54, and therefore the condemnation gives no protection against indictment or civil action for its destruction or injury beyond that contemplated by law to a highway. Gear v. O. & D. R. Co. 48 Iowa, 88. Neither does one who grants right of way contemplate that a highway will be destroyed. In fact, the party whose land is granted or taken does not own the highway. He may own the mere land or soil, but not the way. The public owns that. He has only a citizen's interest in it. By no reasonable argument can it be maintained that he intended to waive his right in the highway. But in the case of a private way it is different. Injury resulting to it from the proper, reasonable, and lawful use of the land granted or condemned is covered by the assessment or grant, unless provided against in the grant. By express provision of section 14, chap. 42, Code 1891, no damages can be assessed for private crossings in condemnation of land for railroad use; but the company must construct and forever maintain them. This is a prudent provision, since, without it, likely the land owner would have no right to cross, as the assessment of compensation would, legally speaking, include the injury resulting from inconvenient access or nonaccess to the divided parts. 2 Wood, Railway Law, 1045; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 496; 8 Sedgw. Damages, § 1165; Mason v. Kennebec & P. R. Co. 31 Me. 215. It seems that where there is no such provision, and where the condemnation vests in the applicant only an easement, leaving title in the owner, he may cross by means of crossings made by himself at proper times, and in proper places, so as not to hinder the operation of the railroad; but where the absolute title goes out of the owner, and vests in the applicant, he cannot cross. This distinction is plainly drawn in the two cases of Housatonic R. Co. v. Waterbury, 23 Conn. 109, and Kansas Cent. R. Co. v. Allen, 32 Kan. 285, 31 Am. Rep. 190, cited in 2 Wood on Railway Law, 903. The grantor must provide for crossings in his grant. So where one conveys to a railroad company the absolute estate in a strip of land, why does it not confer absolute dominion, and what gives him right to exercise a privilege that may seriously detract from the use for which it was required? In this state the entire estate vests in land condemned for railroad purposes. Code 1891, chap. 42, § 18. The grant in this case was of the fee 33 L. R. A.

in the land. Therefore, if the way be private, there can be no recovery of damages for it, as the owner cannot, on his own land, have a private way, independent of his right to the land; and the way goes with the land by condemnation or grant, and injury to it is presumed to have been considered. 2 Wood, Railway Law, p. 1067, § 261; Clark v. Boston, C. & M. R. Co., 24 N. H. 114. There was no evidence that said road was public, other than mere long user by the public, which is insufficient to establish it as a public road. Talbot v. King, 32 W. Va. 6. The court gave instruction No. 9, saying that, if the defendant constructed its road upon the location set out in the deed from Fry, then it was not liable for damage to the road or ferry, unless the road and ferry were public, and, if public, it would be liable. This instruction is faulty—First, because it submitted a question of fact not in issue,—that is, whether the ferry was a public ferry, and, if so, directed the jury to award damages for injury to it, when there was no pretense in the declaration that it was a public ferry, and faulty; secondly, because it submitted the question of fact whether the road was public, and, if so, directed the jury to award damages for its injury, when there was no evidence to establish it as a public road save mere user.

A fourth point of complaint in the declaration is that the defendant company, by blasting rock, and throwing them through and into the dwelling house and mills, did damage thereto. Is this a ground of recovery? It is not. The distinguished Chief Justice Shaw discussed this subject, saying: "An authority to construct any public work carries with it authority to use the appropriate means. Authority to make a railway is an authority to reduce the line of the road to a level, and for that purpose to make cuts, as well through ledges of rocks as through banks of earth. In a remote and detached place, where due precaution can be taken to prevent danger to persons, blasting by gunpowder is a reasonable and appropriate mode of executing such a work, and, if due precautions are taken to prevent unnecessary damage, is a justifiable mode. It follows that the necessary damage occasioned thereby to a dwelling house or other building, which cannot be removed out of the way of such danger, is one of the natural and unavoidable consequences of executing the work, and within the provisions of the statute. Of course this reasoning will not apply to damage occasioned by carelessness or negligence in executing the work. Such careless or negligent act would be a tort, for which an action at law would lie against him who commits or him who commends it. But where all due precautions are taken, and damage is still necessarily done to fixed property, it is alike within the letter and spirit of the statute, and the county commissioners have a right to assess the damages." Dodge v. Essex County Comrs. 3 Met. 880. The damage to buildings, being simply incidental to the construction of the work contemplated in the condemnation or grant of land for right of way, is presumed to have entered into consideration, and recovery is barred thereby, whether in fact regarded or not. The same doctrine is maintained in 2 Wood on Railway Law, § 260, pp. 1058, 1066; Bruton v. Providence, W. & B. R. Co. 5 Gray, 35; Whitehouse v. Andros-coggin R. Co. 52 Me. 208; Sabin v. Vermont Cent. R. Co. 25 Vt. 368; Dearborn v. Boston, C. & M. Railroad, 24 N. H. 179. This doctrine is based on the principle above stated, that in condemning entire damages are allowed,—a sum to cover all damages, past, present, and prospective, that are the natural, necessary, or reasonable incidents of the work; but not such as may arise from negligent or otherwise improper construction or use. 8 Sedgw. Damages, § 1164. To avoid misconstruction, I will say that above I speak of damage to lands of an owner, part of whose lands have been condemned by legal process to the public use, not to one whose buildings are injured by blasting, and none of whose land has been condemned; for in the latter case there is no inquisition to protect the party doing the injury, and he is liable for such injury. Hay v. Cohoes Co. 2 N. Y. 159, 51 Am. Dec. 279; St. Peter v. Denison, 58 N. Y. 416, 17 Am. Rep. 258; Carman v. Steubenville & I. R. Co. 4 Ohio St. 399; 8 Sutherland, Damages, § 1051.

Another point of complaint in the declaration is that rock and other matter blasted into the creek and there remaining, and rock and other material thrown over the bank, narrowing the creek channel, did injury by diverting the water against the mill and opposite bank, lessening the power of the water wheels, and destroying the bed of said road and the crossing of the creek, and a part of said road. Now, rock blown upon the remaining land of Fry in the creek or elsewhere could not be suffered to remain, though the original casting of them there was lawful, but they must be removed within a reasonable time. Sabin v. Vermont Cent. R. Co. 25 Vt. 368; 2 Rorer, Railroads, 784; 2 Wood, Railway Law, § 260, p. 1066. So any débris not fairly necessary for the construction and maintenance of the road, inflicting injury, would be actionable, and would sustain this action. It would be negligent, improper exercise of the right granted. Under the record, I see no other ground of recovery; but I think that ground does sustain the action to the extent of recovery for damage attributable to such rock and other débris, not necessary as a part of permanent structure. The evidence of the defendant, by its engineer, makes it clear that the "fill" or "bar," as called in the evidence, made up of rock and other material, was not at all necessary for the support or benefit of the railroad, and could not be justified under its authority to build the road if it has injured the plaintiff. But as to injury from such débris we think there is error as to instructions. The defendant asked, but was refused, instructions 1, 2, and 4, which announced the position that if there was a liability on that score, recovery could be had for only such damage as resulted from such débris prior to the commencement of the suit. The position taken by counsel for defendant before the trial court, as evinced by those instructions, was that any injury flowing from rock, earth, or other material cast into the creek, and left there, not necessary in the construction of the railroad, was not permanent in nature, but remediable with the removal of the same, and that in this one suit there could not be a recovery of damages for all time to come as for a lasting and permanent injury; and this position was, I think, correct. The doctrine is exemplified in cases of our own. Take the case of Hargreaves v. Kimberly, 26 W. Va. 787, 57 Am. Rep. 121. The syllabus lays down the law conformably to authority generally that, "where the cause of the injury is in its nature permanent, and a recovery for such injury would confer a license on the defendant to continue the cause, the entire damage may be recovered in a single action; but where the cause of the injury is in the nature of a nuisance, and not permanent in character, but of such a character that it may be supposed that the defendant would remove it, rather than suffer at once the entire damage which it might inflict if permanent, then the entire damage cannot be recovered in a single action, but actions may be maintained from time to time as long as the cause of the injury continues." See Smith v. Point Pleasant & O. R. Co. 28 W. Va. 451; McKenzie v. Ohio River R. Co. 27 W. Va. 306. To recover for permanent injury the declaration must show an intent to claim for permanent injury (cases just cited), and here the declaration, we may say, so claims as to injury wrought by such débris; but, the nature of the cause of injury being impermanent, the character of declaration could not entitle the plaintiff to recover for future injury, and thus take away from the defendant the right to remove the source of injury upon a judicial determination that his action was indefensible, and burden him at once and irrevocably for damage in future, not yet accrued. The case of Hargreaves v. Kimberly, supra, will support the position. All the acts imputed to the defendant, defensible and indefensible, are not permanent causes of injury in nature, and most certainly the débris not part of or necessary to the stability of the railway are not.

The two following instructions were refused, and, I think ought to have been given. While no one questions that a jury must judge of the amount of damages, yet to give anything more than merely nominal damages,—to give compensatory damages,—the jury cannot act arbitrarily, but must have data according to the nature of the subject, so as to have some measure or standard to go by. There is some basis for estimation, perhaps, as to the sawmill, but as to the mill there is only evidence to show a certain per cent of diminution of capacity, and what the usual earnings were is not shown, and there is no showing of loss of earnings, and no evidence of how much more time was consumed in grinding for custom from loss of capacity, or what its cost, or how much was the loss incident to the diminution of the mill's capacity. Not even opinion evidence or estimate appears. The jury would have to conjecture in fixing a sum.

"No. 5. The jury are further instructed that the burden is upon the plaintiff to prove to them the damages, if any, which he has suffered by reason of the alleged wrongful act of defendant, and wherein and what such damages are; and, if the plaintiff has failed to prove any damages, although he proves the wrongful act by defendant whereby his water power was diminished, the jury can give only nominal damages. No. 6. The jury are further instructed by the court that if the plaintiff would recover for loss of profits in operating said mill consequent upon the alleged wrongful act of defendants, it is his duty to prove wherein, when, and what profit he lost, and the amount thereof, as near as may be; and it is not sufficient for him to prove simply that his water power has been diminished, thus lessening the amount of work done in a given time, but he must go further, and show that custom and work were tendered, and refused because of want of capacity to meet the demand, or that it took him so much longer to accommodate the custom so offered, and prove with some degree of certainty or approximation the extra time so required and cost expended."

The court, on defendant's motion, gave the following instruction: "No. 7. If the jury believe from the evidence that plaintiff's milldam extends from shore to shore in Twelve Pole creek, and is of an average height of six feet; that the same is without sluices or flood gates, and is an obstruction to the passage of fish and the navigation of said creek, and that the said creek is a navigable stream,—then they are instructed that said milldam is a public nuisance, and the plaintiff cannot recover for any injury thereto caused by the defendant."

This mill was erected under an inquisition taken in 1839. The dam was nearly all washed away by freshet, and rebuilt between 1870 and 1875, without leave to rebuild, and again washed out in 1884, and rebuilt under leave of county court. It is contended that, as this dam was without sluice or flood gate, it was an obstruction to navigation and the passage of fish, and that the county court was without jurisdiction to authorize its original erection, or the reparation of the dam; and, if so, there is no authority to justify the existence of the mill, and it is a nuisance, and no injury done to it by the defendant is actionable. The county court had jurisdiction to grant leave to erect mills. It would be going far to say that if it authorized a mill in a proper proceeding which would obstruct navigation or fish, or omitted due provision against such obstruction, its action would be utterly void, and confer no authority. But the Mill Act existing when this mill was allowed (Code 1819, chap. 285) required the inquisition to report whether a mansion house would be overflowed, and whether, and in what degree, the passage of fish and navigation would be obstructed, and whether the health of the neighborhood would be annoyed; and, if a mansion should be overflowed, or health of the neighborhood annoyed, there was a positive prohibition against granting authority, but not so as to hindrance of navigation or passage of fish, but as to that the matter was left to the discretion of the court, and, if the leave was given, it only commanded that the party be put under condition for preventing obstruction of navigation or passage of fish, if the dam would be an obstruction. Would you say that leave to erect would be void for that cause after the court exercised its discretion and judgment? I think not. But if you could possibly say so in such case, you cannot in this instance, for the reason that the inquisition found and reported that the mill would not obstruct navigation or passage of fish. Surely the order of the court would not be void, if afterwards it was found that the inquisition did not speak the truth. This view is expressly held in Crenshaw v. State River Co., 6 Rand. (Va.) 245, laying down that, as the law required the inquisition to report whether the passage of fish or navigation would be obstructed by the proposed mill, if it reported that the mill would not obstruct them, "then leave is granted to erect the mill without any condition as to navigation;" and that "such a grant, under such precautionary proceedings, is a perfect one, and vests in the grantee all the public right to the stream, or so much thereof as is necessary to the full enjoyment of the mill erected under such order." Thus it seems that the public right of navigation was subordinate to the right of the mill owner. Mills were of prime necessity, and before the use of steam water power was indispensable; but now, since the wide use of steam power has been adopted, and use of streams for floatage of timber has become more productive of reward, the old water gristmill has been almost relegated to the past, and is denominated a nuisance. But the mill involved in this case had a lawful title under lawful grant in the start, and unto this day that title is preserved by not merely its original force, but by the letter of section 24, chapter 44, Code, providing that any dam or other thing in a watercourse obstructing navigation or passage of fish shall be deemed a nuisance, "unless it be to work a mill, manufactory or other machine or engine useful to the public, and is or has been allowed by law or order of court." Can it be that important mills and manufactories built under due process of law, vesting title and property rights in their owners, can be assailed by any one in collateral proceedings, even if they could be assailed by the state itself, or a citizen personally interested, by a direct proceeding? In Crenshaw v. State River Co., supra, it was held that even the legislature could not authorize the abatement of such a dam under the constitution. I am expressing no opinion as to the right of the state, or even persons peculiarly interested in navigation, by proper proceedings under reservations as to navigation in the complicated statute law of the present and former years to remove such dams; but I speak of the right of a railroad company, or of any body not so interested in this collateral way, to damage a mill-owner's right, and justify under the plea that the mill is a nuisance. A reference to the opinion by Judge Green in Gaston v. Mace, 83 W. Va. 14, 5 L. R. A. 892, will show that the mill-owner's right is fully recognized as co-existing along with the right of floatage, not as a nuisance, but a lawful right under the law. It is there recognized as a right resident in the riparian proprietor. This dam was rebuilt by leave of court, and the leave was not void. At any rate, it could not justify the defendant for a wrong. Smart's Case, 27 Gratt. 950. And, suppose there were no order of court to build the dam, I think with Judge Bouldin in Field v. Brown, 24 Gratt. 93, that there may be a dam in a stream without order of court by grant or prescription. And a riparian proprietor may erect a dam and mill under his right of dominion over his own property without order of court, even though the stream be floatable. So spoke Judge Green on pages 25, 26, of 83 W. Va. and page 392 of 5 L. R. A. in Gaston v. Mace. The owner may be punishable for taking toll, and his right may be subject to the right of the state or of persons personally interested in navigation; but not as to others. Even one exercising the right of floatage cannot willfully or negligently injure such a dam.

But, for argument, say that this dam is a public nuisance. What then? Suppose the state or an individual having a particular personal interest in the use of the stream for floatage (for the evidence shows it to be a floatable stream, under Gaston v. Mace, supra), suppose they could by judicial proceedings abate it, it does not follow that the defendant could injure the plaintiff's property, and claim immunity, because the dam is a nuisance. The defendant was not using the stream for floatage, nor shown to be peculiarly interested in it as a floatable stream. Were it a nuisance, there the dam was in fact in possession of the plaintiff as property. Could the defendant, without process, abate it as a nuisance? We must take the statement, often met with in the books, that a public nuisance may be abated by any person, with many grains of allowance. No one can maintain a civil action for a public nuisance, unless he sustain special damage therefrom, different from that sustained by the rest of the public. 3 Bl. Com. 2191; 4 Bl. Com. 167; Wood, Nuisance, § 618; Talbot v. King, 82 W. Va. 6, Sedgw. Damages, § 84, p. 946; 3 Sutherland, Damages, § 1057. And it is said that no one can by his own act abate a public nuisance, unless he have such interest as to give him an action. Wood, Nuisance, § 780. There is a grave difference of opinion as to abatement of a purely public nuisance by the mere act of the party. Some contend that no one not interested personally and peculiarly otherwise than other persons can do so, while others hold that any one may do so. Mr. Wood and Judge Cooley hold the former, and Mr. Bishop and Mr. Hilliard the latter, view. Wood, Nuisance, § 729 et seq.; Cooley, Torts, 45, 46, 1 Bishop, Crim. L. 828; 1 Hilliard, Torts, 605. It seems to me that, except in particular cases, where emergency of some kind calls for it, and delay is dangerous, or at least inconvenient, the former is the more logical and reasonable view looking at the preservation of peace and the security of private property.

23 L. R. A.

It would be endless and useless to pursue this point further here. It cannot be said that there is any absolute general rule on the subject universally applicable, but each instance stands on its own features, as will appear from the many cases enunciating diverse opinions, many of which will be found collected in 16 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 991, note 4. As to highways, under the decisions, the right of abatement by the mere act of the party prevails. The reason here applies given in 8 Blackstone's Commentaries, 5, as the basis of the right in any one to abate a public nuisance,—that the law allows a summary remedy of abatement of nuisance to do one's self justice, because injuries of this kind, which obstruct or annoy such things as are of daily convenience and use, require an immediate remedy, and cannot wait for the slow progress of the ordinary forms of action. Angell & D. Highways, § 274. The Virginia case of Dimmitt v. Eskridge, 6 Munt. 808, sustains this right to any one to abate an obstruction in a highway by exonerating parties tearing out a dam not built at the point where it was authorized, which destroyed a ford which was part of a public road. So it seems to me that if this dam were a nuisance, the railroad company, having no special interest in navigation, could not abate the dam directly. There would be no emergency calling for such action without legal process. If it could not do so directly, it could not do so indirectly by the acts charged against it. Nay, even if it could abate the dam itself directly, it could not go further, and injure the mill building, and tear away the bank of the creek, for the right of abatement vested in it or in citizen's floating rafts would be only to remove the dam itself. But its action in making the fill, if it injured the plaintiff, operated to injure, not the offending dam, but the mill and soil. In the abatement no means could be lawfully used to work such injury. All the authorities agree that where the right of abatement by private act does exist, it must go no further than to remove that which works the nuisance, doing injury no further than is necessary to accomplish that end. Cooley, Torts, 48; Wood, Nuisance, § 834; Smart's Case, 27 Gratt. 950; 16 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 994. So instruction 7 does not state the law correctly. It is said that the jury disregarded it in their verdict, and for that reason the appellant asks that the verdict be set aside. Being incorrect, though the jury found contrary to it, is no ground for new trial. Armstrong v. Keith, 3 J. J. Marsh. 153, 20 Am. Dec. 181, and note; Peck v. Land, 2 Ga. 1, 46 Am. Dec. 368; Wellborn v. Weaver, 17 Ga. 267, 63 Am. Dec. 235; Hilliard, New Trials, § 4.

For these reasons the judgment is reversed, the verdict set aside, a new trial granted, and the case remanded.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

George REITER, Pff. in Err.,

v.

STATE of Ohio ex rel., John H. DURRELL.

(61 Ohio St. —)

- *1. By the rules of the common law, a resignation of an office does not take effect, so as to create a vacancy, until such resignation is accepted by the proper authority; but the common law in this regard is not in force in this state, to its full extent, and here a resignation without acceptance creates a vacancy, to the extent at least, of giving jurisdiction to appoint or elect a successor, unless otherwise provided by statute.
2. On February 21, 1893, H., then mayor of P., presented his resignation to the council then in session, to take effect March 1. On March 7, the resignation was accepted. On March 11, R. was appointed to fill the vacancy. At the following election on April 3, D. was elected to fill the unexpired term. In a contest for the office between D. and R.—Held, that the vacancy occurred March 1, and more than thirty days having elapsed at the April election, it was lawful then to elect a mayor for the unexpired term, and that D. was entitled to the office.

(February 27, 1894.)

*Headnotes by the COURT.

NOTE.—Necessity of an acceptance to complete a resignation of an office.

The limits of the right of a public officer to resign in this country do not seem to be well defined. Under the peculiar character attributed to a public office at common law it was an offense to refuse to serve when duly elected thereto. Reg. v. Bower, 1 Barn. & C. 585, 2 Dowl. & R. 842; Rex v. Burder, 4 T. R. 773, 1 Nolan, 111; Rex v. Lone, 2 Strange, 320; Rex v. Jones, 1d. 1146; Reg. v. Hungerford, 11 Mod. 142.

So it was held that a by-law imposing a fine for failure to serve in a municipal office is valid. London v. Vansacker, 1 Ld. Raym. 493, Carth. 490.

Even a dissenter could not refuse to serve on the ground that he had failed to comply with the requirements of the established church. Rex v. Larwood, 4 Mod. 270.

And in North Carolina it was held that a penalty may be provided for failure to take an office. State v. McEntyre, 25 N. C. 171; London v. Headen, 78 N. C. 72.

Acceptance necessary.

If it was an offense to refuse to accept an office the natural consequence was that a resignation was of no avail unless it received the assent of the appointing power. So in the Supreme Court of the United States it is decided that at common law acceptance of the resignation is necessary to vacate the office. Edwards v. United States, 108 U. S. 471, 25 L. ed. 314; Thompson v. United States, 103 U. S. 420, 25 L. ed. 521.

So in Kansas it is held that there must be an acceptance or something equivalent. State v. Clayton, 27 Kan. 442, 41 Am. Rep. 418; Rogers v. Slonaker, 32 Kan. 198.

In New Hampshire resignation does not divest the officer of his office until it is accepted. Atty-Gen. v. Marston (N. H.) 13 L. R. A. 870.

In State v. Van Buskirk, 40 N. J. L. 463, an ac-

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Hamilton County to review a judgment in favor of relator in a proceeding by quo warranto to oust defendant from the office of mayor of the village of Pleasant Ridge. Affirmed.

Statement by Burket, J.:

The material facts found by the Circuit Court, on the trial of this case, are as follows:

On the 21st day of February, 1893, Amos Hill being the mayor of the village of Pleasant Ridge in Hamilton county, presented to the council while in session the following resignation.

"Pleasant Ridge, February 21, 1893.

"To the Honorable Council of the village of Pleasant Ridge:

"I, Amos Hill, mayor, tender to you my resignation, to take effect March 1, 1893, as I can not take time to attend to this office.

"Yours with respect,

"Amos Hill."

On motion this resignation was laid over to the next meeting March 7 when it was accepted by council to take effect at once, and at an adjourned meeting held March 11, George Reiter, plaintiff in error, was appointed mayor to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Hill, and on the same day Mr. Reiter was qualified and entered upon the duties of his office.

Accepted resignation is mentioned as one of the means of terminating an office.

So in Van Orsdal v. Hazard, 3 Hill, 243, it is stated that resignation and acceptance will create a vacancy.

In State v. Boecker, 55 Mo. 19, where the real point was as to whether or not the resignation had been made, the court said that acceptance is a necessary element of a complete resignation.

In Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 29, 25 Am. Dec. 677, in deciding against the power to discharge an officer, the court held, in answer to an argument of counsel in favor of the power of resignation, that acceptance was necessary to a complete resignation.

Acceptance of a resignation of a register of voters is necessary. Coleman v. Sands, 87 Va. 689.

Distinction between public and private interests.

There is a tendency to draw a distinction between the interests of the public and those of the officer in determining whether or not he can resign. If the public interest will be subserved by the resignation, tendering it is sufficient, on the other hand, as shown above, the public cannot be inconvenienced by a resignation. Thus in Oregon v. Jennings, 119 U. S. 74, 30 L. ed. 323, it was held in the interest of creditors of a town that resignation created a vacancy, so far at least as to permit proceedings to fill it.

So the resignation may be conclusive against the officer himself. State v. Hausa, 48 Ind. 105, 13 Am. Rep. 384.

As against himself, one appointed to a police force against his will may sever his connection therewith by resignation without acceptance. People v. Board of Metropolitan Police, 26 N. Y. 316.

An unaccepted resignation is not subject to recall. State v. Fitts, 49 Ala. 402.

At the following April election John H. Durrell was elected mayor of the village of Pleasant Ridge and in due time gave bond, qualified, and demanded the office, but Mr. Reiter refused to surrender the office to him, and claimed that the election for mayor held in April was not authorized by law, as the election occurred, as he claimed, less than thirty days after the vacancy.

Thereupon Mr. Durrell filed his petition in quo warranto in the circuit court of Hamilton county, to oust Mr. Reiter from the office of mayor.

Upon the above facts the circuit court found in favor of Mr. Durrell, ousted Mr. Reiter and ordered Mr. Durrell to be inducted into the office of mayor; to all of which Mr. Reiter excepted, and filed his petition in this court to reverse the judgment of the circuit court.

Messrs. John J. Acomb and Coppock & Gallagher, for plaintiff in error:

A resignation of an office, to be effective, must be accepted, and until accepted does not create a vacancy in the office, for any purpose whatsoever.

A person who has assumed the duties of an office cannot throw them off at will, but the public, through its representatives, has the right to say that it is willing that he shall be relieved of its duties and responsibilities.

Hoke v. Henderson, 75 N. C. 29, 25 Am. Dec. 677; Rez v. Rippon, 1 Ld. Raym. 568; Reg. v. Lane, 2 Ld. Raym. 1804.

If such is the rule of the common law, it must be assumed that it prevails here unless the contrary appears.

Edwards v. United States, 103 U. S. 471, 26 L. ed. 814; State v. Clayton, 27 Kan. 443, 41 Am. Rep. 418; Rogers v. Slonaker, 83 Kan. 191; State v. Ferguson, 81 N. J. L. 107; Waycross

v. Youmans, 85 Ga. 709; Hoke v. Henderson, supra; State v. Boecker, 56 Mo. 19; Badger v. United States, 93 U. S. 599, 23 L. ed. 991; People v. Barnett Trop. Supra. 100 Ill. 332; Jones v. Jefferson, 66 Tex. 576.

Messrs. Matthews & Cleveland and L. C. Black, for defendant in error:

A civil officer has the absolute right to resign his office at pleasure, and it is not within the power of the executive to compel him to remain in office.

McCrory, Elections, § 260; People v. Porter, 6 Cal. 26; United States v. Wright, McLean, 509; State v. Clarke, 8 Nev. 566; Olmeted v. Dennis, 77 N. Y. 878; State v. Lincoln, 4 Neb. 260; State v. Fitts, 49 Ala. 402; Bunting v. Willis, 27 Gratt. 144, 21 Am. Rep. 388; State v. Hauss, 48 Ind. 105, 18 Am. Rep. 384; Leach v. State, 78 Ind. 570; Gilbert v. Luce, 11 Barb. 91.

In section 1715 the legislature has provided in certain cases that the removal beyond the limits of a corporation shall work a resignation, evidently meaning by the word "resignation" that they considered a resignation final, and an acceptance not necessary, because in that case there could be no acceptance.

Ratterman v. State, 44 Ohio St. 641.

Burket, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Section 1754 of Revised Statutes provides as follows: "In case of the death, resignation, disability, or other vacation of his office, the council may, by the vote of a majority of all the members elected, appoint some suitable person within the corporation to act as mayor, and discharge the duties of the office until the vacancy is filled, or the disability removed; provided that at the next annual municipal election occurring more than thirty days after Willful negligence or refusal by an officer to perform his duties may, as against himself, amount to a resignation. Harrison v. People, 36 Ill. App. 319.

In New Jersey a distinction has been brought out which seems sensible but which has not found its way into the general law of the country.

Thus in Hoboken v. Gear, 27 N. J. L. 265, which was a suit to recover salary, and the defense was the discharge or removal of the officer, the court states that if the acceptance of an office is voluntary the officer is not bound to serve during his term, but may resign without a violation of contract.

In accordance with that distinction it was decided that an overseer of highways cannot refuse to accept the office and therefore cannot resign it, unless his resignation is accepted. State v. Ferguson, 81 N. J. L. 107. And in that case it is stated that the class of officers who must serve seems to be those who are elected by the people and whose services are absolutely necessary to carry on local government.

Where acceptance is unnecessary.

Some of the states, however, relying in part at least upon the difference in character between a public office in this country and in England, have refused to apply the common law to offices here. These courts hold that—

A resignation needs no acceptance. People v. Porter, 6 Cal. 26.

So the acceptance of a resignation of a municipal officer is not necessary. State v. Lincoln, 4 Neb. 260, 23 L. R. A.

In Philadelphia v. Marcor, 8 Phila. 319, it is stated that after the resignation of a city treasurer, there is no power to compel him to continue in office.

So officers of the United States government to whom the common law may perhaps be said not to apply are generally permitted to resign at will.

Acceptance of the resignation is not necessary to vacate a United States office. State v. Clarke, 8 Nev. 566.

The resignation of an office under the United States government need not be accepted. Bunting v. Willis, 27 Gratt. 144, 21 Am. Rep. 388.

So it has been stated that the president of the United States has no power to refuse a resignation and require the officer to continue in office. United States v. Wright, 1 McLean, 509.

Effect of statute law.

If the statutes point out a way in which the resignation is to be effected, it must be followed. Lewis v. Oliver, 4 Abb. Pr. 151.

Under an act providing that any person elected to a corporate office may resign by paying the fine, a delivery of the resignation and payment of the fine perfects the resignation beyond recall, even with the assent of the corporation. Reg. v. Wigan, L. R. 14 Q. B. Div. 908.

If the statute makes the resignation take effect from the time of filing the same, it is conclusive. Amy v. Watertown, 130 U. S. 501, 33 L. ed. 946.

A constitutional provision that every officer shall hold his office until his successor is elected or appointed and qualified will prevent mere resignation such vacancy, a mayor shall be elected for any unexpired term, unless the disability is of a temporary character."

The election was held on the third day of April, 1893. If a vacancy in the office occurred on the first day of March, then the April election occurred more than thirty days after such vacancy and the election of Mr. Durrell was valid; but if the vacancy did not occur until the resignation was accepted on the 7th day of March, then the vacancy occurred less than thirty days before the April election, and in such case the election of Mr. Durrell would be void.

The date at which the vacancy occurred depends upon the question whether the delivery of the resignation to the council to take effect March 1, caused a vacancy on that day, or whether the vacancy occurred upon the acceptance of the resignation on the 7th day of March. It seems to be well settled in England and at common law, that a resignation of an office does not take effect, so as to create a vacancy, until accepted by the proper authority. Hoke v. Henderson, 15 N. C. 29, 25 Am. Dec. 677; Rex v. Rippon, 1 Ld. Raym. 563; Reg. v. Lane, 3 Ld. Raym. 1804; Edwards v. United States, 108 U. S. 471, 26 L. ed. 314; State v. Clayton, 27 Kan. 442, 41 Am. Rep. 418; State v. Ferguson, 81 N. J. L. 107; Waycross v. Youmans, 85 Ga. 708; State v. Boecker, 56 Mo. 19; Badger v. United States, 98 U. S. 599, 23 L. ed. 991; People v. Barnett Twp. Suprs. 100 Ill. 382; Jones v. Jefferson, 66 Tex. 576.

The common law prevails in this state in so far as it is fairly applicable to our institutions and manner of living, unless abrogated, or modified by statute. So that the real question in this case is, whether the common-law rule as to resignation shall govern in this state, or whether that rule has been abrogated by our legislation, or is inconsistent with our institutions. That there is no statute expressly changing the common law in this respect seems clear; but it seems difficult if not impossible, to reconcile our various statutes with the common-law rule. The doctrine of the common law is that an officer has not the absolute right at his own pleasure to resign his office; that the public are interested as well as the individual incumbent; that an acceptance is necessary to perfect a resignation; and that the public have the right to command the services of any citizen in any official position which they may designate.

This common-law doctrine seems inconsistent with our statute as well as with our practical treatment of official positions.

Section 1449, Revised Statutes, which imposes a fine of two dollars on a person for neglecting or refusing to serve in an office to which he has been elected or appointed under chapter two of title eleven, recognizes the power, if not the right, of a citizen to refuse to hold such office.

Section 19, Revised Statutes, provides that a person who is elected or appointed to an office, and fails to give bond, shall be deemed to have refused to accept the office, and the same shall be considered vacant.

Section 556 provides that a judge failing to transmit a certificate of his having taken the oath required by the constitution and statutes within the time required by law, shall be deemed to have refused the office, and it shall be considered vacant.

Section 557 provides that in case a judge of from vacating an office. United States v. Lauder County Justices, 10 Fed. Rep. 480.

And a constitutional provision that all officers "subject to the right of resignation" shall hold office until their successor shall be qualified does not enable an officer to resign so as to create a vacancy before the election of his successor. United States v. Green, 53 Fed. Rep. 769.

Where the statutes provide that one shall hold office until his successor shall be elected and has qualified, mere resignation is not sufficient. Jones v. Jefferson, 66 Tex. 576.

The resignation of one elected to hold office until his successor is elected and qualified, even though accompanied by acceptance, is ineffectual prior to such qualification. People v. Barnett Twp. Suprs. 100 Ill. 382.

And the Supreme Court of the United States has recognized the rule that in Illinois acceptance of resignation is not sufficient to vacate the office. There must also be an appointment of a successor. Badger v. United States, 98 U. S. 599, 23 L. ed. 991, affirming United States v. Badger, 6 Bias. 308.

In Waycross v. Youmans, 85 Ga. 708, an opinion is expressed, which did not become the judgment of the court, that when an officer is elected to hold office until his successor is elected and qualified, a mere resignation does not vacate the office. But the resignation must be accepted and the successor elected and qualified to effect that result.

Under the New York statutes, a deputy sheriff can resign and the office becomes pro facto vacant by the resignation. But in that case it is expressly stated that the resignation was accepted. Gilbert v. Luce, 11 Barb. 91.

23 L. R. A.

Under the New York statutes a drainage commissioner may resign without acceptance. Olmsted v. Dennis, 77 N. Y. 378.

What a sufficient acceptance.

In Gates v. Delaware County, 12 Iowa, 405, it is intimated that there is no power to refuse to accept a resignation, and it is decided that whether it is necessary or not the receipt of the resignation and placing it upon file is sufficient to create a vacancy.

And the principle of that case was followed in Pace v. People, 50 Ill. 432.

In Rex v. Rippon, 1 Ld. Raym. 563, where the question was as to the validity of a parol resignation of the office of alderman, the court said acceptance of a parol resignation will vacate the office, or the election of another incumbent will do so.

The appointment of a successor is a sufficient acceptance of a resignation. McGee v. State, 106 Ind. 444.

Incompatible offices.

In the note to Atty-Gen. v. Marston (N. H.) 13 L. R. A. 670, it is stated that it is well settled that when a person accepts an office incompatible with one which he then holds he thereby impliedly resigns or vacates his former office. This is only an apparent exception to the rule for such doctrine may be put on the ground that the fact of the second appointment may be considered as an agreement to accept the resignation. State v. Brinkerhoff, 66 Tex. 45.

H. P. F.

the supreme court removes his residence out of this state, or a circuit judge out of his circuit, or a common pleas judge out of his subdivision, or a judge of a superior court out of his county, he shall be considered to have resigned and vacated his office, whereupon the vacancy shall be filled according to law.

No acceptance of such resignation seems to be contemplated, and certainly none is provided for.

Section 848 provides that the absence of a county commissioner from his county for six months shall be deemed a resignation of his office, and section 1715 provides that the removal of a municipal officer beyond the limits of the corporation, shall be deemed a resignation of his office. In such case there can be no acceptance of the resignation.

Section 570 provides that all resignation of justices of the peace shall be made to the clerk of the court of common pleas, and the justice so resigning shall at the same time give notice to the township clerk, who shall within three days notify the township trustees, who shall proceed as in other cases of vacancy.

By this section all steps toward filling the vacancy begin with the resignation of the clerk, and nothing is said about an acceptance of the resignation. At the same time of the resignation the township clerk is to be notified. Within three days thereafter the trustees are to receive notice, and they are then to proceed as in other cases of vacancy. Here is a clear recognition that the vacancy is produced by the resignation alone, without an acceptance by the clerk, or any one else.

Section 152 provides, that a policeman shall not resign unless he gives two weeks notice thereof in writing, under penalty of forfeiting all pay due him. This section recognizes the right of a policeman to resign at once and without notice, by forfeiting the pay due him. At common law no such statute would be necessary, because the same object could be attained by simply refusing to accept his resignation.

Section 37 provides that the resignation of a senator or representative, which is tendered during any session of the general assembly, shall not take effect until the branch of which the person tendering it is a member has accepted the same by a vote of a majority of the members elected to such branch, exclusive of the person tendering his resignation.

The provision in this section, that the resignation shall not take effect until accepted, recognizes the law to be, that but for such provision the resignation would take effect at once.

It is therefore clear that the legislature has had its attention called to this subject, and has seen fit to provide that as to members of the general assembly only, shall an acceptance be required to give validity to a resignation.

In cases of assignees (sec. 6237), executors and administrators (sec. 6015), guardians (sec. 6274), commissioners of insolvents (sec. 6360), and trustees of insolvent estates (sec. 6384) provisions are made for the acceptance of resignations, but nowhere is any provision made for the acceptance of the resignation of an elected officer, except members of the general assembly.

23 L. R. A.

By the statutes referred to, a clear intention is evinced that acceptance shall not be necessary to the validity of a resignation, except as to members of the general assembly, and persons appointed to certain positions of trust, and these exceptions only tend to make more clear the intention. These statutes also show that office holding is not regarded as compulsory in this state. It is, therefore, clear, that the common-law rule as to acceptance of resignations has been abrogated in Ohio, to the extent at least of authorizing the filling of the vacancy.

In many of the states, it is held that a resignation of an officer takes effect at once without acceptance by any one, and that the holding of office is not compulsory. This is said to be the modern doctrine on this subject. United States v. Wright, 1 McLean, 509; McCrory, Elections, § 270; People v. Porter, 6 Cal. 26; State v. Clark, 3 Nev. 566; Olmsted v. Dennis, 77 N. Y. 878; State v. Lincoln, 4 Neb. 260; Bunting v. Willis, 27 Gratt. 144, 21 Am. Rep. 838; State v. Hauss, 43 Ind. 105, 18 Am. Rep. 884; Gilbert v. Luca, 11 Barb. 91; Leech v. State, 78 Ind. 570.

In this last case, Leech v. State, a school trustee on March 1, 1880, presented his resignation of that date to take effect from and after March 5 of the same year. On the same first day of March a successor was appointed to fill out the unexpired term of the resigning trustee. In a contest over the office it was claimed that the appointment was void, because made on March 1, when the vacancy did not occur by the terms of the resignation until from and after March 5. The court held that the resignation made the office so far vacant on March 1, as to give jurisdiction to appoint a successor to fill out the unexpired term, the appointee's term to begin from and after March 5.

The policy of the state, as shown by our statutes, favors the filling of vacancies in office by election as soon after a vacancy occurs as is consistent with proper care and consideration on part of the public. A proper regard for the rights of the people requires that it shall not be in the power of any officer, or body of men, to refuse to accept a resignation, and thereby prevent an election at the proper time to fill the vacancy. Such power, if conceded to exist, might tempt a partisan officer to delay the acceptance of a resignation until too late to fill a vacancy at the succeeding election, and thereby lengthen, by one year, the term of office of his own appointee. More harm is to be feared from this source, than from a hiatus in office, an event not likely to occur in this state where men able and willing to fill office are so numerous.

The responsibility of a hiatus in office, should rest upon the person or body holding the appointing power, rather than upon the resigning officer. If the appointing power properly performs its official duties, no harm is to be feared from a hiatus in office.

It is therefore clear, on principles of public policy, as well as a proper construction of our statutes, that acceptance is not necessary to the validity of a resignation, in so far at least as to authorize the filling of the vacancy; and that the resignation in question in this case took effect on the first day of March, 1893, so as to create a vacancy which could be lawfully filled at the following April election.

What the rights of the public, or the duties of the resigning officer, may be for the protection of public interests and property from the date of the resignation to the filling of the vacancy, is not involved in this case, and need not now be decided. Should any danger be apprehended from that source, the proper remedy can be supplied by the law-making power.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

NEW JERSEY SUPREME COURT.

STATE of New Jersey, A. B. AVIS, Prosecutor,
v.

Mayor, etc., of VINELAND.

(.....N. J.....)

*1. An ordinance of the borough of Vineland, passed under Borough Act 1878, p. 407, declaring healthy growing trees, which had been planted over twenty-five years ago, by the owner of land, on or near the edge of the roadway of a street in that borough, a nuisance and obstruction, and directing their removal as such,—Held, void.

2. Quære, as to powers of borough under Act 1883, p. 93, and as to fact of dedication of street cum oners in this case.

(March 27, 1894.)

CERTIORARI to review an ordinance of the Borough of Vineland passed to compel the removal of alleged obstructions from Landis avenue. Ordinance set aside.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Before Dixon and Abbott, JJ.

Messrs. Howard Carroll and Charles K. Landis for prosecutor.

Mr. Royal P. Teller for defendant.

Abbott, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The writ of certiorari in this case removed into this court an ordinance passed by the mayor and council of the borough of Vineland, May 9, 1893, entitled "An ordinance for the removal of obstructions from Landis avenue, and to declare what are nuisances therein, between Eighth street and East avenue, within the borough of Vineland." This ordinance declared that certain trees on the northern and southern border of Landis avenue, between Eighth street and East avenue, and the grassy portions of said avenue on each side, were obstructions and nuisances in said avenue, and the road committee was directed to remove the same May 18, 1893. The borough claims the right to pass this ordinance and remove the trees and grass plots in question under paragraph 2, subd. 1, of section 12 of "An Act for the Formation of Borough Governments," approved April 5, 1878. Laws of 1878, p. 407 (Supp. Rev. p. 46, § 14, par. 1). This paragraph gives the mayor and council of said borough power to pass, enforce, alter, or repeal ordinances to take effect within the limits of said borough for the following purposes, to wit: "(1) To declare what shall be considered nuisances in the streets, roads, lots, and places in said borough, and to prevent and remove all obstructions, incumbrances, and nuisances in and upon any street, road, lot, sidewalk, inclosure or other place in said borough." This language does not authorize municipal authorities to declare anything to be a nuisance which cannot be detrimental to the health of the city, or dangerous to its citizens, or a public inconvenience. State v. Jersey City, 29 N. J. L. 170, 175. An ordinance passed without notice to the prosecutor, directing a committee to remove certain objects upon lands which had been occupied by the prosecutor for twenty-five years, because they were encroachments upon a street, held void. The power to prevent and remove all encroachments in or upon any street is only a police power, and does not extend to cases of a doubtful or uncertain nature, and which require to be first lawfully determined. State v. Hightstown, 45 N. J. L. 127, 129. See also Newark & S. O. H. C. R. Co. v. Hunt, 50 N. J. L. 308, 314, 316. The power to declare what is to be considered nuisances in streets, and to remove encroachments and nuisances from highways, is a police power, ministerial in its nature, and designed to relieve the public from such obstructions in streets as are apparent or readily ascertainable, without the necessity of adjudication. The power is capable of exercise only to the extent that the right is clear or reasonably known, and not so as to invade rights which, from their doubtful or uncertain nature, require a lawful determination. State v. Hightstown, 45 N. J. L. 501, 503, 504. To say to a man that he shall not use his property as he pleases, under certain conditions, is to deprive him pro tanto of the enjoyment of such property. To find conclusively against him that a state of facts exists, with respect to the use of his property, or the pursuit of his business, which subjects him to the condemnation of the law, is to affect his rights in a vital point. The right to abate nuisances, whether we regard it as existing in the municipalities or in the community or in the land of the individual, is a common-law right, and is derived in every instance of its exercise from the same source,—that of necessity; but the neces-

*Headnotes by ABBOTT, J.

NOTE.—The ownership and control of trees in a highway are shown in a note to Chase v. Oshkosh (Wis.) 15 L. R. A. 553, in which case the decision of the common council of a city that trees within the limits of a sidewalk must be removed was held not subject to review by the courts in the absence of any evidence to show an abuse of discretion, and it was held that such trees might be cut down 23 L. R. A.

without notice as a nuisance. But the present case has a material difference in the fact that the trees in question were on the street when dedicated and the dedication subject to them with only the strip between them intended for actual use as a driveway.

As to trees on boundary line, see note to Hickey v. Michigan Central R. Co. (Mich.) 21 L. R. A. 729.

ality must be present to justify the exercise of the right, and, whether present or not, must, in ordinary cases, be submitted to a jury under the guidance of a court. The finding of a municipal body can have no effect whatever for any purpose upon the ultimate disposition of a matter of this kind. It is for the courts. Hutton v. Camden, 89 N. J. L. 122, 180, 181, 28 Am. Rep. 208.

A thrifty tree in a public highway, the fee of the soil of which is in the abutting landowner, belongs to the abutting landowner (unless it has been planted by the public authorities), and he may have trespass against any person who cuts down any such trees growing on the side of the road, and left there for shade or ornament; for the freehold remains, subject only to the easement or right of passage in the public. Nothing is more common everywhere in our villages and agricultural districts than for the owners and occupiers of the soil to have fruit, shade, and ornamental trees along the line of the public roads, sometimes in the line of the roads, sometimes on each side of the line; and it has been held that a road overseer cannot arbitrarily cut them down, and, if he did it in an improper case and maliciously, he was held liable to exemplary damages upon suit of the owner of the fee of the soil. Winter v. Peterson, 24 N. J. L. 524, 527, 529, 61 Am. Dec. 678, cited with approval in Wuesthoff v. Seymour, 23 N. J. Eq. 66, 70; State v. Stenner, 50 N. J. L. 59, 60. These standing trees were part of the inheritance, and a sale of them would have been a sale of an interest in land under the statute of frauds. Slocum v. Seymour, 36 N. J. L. 188, 18 Am. Rep. 482. If these trees were nuisances, trespass would not lie for their destruction by municipal authority. It is clear that these thrifty, ornamental shade trees are neither obstructions nor nuisances to Landis avenue, and the attempt to abate them as such is an exercise of arbitrary power, unwarranted in law, under the act invoked by the borough authorities.

There is also a serious question in this case as to the extent of the dedication of that part of Landis avenue referred to in the ordinance. Charles K. Landis, the owner of lands at Vineland, and its founder, laid out the lands in question (with other lands), and he testifies that his surveys and survey books show the line of shade trees and grass plots, and the lands show it, as they have been in use for about thirty years in that section. He says that the trees sought to be removed are fine, handsome trees that have been growing there for twenty-five years or more. That they were set out in accordance with stipulations under which he sold the property, and that his surveyors, under his directions, gave the stakes to each settler where trees should be planted in accordance with the general system. That Landis avenue was of the width of 100 feet, to wit, a double row of shade trees upon that portion of Landis avenue. That the reason why he laid the avenue out 100 feet wide was not to have the whole 100 feet used as a roadway, but that it might serve the purpose of beauty and ornamentation; and that the central part only, which he dedicated for a roadway, should be used for that purpose. That his contracts for the lots in this section stipulated for the planting of a double row of shade trees on the sides of the road at proper distances apart. That the width of the avenue which he dedicated to the public, under the restriction mentioned, is 100 feet. The map on file in the county clerk's office appears to have been filed by Landis township, and not by Landis himself. When Marcus Fry, surveyor, was examined, a map or plan was put in evidence. He testifies that this map or plan was made from actual surveys; that these trees were planted according to the agreement under which these lands were sold; that the roadway has always existed as it is now, between these two rows of trees; that the map offered in evidence shows the measurement of the streets, the sidewalks, and the position of the grass plot and trees; . . . that on the original survey of Landis avenue there is something showing the dedication as shown on the map or plan offered in evidence; that the original surveys show that the trees were to be set out as shown on this plan. Dedication of a street must arise from some act of the owner of the land, and may be made cum onere. State v. Society for Establishing Useful Mfrs. 44 N. J. L. 502; Ayres v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 48 N. J. L. 44, 48, 57 Am. Rep. 588, 53 N. J. L. 405, 410.

The public cannot get anything more than he gives; and if he dedicates a street 100 feet wide, subject to the restrictions and use as mentioned, the public takes subject to the restrictions. The filing of a map and selling lands thereby would be evidence of a dedication, but, if he did not file the map, and did not adopt it, by reference thereto in his deeds, the filed map would not be conclusive evidence against him; and, if the map he made and sold lots by showed the trees set out to be as testified to by the surveyor, it would be a question of fact to be determined by judicial authority as to whether this dedication of Landis avenue was not subject to the setting out and existence of these trees in accordance with Mr. Landis' scheme of ornamentation and use of this avenue. See State v. Society for Establishing Useful Mfrs. 44 N. J. L. 504, 507, as to existence of these trees from the beginning, as evidence of the making of dedication, and acceptance thereof, subject thereto. These trees are 16 feet apart; are all live and thrifty trees, from 20 to 40 feet high and from 6 to 20 inches in diameter (page 18); they do not interfere with the roadway, or obstruct any of the passageways on the avenue. It cannot be claimed with any show of reason or justice that these trees, under these circumstances, are nuisances or obstructions in Landis avenue which may be summarily removed as such by the borough authorities.

It is not meant to intimate in this case what power is given to the borough under the act entitled "A supplement to an Act Entitled 'An Act for the Formation of Borough Governments,' approved April 3, 1878," approved March 13, 1883. Laws 1883, p. 96 (Supp. Revision, p. 49, § 80). That act gives the borough authorities "general supervision, management, and control of the streets, avenues, roads, public places and sidewalks within the borough." The destruction of these trees as nuisances or obstructions cannot be justified under this act. Should the borough attempt to exercise absolute control over Landis avenue under this act, the question will then properly arise as to whether or not the dedication of Landis avenue was not a restricted dedication, contemplating the existence of these trees as part of the design and plan of the dedicator.

If the dedication was thus restricted, it would then be a question as to whether any such change in the street in removing these trees is not a taking of property, for which the owner of the soil is entitled to damages.

The ordinance is set aside, with costs to the prosecutor.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SECOND CIRCUIT.

Robert G. DUN et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

CITY NATIONAL BANK OF BIRMINGHAM, Ala.

(68 Fed. Rep. 175.)

1. A mercantile agency which agrees to transmit information to subscribers who may wish to contract with outside parties under a condition that it is not to be responsible for loss by the negligence of said agents and in no manner guarantees the actual verity or correctness of the information given is not liable to a subscribing bank for loss upon commercial paper bought by it in reliance upon information furnished by one of its subagents as to a party to such paper, although such agent being connected in business with such party knowingly gave false information and such bank purchased the paper in reliance thereon.

2. A mercantile agency is not liable for damages for a false report made by a subagent whose employment is contemplated by the contract of subscription under which the agency merely agrees to transmit the information obtained by such subagent where it has exercised due care in the selection of such subagent, since the latter is the agent of the subscriber.

(October 17, 1893.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged fraud of defendant's agent, which resulted in loss to plaintiff. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Wallace and Lacombe, Circuit Judges, and Townsend, District Judge.

Messrs. W. W. McFarland and Samuel Wagner, with Messrs. Douglass & Minton, for plaintiffs in error:

The contract of subscription defines the rights and obligations of the respective parties, and it precludes the maintenance of this action.

Duncan v. Dun, 7 W. N. C. 246.

When it is decided that under the provisions of a particular contract a principal is not liable for the gross negligence of an agent whose employment is contemplated and provided for, it is necessarily decided that the principal

NOTE.—A new phase of the question of liability of a mercantile agency is presented in the present case, and the briefs of counsel are unusually interesting in their marshaling of analogous authorities.

See, in connection with present case, that of Crew v. Bradstreet Co. (Pa.) 7 L. R. A. 661.
23 L. R. A.

is not liable for the fraud of such agent, for in the case of representations in regard to property or character and credit gross negligence and fraud mean the same thing in law.

Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 585.

The principle is pointedly affirmed in Bennett v. Judson, 21 N. Y. 238; Marsh v. Falter, 40 N. Y. 562; Lynch v. Mercantile Trust Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 486, and in a multitude of cases cited in Alvarez v. Brannan, 7 Cal. 508, 68 Am. Dec. 274; Munroe v. Pritchett, 16 Ala. 785, 50 Am. Dec. 308; Tryon v. Whitmarsh, 1 Met. 1, 35 Am. Dec. 343; Saunders v. Hatterman, 24 N. C. 32, 37 Am. Dec. 404; and 8 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 636, et seq.

The plaintiff therefore does not change the nature of his cause of action, nor in any way strengthen it by charging fraud instead of negligence.

Fraud in a judicial proceeding can never be predicated of a mere emotion of the mind.

People v. Cook, 8 N. Y. 79, 59 Am. Dec. 451; Taylor, Jurist, p. 89; Y. B. 4 Edw. IV. 8, 9.

If an untrue report is made it is that act that causes the damage and not the state of mind back of it. And beyond question the agent is directly responsible to the party injured, although the report may not have been made to him.

Eaton v. Avery, 88 N. Y. 31, 38 Am. Rep. 389; Cooley, Torts, pp. 63, 578, and cases cited.

When an agent has authority to employ subagents, he will not be liable for the negligence or misconduct of his subagent; he will be liable however for negligence or fraud in the appointment.

1 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 394 and cases cited in note; Story, Ag. 224; Parsons, Cont. 7th ed. pp. 90, 91; Whited v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 76 N. Y. 415, 32 Am. Rep. 330; Sanger v. Dun, 47 Wis. 615, 32 Am. Rep. 739.

Proof of fraud on the part of the agent Burchard will not sustain an action of deceit against the defendants upon the facts in this case.

Fraud and deceit are the gist of the action and in order to recover it must be proved against the defendants.

Lord v. Goddard, 54 U. S. 18 How. 198, 14 L. ed. 111.

One cannot be punished vicariously, but only for one's own torts.

Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. 156.

Evans' Law of Agency says that in every single case, from Hern v. Nichols, 1 Salk. 289, downwards, in which a principal has been held liable, two elements were present: (a) The fraud was committed by the agent in the course of his duty; and (b) it was committed for the benefit of the principal.

See British Mut. Bkg. Co. v. Charnwood Forest R. Co. L. R. 18 Q. B. Div. 714.

The elements necessary to sustain an action for deceit against an innocent principal, for the fraud of an agent, do not exist in this case.

Story, Ag. §§ 139, 452; 1 Parsons, Cont. 7th ed. p. 78; Jeffrey v. Bigelow, 18 Wend. 518, 28 Am. Dec. 476; Mackay v. Commercial Bank of New Brunswick, L. R. 5 P. C. 894; Alexander v. Gibson, 2 Campb. 556; Cornfoot v. Foulke, 6 Mees. & W. 358; Fuller v. Wilson, 3 Q. B. 58; Moens v. Heyworth, 10 Mees. & W. 147; Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank, L. R. 2 Exch. 259; Swift v. Winterbotham, L. R. 8 Q. B. 244; Swift v. Jewsbury, L. R. 9 Q. B. 801; Western Bank of Scotland v. Addie, L. R. 1 Sc. App. 146; British Mut. Bkg. Co. v. Charnwood Forest R. Co. supra.

The principal is not liable where an agent commits a willful wrong.

Ewell's Evans, Principal & Agent, 578.

If the persons whom, in the common course of administration, the trustee may employ as brokers, wharfingers, carriers, etc., should embezzle or lose the effects of the bankrupt, the trustee will not be responsible, provided he has bona fide employed persons deemed responsible at the time.

2 Bell, Commentaries of the Law of Scotland, 7th ed. p. 323.

Messrs. Roger Foster and Lorenzo Sample, for defendants in error:

S. B. Burchard was the manager of the mercantile agency of R. G. Dun & Co. at Oswego, and in making the reports in question acted within the scope of his authority as manager, and in the regular and usual course of the business of his agency.

Whatever the rule of law may be as to the liability of a principal for a fraud committed by his agent for his own benefit in a case where the principal is under no contractual obligations to the party cheated, any decisions holding the negative in such a case do not apply to the case at bar, where the principal furnished the fraudulent information under a contract with the plaintiff.

The contract of subscription does not exempt the plaintiffs in error from liability for the fraud of their employé.

Even where a carrier may by express contract relieve himself from liability for his own negligence; a contract which by its terms is sufficiently broad to relieve him from liability for the negligence of his employé will not be so construed when negligence is not specifically mentioned and excepted.

Mynard v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 71 N. Y. 180, 27 Am. Rep. 28; New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants Bank of Boston, 47 U. S. 6 How. 844, 12 L. ed. 465; The New Orleans, 26 Fed. Rep. 44; Magnin v. Dinamore, 56 N. Y. 168; Westcott v. Fargo, 61 N. Y. 542, 19 Am. Rep. 800.

How much stronger is the case when negligence is specifically excepted and fraud not mentioned.

The plaintiffs in error, exercising as they did a public employment, could not exempt themselves from liability for negligence.

23 L. R. A.

New York Cent. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 387, 21 L. ed. 637; Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788.

This doctrine is not limited to common carriers. It has been held in the case of the owners of grain elevators.

Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77. The operators of telephones.

Delaware & A. Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. State, 8 U. S. App. 80, 50 Fed. Rep. 677; Hockett v. State, 105 Ind. 250.

Gas companies.

State v. Ironton Gas Co. 37 Ohio St. 45; Williams v. Mutual Gas Co. 52 Mich. 499, 50 Am. Rep. 266; Sickles v. Manhattan Gas-Light Co. 66 How. Pr. 305.

Water companies.

Spring Valley Waterworks v. Schottler, 110 U. S. 347, 28 L. ed. 178; McCrory v. Beaudry, 67 Cal. 120; Ernst v. New Orleans Waterworks Co. 39 La. Ann. 550.

Telegraph companies.

Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Adams, 87 Ind. 598, 44 Am. Rep. 776.

Exchanges and transmitters of stock quotations.

Friedman v. Gold & Stock Teleg. Co. 23 Hun, 4.

Burchard was by his acts and the acts of the plaintiff in error, their agent in making the false reports—their agent at least pro hac vice—notwithstanding the subagent clause in the contract.

A clause similar to this is frequently found in fire insurance policies, and according to the overwhelming weight of authority must be construed as contended by defendants in error.

May, Ins. 8d ed. § 140, p. 250; Bassell v. American F. Ins. Co. 2 Hughes, C. C. 531; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Ives, 56 Ill. 402; Union Ins. Co. v. Chipp, 38 Ill. 96; Eilenberger v. Protective Mut. F. Ins. Co. 89 Pa. 464; Andes F. Ins. Co. v. Locher, 6 Daly, 106; Planters Ins. Co. v. Myers, 55 Miss. 479, 80 Am. Rep. 521. See also Commercial F. Ins. Co. v. Allen, 80 Ala. 571; Bushhanna Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Cusick, 109 Pa. 157; Insurance Agents, 5 So. L. Rev. N. S. 663, 662.

This is a question of general commercial law as to which the United States courts establish their own rule, which governs all federal courts throughout the United States and is independent of any special rule of the courts of the forum.

Swift v. Tyson, 41 U. S. 16 Pet. 1, 10 L. ed. 865; Burgess v. Seligman, 107 U. S. 20, 27 L. ed. 359; Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 218, 25 L. ed. 612.

A principal is civilly liable for the frauds and deceit of his agent committed in the course of and as a part of the agent's employment and within the scope of his authority as agent.

New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 34 N. Y. 30; Bigelow, Fraud, p. 235; Pollock, Torts, p. 68; 1 Story, Eq. 13th ed. p. 214; Maple v. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. 40 Ohio St. 313, 48 Am. Rep. 685; Erie City Iron Works v. Barber, 106 Pa. 125, 51 Am. Rep. 508; Lee v. Sandy Hill, 50 N. Y. 442; Story, Ag. pp. 189, 452; 1 Parsons, Cont. 62; Locke v. Stearns, 1 Met. 560, 35 Am. Dec. 882; Olmsted v. Hotelling, 1 Hill, 317; White v. Sawyer, 16 Gray, 686;

Bennett v. Judson, 21 N. Y. 238; Butler v. Watkins, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 456, 20 L. ed. 629; Farmers & M. Bank of Kent County v. Butchers & D. Bank, 16 N. Y. 125, 69 Am. Dec. 678; Fiskhill Soc. Inst. v. National Bank of Fiskhill, 80 N. Y. 163, 36 Am. Rep. 595; Hern v. Nichols, 1 Salk. 2-9; Fuller v. Wilson, 3 Q. B. 58; Ormrod v. Huth, 14 Mees. & W. 651; Murray v. Mann, 2 Exch. 588; Mackay v. Commercial Bank of New Brunswick, L. R. 5 P. C. 394; Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank, L. R. 2 Exch. 259

In the first and most obvious view of an agency of any description, the principal is bound by such acts as he has authorized.

1 Parsons, Cont. 7th ed. pp. 39, 44.

The weight of authority is in favor of the principle that a principal is not only liable for the authorized acts of his agent, but that he is also liable for the acts of his agent which by his acts he has induced a third party to believe were within the scope of the authority of the agent.

Farmers & M. Bank of Kent County v. Butchers & D. Bank, and New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Schuyler, supra.

For losses occasioned by the willful fraud and not by the mere carelessness or ignorance of the agents in communicating information known by them to be untrue and with intent to mislead the inquirer, the defendants are liable.

Mynard v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 71 N. Y. 170, 27 Am. Rep. 28; New Jersey Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants Bank of Boston, 47 U. S. 6 How. 344, 12 L. ed. 465; Magnin v. Dinmore, 56 N. Y. 168; Westcott v. Fargo, 61 N. Y. 542, 19 Am. Rep. 300.

Townsend, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendants are partners, doing business as a mercantile agency, under the firm name of R. G. Dun & Co. The plaintiff is a national bank, located at Birmingham, Ala. In April, 1889, the plaintiff became a subscriber to said agency, under a written agreement, the material portions of which are as follows:

"Terms of Subscription to the Mercantile Agency.

"Memorandum of the agreement between R. G. Dun & Co., proprietors of the mercantile agency, on the one part, and the undersigned, subscribers to the said agency, on the other part, viz.:

"The said proprietors are to communicate to us, on request, for our use in our business, as an aid to us in determining the propriety of giving credit, such information as they may possess concerning the mercantile standing and credit of merchants, traders, manufacturers, etc., throughout the United States and in the dominion of Canada. It is agreed that such information has mainly been, and shall mainly be, obtained and communicated by servants, clerks, attorneys, and employes, appointed as our subagents, in our behalf, by the said R. G. Dun & Co. The said information to be communicated by the said R. G. Dun & Co. in accordance with the following rules and stipulations, with which we, subscribers to the agency as aforesaid, agree to comply faithfully, to wit: (1) All verbal, written, or printed information communicated to us, or to such confidential clerk as may be authorized by us to receive the same, and all use of the reference book, hereinafter named, and the notification sheet of corrections of said book, shall be strictly confidential, and shall never, under any circumstances, be communicated to the persons reported, but shall be exclusively confined to the business of our establishment. (2) The said R. G. Dun & Co. shall not be responsible for any loss caused by the neglect of any of the said servants, attorneys, clerks, and employes in procuring, collecting, and communicating the said information; and the actual verity or correctness of the said information is in no manner guaranteed by the said R. G. Dun & Co. The action of said agency being of necessity almost entirely confidential in all its departments and details, the said R. G. Dun & Co. shall never, under any circumstances, be required by the subscriber to disclose the name of any such servant, clerk, attorney, or employe, or any fact whatever concerning him or her, or concerning the means or sources by or from which any information so possessed or communicated was obtained. (3) The said R. G. Dun & Co. are hereby requested to place in our keeping, for our exclusive use, a printed copy of a reference book, containing ratings or markings of estimated capital and relative credit standing of such business men, as aforesaid, prepared by them or the servants, clerks, attorneys, and employes aforesaid, together with notification sheet of corrections. We further agree that upon the delivery to us of any subsequent edition of the reference book, the one now placed in our hands shall be surrendered to them, and also that upon the termination of our relations as subscribers the copy then remaining in our hands shall be given up to the said R. G. Dun & Co., it being clearly understood and agreed upon that the title to said reference book is vested and remains in said R. G. Dun & Co."

Plaintiff paid $75 in advance for services to be rendered under said agreement till July 1, 1890. Shortly after the making of said agreement, one Rollins, a customer of the plaintiff, applied to it to discount certain drafts drawn by him, and accepted by, W. A. Kitts, of Oswego, N. Y. Before discounting the drafts, the plaintiff presented an inquiry slip at defendants' agency, at said Birmingham, asking, as a subscriber, for such information as defendants had respecting the standing and responsibility of said Kitts. The inquiry was sent from Birmingham to the office of defendants in New York city, and thence to one Burchard, their agent at Oswego, N. Y. Burchard and Kitts were connected in business, and Burchard, in order, apparently, to promote his own interests, sent false reports as to the standing and responsibility of Kitts to the defendants. These reports were pasted on printed forms, and delivered by defendants to the plaintiff. Said printed forms were as follows:

"The Mercantile Agency of R. G. Dun & Co., Dun, Wiman & Co., and E. Russell & Co.

"The information given on this sheet is an answer to an inquiry made by a subscriber to the mercantile agency, who asks for the same as an aid to determine the propriety of giving credit. The information is communicated under the conditions of an agreement signed by the said subscriber, which expressly stipulates that the said information is obtained by the servants, clerks, attorneys, and employes of the said subscriber, and on his behalf. The said agreement also expressly stipulates that the said mercantile agency shall not be responsible for any loss caused by the neglect of any of the said subscriber's servants, clerks, attorneys, and employes in procuring, collecting, and communicating the said information; and the actual verity of the said information is in no manner guaranteed. The agreement further provides that the information thus communicated shall be strictly confidential, shall never be communicated to the persons to whom it refers, and that all inquiries made shall be confined to the legitimate business of the subscriber's establishment."

The plaintiff, relying on said reports, discounted the acceptances of said Kitts to the amount of $5,264.46, which have never been paid, and are of no value. The plaintiff thereupon brought an action at law for damages by reason of said false and fraudulent representations, and the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. The defendants moved for a new trial, which motion was denied, and the case comes before this court upon a bill of exceptions.

The defendants' counsel, at the close of the testimony, moved the court to direct a verdict in favor of the defendants, which motion was denied. Among other requests, they requested the court to charge the jury as follows: "If Burchard knew the reports to be false in any respect, and, so knowing them to be false, made them to the defendants, to advance, promote, or carry out some private end of his own in connection with his agency and the duties thereof, then the defendants are not liable for his false reports, and are not liable to the plaintiff by reason thereof."

The court refused so to charge, but charged the jury as follows: "The contract between the plaintiff and defendants in regard to the reciprocal obligations of the two parties to a certain extent has been placed in evidence. It is stated in the contract that the information is to be mainly obtained by the servants, clerks, and employes appointed by the defendants, and characterized in the contract as appointed by the R. G. Dun & Co., as the subagents of the plaintiff. For any loss occasioned by the neglect of these employes in seeking and obtaining accurate information Dun & Co. are not responsible. For losses occasioned by the indolence or carelessness of the employes, which causes the information to be inaccurate, Dun & Co. are not liable. Neither do they guarantee the actual truth or correctness of the information. But, notwithstanding that these employes are the subagents of the persons who seek the information, they are also employed by, and are paid by, and are legally, as well as in popular language, the agents of Dun & Co. For losses occasioned by the willful fraud, and not by the mere carelessness or ignorance of the agents in communicating information known by them to be untrue, and with intent to mislead the inquirer, the defendants are liable if the plaintiffs, having placed reliance upon the fraudulent misrepresentations, gave credit in consequence of such fraud, and were lured thereby to their pecuniary loss and damage.

"In this case the business of the firm of R. G. Dun & Co. was to furnish information to subscribers who had employed them for that purpose for a pecuniary consideration. If, in the discharge of the duties of an employe, and in undertaking to furnish information in reply to an inquirer, and acting in the business of the agency, Mr. Burchard knowingly gave false information with intent to deceive the inquirer, the defendant is liable, although Burchard's private inducement to commit the fraud was desire to help Kitts.

"The questions of fact in contested case become at least three in number:

"(1) Were the statements untrue at the time they were made?

"(2) Were they known by the agent to be untrue at the time, and did he then act fraudulently, with intent to mislead the inquirer, for that he knew that the information was sought for the purpose of aiding the inquirer to determine the propriety of giving credit to the person inquired about, is palpable? and

"(3) Did the plaintiff, relying upon the truth of the information give credit upon the faith of the untrue representations and thereby incur a loss?"

The briefs and arguments of counsel on the appeal were largely devoted to a discussion of the liability of an innocent principal for the frauds and deceit of his agent, causing damage to a third party. That the decisions are not altogether harmonious must be conceded, but the apparent conflict is one not as to the principle, but as to its application. As is said by the learned judge who heard the cause in the court below, "the cases turned upon the question whether the alleged agent was, under the circumstances in each case, acting within the scope of his authority." And the law laid down in said cases seems generally to be, as is stated by him in his opinion, denying the motion for a new trial, "that the principal is liable whenever his agent, who is at the time acting within the scope of his authority, and for the principal, makes a fraudulent misrepresentation which influences and is acted upon by the plaintiff to his injury." Most of the decisions relied on by counsel for plaintiffs were rendered in cases where an agent was intrusted by his principal to effect a sale, and where it appeared that the principal had ratified the act of the agent by having accepted and retained the benefit derived from the fraudulent representations of the agent, acting for the principal. In the other cases notably that of

New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Schuyler, 84 N. Y. 80, the deceit was practiced by an officer of a corporation.

But, as is said by Mr. Justice Miller in Pollard v. Vinton, 105 U. S. 12, 26 L. ed. 1000, referring to the Schuyler Case: "Whatever may be the true rule which characterizes actions of officers of a corporation who are placed in control as the governing force of the corporation, which actions are at once a fraud on the corporation and the parties with whom they deal, and how far courts may yet decide to hold the corporations liable for such exercise of power by their officers, they can have no controlling influence over cases like the present. In the one before us it is a question of pure agency, and depends solely on the power confided to the agent. In the other case the officer is the corporation for many purposes. Certainly a corporation can be charged with no intelligent action, or with entertaining any purpose, or committing any fraud, except as this intelligence, this purpose, this fraud, is evidenced by the actions of its officers. And while it may be conceded that for many purposes they are agents, and are to be treated as the agents of the corporation or of the corporators, it is also true that for some purposes they are the corporation, and their acts as such officers are its acts. We do not think that case presents a rule for this case."

A careful examination of the agreement between the parties and of their respective rights and obligations thereunder, shows that Burchard, the agent of plaintiff and of defendants, did not stand in the same relation to the parties as the agents in the cases referred to. There was no contract between plaintiff and defendants for a sale of commercial paper. This is not a case of deceit in a sale, where an agent, within the scope of his authority, and acting for his principal, has made false statements, or suppressed the truth, to effect the contract of sale. The agreement in the case at bar was purely and simply an agreement by defendants to transmit information to subscribers who might wish to contract with outside parties. The defendants, as proprietors of the mercantile agency, agree to communicate such information as they may possess, as an aid to the subscribers in determining the propriety of giving credit, such information to be mainly obtained and communicated by subagents. Defendants are not to be responsible for loss by negligence of such subagents, "and the actual verity or correctness of the said information is in no manner guaranteed."

A consideration of the objects which the parties respectively had in view in connection with the provisions of the agreement seems to show that it could not have been intended that Dun & Co. should be responsible in a case like the present. They were expressly exempted from any obligation to disclose the sources of information. It was not intended that they should themselves obtain information, but it was agreed that they should transmit to the inquirer information, necessarily obtained, mainly by subagents, concerning which they had no knowledge, and over the obtaining of which they had no control. They were engaged in the preparation of a reference book containing ratings of estimated capital and relative credit standing of business men throughout the United States and Canada. While the subagents appointed by Dun & Co. were their agents in the preparation of said book, and the general business of the agency, they were, by the express terms of the agreement, subagents, appointed on behalf of the subscribers, to obtain and communicate information in response to their requests. In this case the defendants were the agents of the plaintiff to transmit such information as they might receive. Their failure to transmit the information would have been a violation of their agreement. They did transmit it, together with a notice that they did not in any manner guarantee its truth. So far as these defendants are concerned, they completely fulfilled the terms of their contract with the plaintiff. They did nothing more nor less. The deceit and fraud were committed by the subagent. It is not claimed that there was any negligence either in his selection or in the transmission of the information by the defendants. The false information was not obtained for Dun & Co. to aid them in a contract to sell or buy commercial paper, for Dun & Co. were not a party to any such contract, but was furnished by the subagent for the purpose of having it transmitted to the plaintiff, his real principal, through the defendants, who acted as intermediary agents, in order that, by the fraud of said subagent, Kitts, one of the parties to the contract of the sale of the paper, might be assisted, and the other party, this plaintiff, might be defrauded. To accomplish this purpose the subagent perpetrated a fraud upon the plaintiff and the defendants. Burchard was not employed as the agent of either party in reference to the contract of sale which he caused to be affected by his deceit. He was only an agent under the agreement of subscription to furnish information.

The vital distinction upon which the question turns is to be found in the fact that neither the defendants nor Burchard were parties to the contract in which the alleged fraud was committed. That contract was between one Rollins, a customer of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff, for a sale of his commercial paper to the plaintiff. Burchard did not know to whom the information was to be furnished. Neither he nor the defendants knew the terms of the proposed contract, or the parties to it, or even that such contract was to be made. They had no means of knowing the amount involved in the proposed transaction between Rollins and the plaintiff, and no opportunity to protect themselves from liability for false information. No case has been cited where a stranger to a contract has, under such circumstances, been held liable for damages for fraud. The reason, apart from the exemption provided for by the subscription agreement, would seem to be that, as the defendants had no knowledge, and no notice of the character of the transaction, and were not parties or privies thereto, they could not be expected to assume any liability, except for negligence or fraud, provided they transmitted such information as they possessed, in accordance with the terms of the contract.

But plaintiff's counsel claim that defendants are estopped to make these claims, because, although they were innocent, yet the plaintiff has acted on the faith of these representations, to its prejudice. They seek to apply to this case the principle that, where one of two innocent persons must suffer for the wrongful act of a third person, the principal who has placed the agent in the position of trust should suffer, rather than the stranger. But here the plaintiff was no stranger. The subagent was his agent as well as the agent of the defendants. He was the subscriber to an agreement which from its character implied, and in its terms expressed, that the defendants could not and did not insure in any manner the verity of information to be furnished. By the use of the terms "the actual verity," etc., "is in no manner guaranteed," they provide for exemption from liability for untruthful information from whatever cause, whether received through the fraud of an outsider or of the subagent. The irresistible inference to be drawn from the agreement seems to be that the accuracy of the information is to be at the risk of the subscriber.

In Friedlander v. Texas & P. R. Co. 190 U. S. 425, 32 L. ed. 994, where an innocent purchaser of a bill of lading, fraudulently issued by one Easton, the station agent of the defendant, sought to hold it liable thereon, Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, referring to the principle above stated, says: "Easton, disregarding the object for which he was employed, and not intending by his act to execute it, but wholly for a purpose of his own and of Lahnstein, became particeps criminis with the latter in the commission of the fraud upon Friedlander & Co., and it would be going too far to hold the company, under such circumstances, estopped from denying that it had clothed this agent with apparent authority to do an act so utterly outside the scope of his employment and of its own business. The defendant cannot be held on contract as a common carrier, in the absence of goods, shipment, and shipper; nor is the action maintainable on the ground of tort. 'The general rule,' said Willes, J., in Barwick v. English Joint Stock Bank, L. R. 2 Exch. 259, 265, 'is that the master is answerable for every such wrong of the servant or agent as is committed in the course of the service and for the master's benefit, though no express command or privity of the master be proved.' See also Limpus v. London General Omnibus Co. 1 Hurlst. & C. 526. The fraud was in respect to a matter within the scope of Easton's employment or outside of it. It was not within it, for bills of lading could only be issued for merchandise delivered; and, being without it, the company, which derived and could derive no benefit from the unauthorized and fraudulent act, cannot be made responsible. British Mut. Bkg. Co. v. Charnwood Forest R. Co. L. R. 18 Q. B. Div. 714."

In this latter case Lord Esher, master of the rolls, says: "But, although what the 28 L. R. A.

secretary stated related to matters in which he was authorized to give answers, he did not make the statements for the defendants, but for himself. He had a friend whom he desired to assist, and could assist by making the false statements, and, as he made them in his own interest, or to assist his friend, he was not acting for the defendants. The rule has often been expressed in the terms that to bind the principal the agent must be acting 'for the benefit' of the principal. This, in my opinion, is equivalent to saying that he must be acting 'for' the principal; since, if there is authority to do the act, it does not matter if the principal is benefited by it. I know of no case where the employer has been held liable when his servant has made statements, not for his employer, but in his own interest."

See also Pollard v. Vinton, supra.

There is another aspect of the case which leads to the same conclusion. It appears from the agreement that the services demanded by the principal—the obtaining of information—cannot be rendered by the agent, but must be mainly rendered by subagents. In such cases the agent will not be liable for the negligence or misconduct of his subagent, provided there was no negligence in his selection. 1 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 394, and cases cited; Story, Ag. 224. The rule is stated by Judge Dewey in Warren Bank v. Suffolk Bank, 10 Cush. 585, as follows: "Where the nature of the business in which an agent is engaged requires for its proper and reasonable execution the employment of a subagent, the principal agent is not responsible for the defaults of the subagent, provided a proper subagent was selected. This latter rule was sanctioned and applied by this court in Habens v. Mercantile Bank, 23 Pick. 332, 34 Am. Dec. 59; Dorchester & M. Bank v. New England Bank, 1 Cush. 177."

When the business entrusted to an agent is to be performed at a distance, or requires or justifies the delegation of an agent's authority to a subagent who is not his own servant, the original agent is not liable for the errors or misconduct of the subagent if he has used due care in his selection. Darling v. Stanwood, 14 Allen, 507; Dorchester & M. Bank v. New England Bank, supra; Barnard v. Coffin, 141 Mass. 87, 55 Am. Rep. 448.

In the case at bar the inquiry in Birmingham, Ala., for information as to the standing of a person in Oswego, N. Y., necessarily required the employment of a subagent in the latter place. The plaintiff, under its subscription agreement, authorized the employment of a subagent to obtain such information. In collecting special information the subagent was acting in consequence of the special request of the plaintiff, and he was the agent of the plaintiff, selected by the defendants in accordance with a rule fixed by the subscription agreement. The defendants did not undertake to do this part of the business; they declined to do it, but agreed that they would transmit the information so obtained to the plaintiff.

For these reasons we think the court erred in that portion of its charge to the jury in which he stated that "for losses occasioned by the willful fraud and not by the mere carelessness or ignorance of the agents in communicating information known by them to be untrue, and with intent to mislead the inquirer, the defendants are liable, if the plaintiffs, having placed reliance upon the fraudulent misrepresentations, gave credit in consequence of such fraud, and were lured thereby to their pecuniary loss and damage."

The judgment is reversed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Mary E. MULLEN, Plff. in Err.,

v.

City of OWOSSO.

(....Mich.....)

The negligence of the driver of a private carriage is imputable to a woman of the age of discretion who voluntarily rides with him.

(April 17, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Shiawassee County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Mr. John T. McCurdy, with Mr. George L. Keeler, for appellant.
Mr. Odell Chapman for appellee.

Long, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, a woman about thirty-four years of age, was riding with Mr. Pond in a private carriage drawn by one horse along a public street in the city of Owosso. Overtaking Mr. Sanders, who was driving in the same direction, Mr. Pond attempted to pass him. Sanders was driving at a rapid rate, and Mr. Pond, in attempting to pass, started his horse rapidly forward. The parties raced for a distance, when Mr. Pond ran over a pile of sand in the highway. His carriage was overturned, and plaintiff thrown out and injured. The proofs are clear that Mr. Pond knew that a building was being erected by the side of this street, and that a mortar box and other materials were out in the street, in front of it. He stated that on a former trial he testified that he knew the street was incumbered by such materials, and thought that somebody was liable to get hurt there. Yet, in view of this knowledge, he carelessly drove his horse at the rate of more than six miles an hour in the street, contrary to the ordinances of the city. The court directed the jury: "If you find from the evidence in this case that the plaintiff would not have been injured but for the neglect of the city to give proper warning, then the plaintiff would be entitled to recover, unless you find that Mr. Pond knew of the obstruction to a portion of this street, and heedlessly drove over the obstruction; then he would be guilty of gross negligence, and plaintiff could not recover." Again the court said: "If the plaintiff in this case voluntarily entered the private conveyance of Mr. Pond, and voluntarily trusted her person and safety, in that conveyance, to him, by voluntarily entering into the private conveyance of Mr. Pond, she adopted the conveyance, for the time being, as her own, and assumed the risk of the skill and care of the person guiding it. So, if you find that Mr. Pond was negligent, in driving fast, the plaintiff could not recover." The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant.

The only question presented by the brief of plaintiff's counsel is whether the negligence of Mr. Pond is imputable to the plaintiff. This question was settled in the affirmative in Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Mich. 274 (decided by this court in 1872), and has not since been departed from. Counsel claims that some doubt has been cast upon this doctrine by some of the later decisions, and cites Battisill v. Humphreys, 64 Mich. 508. In that case a child three years of age was run over by an engine upon a railroad operated by defendant, as receiver. The question was raised whether the negligence of the parents in permitting the child to go upon the track was imputable to the child. Mr. Justice Morse held that such negligence was not imputable to the child. The other justices expressed no opinion upon that point. In Shippy v. Au Sable, 85 Mich. 280, the question whether the negligence of the parents was imputable to a child three years of age was again presented; and, upon a full hearing, it was the unanimous opinion of the court that such negligence was not imputable to the child. Other cases of like character have been presented to this court, involving that question; and the rule is now established that, when the child brings the action for negligent injuries, the negligence of the parents cannot be imputed to it. But the present case presents quite a different question. Here a person of the age of discretion voluntarily enters a private conveyance of another, to ride, and by the carelessness of that person is injured. The rule laid down in the Miller Case, cited above, excludes a recovery. It has been too long settled to be now disturbed. In Schindler v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 87 Mich. 410, the rule was recognized. It was there said of the Miller Case: "This is the general rule, and has since been followed in this state." The rule was also recognized by this court in Cowan v. Muskegon R. Co. 84 Mich. 583.

Judgment is affirmed.

NOTE.—The imputation of the negligence of a driver of a private carriage to an adult person voluntarily riding with him as decided in the above case is repudiated in most of the modern decisions as shown in Nisbet v. Garner (Iowa), 1 L. R. A. 152, and note; Dean v. Pennsylvania R. Co. (Pa.) 6 L. 28 L. R. A.

R. A. 143, and note; Beck v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (Mo.) 9 L. R. A. 157, and note; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Lapsley (C. C. App. 8th C.) 16 L. R. A. 800.

Some other modern cases not collected in these notes are generally to the same effect.

Grant and Montgomery, JJ., concurred with Long, J.

Hooker, J., dissenting:

The plaintiff was riding in a carriage, with, and upon the invitation of, a Mr. Pond, in the city of Owosso. In attempting to pass another vehicle, the carriage was overturned, by reason of its being driven upon a pile of sand or rubbish in the street, and plaintiff was injured. The defense is made that the driver, Mr. Pond, was negligent, and that such negligence should be imputed to the plaintiff. The cases are not harmonious upon this question, but the great weight of authority is against the defendant's contention; the case of Thorogood v. Bryan (decided in 1849) 8 C. B. 115, which is considered the leading case sustaining the defendant's proposition, having been overruled in England, and repudiated in this country, generally, though followed in some states. That was a case of the collision of two omnibuses. The action against the owner of one by a passenger of the other was defeated upon the ground of contributory negligence, upon the theory that the passenger was so identified with the driver of his vehicle as to be chargeable with his negligence. This decision seems to rest upon an inference that the driver is the agent of the passenger, or at least that he is under the direction and control of the passenger. The case was disregarded in Rigby v. Hewitt, 5 Exch. 239, and distinctly overruled in The Bernina, L. R. 12 Prob. Div. 58; Mills v. Armstrong, 13 App. Cas. 1. In the last case, Lord Herschell commented as follows upon the case of Thorogood v. Bryan: "In short, as far as I can see, the identification appears to be effective only to the extent of enabling another person, whose servants have been guilty of negligence, to defend himself by the allegation of contributory negligence on the part of the person injured. But the very question that had to be determined was whether the contributory negligence of the driver of the vehicle was a defense, as against the passenger, when suing another wrongdoer. To say that it is a defense, because the passenger is identified with the driver appears to me to beg the question, when it is not suggested that this identification results from any recognized principles of law, or has any other effect than to furnish that defense, the validity of which was the very point in issue." In Little v. Hackett, 116 U. S. 360, 29 L. ed. 652, Mr. Justice Field uses the following language: "The truth is, the decision of Thorogood v. Bryan rests upon indefensible grounds. The identification of the passenger with the negligent driver or the owner, without his co-operation or encouragement, is a gratuitous assumption. There is no such identity. The parties are not in the same position. The owner of a public conveyance is a carrier, and the driver, or the person managing it, is his servant. Neither of them is the servant of the passenger, and his asserted identity with them is contradicted by the daily experience of the world." The doctrine of Thorogood v. Bryan has met with similar treatment in most of the state courts of last resort, and, as to public conveyances, may be said not to state the law correctly. The reasons upon which these cases rest are equally conclusive in cases where the injured party was riding in a hired carriage with a driver from a livery stable; in cases where the passenger does not, as a matter of fact, exercise such control over the driver as to make him his servant. See Little v. Hackett, supra; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Texas Pac. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 316; Larkin v. Burlington, C. R. & N. B. Co. 65 Iowa, 492; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Steinbrenner, 47 N. J. L. 161, 54 Am. Rep. 126; Randolph v. O'Riorden, 155 Mass. 831. In cases like the present the question becomes one of fact; the test of the passenger's responsibility for the negligence of the driver depending upon the passenger's control, or right of control, of the driver, so as to constitute the relation of master and servant between them. Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Kutac, 73 Tex. 643; Oahill v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 93 Ky. 345; Nesbit v. Garner, 75 Iowa, 814, 1 L. R. A. 152; Dean v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 129 Pa. 514, 6 L. R. A. 143; McCaffrey v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 16 N. Y. Supp. 495; Masteron v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 247, 38 Am. Rep. 510; Noyes v. Boscauven, 64 N. H. 361; Follman v. Mankato, 85 Minn. 522; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Hogeland, 66 Md. 149, 59 Am. Rep. 159; State v. Boston & M. R. Co. 80 Me. 430; Knightstown v. Musgrove, 116 Ind. 121; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Spilker, 134 Ind. 380.

It should not be inferred that a passenger can shelter himself behind the fact that another is driving the vehicle in which he rides, and relieve himself from his own personal negligence. What degree of care should be required in the selection of a driver, or in observing and calling attention to the dangers unnoticed by the driver, must depend upon the circumstances of each case.

It remains to inquire whether this question can be considered an open one in this state. The question before us is doubtless supposed by many to have been settled in the case of Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Mich. 274, and it cannot be denied that the syllabus of that case would confirm the opinion. The facts in that case were these: The plaintiff, a woman, was riding with Eldridge, leing in his employ. The wagon was struck upon a railway crossing, near which was a wood pile belonging to the defendant, which obscured the view of the railroad. The only allusion to the question here discussed arose as follows: The court said: "So that the only negligence which can be claimed in the mode of running the train must rest upon the ground that the company, having obscured the view and deadened the sound of the approaching train by the mode of piling their wood, were bound, for that reason, to run at much less than their usual rate of speed in approaching that crossing, or to keep a flagman there, or use some other extra means to warn people traveling the highway of the approach of trains from the west. The materiality of this question must depend upon another,—whether the plaintiff's own negligence, or that of Eldridge, who was driving the team, contributed to the injury, within the meaning of the generally settled rule upon this subject; for, as she was riding with Eldridge, the owner and driver of the team, any negligence of Eldridge equally affects her rights in this suit, as was properly held by the court." It will be noticed that the subject is passed without discussion and the court proceeds with a lengthy review of the doctrine of contributory and comparative negligence. On page 286 the court states the established facts, among which are the following: "Eldridge was slightly deaf, but the plaintiff herself was not." "They kept on, still upon the walk (the train in sight), not stopping to listen, and looking neither to the right nor the left, neither up nor down the track. They are almost upon it. He (the witness) still thinks they will stop, but they move steadily on," etc. Again, "no logic can find in it, or extract from it [the evidence], the faintest manifestation of common prudence, which the circumstances demanded, in approaching the crossing." The court finds from the testimony of the plaintiff herself that neither Eldridge nor herself used any caution whatever. One of two things must be admitted, under the facts stated, viz. (1) that plaintiff was relieved from all responsibility by the fact that she was riding with Eldridge, and was under no obligation to look for the train; or (2) that the failure to do so was contributory negligence upon her part, which should have precluded a recovery by her, in which case the question of imputed negligence was unimportant. The opinion apparently takes the latter view, so far as plaintiff's own negligence is concerned, where it says, "I think the evidence tended affirmatively to prove actual and gross negligence on their part, which contributed directly to produce the injury complained of." From the finding, I think it may be said that the question before us was not necessarily involved in the Miller Case, and that it was not considered the controlling point.

If it is to be treated as conclusive, against the overwhelming weight of authority in the United States and England, we shall apparently accept an incidental remark in an opinion as decisive upon an important principle, which deserved a full discussion before being settled.

An examination will show that this decision has never since been applied, beyond a recognition of the doctrine in cases where it was not involved in the decision. It was mentioned and recognized in Cuddy v. Horn, 46 Mich. 596, 41 Am. Rep. 178, but the court disposed of the case upon the ground that the passenger upon a yacht had not control of the management.

In Schindler v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 87 Mich. 411, the court again recognized the rule; saying that it was settled in Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, but that it did not apply, because the defendant was guilty of wantonness. The plaintiff was a child riding with a neighbor. Mr. Justice Champlin, in a dissenting opinion, protested against the doctrine. 87 Mich. 419. In Battisill v. Humphreys, 64 Mich. 509, Mr. Justice Morse uses the following language: "I am not content to let the question pass as a settled one in this state. At least, I am not willing to assent to the proposition that the negligence of any other person can become the contributory negligence of a plaintiff without his fault. Id. 508. In the case of Shippy v. Au Sable, 85 Mich. 393, Mr. Justice Morse expressed satisfaction with the views in the Battisill Case, and added, "I am also satisfied that the great weight of authority in this country is opposed to the contention of the defendants." In neither of these cases was the doctrine of Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller applied. It seems, therefore, that the authority of the case of Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller has been repeatedly questioned. The time has arrived when the question must be settled. I think it should be in conformity to the weight of authority, and the better rule. The judgment should be reversed, and a new trial ordered.

McGrath, C. J., concurred with Hooker, J.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION,

App't,
v.

John TAYLOR, Receiver of Taxes, et al.

(161 Pa. 307.)

An institution of purely public charity, such as the American Sunday School Union, is not exempt from taxation on property used in carrying on a book store in which are sold not only its own publications but other standard works in order to aid in making the business self-supporting, although the profits of the business are devoted to the purpose of the charity.

(Wanam, J., dissents.)

NOTE.—The question presented in the above case has been annotated with the case of Book Agents of M. E. Church, South v. Hinton (Tenn.), 19 L. R. A. 280, in which the decision sustained the exemption.

23 L. R. A.

(April 30, 1894.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the A. Court of Common Pleas, No. 4, for Philadelphia County in favor of defendant in a proceeding brought to enjoin the collection of certain taxes which had been assessed against complainant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Rowland Evans and R. L. Ashhurst, for appellant:

There would seem to be no doubt that this is a charitable institution.

Episcopal Academy v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 572; Bispham, Eq. §§ 121, 122; Perry, Tr. § 700; Atty-Gen. v. Stepmey, 10 Ves. Jr. 22; Winslow v. Cummings, 8 Cush. 359; Bliss v. American Bible Soc. 2 Allen, 335; Domestic & Foreign Missionary Soc's App. 80 Pa. 425; Charitable Soc. of the Evangelical Ass'n's App. 85 Pa. 316; Pickering v. Shotwell, 10 Pa. 26; Donohugh's App. 86 Pa. 306.

It cannot be alleged or pretended that any element of personal profit to any one entered into our chartered purpose or was inherent in the design of the corporate life.

A charitable institution does not lose its character as a charity—in the purview of the law relating to taxation—by dispensing a part of its charitable work for a pecuniary return sufficient to cover expenses, any occasional excess of receipts over disbursements being applied to general purposes of the society, so that there is no element of private or corporate gain.

Episcopal Academy v. Philadelphia and Donohugh's App. supra; Young Men's Christian Assn. v. Donohugh, 7 W. N. C. 208; Philadelphia v. Women's Christian Assn., 125 Pa. 573.

Mchrs. Charles F. Warwick and E. Spencer Miller, for appellee:

The American Sunday School Union, so far as that part of its business carried on in the store is concerned, is practically a trading corporation. It is engaged in mercantile business for the purpose of deriving revenue.

Young Men's Christian Assn. v. Donohugh, 7 W. N. C. 208; Philadelphia v. Barber, 160 Pa. 123.

It would seem to be a gross wrong that two book stores, perhaps adjoining each other, should be discriminated so seriously as they might be if appellant's contention were sustained.

That furnishing support to a charity would be free of taxation. The one next door would be always subject to this obligation. At critical seasons when prices are cut very closely, this consideration might be very serious, enabling one establishment to ruinously underbid the other.

Dean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The corporation known as the American Sunday-School Union has its principal place of business in the city of Philadelphia. It occupies No. 1,122 Chestnut street, the lot fronting on the street 35 feet, and extending back to Sansom street, 235 feet. The building is large and valuable, and covers the whole lot. The society was incorporated by special act of assembly in 1845. Its purpose, as declared in the second section of the act, is "the erection and maintenance of Sunday schools, and the publication and circulation of moral and religious publications." It is a corporation with no capital stock, declares no dividends, and divides no profits. It is carried on for benevolent and religious purposes. The board of revision of taxes on the city of Philadelphia rated its property on Chestnut street at $158,000. Of this valuation, $28,000 was stricken off as exempt from taxation: the remainder, $130,000, was assessed at the city rate, $1.85 per $100, making $2,408, for each of the years 1891 and 1892. The Sunday-School Union, the plaintiff, filed this bill to enjoin the defendant, the receiver of taxes, from collecting this assessment, averring that its purpose as disclosed by its charter, and, as carried out in the building on 1,122 Chestnut street, was that of a purely public charity, and it was therefore exempt from all taxation. The defendant denies that plaintiff is such charitable institution as is by law exempt from taxation, and avers that the premises described are occupied and used mainly in carrying on the business of manufacturing and selling books and other articles of merchandise. W. W. McKeehan, Esq., was appointed master, whose finding of facts and conclusions of law, in a very concise and clear report, are with the plaintiff. On exceptions being filed by the city, the learned judge of the court below differed with the master in his legal conclusion from the facts, and dismissed the bill. From this decree, plaintiff brings this appeal.

The master finds these material facts, on which he bases his opinion that the society is exempt from taxation: "For many years the society issued its publications, and sold them to Sunday schools and to the public below the cost of production, in order to bring them within the reach of all. Subsequently, the contributions of the public being insufficient to continue the plan, the managers were compelled to place the public operations of the society upon a basis that would be self-supporting. This is now the policy of the association; but it is not its aim to make money, and, if any profits are realized beyond what are absolutely necessary to maintain the public operations, the surplus is used in promoting the missionary work and establishing Sunday schools in needy communities, and in the gratuitous distribution of its literature." Then, further, he finds that the first floor of the Chestnut street end of the society's building "is devoted to retail and wholesale sales; and the south part, towards Sansom street, is used for stock in large quantities, kept there for filling orders, and where it is packed and shipped." And, further, in the salesroom on Chestnut street, publications of the society and publications other than those of the society are sold at the prices at which they are sold by the other booksellers of the city of Philadelphia. No publications are allowed to be sold which are not of a high moral character, but such standard works as Webster's Dictionary and similar publications are kept by the society, and sold to their regular trade, although, as a rule, persons asking for standard publications are referred to other booksellers. The publications not issued by the society, but sold by it, are so sold in order to aid it in making its business self-supporting. The master, on these facts, concluded the society was wholly exempt from taxation; the court, that it was not. Which was right?

Conceding the fact that the society is an "institution of purely public charity," and, as such, exempt from taxation, it seems to us such an institution may, as an aid to the accomplishment of its primary object, carry on a business, or use part of its property for a business purpose, which renders such business or such part of its property taxable. The first floor of the society's Chestnut street building was used for purely business purposes, and its business was conducted in that location for the avowed purpose of profit. As the master finds, in the first years of the society's operations it sold its books at less than cost, but, finding this plan was not on the whole successful, "the managers were compelled to place the public operations of the society upon a basis that would be self-supporting;" that is, they established and maintain upon one of the most eligible and valuable sites of the city a book store for profit. In this they sell, not only the society's own publications, but others. While they confine their trade to "publications of a high moral character, and such standard works as Webster's Dictionary and like works," this in no way negatives the business character of the enterprise. There are but few reputable booksellers anywhere who would wish a trade in immoral books, or in publications other than meritorious. Nor does the fact that the profits gathered on the counter of the book store are devoted to the primary object of the charity, which is purely public, in any degree affect the character of the trading for commercial enterprise. Every dollar the society expends is some charitable contributor's gains or profits from some business not charitable. If such contributor devoted the whole of his profits from the sale of dry goods, groceries, or books to promote this particular charity, that fact would not make the source of such profit a purely public charity; and if, as the master has found, the society was compelled to put a part of its operations on a basis that was self-supporting, by starting a book store to sell books only of a high moral character and standard publications, that is trade. That the entire profits of this branch of the business are devoted to the purposes of the charity no more changes its business nature than if, instead of a book store, the society had established and carried on a shoe store. It might have operated a farm or a rolling mill with the same end in view,—to put the society, as the master aptly says, on a basis that was self-supporting; but the end would not have exempted the business from taxation.

It is clear from the evidence here, that the city did not tax any portion of the funds paid by pious and benevolent contributors. It sought only to collect a tax from that part of the business which was purely commercial. And there is no injustice in this, nor any harshness. The commercial operations occupy 85 by 235 feet of the most valuable ground in the city. Its location is peculiarly favorable to the business carried on there. The large municipal expenditures in the past have greatly increased its value. The millions now being expended and that will be expended in the future will still further enhance the price of the land, and increase the profits of the business. The taxable property of other dealers and real-estate owners in the city can claim no exemption. Why should not this business pay its fair proportion of the taxes necessary to the paving of streets, construction of sewers, furnishing of light and water, maintaining a fire department, supporting a police force, and other municipal objects? To exempt this book store from a taxation to the amount of $2,408 each year is, in effect, a shifting of that much of an individual's burden to the shoulders of the public. If the society does not pay it, the general public must. Another individual dealer in the same business must pay his full share of taxation, and then his share of what his rival ought to pay. Nor is this conclusion a novel one. The board of revision of taxes has, in the case of all other institutions of a like character, for years followed a system of taxation whereby the mercantile part of the business was taxed, and the "purely public charity" part exempted. The Presbyterian Board of Publication is assessed at $260,000, whereof $60,000 is exempted; the American Baptist Publication Society is assessed $225,000, and $20,000 is exempt; the Board of Church Extension of the Methodist Church is assessed at $25,000, and $7,000 is exempt; the Young Men's Christian Association is assessed at $400,000, of which $210,000 is exempt. The board of revision of taxes, in the performance of their manifest duty in these cases, as in the one in hand, seem to have carefully separated that in each institution which was a "purely public charity" from that which was commercial in its character, and determined the liability to taxation accordingly. In all cases of this kind, the tendency naturally is to an excessively liberal construction of the constitutional exemption; a construction not warranted, perhaps, by its plain restriction. The people knew what they meant when, in 1874, they said by an overwhelming majority: "The general assembly may by general laws exempt from taxation public property used for public purposes, actual places of religious worship, places of burial not used or held for private or corporate profit, and institutions of purely public charity." They meant nothing else should be exempt from taxation. By no judicial rule of construction can these words be made to mean that a commercial enterprise is exempt because the whole profit of it goes into the treasury of, and it is carried on by, a purely public charity. In so far as the institution is charitable, and its revenues are derived from the contributions of the charitable, it is protected by the constitution. But if such institution sees fit to engage in trade for the purpose of increasing its revenue, or making any part of its business self-supporting, the trade part of its business can be taxed, and ought to be.

The authorities cited by the learned counsel for appellant on their facts are not in conflict with what is here decided. In Donohugh's App., 86 Pa. 306, the opinion is by our Brother Mitchell, then sitting in the common pleas, which, on affirmance, was adopted as the opinion of this court. The Library Company of Philadelphia claimed exemption, on the ground that it was a "purely public charity." It appeared that the use of the books was without charge to all who used them in the library building; to all members, within certain limitations, who took them away for use; and to all persons, for a small compensation, who took them away for use, and gave security for their return. It was held that the privilege of taking away for a small compensation was a mere regulation, and not part of the fundamental law of the corporation; but that, even if this privilege was repugnant to the nature of the charity, the privilege would be void, and the public character of the charity was not thereby changed. In Philadelphia v. Women's Christian Assn., 125 Pa. 572, meals and lodging were furnished to all women dependent on their own labor for support. To those able to pay, a small charge was made, but there was no element of gain or profit, the entire revenue not nearly equaling the expenditure. On the facts it was declared a "purely public charity," because, whatever revenue it received by charges was wholly from the recipients of the institution's bounty; the payment made by no one of the beneficiaries equaling in value the cost of the lodging and meals obtained by her. The case was decided on its special facts, and was rested on Donohugh's App. In the case of Episcopal Academy v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 565, this court went to the outside limit of liberality in construction of the constitution. The school was founded and endowed by public and private charity. The rates of tuition were adjusted with a view to make the school self-sustaining. A majority of the pupils paid full rates, a small number half rates, and a still smaller number nothing. It was held to be a purely public charity, because its revenues only made it self-supporting, but it was distinctly intimated that, if the revenues had gone beyond the line of self-support, it would not have been exempt. The decision was rested on Donohugh's App. and Philadelphia v. Women's Christian Assn.

We are not required to question the judgments in these cases. They differ essentially from the one before us in their facts. If the Women's Christian Association had carried on a bakery, meat shop, or grocery, that the profits therefrom might make the public charity—the lodging and boarding house—self-supporting, the bakery and meat shop would not have been exempt from taxation; or, if the Episcopal Academy had carried on a coal yard or school-book store in conjunction with their school, to make it self-supporting, the coal yard and book store would not have been exempt. In neither of the cases cited was the business outside of or disassociated from the charity. In each case it was so blended with the "purely public charity," that on its facts it was difficult to draw a distinction, and the exemption claimed was sustained by this court on the special facts. But we hold in this case that carrying on a book store, or any business, for profit, subjects such business to taxation, even although the whole profit therefrom goes to the principal institution for purposes of "purely public charity."

As to whether the proportions exempt and taxable have been correctly determined, that is a question with which we, in this proceeding, have nothing to do. Any complaint on that score can only be heard on appeal from the decision of "the board of revision of taxes."

The judgment is affirmed, and the appeal is dismissed, at costs of appellant.

Williams, J., dissenting:

I regret that I am constrained to dissent once more from a judgment in which a ma-majority of my brethren seem fully to concur. The American Sunday-School Union is by common consent a purely public charity. Its work is as wide as our country. It is undenominational in its spirit, its organization, and its methods. It has no stock, and no possibility of personal or corporate gain. It is dependent from year to year on voluntary contributions from churches, Sunday schools, and individuals. Whenever the stream of money which now pours from these sources into its treasury shall cease, its beneficent work must be discontinued. All this seems to be conceded by this court, and the exemption of the property of the union from taxation would not be questioned, as we understand, but for the fact that it sells books to those who are willing to pay for them, in addition to giving them to those who are not able to buy. This, it is held, puts the union in the position of stepping outside its legitimate work, and embarking in a business enterprise for profit. What is its legitimate work? It is to send its workers or missionaries along our frontiers, and into sparsely settled or destitute neighborhoods wherever they may be found, to gather the young into Sunday schools for moral and religious instruction, and to provide for them a wholesome literature. Many of these books are suitable for the use of adults, and the society seeks to supply the needs of individuals and families by gift where that is necessary, but by a sale whenever a sale is practicable. The price received, whatever it may be, makes a gift to needy persons possible, to the amount so received, beyond what the society could otherwise give. This is their general plan of work. The building now subjected to taxation has been paid for out of donations made for that purpose. It is the headquarters of the society. The editorial work, correspondence, and office work are done in this building. Its publications are stored there. From it shipments are made to its colporteurs, missionaries, and agents in every part of the United States. The room fronting on Chestnut street is fitted up as a salesroom, and in it the various books and periodicals of the society are offered for sale, together with a few standard books like Webster's Dictionary. This is one of the methods employed to put the publications of the society before the public, and so extend their usefulness. This does not seem to me to be entering upon a new business, but a natural and desirable department of its proper work. It is easy to see that, if the union should open a baker's or a butcher's shop, that would be entering upon a new and unrelated business. The fact that the profits made were turned over to charitable work would make no difference. It is not the use to be made of the profits, but the nature of the business done, that is to be considered in deciding upon the question of liability to taxation. The business done by the union is divisible into two departments, viz., the organization of Sunday schools, and household visitations by its missionaries, and the supply of Sunday schools and families with a moral and religious literature. Its missionaries sell the books and periodicals of the society when they can.

They give them when this seems to be necessary. Precisely the same thing is done at their building on Chestnut street. They make donations of books and they make sales. The more sales made, the more donations can be made out of the same general stock. The entire profits from sales at their building appear to be about $2,000 per annum. This sum should go to increase their gifts to the destitute. By this decision, however, it is subjected to taxation on $180,000 of the valuation of its property. The taxation on this sum at the rate of 2 per cent—which is not far from the average rate of taxation in this city—will swallow up these profits, and take five or six hundred dollars more out of the gifts made by the benevolent to the work of the society. Every dollar thus expended is taken from the destitute, who would otherwise be the recipients of it; and the religious and benevolent work of the society is diminished to that extent. The application of this rule to the Women's Christian Association would subject its property to taxation, for it receives for the food and lodging it provides nearly or quite enough to meet its expenses; but we held that its property was exempt notwithstanding. Philadelphia v. Women's Christian Asso. 125 Pa. 572. Both Lafayette College and the Episcopal Academy received tuition fees from those able to pay, but these institutions were also held to be exempt from taxation. Northampton County v. Lafayette College, 128 Pa. 182; Episcopal Academy v. Philadelphia, 150 Pa. 565.

The great hospitals of this city charge those who are able to pay for their care and treatment, and use the money so received to help sustain the institutions; but under the rule laid down in this case it is not easy to see why the hospital that does this should not be taxed. The same basis for taxation exists in both cases. Most of the business done by both is done gratuitously. Some services are rendered by the hospital, some books are furnished by the union, to those who are able and willing to pay for what they get. The money so received helps to pay for services rendered and books furnished to those who cannot pay, and the capacity of both the hospital and the union to extend its benefactions is increased correspondingly. The Young Men's Christian Association building stands on wholly different ground. The first floor of this building was not built for use in the work of the association, but for rent to merchants, and is in the actual occupancy of tenants who pay rent. The building of the Sunday-School Union is occupied wholly with its own appropriate work. It produces no income. The sales of publications made there, whether at a profit, at actual cost, or half cost, are in aid of the gratuitous distribution of the same publications among those who are unable to buy them. I cannot bring myself to doubt that the judgment of the court below should be reversed and this property held to be exempt from all taxation. But, if I found myself in doubt, I would resolve that doubt in favor of a society devoted to a work of the purest and broadest Christian charity. Notwithstanding the wall of a modern poet, Christian charity is not a rarity "under the sun," but one of the crowning excellencies of the civilization of our age and country; and the institutions and agencies it has organized for the relief of suffering and for the moral uplifting of society should receive the fullest measure of the protection which our constitution and laws provide for them. I would reverse the judgment appealed from, and grant the relief prayed for.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL, as rel. John T. RICH, Governor,

v.
John W. JOCHIM.

(.....Mich.....)

1. A public office is not property within the provision of the Federal Constitution against deprivation of property without due process of law, and therefore that provision is not violated by a clause in a state constitution giving the governor power to remove officers for gross neglect or misfeasance.
2. Due process of law in respect to the removal of an officer does not mean a trial by a constitutional judiciary, but is furnished by the governor's investigation authorized by a state constitution, although he is given the power not only to decide on the removal, but to present the charges and employ counsel in the investigation.

3. Gross neglect for which members of the board of canvassers may be removed from office may exist without willful misconduct, where they signed grossly incorrect returns, which they signed without examination, having turned over their preparation to an irresponsible clerk having no official relation to the canvass.

4. Canvassing the returns of an election is a part of the duty of the secretary of state, for gross neglect of which he may be removed under the Michigan constitution, where he is one of three officers who ex officio constitute a board of canvassers.

5. An express constitutional provision for the removal of officers by the governor for gross neglect is not nullified by the fact that the power of impeachment by the legislature does not extend to such cases.

6. A notice by the governor to an officer of an investigation of grounds for his nature of the proceeding. The present case considers that proceeding with reference to the constitutional requirement of due process of law and is an important addition to the subject.

NOTE.—The power of summary removal of officers is considered on a full review of authorities in a note to Trainor v. Wayne County Auditors (Mich.) 15 L. R. A. 96, which includes a question as to the 23 L. R. A.

removal is not a judicial writ which must be in the name of the people, nor such an official act as needs authentication by the great seal,—especially when directed to the officer who is in charge of the seal.

(March 20, 1894.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of quo warranto to oust defendant from the office of secretary of state in accordance with an order of the governor removing him therefrom. Judgment of ouster entered.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Meera Cahill & Ostrander and Geer & Williams, for relator:

If the governor has acted within his jurisdiction, his conclusions would be, upon well-settled principles, final as to all questions of fact, even in a direct proceeding to review his action, if such a review were possible; but in a collateral proceeding, like the present, the judgment of the governor, like that of any other court, officer, or body, acting within a lawful jurisdiction, is conclusive as to law and fact.

Throop, Pub. Off. 896.

Section 8 of article 12 of our Constitution is not in conflict with the 14th Amendment to the Federal Constitution.

People v. Stuart, 74 Mich. 411; Sullivan v. Paug, 10 L. R. A. 268, 82 Mich. 548; Kenward v. Louisiana, 92 U. S. 480, 23 L. ed. 478; Bowman v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 80, 25 L. ed. 992; Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 28 L. ed. 282.

It is a common provision in national, state, and municipal governments, that the president, governor, or mayor shall have the power of removal for cause. Such a power is absolutely essential to the proper exercise of public functions, and is clearly within the authority of the sovereign power.

People v. Whitlock, 92 N. Y. 191; Dullam v. Willson, 53 Mich. 392, 51 Am. Rep. 128.

In Gager v. Chippewa County Suprs. 47 Mich. 168, this court, speaking of a similar proceeding before the board of supervisors, said: "So far as time and notice of hearing are concerned the board of supervisors do not act in strictness as a court, but as a public board authorized to use their own times and methods subject only to the condition that no one shall be removed without charges and reasonable notice, nor without full opportunity to be heard."

It was claimed on the hearing before the governor, that the charges and specifications were defective in that they did not allege that respondent's neglect of duty was willful.

The charge is in the language of the constitution, and it has been many times held in this state that a criminal offense charged in the language of the statute is sufficient.

People v. Kent, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 42; Rice v. People, 15 Mich. 9; Durand v. People, 47 Mich. 832; Wharton, Crim. Pl. & Pr. § 220.

Negligence in a legal sense is a failure to observe for the protection of the interests of another, that degree of care, precaution, and vigilance which the circumstances demand.

Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, p. 361.

Negligence is the absence of care, according to circumstances.

23 L. R. A.

Frankford & B. Turnp. Co. v. Philadelphia & T. R. Co. 54 Pa. 845.

Negligence consists in, (1) legal duty to use care; (2) a breach of that duty; (3) the absence of distinct intention to produce the precise damage, if any, which follows.

Shearm. & Redf. Neg. §§ 5, 6.

Negligence excludes the idea of willful intention to do the wrong accomplished.

The distinction between negligence and gross negligence is one of degree, and not of kind.

Wilson v. Brett, 11 Mees. & W. 113; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 494, 23 L. ed. 376.

Gross neglect is the want of that care which every man of common sense, under the circumstances, takes of his own property.

2 Kent, Com. 560.

Some writers classify negligence as gross negligence, ordinary negligence and slight negligence; but this classification only indicates this: that under the special circumstances great care and caution were required, or only ordinary care, or only slight care.

Cooley, Torts, *680.

Gross negligence is an entire failure to exercise care or the exercise of so slight a degree of care as to justify the belief that there was an indifference to the interests and welfare of others.

International & G. N. R. Co. v. Cocks, 64 Tex. 151.

So far as it is possible to define gross negligence it may be said to be such absence of care,—when the consequence of such want of care would appear probable, if the slightest thought were given, but where it is not given,—as will charge the person so negligent, not necessarily, with an intention to inflict the injury resulting from his negligence, but with the same responsibility as though he had actually intended it.

Ray, Negligence of Imposed Duties, 363.

Misconduct, willful maladministration, or breach of good behavior, in office, do not necessarily imply corruption or criminal intention. The official doing of a wrongful act, or the official neglect to do an act which ought to have been done, will constitute the offense, although there was no corrupt or malicious motive.

Mechem, Pub. Off. 457, 458, and cases cited; Throop, Pub. Off. 368, 369.

The language of section 1, article 12, is broad enough to cover gross neglect of duty, and if respondent was on trial before the senate upon articles of impeachment containing the charges here made, he could properly be convicted.

Pom. Const. Law, 725-727; Judge Lawrence, on Law of Impeachment, in 6 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 641.

The duty which the respondent is charged with neglecting is one expressly imposed by statute.

How. Stat. § 214.

Disobedience of such a statute is neglect of official duty.

Was it gross neglect?

This is purely a question of fact as is the question of ordinary negligence.

Cooley, Torts, 632.

The object of art. 12, section 8, was to provide a means for removing a public officer, who was not properly discharging the duties of his office, when the legislature was not in session. If it had been intended that the power should only be exercised in cases of willful or corrupt acts, it would have been easy to omit, "for gross neglect of duty."

The board of state canvassers were not acting judicially, but ministerially, and respondent cannot invoke the rule which makes judicial officers liable only for willful or corrupt acts as laid down in State v. Hastings, 37 Neb. —. They are liable to removal for gross neglect of duty. That the board of state commissioners do act ministerially in canvassing the returns see,

May v. Wayne County Canvassers, 94 Mich. 512; Andrews v. Otego County Judge of Probate, 74 Mich. 285; Coll v. City Election Canvassers, 88 Mich. 371; Roemer v. Detroit Canvassers, 90 Mich. 27; Luce v. Mayhew, 18 Gray, 88; Clark v. Hampden County Board of Examiners, 126 Mass. 284.

The claim of counsel that the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States nullifies section 8, article 12, of the State Constitution is not tenable. The incumbent of a public office has no property right in or title to the office.

State v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 98, and cases cited; Donahue v. Will County, 100 Ill. 94.

The term "due process of law" is not confined to those proceedings which are had in the courts.

Weimer v. Bunbury, 80 Mich. 211; Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 190, 80 Am. Rep. 289; Coolley, Const. Lim. p. 855.

This judicial power to determine whether a state officer has been guilty of gross neglect of duty and to remove him from office if found guilty is expressly reserved to the governor under section 12, article 8. The exercise of this power has been upheld in numerous cases.

People v. Stuart, 74 Mich. 411; Dullam v. Willson, 53 Mich. 898, 51 Am. Rep. 128.

The constitutionality of the act giving the power to remove from office to others than those connected with the judicial departments of the government has been repeatedly determined by this court.

Fuller v. Ellis, 98 Mich. 96.

Messrs. John Atkinson and Fred A. Baker for respondent.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By Const., art. 8, § 4, and by Statute (How. Stat. § 202), the board of state canvassers is made to consist of the secretary of state, state treasurer, and commissioner of the state land office. It is the duty of this board to canvass the returns from the various counties of the state, and declare the result of election, for state officers, and upon constitutional amendments. At the spring election in the year 1893, three amendments to the constitution were voted upon by the electors of the state, one of which provided for an increase of the salaries of several of the state officers, including the three mentioned. These amendments were, by the board of canvassers, declared carried. Subsequently, the returns were recanvassed by the board, in obedience to a writ of mandamus issued by this court, when it was found and declared that the amendment relating to salaries was defeated. Proceedings were then taken by the governor, which culminated in an order by him removing each of said officers from his office, and declaring the same vacant; and, respondents refusing to surrender their respective offices, informations in the nature of quo warranto were filed in the name of the attorney-general, upon relation of the governor, to try their right to such offices. This is the proceeding against the secretary of state.

The questions in the case are raised by the replication and the demurrer of respondent thereto. In answer to the plea which asserts respondent's election and accession to the office of the secretary of state, the replication sets up in detail the facts upon which the relator's claim is based, viz.: That relator was the duly elected and acting governor of this state; that, as such, it became and was his duty, under section 8 of article 12 of the Constitution, to inquire into the condition and administration of the office of secretary of state, and the manner in which respondent performed the duties of such office, for the purpose of determining whether said respondent had been guilty of gross neglect of duty in relation to his duties as a member of the board of state canvassers, and to remove respondent from said office for gross neglect of duty, if he should be found guilty thereof; that, a charge of that kind having come to the knowledge of the relator, he caused written notice to be served upon the respondent, which notice required him to appear before the relator, and show cause why he should not be removed from his office of secretary of state, for gross neglect of duty, in connection with the canvass of the returns in relation to said amendment relating to salaries of state officers, such notice containing specific charges of neglect, as shown by the appended copy.* The replication further alleged that

* Executive Office, Lansing, February 6, 1894. To John W. Jochim, Secretary of State, Joseph F. Hambitzer, State Treasurer, and John G. Berry, Commissioner of the State Land Office, Composing the Board of State Canvassers—Gentlemen: Public charges have been made, and have come to my knowledge, that gross errors were made in the canvass of the returns of votes given in the various counties at the election held in this state on the first Monday in April, A. D. 1893, for and against the adoption of "Joint Resolution No. 10, approved March 9, 1893, entitled 'Joint resolution proposing an amendment to section one (1), article nine (9), of the Constitution of this state, relative to the salaries of state officers,' " by which it was made to appear that such amendment to the Constitution had been ratified and approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, whereas, it is alleged that, by a true and correct canvass of the returns of such votes, the said amendment was defeated. Under the power granted and duty imposed upon me, as governor of this state, by section eight (8) of article twelve (12) of the Constitution, it became necessary to inquire into the administration and condition of your several offices, and especially into the manner in which you have, severally and collectively, performed the duties of the board of state canvassers, of which you are ex officio members, for the purpose of determining whether you have been guilty of gross neglect of duty in the matter of canvassing the said returns. You are therefore severally cited and required to appear before me, at the executive office in the city of Lansing, on the

the respondent appeared by counsel before relator, and moved to vacate the notice and dismiss the charges, for reasons mentioned therein;* that the motion was denied; that evidence was introduced in support of the information, as follows: (1) The returns from the several counties showing the vote upon said amendment. (2) The canvass of said returns purporting to have been made by respondent and other members of the board of state canvassers upon May 16, 1893, from which it appears that the said amendment was carried by a majority of 1,821 votes. (3) The canvass of said returns subsequently made by said officers, under the order of the supreme court, showing the defeat of said amendment by 11,455 votes. (4) Vouchers showing the amounts paid to respondent and other members of said board for their expenses in making said canvasses. (5) A stipulation by counsel that a short time prior to May 16, 1893, respondent was notified by his clerks that a tabulated statement showing the votes for and against said amendment had been prepared, and was ready to be signed by the members of the state board of canvassers; that thereupon respondent notified the other members of said board by telegram, in response to which they came to Lansing, and signed said tabulated statement prepared by their clerks; that neither of them compared or examined the returns from any county, nor did they compare them with the tabulated statement aforesaid; that they relied upon what their clerks stated about such statement being correct, and, believing it to be so, signed it; and that was all that they had to do with it. The replication further stated that no evidence was offered upon the part of respondent; that an order adjudging respondent guilty, and removing him from his said office, was thereupon made, and duly served upon said respondent, upon the 19th day of February, 1893. As stated, a demurrer to this replication was filed.

The important questions presented by this record are (1) the power of the governor to remove respondent; (2) the sufficiency of the cause alleged. The jurisdiction of this court to review or pass upon the official acts of a co-ordinate branch of government was not discussed. It was referred to in the brief of counsel for the relator, with an express disavowal of a desire to raise the question. We shall therefore omit a discussion of that subject.

Whatever authority the governor has to remove respondent must be found in section 8 of article 12 of the Constitution, which reads as follows: "The governor shall have power and it shall be his duty, except at such time as the legislature may be in session, to examine into the condition and administration of any public office, and the acts of any public officer, elective or appointed, to remove from office for gross neglect of duty, or for corrupt conduct in office, or any other mis-fifteenth day of February, 1894, at one o'clock in the afternoon, then and there to answer to the following specific charges, viz.: (1) That you, the said John W. Jochim, secretary of state, Joseph F. Hamblitzer, state treasurer, and John G. Berry, commissioner of the state land office, who are the board of state canvassers, under the constitution and laws of this state, were, each and every one of you, guilty of gross neglect of duty, in this: that you did not, nor did either of you, examine the statements or returns of votes from the several counties, filed in the office of the secretary of state, showing the number of votes cast for and against said proposed amendment to the constitution relative to the salaries of state officers, by the electors in this state at the election in April, 1893. (2) That you were severally guilty of gross neglect of duty in this: that you did not, nor did either of you, ascertain and determine the result of such vote, nor perform with due and proper care the duties relating to canvassing the statements and returns from the several counties of the votes given at such election for and against said proposed amendment to the constitution, required of and imposed upon you as members of said board of state canvassers, by the constitution and laws of this state. (3) That you were severally guilty of gross neglect of duty, in this: that you made, and suffered to be made, gross errors in the canvass of the statements and returns filed in the office of the secretary of state of the votes given in the several counties at said election in April, 1893, for and against said proposed amendment to the constitution, by which it was falsely made to appear that such proposed amendment had been approved and ratified by a majority of the electors voting thereon, whereas, by a true and correct canvass of the said statements and returns, the said proposed amendment was defeated. (4) You are further required, then and there, to show cause why you, and each of you, should not be removed from office for gross neglect of duty. John T. Rich, Governor.

* Reasons. (1) The governor has no power, under section eight of article twelve, or any other provisions of the Constitution, to remove the respondents, or either of them, from their respective offices, for any misconduct on their part, or on the part of either of them, as members of the board of state canvassers. (2) The power of the governor under section eight, article twelve, of the Constitution, is confined to the official misconduct of the officers therein named, in the performance of the duties appertaining to each of said officers, separately and severally considered; and it does not include such duties as are performed by such officers jointly with others, as members of constitutional or statutory bodies or boards. (3) The house of representatives, under sections 1, 2, and 3, article 12, of the Constitution, has the sole power to direct an impeachment of these respondents for misconduct in the performance of their duties when acting as a board of state canvassers, and the senate has exclusive jurisdiction to try any such impeachment. (4) The charges set forth in the notice served upon these respondents are wholly insufficient, and factually defective, for the reason that it is not alleged therein that the neglect of these respondents, or any of them, was intentional, or that they, or either of them, have knowingly and designedly neglected any official duty, or that they, or either of them, have neglected to perform any duty with an evil intent, or for any improper, illegal, or culpable purpose. (5) The charges contained in said notice do not make or state a case of gross neglect of duty, within the meaning of section eight, article twelve, of the Constitution; and the governor, sitting as a court of impeachment, has no jurisdiction or power to render judgment or removal thereon. (6) The notice served on respondents is void because it is not "In the name of the people of the state of Michigan," as required by section thirty-five of article six of the Constitution, and it is not authenticated by the great seal of the state, as required by section eighteen of article five of the Constitution. (7) The board of state canvassers is created by the constitution of this state, and, in the performance of their duties and functions, the members of said board, in the absence of conduct on their part amounting to a criminal offense, are not subject to the control or interference of the governor of the state, or of any other branch or department of the government; and, excepting the power of the legislature to determine any cause where the decision of the state board of canvassers is contested, they are answerable or amenable only to the people of the state, by whom they were elected to their respective offices.

feassance or malfeasance therein, either of the following state officers, to wit: The attorney-general, state treasurer, commissioner of land office, secretary of state, auditor general, superintendent of public instruction, or members of the state board of education, or any other officer of the state, except legislative and judicial, elective or appointed, and to appoint a successor for the remainder of their respective unexpired terms of office, and report the causes of such removal to the legislature at its next session." It is contended that this section is in violation of the amendment of the Constitution of the United States which provides that "no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." U. S. Const. Amend. 14, § 1. As the constitution of this state contains the same provision (sec. 82, art. 6), no new right was conferred upon officeholders, nor was any modification of the power of the governor to remove officers under section 8, article 12, consequent upon the adoption of the 14th Amendment. Any question that can now be raised upon the latter could have been raised under the former at any time since section 8, article 12, was adopted; and all decisions upon section 82, article 6, are applicable to this provision of the 14th Amendment, unless in contravention of federal decisions thereon. To sustain this point it must appear (1) that the removal from office is a deprivation of the respondent of his property; and (2) that it was sought to be accomplished without due process of law. A public office cannot be called "property," within the meaning of these constitutional provisions. If it could be, it would follow that every public officer, no matter how insignificant the office, would have a vested right to hold his office until the expiration of the term. Public officers are created for the purposes of government. They are delegations of portions of the sovereign power for the welfare of the public. They are not the subjects of contract, but they are agencies for the state, revocable at pleasure by the authority creating them, unless such authority be limited by the power which conferred it. In the case of Wyandotte v. Drennan, 46 Mich. 480, Mr. Justice Cooley, in giving the opinion of the court, said: "It is claimed, however, that, when the salary is fixed at the time when the office is accepted, the acceptance is presumed to have the salary in view, and a contract is thereby effected between the officer and the city, which neither can change without the consent of the other. This is a position that has frequently been taken, and almost as often overruled. Nothing seems better settled than that an appointment or election to a public office does not establish contract relations between the person appointed or elected and the public. The leading case of Butler v. Pennsylvania, 51 U. S. 10 How. 402, 18 L. ed. 472, has been universally regarded as having settled that question, and it has been followed by decisions in numerous cases. The salary or other compensation is therefore at the discretion of the legislative authority of the state, or of such other authority as the legislature has seen fit to intrust it to. This was indirectly recognized in People v. Detroit, 38 Mich. 636,—a case which is in point here. It is said on behalf of the defendant in error that the principle above stated rests on the right of the officer to resign and give up his office at any time; and it is further said that this right did not exist in the case of the officer, because he could only resign to the common council,—the very body that reduced the salary,—and the council might keep him in by refusing to accept his resignation. Whether the council could in this way compel the recorder to continue in the performance of his duties, we do not care to consider in this case, because we think the legislative authority over the subject does not depend upon the existence or nonexistence of any such power. Officers are created for the public good, at the will of the legislative power, with such powers, privileges, and emoluments attached as are believed to be necessary or important to make them accomplish the purposes designed. But, except as it may be restrained by the constitution, the legislature has the same inherent authority to modify or abolish that it has to create; and it will exercise it with the like considerations in view. Whoever accepts a public office must accept it with this principle of constitutional law in view; and, if his compensation is reduced below what seems to him reasonable, it may be a hardship, but it is not a legal wrong. The legislative power is ample, and he is supposed to know when he takes the office that it is liable to be exercised." The legislature may remove officers, not only by abolishing the office, but by an act declaring it vacant, as was done by Act 140, § 18, of the Laws of 1891. People v. Langdon, 40 Mich. 678; Wayne County Auditors v. Benoit, 20 Mich. 184. And it may lodge the power to remove from statutory offices in boards or other officers, subject to statutory regulations. And, while it cannot remove incumbents of constitutional offices, it is not because of an inherent difference in the qualities of the office, but because the power to remove is limited to the power that creates. The constitutional officer is an agent of government. There is the same lack of the ingredients of contract, and the same power to abolish the office or remove the officer by amendment of the constitution. Augusta v. Sweeney, 44 Ga. 468, 9 Am. Rep. 172; Butler v. Pennsylvania, 51 U. S. 10 How. 414, 18 L. ed. 477. The fact that some cases hold that removals from office cannot, in some instances, be made, except upon cause shown, upon notice, specific charges, and after a hearing in its nature judicial, does not militate against this doctrine. These cases simply hold that removals are limited by the power of the people or legislature, through the constitution or statute, not that a vested property right is involved in the holding of office, or that removal is beyond the power which creates the office and the officer. Nor does it follow that removal from office is a deprivation of the officer of property, because it must be for cause, upon specific charges, and after an opportunity to be heard. Many cases may be found that speak of the disgrace of removals, and the right to hold an office under election. Of these the case of Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Mon. 672, perhaps, goes the furthest. The case of Dullam v. Willson, 58 Mich. 393, 51 Am. Rep. 128, discusses section 8, article 12, holding that it was not designed to confer upon the governor a power to remove without charges and hearing; but it recognizes the power of the people over public offices, and sustains the authority of the governor, under this section, to remove for cause. Mr. Justice Champlin says: "That under the amendment the governor was vested with the power of determining whether the specified causes exist, appears to me too plain for serious contradiction. I fully concur in the views expressed upon this point by the learned counsel for the respondent (Judge Christlancy), wherein he says: 'It was competent, by constitutional amendment, to authorize him to exercise such judicial power. And while this amendment gives the power of removal only for the causes which it specifies (which, though similar in character, are not identical with those specified in the statute), and the question of the officer's guilt is one judicial in its nature, yet the amendment imposes a duty and confers upon the governor the power "to examine into the condition and administration of the office and public acts of the officers" to which it applies, and to remove them from office for the causes there enumerated; thus, in effect, giving him the right to try the question whether the officer is guilty or not, and to remove him from his office.' The counsel for the respondent, while granting this, insist that such removal cannot be made without charges, notice, and an opportunity for defense, and this I consider the important question in the case. Unless it is the manifest intention of the section under consideration that the proceedings should be ex parte as well as summary, a removal without charges, notice, and opportunity for defense, cannot be upheld." Again, as all statutory offices are taken subject to legislative action, so all constitutional offices are taken subject to constitutional changes, and both are upon the terms and subject to the conditions existing by law. One of the constitutional conditions upon which the respondent took his office was that he would be subject to removal by the governor, under article 12, section 8. Frey v. Michie, 63 Mich. 328; Fuller v. Ellis, 98 Mich. 96.

2. But conceding, for the argument, that the office is a vested property right, what is the "due process of law" to which the respondent is entitled, under the constitutions of this state and the United States? Counsel contend that it can mean nothing less than a trial by the constitutional judiciary, and perhaps a jury. If so, it must be because the constitutional office differs from the statutory office, as several cases hold that removals may be made without the intervention of courts. Dullam v. Willson, supra; People v. Stuart, 74 Mich. 415; Wellman v. Detroit Board of Metropolitan Police, 84 Mich. 558, 91 Mich. 427; Fuller v. Ellis, supra. But this language of the constitutions means less than that. The words "due process of law," as used in the constitution (art. 6, § 32), mean the law of the land, by which are to be understood laws which are general in their operation, and not special acts of legislation passed to affect the rights of particular individuals against their will, and in a way in which the same rights of other persons are not affected by existing law. Sears v. Cuttrell, 5 Mich. 251. "Due process is not necessarily judicial process. Administrative process, which has been regarded as necessary in government, and sanctioned by long usage, is as much due process as any other." Weimer v. Bunbury, 30 Mich. 201. In this case the treasurer of the city of Niles did not collect and pay over to the county treasurer certain taxes, whereupon, in accordance with the statute, the county treasurer issued a warrant to the sheriff, commanding him to levy and collect the amount from the property of the city treasurer. It was held not to invade article 6, section 32. The federal decisions also qualify the claim of respondent's counsel. In Ex parte Wall, 107 U. S. 265, 27 L. ed. 552, it is said that: "What is due process of law in the states is regulated by the law of the state." "The requirement of the constitution that a person cannot be deprived of his property without due process of law does not imply that all trials in the state courts, affecting property, must be by jury." "Due process of law does not require a plenary suit and trial by jury in all cases where property or personal rights are involved. It is, in all cases, that kind of procedure which is suitable and proper to the nature of the case, and sanctioned by the established customs and usages of the courts." See also New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 33 L. ed. 269. In Den v. Hoboken Land & Imp. Co. 59 U. S. 18 How. 272, 15 L. ed. 372, Curtis, J., says: "For, though 'due process of law,' generally implies and includes actor, reus, judex, regular allegations, opportunity to answer, and a trial according to some settled course of judicial proceedings, yet this is not universally true." This case, by an exhaustive review of English and American authorities, vindicates summary methods on the part of government to obtain its due from a tax collector, analogous to the proceedings in the case of Weimer v. Bunbury. Certainly, the resort to similar proceedings by government to reclaim its offices may be equally necessary and justifiable. In a discussion of this subject in the case of Davidson v. New Orleans, 98 U. S. 103, 24 L. ed. 619, Mr. Justice Miller said: "The history of the English mode of dealing with public debtors, and enforcing its revenue laws, is reviewed, with the result of showing that the rights of the crown, in these cases, had always been enforced by summary remedies, without the aid of the usual course of judicial proceedings, though the latter were resorted to in the exchequer court when the officers of the government deemed it advisable. And it was held that such a course was 'due process of law,' within the meaning of that phrase, as derived from our ancestors, and found in our constitution. It is not a little remarkable that while this provision has been in the Constitution of the United States, as a restraint upon the authority of the federal government, for nearly a century, and while, during all that time, the manner in which the powers of that government have been exercised has been watched with jealousy, and subject to the most rigid criticism in all its branches, this special limitation upon its powers has rarely been invoked in the judicial forum or the more enlarged theater of public discussion. But while it has been a part of the Constitution, as a restraint upon the power of the states, only a few years, the docket of this court is crowded with cases in which we are asked to hold that state courts and state legislatures have deprived their own citizens of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. There is here abundant evidence that there exists some strange misconception of the scope of this provision, as found in the 14th Amendment. In fact, it would seem from the character of many of the cases before us, and the arguments made in them, that the clause under consideration is looked upon as a means of bringing to the test of the decision of this court the abstract opinions of every unsuccessful litigant in a state court, of the justice of the decision against him, and of the merits of the legislation on which such a decision may be founded." See also Springer v. United States, 102 U. S. 586, 26 L. ed. 253; Hilton v. Merritt, 110 U. S. 97, 28 L. ed. 83; Campbell v. Holt, 115 U. S. 620, 29 L. ed. 483; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 L. ed. 463; Provident Inst. for Savings v. Jersey City, 118 U. S. 506, 28 L. ed. 1102; Garrison v. New York, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 196, 22 L. ed. 612.

From these authorities, it appears that the state is not so bound by the term "due process of law," in the constitutions, that it is impossible for it to invest its agents with its offices without subjecting itself to the delays and uncertainties of strict judicial action in cases of emergency. While in many cases (and, under the decision in the case of Dullam v. Willson, perhaps in this) the power of removal is a limited and restricted one, to be exercised along given lines, and with prescribed formalities, as already stated, it is not by reason of an inherent right of property in the officer, bringing him within the protection of the 14th Amendment, but because of the limitations of the law. The Michigan cases already cited settle for this state the authority of the governor, under the Constitution.

It is said, however, that the governor, in this case, made his own charges and employed his own counsel, and is therefore to sit as judge in his own case. One of the duties of the governor, under section 8, is to investigate the state offices. He is given inquisitorial power, that he may ascertain their condition, for the public welfare. No other means is provided for acquiring the necessary information. If he discovers irregularities of any particular character, it is his duty to remove the officer, and supply his place by appointment, reporting his action to the legislature at the next session. Dullam v. Willson is authority for the proposition that the incumbent is entitled to notice of the charge, and an opportunity to be heard in his defense. This necessarily implies that the governor's action is, in a sense, judicial. But it does not follow that the investigation must be made by some other person or officer, who must make complaint to the governor; that the complainant must procure counsel; or that the governor is necessarily interested, and thereby disqualified from hearing and determining, because he performs the other duties which are specifically imposed upon him by this section of the Constitution. It is no uncommon thing for judges to order arrests and prosecution for acts committed in their presence, such as contempts, perjury, and perhaps other offenses, and they are not thereby disqualified. There is nothing in the record to show any interest upon the part of the governor, further than to ascertain the condition of the office, and to act upon the information obtained as the Constitution requires. It is the duty of the governor to investigate, using all lawful means to go to the bottom of any real or supposed irregularity. To that end, he may use clerks and expert accountants, if necessary,—and it is fair to presume that the state would recognize the expenses as legitimate obligations. The law does not require a complainant, nor prevent the governor from committing the interests of the state to competent lawyers, official or otherwise. Finally, the governor acts judicially upon the accumulated evidence, and such explanations by way of defense as the respondent may offer. In this respect his action is similar to that discussed in Fuller v. Ellis, which discussion it is unnecessary to repeat.

We come next to the charges. It is contended that they are insufficient, because the act is not alleged to have been intentional, and because it was not gross neglect to permit an erroneous canvass by clerks; further, that the act was not within the provision of section 8, because it was an act done as a member of the board of canvassers, and not as secretary of state, and that the only remedy was by impeachment by the legislature. To these is impliedly added, and strenuously argued, that the legislature could not impeach for gross neglect, and that, therefore, the governor could not remove for such neglect. It is true that before the defalcation of the state treasurer, in 1860, the governor could not remove a constitutional officer, and that a defrauding treasurer had the lawful authority to continue to receive the public funds until the legislature should convene, and proceed by impeachment to secure his removal. Doubtless, this condition of affairs, as counsel asserts, led to the adoption of the Amendment of 1862, viz., article 12, section 8. It is also true that section 1, article 12, gives to the legislature the sole power to impeach civil officers for corrupt conduct in office, or for crimes and misdemeanors. If no further power of impeachment existed than as mentioned in section 1, it must be conceded to follow that the governor was granted a broader power of removal than the legislature had by way of impeachment. But the people had the undoubted power to authorize removals by the governor for causes not theretofore mentioned as a ground for impeachment. They certainly made it his duty to remove for gross neglect, and we cannot accept the proposition that the amendment was not intended to include that which it especially mentions in terms unmistakable to the common understanding. Nor do we think there is any merit in the point that the duty of canvassing the returns is not the official duty of the secretary of state. By virtue of his office, he is one of three who constitute a board. Without his office, he could not act, and we think the part performed by him is an official act of the secretary of state.

It remains to discuss the character of the charges made. The only duties of the board of state canvassers are to canvass the returns, and determine and certify the result of elections. Theirs is the culminating act of the army of persons who have had to do with the receiving and counting, recording and transmitting, the votes which signify the will of the people. Section 202 of Howell's Statutes makes it the duty of these officers to attend, and form the board of state canvassers. Their duties are specifically pointed out. The times when they are to meet are provided by law. No provision is made for deputies or clerks, but all go to show that this important duty is to be performed by them in person, as the certificate signed by them asserts. It is not confided to inferior officials, but to three of the state officers of greatest dignity and importance. It appears to have been the design of the lawmakers to place the votes of the people in the keeping of the most responsible officers of the state; and no argument ought to be necessary to show that it was not expected that the returns would, upon their arrival, be turned over to an irresponsible clerk in the secretary's office, having no official relation to the canvass, whose tabulation should be the canvass, and that the mere signing of their three names to his production should constitute a full compliance on the part of these officers with the law prescribing the duties of the state canvassers. Section 208 requires an examination by the board of the several statements of the votes, and that they make a statement of the whole number of votes cast for each office, while section 209 makes it their duty to certify such statement to be correct. A mere failure to certify could be called "neglect." What shall be said of it when the certificate is made without knowledge of, or any attempt to ascertain the fact? An officer is elected for two years. Who shall count and keep the money of the state, or keep its great seal, for a couple of years, is not a matter of vital importance; but an amendment of the constitution changes, perhaps for all time, the fundamental law, releasing or reclaiming by the people some right or power over the legislature and officers, the consequence of which may be stupendous. In the present instance, it was a matter of money,—several thousand dollars a year; and, while many may feel that the defeat of this amendment was unfortunate, it is vastly more unfortunate to have the will of the people thwarted, though it be the result of carelessness only, or neglect on the part of the board to perform the only duty imposed upon them by law. Looking at the circumstances from his official standpoint, the governor may well have said this, though not willful, was only possible by reason of the grossest neglect of official duty. It certainly was some one's duty to move at once with a view to the correction of the error, and the prevention of its recurrence. While there is an inclination upon the part of the average American to accept good intentions as an excuse for mistakes, it is not for the general public good that responsible public offices shall be confided to, or remain in, the custody of those whose duties and responsibilities rest so lightly upon them as to permit the public interests to be injured or endangered through neglect; and when such neglect, from the gravity of the case, or the frequency of the instances, becomes so serious in its character as to endanger or threaten the public welfare, it is gross, within the meaning of the law, and justifies the interference of the executive, upon whom is placed, by this amendment, the responsibility of keeping the affairs of state in a proper condition. We cannot think that the term "gross neglect" means only intentional official wrongdoing. Such acts would hardly be described by the word "neglect."

23 L. R. A.

It is said that this section confides great power to the governor. This is true, but the governorship is an exalted office,—one which ought to carry with it a presumption of integrity of character and breadth of mind commensurate to its importance. It would be a sad commentary upon free government if it were otherwise. But the powers of the governor are carefully restricted, and there is no occasion to pursue the illusive phantoms of possibility. When abuses arise, they will doubtless be speedily and effectively met.

It remains to notice the sixth objection raised. It is as follows: "The notice served on respondents is void because it is not 'in the name of the people of the state of Michigan,' as required by section 85 of article 6 of the Constitution, and it is not authenticated by the great seal of the state, as required by section 18 of article 5 of the Constitution." It is enough to say that the provision (sec. 85, art. 6) applies to the judicial department only, while the other provision (sec. 18) certainly ought not to apply to a case where the governor is citing the custodian of the great seal before him upon charges. But such citation is not such an official act as needs authentication. It has no importance, and is of no personal interest to others than those cited, and falls within the multitude of daily acts, which, while official in a sense, do not require authentication of the great seal.

The demurrer must be overruled, and judgment of ouster entered against the respondent.

The other Justices concurred.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT

Michael J. DRUMMOND

v.

Marie L. CRANE et al., Admsrs. of Cyrus R. Crane, Deceased.

(189 Mass. 577.)

1. An explicit agreement to take and pay for a certain quantity of water per annum for ten years is not terminated by the death of the promisor, although he wanted the water, as the other party knew, for use in a mill held under a lease, and the lease was rightfully terminated by the lessor after his death,—especially where the contract was procured by the other party as a basis for making an investment in the waterworks.
2. The fact that an express contract contemplates another more formal contract with a corporation, in which the contractee is largely interested, does not affect its binding powers.

3. The measure of damages recoverable on a contract by the promisee is not affected by the fact that it was for the benefit of a corporation of which he is a stockholder.

4. A contract to take a supply of water for a term of years, though not specifying any building to which it should be supplied, does not require a personal taking of the water for the whole period, but is satisfied by a taking by other parties at the place contemplated by the parties to the contract.

(October 20, 1898.)

REPORT by the Superior Court for Berkshire County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged breach of a contract, after findings by the court in favor of plaintiff. Judgment on the findings.

The contract on which the action was founded is set out in the opinion. The plain-

NOTE.—Effect on contract of the death of a party thereto.

Generally.

Generally the death of a party to a contract does not extinguish the contract if it is capable of being completed by the personal representatives and is not one of a personal nature. Morgan v. Hovey, 6 Hurlst. & N. 205; Wills v. Murray, 4 Exch. 843, 19 L. J. Exch. 209; Nield v. Smith, 14 Ves. Jr. 491; Church v. King, 2 Myl. & C. 230; McLaughlin v. McLaughlin, 145 Pa. 582; Jacobson v. La Grange, 8 Johns. 199; Cortelyou v. Lansing, 2 Cal. Cas. 200; Fidelity Title & T. Co. v. Weitzel, 152 Pa. 498.

And a contract in settlement of a bastardy proceeding is not extinguished by the death of the promisor. Stumpff's App. 116 Pa. 83.

A claim for damages for the breach of a contract by the testator is not extinguished by his death. Fowler v. Kelly, 8 W. Va. 71.

But a subscription contract is revoked by the death of the promisor, before it has been accepted and acted upon. Wallace v. Townsend, 45 Ohio St. 337, 54 Am. Rep. 629; Grand Lodge L. O. G. T. v. Farnham, 70 Cal. 158; Foust v. Board of Publication, 8 Lea. 552; Pratt v. Trustees of Baptist Soc. of Elgin, 98 Ill. 475, 34 Am. Rep. 187; Heifenstein's Estate, 77 Pa. 322, 18 Am. Rep. 449.

And under a Pennsylvania Act of 1855 rendering invalid a conveyance to a charity within one month after the death of the alienor, unless made for a valuable consideration, a charitable subscription is invalid if the promisor dies within one month after date. Reimensnyder v. Gans, 110 Pa. 17.

Generally a contract to marry is extinguished by the death of the promisor. Weeks v. Mays, 37 Tenn. 442; Wade v. Kalbfleisch, 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. 104; Stebbins v. Palmer, 1 Pick. 71, 11 Am. Dec. 146; Lattimore v. Simmons, 18 Serg. & R. 183; Hayden v. Vreeland, 37 N. J. L. 372, 18 Am. Rep. 723.

And is extinguished by the death of the promisor where no special damage is alleged. Chamberlain v. Williamson, 2 Maule & S. 408; Grubb v. Sult, 33 Grant. 208, 34 Am. Rep. 768.

But in Shuler v. Millsaps, 71 N. C. 297, under N. C. Const., art. 10, § 6, providing that the personal property of a female is her sole and separate estate, and Bat. Rev., chap. 17, providing that no action shall abate by the death of a party, it was held that the death of the promisor did not extinguish the liability for a breach of a promise to marry.

And the same was held in Allen v. Baker, 86 N. C. 91, 41 Am. Rep. 144.

23 L. R. A.

A contract to pay a party a certain amount if he would marry the promisor's cousin is not extinguished by the death of the promisor. Berisford v. Woodroff, Cro. Jac. 404.

Generally a personal representative may perform a contract made by the decedent, or release the other party, subject to the approval of the court. Gray v. Hawkins, 8 Ohio St. 449, 72 Am. Dec. 600; Dougherty v. Stephenson, 20 Pa. 210.

But a contract by adjoining owners to repair a partition fence is extinguished by the death of one of them. Bland v. Umstead, 23 Pa. 316.

And a contract for an uncertain time to support a person whom the promisor is not bound to support, is extinguished by the death of the promisor. Browne v. McDonald, 129 Mass. 66.

Equity will relieve the creditors and enforce the original agreement against the testator's estate where it is insolvent and an agreement is made to take collateral security on property, and by mistake a power of attorney only is taken and the party dies. Hunt v. Rousemanier, 2 Mason, 244.

An agreement executed at the request of G to deliver to him obligations of a company, on payment of certain sums not accepted or acted upon by G until after the insolvency and death of one of the signers, is not binding on the estate of such signer. Paúze v. Senécal, Mont. L. Rep. 5 Q. B. 461.

And before a pledgor is entitled to the collateral where the creditor has died, he must pay the debt. Henry v. Eddy, 34 Ill. 508.

Landlord and tenant.

An ordinary contract of a lease is not such a personal contract as is extinguished by the death of the lessor or lessee. Coppel's Estate, 4 Phila. 878; Keating v. Condon, 68 Pa. 75; Walker's Estate, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 515; Alsop v. Banks, 18 L. R. A. 598, 66 Miss. 664; Traylor v. Cabanne, 8 Mo. App. 131; Enys v. Donnithorne, 2 Burr. 1196; Becker v. Walworth, 45 Ohio St. 169.

A lease became absolute on the death of the lessor, who reserved the right to redeem the premises from the lease, during the term, but died before the privilege was exercised. Trammell v. Craddock (Ala.) Nov. 7, 1898.

A tenancy from year to year is considered assets and devolves to the executors or administrators. James v. Dean, 15 Ves. Jr. 241; Doe v. Porter, 8 T. R. 18; Wiley's App. 8 Watts & S. 244.

The same was held in Hunter v. Frost, 47 Minn. 1, tiff induced by such contract accepted the undertaking and the Housatonic Water Company was organized and a contract entered into between plaintiff and the company for the construction of its works. The work was completed and the company issued to the plaintiff the stock and bonds which it agreed to pay for his labor and has become able and ready to deliver to defendants' intestate the water for which the contract provided. After the death of the intestate his administrators refused to comply with the contract, in consequence of which refusal this action was brought. It appeared in evidence that the occupants of some of decedent's tenant houses took water and also that the lessee of the Monument Mills took some water. The court ruled that the contract did not terminate by the death of the intestate, but was binding on his legal representatives; that the rule of damages for its breach was the present value of each yearly payment due at the end of the year in which, by the agreement, it was to be earned, after deducting from the same the cost of delivering the water for that year, upon the basis and terms of the agreement; and that from such yearly payments defendants had a right to have deducted, in mitigation of damages, such sums as the water company had received during the year, or ought to have received, for water furnished by it for use upon the premises occupied by decedent at the time of his death, and thereafter such further sums as said corporation may hereafter receive for such water during the contract period.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Pingree, Dawes, Jr., & Burke, for plaintiff:

The agreement is enforceable against the defendant administrators, and they are liable in damages for its breach.

On June 19 or at the latest June 21, the time and is not terminated by the death of either party, but was not the question involved in this case.

A right of renewal or right to a lease is not extinguished by the death of either party. Macartney v. Blundell, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 118; Hyde v. Skinner, 2 P. Wms. 186; Stephens v. Hotham, 1 Kay & J. 571, 1 Jur. N. S. 842, 24 L. J. Ch. 666; Phillips v. Evrard, 5 Sim. 102.

And in Copeland v. Stephens, 1 Barn. & Ald. 593, it was said that the death of the lessor in a lease for years does not prevent the lessee from perfecting it by an entry into the land, but this was not the question involved in this case.

These cases fully sustain the position taken in the main case which holds that a lease of water for a mill is not terminated by the death of the lessor.

A contract by which the lessee was to furnish labor and to have one half the profits of the farm for a term of years, is not terminated by the death of the lessor. Lookart v. Forsythe, 49 Mo. App. 654.

But where the lessee was to take care of the lessor during a term, for the use of a farm, the lessee is not liable for rent, after the death of the lessor. Re Williams' Estate, 1 Misc. 85.

Under Mass. Gen. Stat., chap. 99, the lessor is entitled to rent from the insolvent estate of a deceased lessee, but is not entitled to rent payable in the future. Deane v. Caldwell, 127 Mass. 242.

A tenancy at will is terminated by the death of either landlord or tenant. Ellis v. Paige, 1 Pick. 43; Cody v. Quarterman, 12 Ga. 386; Robie v. Smith, 21 Me. 114; Reed v. Reed, 48 Me. 388; Say v. Stoddard, 27 Ohio St. 478; Rising v. Stannard, 17 Mass. 284; Ferrin v. Kenney, 10 Met. 294; Cummings v. Watson, 149 Mass. 262.

A tenant at will retaining possession for fifty-seven years after the death of the lessor will be presumed to have acquired a title. Camp v. Camp, 5 Conn. 291, 13 Am. Dec. 60.

And after the death of a tenant holding under a term lease, made without authority, which is only a tenancy at will, the landlord cannot then change the liability of the estate of a tenant on notice of surrender, by ratifying the agent's authority. Loran's Estate, 10 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 554.

A covenant to repair or rebuild is not extinguished by the death of the covenantor or of the other party. Morly v. Polhill, 2 Vent. 66; Chamberlain v. Dunlop, 126 N. Y. 45; Lougher v. Williams, 2 Lev. 62; Tilney v. Norris, 1 Ld. Raym. 553.

And a tenant cannot claim compensation for repairs made after the death of a landlord. Wilson v. Edmonds, 24 N. H. 517.

33 L. R. A.

A lease made by a life tenant terminates at the death of such life tenant. Lowrey v. Reef, 1 Ind. App. 244; Page v. Wight, 14 Allen, 182; Hoagland v. Crum, 118 Ill. 365, 55 Am. Rep. 424; McIntyre v. Clark, 6 Misc. 377.

And a lease for the life of the lessor passes to the lessee's administrators at the death of lessee. Cunningham v. Baxley, 26 Ind. 367.

A covenant that the lessor shall pay quit-rent during the term does not extend to his executors, as it is a personal covenant, which dies with the person. Ingers v. Hyde, Dyer, 114a.

On the death of the lessee, a surrender by his administrators and an acceptance terminates the liability of the estate. Deane v. Caldwell, 127 Mass. 242; Greenleaf v. Allen, Id. 243.

And the question of forfeiture is for the jury where the administrator of the lessor declared a lease to be at an end on the nonpayment of rent, and the lessee abandoned the premises. Heinouer v. Jones, 150 Pa. 223.

An administrator is not liable for rent subsequent to the death of lessee, where land held under a perpetual lease goes to the heirs. Quain's App. 23 Pa. 510.

It was stated in Martin v. Black, 9 Paige, 641, 4 L. ed. 848, 38 Am. Dec. 574, that an executor cannot be charged as the assignee of a lease if he waives the term, the income of which is not sufficient to pay the rent, although the estate of the testator may be liable for the rent in the due course of administration, if the landlord refuses to enter; but this was not the question involved in that case.

The rule that a tenant cannot dispute his landlord's title is not affected by the death of the landlord, and the descent of the land to his heirs. Fowler v. Simpson, 79 Tex. 611.

Sale.

A contract to deliver a certain amount of goods, in a certain time, is not extinguished by the death of the purchaser. Smith v. Wilmington Coal Min. & Mfg. Co. 33 Ill. 498; Wentworth v. Cook, 10 Ad. & El. 42, 2 Perry & D. 251, 3 Jur. 840; Mactier v. Frith, 6 Wend. 103, 21 Am. Dec. 262.

Nor by the death of the vendor. Sabre v. Smith, 63 N. H. 663.

So where the vendor contracts that the purchase price should be paid to his wife, her right is not affected by his death. Scruggs v. Alexander, 13 Mo. 124.

But a sale of corn in the crib that is not measured or delivered until after the death of the vendor, had arrived for Mr. Crane to enter into the contract with the water company in fulfillment of his agreement with the plaintiff, but he died a month later without fulfilling his agreement.

"When a party," says Mr. Justice Metcalf in Hayden v. Bradley, 6 Gray, 426, 66 Am. Dec. 421 (quoting Lord Abinger) "stipulated to do a certain thing in a certain specific event which may become known to him, or with which he can make himself acquainted, he is not entitled to any notice unless he stipulates for it; but when he is to do a thing which lies within the peculiar knowledge of the opposite party, then notice ought to be given him."

See also Vyse v. Wakefield, 6 Mees. & W. 452; Punderson v. Shepherd, 8 Pick. 379; Dyer v. Rich, 1 Met. 180; Brckett v. Eoans, 1 Cush. 81; Johnston v. Glancy, 4 Blackf. 94, 28 Am. Dec. 47.

It would seem, therefore, that there was a breach of the agreement in the intestate's lifetime.

The paper writing declared upon was made, not as a contract with the Housatonic Water Company, that was to be made later, but this was with the plaintiff to cover from its date the intermediate time between the organization of the Housatonic Water Company and the construction of the aqueduct, and to be of force from its date and covering the time from the aqueduct company's organization until the making of the formal contract, and was the purpose and object both parties had in mind and their intent. It was senseless and valueless unless to be binding and operative upon the defendant's intestate from and after the organization of the Housatonic Water Company until the formal contract was made, because the intestate who was the promoter of the enterprise, in earnest of his confidence, had to bind himself to be a consumer, before he could induce the organization of the Housatonic Water Company into a corporation and the plaintiff to contract to build its aqueduct—which is brought about by this paper writing contain-does not pass title. Cleveland v. Williams, 20 Tex. 204, 94 Am. Dec. 274.

The liability of a warranty is not extinguished by the death of the vendee. Booth v. Northrop, 27 Conn. 323.

So the death of a purchaser before a foreclosure sale was consummated, does not extinguish the contract made by the bidder. Denton v. Sanford, 103 N. Y. 607.

Upon the death of a purchaser of realty before payment, his heirs may require the payments to be made out of the personalty. Chamberlain v. Dunlop, 126 N. Y. 46.

A contract for heating apparatus constructed mostly after the death of the purchaser, is not extinguished by his death. McKeown v. Harvey, 40 Mich. 228.

But a contract not to carry on a trade is not binding on the executors of the vendor. Cooke v. Colcraft, 2 W. Bl. 858, 3 Wils. 880.

Sections 4398, 4399, Ark. Mansfield's Dig., providing that in an action to collect a debt for personalty an order may be had for the sheriff to hold it, subject to the order of the court, does not apply where the vendee has died. Blass v. Hood, 57 Ark. 13.

A contract to pay for all the hemp that can be raised by a certain farmer in six years on certain land "of his own raising," ceases on the death of the farmer. Shultz v. Johnson, 5 B. Mon. 500.

And a contract by a lumber manufacturer to sell all the lumber sawed at his mill for five years, to average a certain amount per year, is extinguished by the death of either party. Dickinson v. Calahan, 19 Pa. 227.

In Fuller v. Dempster (Pa.) Nov. 11, 1887, an administrator was allowed to exercise the option of rescission of purchase of mine reserved in contract of sale to his testator.

For other decisions on sale, see subhead, Agency.

Guaranty.

Generally the liability of a guarantor on a direct contract of a guaranty, is not extinguished by his death, where advances are made in good faith. Hightower v. Moore, 46 Ala. 387; Janin v. Browne, 59 Cal. 37.

The liability of one of two joint and several guarantors is not extinguished by the death of the guarantor. Fennell v. McGuire, 21 U. C. C. P. 124; Carter v. Hampton, 77 Va. 681.

So where the guaranty is to remain in force until revoked by a notice, it is not terminated by the 23 L. R. A.

death of the guarantor. Knotts v. Butler, 10 Rich. Eq. 143; Bradbury v. Morgan, 1 Hurlst. & C. 249, 8 Jur. N. S. 218, 31 L. J. Exch. 423, 3 L. T. N. S. 104; Menard v. Soudder, 7 La. Ann. 335, 55 Am. Dec. 610.

And under a guaranty for admission at Lloyds, as an underwriter broker "hold myself responsible for all his engagements in that capacity," is not extinguished by the death of the guarantor. Lloyds v. Harper, L. R. 16 Ch. Div. 290-314, 50 L. J. C. H. 140, 43 L. T. N. S. 481, 29 Week. Rep. 452.

The liability of a guarantor on bonds given in return for public aid is not extinguished by the death of the guarantor. Richardson v. Draper, 37 N. Y. 337.

But a general guarantee of payment by another, of liability to be created in the future, terminates on the death of the guarantor. Hyland v. Habich, 6 L. R. A. 333, 150 Mass. 112; Jordon v. Dobbins, 129 Mass. 163, 23 Am. Rep. 306.

And the guaranty to continue in force until after six months' notice in writing, is determined by the death of the guarantor. Harris v. Fawcett, L. R. 8 Ch. App. Cas. 366, 42 L. J. Ch. 502, 29 L. T. N. S. 84, 21 Week. Rep. 742, affirming L. R. 15 Eq. Cas. 311, 23 L. T. N. S. 132, 21 Week. Rep. 504.

The guaranty is released by the bank renewing a note, which fell due after the death of the guarantor. National Eagle Bank v. Hunt, 16 R. I. 148.

Or by extending the time of payment after the guarantor's death. Home National Bank of Chicago v. Waterman, 30 Ill. App. 535.

Agency.

Generally the power and authority of an agent to contract for or in behalf of his principal, is terminated by the death of the principal.

A contract authorizing a purchase or sale between a principal and agent is usually terminated by the death of either party. Adrianse v. Rutherford, 57 Mich. 170; Howe Sewing Mach. Co. v. Roenesteel, 24 Fed. Rep. 583; Watson v. King, 4 Campb. 272, 1 Stark. 121; Rigs v. Cage, 2 Humph. 350, 37 Am. Dec. 559; Shiff v. Lesseps' Succession, 22 La. Ann. 138; McDonald v. Black, 20 Ohio, 185; Campanari v. Woodburn, 15 C. B. 400, 24 L. J. C. P. 13, 3 C. L. Rep. 140, 1 Jur. N. S. 17.

But where the power to make a sale or transfer is coupled with an interest in the agent, it is not invalidated by the death of the principal. Knapp v. Alvord, 10 Paige, 205, 5 L. ed. 1108, 40 Am. Dec. 241; Merry v. Lynch, 66 Me. 94; White v. Allen, 133 Mass. 428; Wilson v. Stewart, 5 Pa. L. J. 450;

ing an agreement for the formal contract with the Housatonic Water Company when organized—which has never been performed.

It was an agreement which survived, and the defendants are liable in damages for its breach.

Kernochan v. Murray, 2 L. R. A. 183, 111 N. Y. 808; 2 Parsons, Cont. 5th ed. 550, 581; Bradbury v. Morgan, 1 Hurlst. & C. *255; Hyee v. Skinner, 2 P. Wms. *197; Siboni v. Kirkman, 1 Mees. & W. 428; 8 Comyn, Dig. Covenant C. 1. See also Martin v. Hunt, 1 Allen, 418; Hawkins v. Ball, 18 B. Mon. 816, 68 Am. Dec. 755, note; Chamberlain v. Dunlop, 126 N. Y. 45.

The executors are responsible on all the contracts of the testator broken in his lifetime, and there is only one exception with regard to their liability for contracts broken after his death; that is this, that they are not liable in those cases where personal skill or taste is required.

Siboni v. Kirkman, supra; 2 Parsons, Cont. 5th ed. 553; Bradbury v. Morgan, supra; 2 Wms. Exrs. *1467; Stumpff's App. 116 Pa. 33; Chitty, Cont. 10th Am. ed. 101; Chamberlain v. Dunlop, supra; Janin v. Browne, 59 Cal. 87.

This is not an agreement calling for personal skill or taste, and is not within exception to the general rule that parties to a contract bind their personal representatives in the absence of express words to the contrary.

Wentworth v. Cock, 10 Ad. & El. 42; White v. Allen, 183 Mass. 428; Martin v. Hunt, and Chamberlain v. Dunlop, supra; Billings's App. 106 Pa. 558.

The executors of every person are implied in himself; and bound without naming.

Hyde v. Skinner, supra.

The part Mr. Crane was to perform called for no exercise of personal skill or taste; it did not call even for anything analogous to the sawing of lumber or the cutting of timber, as in Dickinson v. Calahan, 19 Pa. 227, and Bil-

Gordon v. Stubbs, 36 La. Ann. 625; Fisher v. New York & M. Coal Field R. Co. 31 W. N. C. 502; Hess v. Rau, 17 Jones & S. 324.

And the delivery of notes by an agent to creditors after the death of the principal was sustained, when the agent had the power to obtain securities for them, and to turn the securities over to the principal's creditors. Nicolet v. Pillot, 24 Wend. 240.

An agent authorized to sell goods and pay debts with the proceeds has only a qualified interest in the goods, but his executors may hold the goods for his lien. Gage v. Allison, 1 Brev. 486.

An attorney in fact authorized to convey land cannot make a valid deed after the death of his principal, where the power to convey is not coupled with an interest. Harris v. Irving, 28 Cal. 645; Hunt v. Rousmanier, 21 U. S. 8 Wheat. 201, 5 L. ed. 506; Travers v. Crane, 15 Cal. 12; Scruggs v. Driver, 31 Ala. 274; Lewis v. Kerr, 17 Iowa, 73; Jenkins v. Atkins, 1 Humph. 294, 34 Am. Dec. 648; Primm v. Stewart, 7 Tex. 173; Harper v. Little, 3 Me. 14, 11 Am. Dec. 25; Shisler's Estate, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 538.

On a sale of land by an agent after the death of the principal which was unknown to the agent, he is liable to the estate of the principal for the money. The purchaser's rights were not decided as he was not a party. Carriger v. Whittington, 26 Mo. 311, 73 Am. Dec. 212.

In lah v. Crane, 8 Ohio St. 521, it was held that a contract for the sale of land by an agent without knowledge of the death of the principal, is binding where he accounts to the heirs for the purchase money and puts the purchaser in possession, the court claiming that if the power of the agent had been actually revoked in the life of the principal and he had consummated the sale before such revocation came to his knowledge it would be the same; and the court held that under the authority given in this case the sale did not have to be made in the name of the principal, and was not a power to convey but power to sell.

The authority to receive money or collect the same where the agent has no interest in the subject-matter is revoked by the death of the principal. Davis v. Windsor Sav. Bank, 46 Vt. 723; Johnson v. Johnson, Wright (Ohio) 594; Farmers Loan & T. Co. v. Wilson, 64 Hun. 194; Houghtaling v. Marvin, 7 Barb. 412; Lepard v. Vernon, 2 Ves. & B. 51; Weber v. Bridgman, 113 N. Y. 600.

But in Cassiday v. McKensie, 4 Watts & S. 232, 39 Am. Dec. 76, it was held that a payment by the debtor, received by the agent in good faith after the principal is dead, of which fact they were ignorant, is binding upon the parties.

38 L. R. A.

A contract to perform personal labor by an agent for his principal, is terminated by the death of the principal. Ross v. Hardin, 79 N. Y. 54; Krumdick v. White, 32 Cal. 143.

If a consignee elects to hold goods as consignee, his executors, after his death, cannot elect to hold the same as a purchase. Bacon v. Sondley, 8 Strobb. L. 543, 51 Am. Dec. 644.

Under an arrangement for the principal to supply goods during the year, the authority of the agent is not revoked by the death of the principal during the year. Garrett v. Trabue, 33 Ala. 227; Davis v. Davis, 38 Ala. 173.

In Smout v. Ilbery, 10 Mees. & W. 1, it was held that a wife was not liable for goods supplied to her, after her husband's death in a foreign land, before information was received.

And the estate of a man is not liable for goods furnished after his death, to a woman who had cohabited with him as his wife. Blades v. Free, 9 Barn. & C. 167, 4 Mann. & R. 232.

Under a commission vesting an agency in two persons without words of survivorship where one of them dies and the other has not been recognized subsequently by the principal, he cannot bind the principal. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Wilcox, 57 Ill. 180.

But an employment of an agent by two joint contractors to sell articles under a patent is not discharged by the death of one joint contractor. Martin v. Hunt, 1 Allen, 418.

The death of an agent under the power of attorney is a revocation of the power of the sub-agent. Lehigh Coal & Nav. Co. v. Mohr, 38 Pa. 223, 24 Am. Rep. 161; Watt v. Watt, 2 Barb. Ch. 371, 5 L. ed. 769.

And on the death of a factor shipping goods to a subagent in his own name, the proceeds from the sale of the goods belong to the principal. Jackson Ins. Co. v. Partee, 9 Helsk. 266.

But in Smith v. White, 5 Dana, 276, it was held that the authority of the subagent is not revoked by the death of the agent, where the subagent acted in good faith for more than twenty years with a knowledge of the principal's attorney-at-law, as acquiescence is evidence of authority.

A purchase by the trustee having the power of sale, made after the death of the owner, is invalid as the trustee could not be the purchaser. Middlesex Bank v. Minot, 4 Met. 325.

For other cases on agency, see Bromage v. Lloyd, 61 Gale v. Tappan; Charleston v. Duncan; Burill v. Smith; and Perry v. Crammond, infra.

Attorney.

The authority of an attorney-at-law in regard to Idings's App. supra. It was, in effect, a contract for the payment of money, a guaranty to the plaintiff. The entering into another contract was merely formal.

Pratt v. Hudson River R. Co. 21 N. Y. 805.

Even in Pennsylvania prior to the decision of Billings's App. supra, such a contract viewed as an obligation merely to pay money would have been held to survive.

White v. Com. 89 Pa. 167.

It cannot be said that because the fulfillment of this agreement in the case at bar required the execution of another contract that therefore the agreement does not survive.

For an agreement to grant an annuity survives.

Nield v. Smith, 14 Ves. Jr. 491.

A covenant to convey a copyhold on request survives.

Thurseden v. Worthen, 2 Bulstr. 158.

A covenant to renew a lease survives.

Macarney v. Blundell, 2 Ridgw. P. O.

118; Phillips v. Everard, 5 Sim. 103; Colgrave v. Manby, 3 Russ. Ch. 288; Hawkins v. Ball, 18 B. Mon. 816, 68 Am. Dec. 755, note. Contracts to convey real estate survive.

Hawkins v. Ball, supra.

It is also held that agreements to make certain dispositions of property by will may be enforced against the estate of the promisor.

Ibid.; Hatt v. Williams, 72 Mo. 214, 37 Am. Rep. 485.

The plaintiff is entitled to judgment for an amount which shall be the present value of each yearly payment due at the end of the year in which by the agreement it was to be earned, with interest from December 1, 1888, the time the waterworks were completed, to the date of the verdict.

Alder v. Keighley, 15 Mees. & W. 117; Robinson v. Harman, 1 Exch. 855; Driggs v. Dwight, 17 Wend. 71, 31 Am. Dec. 283, and note; Pearson v. Mason, 120 Mass. 58. See also Parker v. Russell, 188 Mass. 74; Amos v.

actions and collections and satisfaction of judgments, is revoked by the death of his client. Turnan v. Tenke, 84 Ill. 286; Rasley v. Fellows, 10 Ill. 581; Clegg v. Baumberger, 110 Ind. 598; Gleason v. Dodd, 4 Met. 388; Megary v. Funtia, 5 Sandf. 376; Palmer v. Reiffenstein, 1 Mann. & G. 94; Peries v. Aycinena, 3 Watts & S. 64; Clayton v. Merrett, 53 Miss. 358; Moyle v. Landers, 73 Cal. 99; Campbell v. Kincaid, 3 T. R. Mon. 46; Judson v. Love, 35 Cal. 468; Balbi v. Duvet, 3 Edw. Ch. 418, 6 L. ed. 710; Putnam v. Van Buren, 7 How. Pr. 31.

And the retainer of an attorney is determined by the death of his client. Whitehead v. Lord, 7 Exch. 691, 21 L. J. Exch. 229.

In Wylie v. Ooze, 56 U. S. 15 How. 415, 14 L. ed. 738, where the attorney was to receive a contingent fee for prosecuting a claim against the Mexican republic, the death of the owner of the claim did not dissolve the contract and the attorney was entitled to compensation which would be a lien upon the money when recovered.

In Zenon's Succession, 34 La. Ann. 1187, where there was no stipulation as to the amount of the fees of the attorneys, it was proper for them to enforce a contract for their services against her succession and continue their services, unless discharged by the administrator.

And in Andrews v. Showell, T. Raym. 18, where a judgment was confessed by an attorney, and the defendant died before it was signed, the court refused to set aside the judgment as it was for a good debt.

And a motion in discharge from a debtor's prison was allowed where the notice was served on the plaintiff's attorney who was his son and who refused to disclose who was the plaintiff's personal representative, the plaintiff being dead. Booth v. Steer, 7 Jur. 673, 1 Dowl. & L. 374; Poole v. Steed, 11 Mees. & W. 759.

Notes, bills, and checks.

Ordinarily, indorsements and transfers affecting liability cannot be made after the death of a party, to a note or bill.

The death of a principal generally invalidates the power of another to draw bills of exchange in his name, or to indorse or deliver an indorsed note for him. Bromage v. Lloyd, 1 Exch. 82, 5 Dowl. & L. 123, 16 L. J. Exch. 257; Bank of Washington v. Pierce, 3 Cranch, C. C. 686; Michigan State Bank v. Leavenworth's Estate, 38 Vt. 209.

And where a note is found indorsed among the papers of a decedent, but undelivered, his personal representatives are not authorized to deliver the 33 L. R. A.

same. Clark v. Sigourney, 17 Conn. 511; Clark v. Boyd, 2 Ohio, 54.

And a power of attorney to demand payment on a note is determined by the death of the principal. Gale v. Tappan, 12 N. H. 145, 37 Am. Dec. 194.

An indorsement of a note to a deceased person, in order to transfer the title to such person's representative, is invalid. Valentine v. Holloman, 68 N. C. 475.

And the power to negotiate generally ceases on the death of the accommodation indorser. Michigan Ins. Co. v. Leavenworth, 30 Vt. 11; Smith v. Wyckoff, 3 Sandf. Ch. 77, 7 L. ed. 777.

Under an arrangement, whereby a bill was drawn in the name of a deceased person and accepted by a defendant, he is estopped from claiming that the indorsement was not that of the decedent. Ashpittel v. Bryan, 33 L. J. Q. B. 91, affirming 33 L. J. Q. B. 823.

Under 1 N. Y. Rev. Laws, 316, the liability on a promissory note in favor of an indorser where the indorsement is made after the maker's death, continues against the makers' heirs. Parsons v. Parsons, 5 Cow. 476.

A principal may claim, on the death of an agent, a note taken by an agent in his own name, belonging to his principal. Charleston v. Duncan, 3 Brev. 368.

And a bill of exchange may be completed by the addition of the drawer's name, after the death of the acceptor. Carter v. White, L. R. 35 Ch. Div. 668, 54 L. J. Ch. 188, 50 L. L. T. S. 670, 33 Week. Rep. 692.

And where the drawer's name was blank and it came in the possession of the plaintiff as administratrix, who inserted her own name as drawer, it was sustained. Seard v. Jackson, 34 L. T. N. S. 65.

Where presentment, demand, and notice are prevented by death, a reasonable diligence thereafter is required. White v. Stoddard, 11 Gray, 238, 71 Am. Dec. 711; Duggan v. King, 1 Rice, L. 240, 38 Am. Dec. 107; Smith v. Bank of New South Wales, L. R. 4 P. C. 194; Massachusetts Bank v. Oliver, 10 Cush. 557; Cayuga County Bank v. Bennett, 5 Hill, 236; Harp v. Kenner, 19 La. Ann. 68; Bank of Washington v. Reynolds, 3 Cranch, C. C. 229; Groth v. Gyrer, 31 Pa. 271, 72 Am. Dec. 745; Juniata Bank v. Hale, 16 Serg. & R. 157, 16 Am. Dec. 558.

And notice of non-payment must be given to the administrator of an indorser, if he is qualified before the maturity of the note. Oriental Bank v. Blake, 23 Pick. 206.

And must be given to an indorser, even if he is the administrator of the drawer. Magruder v. Union Bank of Georgetown, 28 U. S. 3 Pet. 87, 7 L. ed. 612.

Oakley, 181 Mass. 418; Jewett v. Brooks, 184 Mass. 505.

And it makes no difference in the measure of damages that the contract is for a contract.

Pratt v. Hudson River R. Co. and Driggs v. Dwight, supra.

The defendants are not entitled to have the water already taken and to be taken in the future by the Monument Mills and the two tenement houses allowed in reduction of damages.

Sutherland, Damages, § 158; Dillon v. Hunt, 105 Mo. 154; Harding v. Townshend, 48 Vt. 586, 5 Am. Rep. 304; Cunningham v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 102 Ind. 478, 52 Am. Rep. 688; State v. Bishop, 24 Md. 810, 87 Am. Dec. 606; Chitty, Cont. 10th Am. ed. by J. C. Perkins, 984, 985; Ellis v. Wire, 38 Ind. 127, 5 Am. Rep. 189.

The rule is not confined to actions of tort, but extends to actions of contract.

Sondes v. Fletcher, 5 Barn. & Ald. 835;

Hawkins v. Coulthurst, 5 Best & S. 343; Sedgw. Damages, 496, ed. of 1878; Chitty, Cont. 10th Am. ed. by J. C. Perkins, 984, 985.

So far as the Monument Mills have taken and used the water that is a collateral matter wholly independent of the defendants and is as to them res inter alios acta. The payments made by the Monument Mills not having been procured by the defendants and the payments not having been either paid or received to satisfy in whole or in part the defendants' liability, they can derive no advantage therefrom in mitigation of damages.

Sutherland, Damages, § 158; Dillon v. Hunt, Harding v. Townshend, and Cunningham v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. supra.

Messrs. Marshall Wilcox and A. Chalkley Collins, for defendant:

The language, "I hereby agree to enter into a contract binding myself to take water," in terms calls for no action other than his personal

Or where the indorser knew that the note would not be paid and that the maker was dead. Gower v. Moore, 25 Ma. 16, 43 Am. Dec. 247.

The negligence of the executrix of a holder for several months to present a note or give notice of non-payment, discharges the indorser. Wilson v. Senier, 14 Wis. 380.

And in Toby v. Maurian, 7 La. 493, it was held that no recovery could be had of an indorser until a demand was made on the heirs of the maker, if he is dead and there was no administrator, unless the impossibility of making a demand was apparent.

But a demand does not have to be made on the day of the funeral, at the dwelling of the deceased maker. Huff v. Ashcraft, 1 Disney (Ohio) 60.

If the maker of a note is dead at the time of its indorsement, no demand is necessary to bind such indorser. Davis v. Francisco, 11 Mo. 572, 49 Am. Dec. 98; Picklar v. Harlan, 75 Mo. 678.

And in Landry v. Stanbury, 10 La. 494, it was held that a demand of an administrator of a maker is unnecessary to bind the indorser, where such administrator was not authorized to pay any claim until after a certain time.

Unless the note matured more than a year after the appointment of the administrator. Hale v. Burr, 12 Mass. 83.

Where a protest was made after the death of the indorser and the notice was taken from the post-office, by the direction of a subsequent indorser, and delivered to the administrators of the deceased, this was sufficient. Beals v. Peck, 12 Barb. 245.

And a notice of dishonor, to the drawer, who is the party who is to pay the bill as executor of the acceptor, is sufficient. Caunt v. Thompson, 7 C. B. 400, 6 Dowl. & L. 621, 18 L. J. C. P. 125, 13 Jur. 495.

Upon the death of the drawer of a bill, the rights and liabilities of the parties thereto are not altered. Billing v. Devaux, 3 Mann. & G. 535, 4 Scott, N. R. 175, 5 Jur. 1182.

And a payment on presentation was sustained where a master of a ship gave a bill of exchange on the consignee for the freight money, and died before the bill reached the hands of the indorser. Cutts v. Perkins, 12 Mass. 206.

Ordinarily, a note should be delivered in the lifetime of the parties, but a delivery to the administrator of the payee has been sustained. Welch v. Dameron, 47 Mo. App. 221.

And an administrator might elect to take a bill belonging to the decedent, which had been indorsed by his agent to him, in ignorance of his 28 L. R. A.

death. Murray v. East India Co. 5 Barn. & Ald. 204.

And the administrator may indorse away bills owned by the decedent. Rawlinson v. Stone, 3 Wils. 1; Makepeace v. Moore, 10 Ill. 474.

Money received by a private banker to pay the drawer of a draft belongs to the drawer if the banker dies before it is transferred. First Nat. Bank of Central City v. Hummel, 8 L. R. A. 738, 14 Colo. 250.

And where a note was indorsed by an agent in consideration of an extension of time, in ignorance of his principal's death, such indorsement was sustained. Burrill v. Smith, 7 Pick. 291.

And where a note was delivered by an agent after the death of the drawer, to a person who had made advances upon their faith to the drawer, such delivery was sustained. Perry v. Crammond, 1 Wash. C. C. 100; Dick v. Page, 17 Mo. 234, 57 Am. Dec. 267.

A payment by a bank of a check of the decedent, in ignorance of his death, is valid. McMurray v. Ennis, 81 N. Y. S. R. 976.

And where a payee of a check indorsed it to another party, and then died, the property of such indorser in the check ceases. Burke v. Bishop, 27 La. Ann. 465.

An agent who received for his principal a check just before the death of the principal, and drew the money after his death, as executor, cannot be compelled to account, except by first applying upon it what the testator owed him on account. Re Kellogg, 104 N. Y. 648.

In Lewis v. International Bank, 13 Mo. App. 202, it was held that as in that state the delivery of a check is an appropriation of that much of the fund on deposit, the death of the drawer before presentation does not operate as a revocation of the check.

See also subhead, Guaranty.

Personal services.

Ordinarily a contract for personal services is extinguished by the death of the party to perform the same. Hyde v. Dean of Windsor, Cro. Eliz. 558; Lee v. Griffin, 2 Best & S. 272, 30 L. J. Q. B. 252, 7 Jur. N. S. 1302, 4 L. T. N. S. 548, 9 Week. Rep. 705; Farrow v. Wilson, L. R. 4 C. P. 744, 38 L. J. C. P. 326, 20 L. T. N. S. 810, 18 Week. Rep. 43; Siler v. Gray, 86 N. C. 598; Parker v. Macomber, 16 L. R. A. 858, 17 R. I. 674.

And a contract by a pastor personally to pay an organist for a certain time ceases at the death of action. If his estate or his administrators are bound to carry out such personal contract, it must be so because the law by construction finds it was the intention of Mr. Crane to bind not only himself personally but his estate in the hands of his administrators in case of his death.

But this must be determined in the light of the circumstances, objects, and motives surrounding the parties.

Vide Metcalf, Cont. 1st ed. p. 278; Nichols v. Luce, 24 Pick. 102, 85 Am. Dec. 802; Whittier Mach. Co. v. Graffan, 156 Mass. 415.

Mr. Crane wanted the water for business conducted under his arrangements with the Monument Mills corporation. In case of his death, his business was liable to be absolutely terminated and the intended use of the water extinguished.

Under these circumstances it is but a reasonable deduction that the parties understood that the "formal contract" was to be made with reference to the expected continuance of Mr. Crane's business relations with Monument Mills corporation and that the water was wanted only for use in that business.

The instrument of June 11, 1888, in view of its language and personal surroundings and circumstances, called for the individual act of Mr. Crane himself in the execution of the "formal contract," and upon his decease the execution of it was not obligatory upon his estate in the hands of his administrators.

And had the formal contract been executed in his lifetime, its relations to Mr. Crane and his business and the inability of his administrators to continue the business and the use of the water therein, warrant the court in holding that the obligations of the contract should expire with him.

Tasker v. Shepherd, 6 Hurlst. & N. 575; Dickinson v. Calahan, 19 Pa. 227; Bland v.

the pastor, where the church is subsequently closed. Harrison v. Conlan, 10 Allen, 85.

In Siboni v. Kirkman, 1 Mees. & W. 418, 2 Gale, 51, it was stated that the only exception to the liability of an estate on a contract of a testator is where personal skill or taste is required.

A contract which does not involve skill, and which binds the heirs, executors, and administrators of the party and can be completed within a reasonable time, is not extinguished by the death of either party. Billings's App. 106 Pa. 558.

A contractor agreeing to build a house, may be required to finish the same after the death of the owner of the land. Cooper v. Jarman, L. R. 8 Eq. 88, 36 L. J. Ch. 85.

A contract to build that is completed after death of owner, is not invalidated by such death. Riblet v. Wallis, 1 Daly, 360.

Where a contract by two to do work is completed by one after the other's death, the estate of the deceased is entitled to its share in the profits. Jepeon v. Killian, 151 Mass. 598; McClellan v. Kenard, L. R. 9 Ch. 386, 43 L. J. Ch. 323, 30 L. T. N. S. 186, 22 Week. Rep. 582.

Under La. Code, § 2007, providing that all contracts for labor are personal on the part of the obligor but heritable on the part of the obligee, a contract of employment as a clerk of a decedent is exigible against his estate. Tete v. Lanoux (La.) Nov. 20, 1893.

Where a coat was ordered and fitted before the death of the tailor, and finished and delivered by his widow and administratrix, the purchaser was liable. Werner v. Humphreys, 3 Scott, N. R. 226, 3 Mann. & G. 353.

So if work contracted for by the testator is completed by the executors, by using the materials of the testator, a recovery may be had for the value of such material. Marshall v. Broadhurst, 1 Crompt. & J. 408, 1 Tyrw. 349.

The death of a farmer does not avoid liability on a contract for labor by a party on the farm for one year, where he completed the year's service after the death of the farmer. Lacy v. Getman, 35 Hun, 46.

In Gilman v. Wilber, 1 Dem. 547, whether or not a contract to give tuition is extinguished by the death of the promisor, was not decided, although questioned.

Under a contract to saw lumber for another, by a debtor in payment of his debt, if the party furnishing the same dies, the debtor cannot be compelled to pay, before he has refused to saw the same. Hawkins v. Ball, 18 B. Mon. 316, 68 Am. Dec. 755.

On the subject of recovery for services on contracts interrupted by sickness or death, see exhaustive note, Parker v. Macomber, 16 L. R. A. 858, 17 R. I. 674.

For other cases of personal services, see Re Williams' Estate, 1 Misc. 38; Shults v. Johnson, 5 B. Mon. 500; Dickinson v. Calahan, 19 Pa. 227; Ross v. Hardin, 79 N. Y. 84.

Apprentice.

On the question as to the effect of the death of a master of an apprentice, upon the premium which has been paid by such apprentice, there is some conflict of decision. The early cases of Newton v. Rowse, 1 Vern. 480; Soam v. Bowden, Finch, 306; Hirst v. Tolson, 2 Macon. & G. 134, 2 Hall & T. 359, 19 L. J. Ch. 441, 14 Jur. 559, held, that on the death of the master a partial recovery of the premium money was allowed, but subsequently in Re Thompson, 1 Exch. 364, a court of equity refused to require a return of a portion of the premium paid by the articulated clerk, who had died, and in the later case of Whincup v. Hughes, L. R. 6 C. P. 78, 40 L. J. C. P. 104, 24 L. T. N. S. 874, 19 Week. Rep. 439, it was held that a partial failure of consideration by the death of the master, will not authorize a recovery of part of the premium money. The court in this case discusses the previous cases, claiming that in Soam v. Bowden the executor had come into court and said that he was willing to do whatever the court would direct, referring to Newton v. Rowse, supra, the court claimed that there must have been a mistake or misrepresentation, as a basis of recovery which does not appear, and finally overrules Hirst v. Tolson, supra.

Wood on Master & Servant, § 43, gives Whincup v. Hughes, supra, as an authority for the converse of the proposition decided in the reported case.

The liability of service by an apprentice is extinguished by the master's death. Baxter v. Burfield, 3 Strange, 266; Boast v. Firth, L. R. 4 C. P. 1, 38 L. J. C. P. 1, 19 L. T. N. S. 264, 17 Week. Rep. 23.

But not where the contract bound the apprentice to serve the executors of the master. Cooper v. Simmons, 7 Hurlst. & N. 707, 31 L. J. M. C. 128, 8 Jur. N. S. 81, 5 L. T. N. S. 712, 10 Week. Rep. 270.

But the liability of the master on an apprentice's contract, binding the master, his heirs and assigns, continues after his death as to meat, drink, clothes, etc. Com. v. King, 4 Serg. & R. 109.

In this note cases on the subjects of Donatio causa mortis; Checks; Joint contracts; Mortgages; Surety; Partnership; Bonds official; Contracts to be performed at death; questions as to Pleading; Abatement; Survivorship, and Descents,—are not included as more properly matters for other notes.

L. T.

Unstead, 23 Pa. 816; Quain's App. 23 Pa. 510; Chamberlain v. Dunlop, 128 N. Y. 45; Shear v. Wright, 60 Mich. 139; Hove Sewing Mach. Co. v. Rosensteel, 24 Fed. Rep. 583; Butterfield v. Byron, 12 L. R. A. 576, 153 Mass. 517; Mare, Cont. pp. 647, 653.

Holmes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of contract on the following writing:

"New York, June 11th, 1888, M. J. Drummond—Dear Sir: I hereby agree to enter into a formal contract with the Housatonic Water Company, when organized, binding myself to take at least seven hundred and fifty ($750) dollars worth of water per annum for the period of ten years, on the following basis: Water for manufacturing purposes, 12½ cents per 1,000 gallons; hydrants, $40.00 per annum each; private dwellings, one tap for one family, $8.00 per annum. In the construction of these waterworks, they are to commence at Long Pond, with a 14-inch pipe, and continue with a 12-inch pipe, then reducing to 10-inch, then to 8-inch to the village, and using 6-inch and 4-inch distribution pipes. C. R. Crane."

This writing was signed in order to induce the plaintiff to build an aqueduct for the stock and bonds of the Housatonic Water Company, and the offer contained in it was made in consideration of the plaintiff's doing so. The plaintiff accepted the offer, furnished the consideration, and the promise became a binding contract. Just afterwards, Mr. Crane died, and his administrators refused to perform the contract. The first question is whether the administrators were bound to pay for the ten years, as agreed by Mr. Crane.

The question is not whether the administrators are bound by their intestate's contract. They are bound by it, of course, whether named or not, because they represent his person. Shelley's Case, 1 Coke, 93, 96a; Iremonger v. Newsam, Latch, 260, 261; Day v. Worcester, N. & B. R. Co. 151 Mass. 302, 308.

A sufficient proof is that they unquestionably would be liable for a breach by their intestate in his lifetime. The true question is whether the contract, properly construed, requires a continuance of the promised action beyond the lifetime of the promisor. It is the same question, and is to be answered in the same way, as if the promisor himself were alive for purposes of being sued, but dead for the purposes of performance.

The facts relied on by the defendants are that, as the plaintiff knew, the reason why Mr. Crane wanted the water was that he might use it in his business; that his business was the manufacture of woollens under a lease and business arrangement with the Monument Mills; that by the terms of his lease the mills had a right to terminate it, and did terminate it in fact, within three months of Crane's death. The plaintiff knew the kind of business in which Crane was engaged, and that it was carried on under some arrangement with the Monument Mills, but did not know what the arrangement was.

23 L. R. A.

But the motives which induced Crane to make the promise are not so important an aid in determining its scope as the object which the plaintiff manifestly had in exacting it. It was perfectly plain that the reason why the plaintiff required the promise as a condition of making his investment and filling the reservoir was that he might have some security for returns. The plaintiff committed himself absolutely to the investment, whether Crane lived or died. Obviously, the security which he wanted was one equally independent of Crane's life. From the point of view of the plaintiff, the contract was like a guaranty, upon executed consideration, that he should have so much business for a certain time, which, of course, would run on whether the guarantor lived or died. See Lloyd's v. Harper, L. R. 16 Ch. Div. 290. It may be that it was prudent administration for the defendants to break the contract and to pay the damages, but we are of opinion that Crane's undertaking was to take the water for ten years, dead or alive. Very possibly, he did not think of the chance of his dying, and might have hesitated if the present aspect of his contract had been called to his attention. But the circumstances and the words used gave notice of the extent of the obligation which he was entering into, and, if we are to conjecture, it is as probable as anything else that the plaintiff would not have accepted less than, by our construction, he got. No cases very like the present have been called to our attention. We may mention Kernochan v. Murray, 111 N. Y. 806, 2 L. R. A. 185; Chamberlain v. Dunlop, 128 N. Y. 45; Billings's App. 106 Pa. 558; Martin v. Hunt, 1 Allen, 418, 419.

The considerations which we have put forward are not affected by the fact that the contract sued upon contemplated another more formal contract. That is merely an additional wheel in the machinery. Nor does it matter that the second contract would be made with another party. It was expected that the plaintiff would become the owner of substantially all the stock of the water company, when it was issued, and he did so; so that his interest was substantially the same with reference to the present question as if the second contract were to run to him.

The other question reserved by the report concerns the measure of damages. The judge who tried the case, without a jury, found that the cost of delivering the water was nothing, and ruled that the plaintiff was entitled to recover the present value of each yearly payment, deducting such sums as the water company received, or ought to have received, for water used upon the premises occupied by Crane at the time of his decease. Only the plaintiff complains of this ruling. We have no doubt that the defendants are right in conceding that the plaintiff is entitled to recover substantial damages, subject to any just deductions. It does not matter how the contractee is interested to have a contract performed,—whether directly, or because he is a stockholder in a corporation,—if he is interested. It has been held in England that trustees can recover to the extent of the interest of their cestui que strudent. Lloyd's v. Harper, L. R. 16 Ch. Div. 290. Also, the intended intervention of a second contract is not important. Pratt v. Hudson River R. Co. 21 N. Y. 805; Driggs v. Dwight, 17 Wend. 71, 81 Am. Dec. 288.

The matter of the deductions is more difficult to deal with. Even if the contract were as broad as upon this question the plaintiff's interest would have it regarded, some circumstances can be imagined which would make the damages only nominal, at most. The object being, as we have said, to secure the plaintiff a return for his investment by guaranteeing a certain amount of custom, if the plaintiff's company had customers for all the water which it could furnish, only nominal damages ought to be allowed. The same consideration of the object of the contract points also to some latitude of construction as to what constitutes performance. If the contract had specified the buildings in which the water was to be taken, there could be no doubt that the ruling was right. The contract would mean, not that Crane personally would take so much water at all events, but that so much water should be taken in those buildings. The contract does not specify any buildings, but still we are of opinion that it does not require a personal taking of the water throughout the ten years. It is satisfied if the taking was started by Crane, and its continuance fairly may be attributed to him. When the contract was made, both parties understood that Crane made it for the sake of his factory in the building of the Monument Mills. If Crane, in his lifetime, had taken water there, and after his death his administrators had done the same, and then within the ten years the factory had changed hands, and the same amount of water was taken afterwards, it would be a hard construction to deny that the contract adopted in advance Crane's choice of place, to the extent that a continuous taking of water in the same place was a performance. The obligation to take the water would not follow Crane's person and estate so far as to bind the administrators to take water in another place in addition. So if Crane, after taking water, himself had sold the factory. Things had not gone quite so far as we have supposed, because Crane died just before the water was ready for delivery. Yet it seems very plain, and, as we take it, was inferred by the judge who tried the case, that the places in respect of which the judge made the allowances were understood by both parties to be places at which the water was to be delivered. No doubt, Crane was free to change his place of performance, but a taking at the factory satisfied the contract pro tanto. As to the sums paid for water by the two tenements of the Crane estate also allowed by the judge, the facts do not appear in any detail. We cannot say that the allowance was not right, upon the principles which we have explained.

No objection has been raised to the recovery in this action of all the damages which ever can be recovered, although the ten years have not elapsed. It seems to be assumed that the case is governed by Paige v. Barrett, 151 Mass. 87, and the cases there cited. We do not disturb the assumption. If it be made, the deductions to be allowed on account of earnings in the future must be matter of estimate.

Judgment on the finding.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

Roland WARD, Resp't.,
v.
SOUTHERN PACIFIC CO., App't.

(.....Or.....)

1. The mere fact that persons have frequently trespassed upon a railroad track, and that the company has resorted to no means to stop such trespassers, does not amount to a permission or license to use the track as a footpath.
2. A railroad company owes to a trespasser upon its track no legal duty to keep a lookout or guard him against danger.
3. The finding of the body of a child on a railroad track, where it had been struck by a train, raises no presumption of negligence on the part of the company, although the track was straight and clear, where there is nothing to show the circumstances of the accident, or how long the child had been on the track when struck.

(March 12, 1894.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Douglas County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the killing of plaintiff's son, which was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. C. Bronaugh and W. D. Fenton for appellant.

Mr. J. W. Hamilton for respondent.

Lord, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint alleges that, by the negli-

NOTE.—Most cases as to implied license to go upon a railroad track have related to a crossing, as to which, see Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Rylee (Ga.) 13 L. R. A. 684, and note, and Chenery v. Fitchburg R. Co. (Mass.) 22 L. R. A. 576.

But as to claim of license to use track as a footpath, see also Anderson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (Wia.) ante, 208.

33 L. R. A.

As to presumption of negligence of person found killed by alleged negligence of another, see Hendrickson v. Great Northern R. Co. (Minn.) 16 L. R. A. 261, and note.

The question of presumption in the present case, it will be noticed, is that of the negligence of the railroad company and not that of the trespasser.

gence of the defendant in the management of its locomotive engine, a son of the plaintiff, about six years of age, was run over and killed. The answer denies such alleged negligence, and sets up as a defense that the plaintiff and his son were contributorily negligent. The reply denies the new matter in the answer. The cause being thus at issue, a trial was had, resulting in a verdict for the plaintiff, and from the judgment which followed this appeal was taken.

In the progress of the trial, it appears that, at the close of plaintiff's testimony, defendant interposed a motion for judgment of nonsuit, which the court overruled, and the defendant excepted. As the propriety of this ruling is questioned, our present inquiry is as to whether the testimony for the plaintiff is legally sufficient to warrant the verdict in his favor.

The record discloses that the testimony for the plaintiff, in substance, is that he is a farmer, and that Freddie Ward, the deceased, was his son, who was about six years of age; that the railroad track passes through a field of plaintiff's farm, within about fifty yards of his residence, which stands inside of an inclosed yard, and adjoining this yard is the barn lot, from which a gate opens into said field; that, on the afternoon of the day of the accident, plaintiff was engaged in hauling wood through his barn lot to the side of the railroad track, where he piled it; that shortly before four o'clock in the afternoon of said day, which was the usual hour for the Southern Pacific train to pass his place in going to Roseburg, the plaintiff, having loaded his wagon, said to his son, "Run and open the gate, so that I can get the load off before the train comes," which being done, he drove his team through the gate to the wood pile beside the track (the distance between the gate and wood pile being about fifty yards), and that the gate was left open by his direction; that before reaching the wood pile the plaintiff looked back, and, not seeing his son, supposed that he had returned to the barn; that, the last time plaintiff saw his son, he was at the gate, and that about twenty minutes thereafter, but after the train had passed, some five or ten minutes, Mrs. Clark found the dead body of the child, and gave the alarm, when the plaintiff ran to the spot, and saw the body of his son lying in the middle of the railroad track, with the shoulders about five or six inches from the rail, and the head dis severed from the body, lying outside of the rail near the wood pile, and some thirty feet from where the body lay; that from the time he last saw his boy, at the gate, until the body was found by Mrs. Clark, the plaintiff did not know where his son was, but supposed that he was at the house, though he did not tell him to go there, or "notice him after that;" and that the wood pile at which plaintiff was unloading his wagon when the train passed was about seventy feet long, six or seven feet from the track, and eight feet high. There was some evidence tending to show that school children and other persons sometimes used the railroad track as a footpath, but none showing that the company knew or had notice that the track was so used; and the plaintiff admitted that he had not seen any school children so using the track for about a year previous to the death of his son. It was also shown that the track was open and straight, from the direction from which the train came, for nearly half a mile before the place was reached where the child was found. This being, substantially, all the evidence for the plaintiff, the contention for the defendant is that such evidence wholly fails to prove the negligence alleged as a cause of action, and that, therefore, the trial court erred in not granting the motion for a nonsuit. As argued, this contention involves two points: First, that the evidence totally fails to show that the injury and death of plaintiff's son were caused by the negligence of the defendant or its employees in the management of the train at the time of the accident; and, second, that, conceding the negligence of the defendant, the plaintiff's evidence shows that, in view of the circumstances, he was guilty of negligence contributing to produce the fatal occurrence, in leaving his son in such dangerous proximity to the railroad track.

As to the first point, it is put upon the ground that, as shown by the evidence, the company had the exclusive right of way where the accident occurred to the deceased, and hence that he was a trespasser upon its track, to whom the company owed no legal duty to keep a lookout, or guard him against danger. The evidence shows that the body was found, not at a public crossing, or where people habitually pass over the track, and are known to be in the habit of doing so by those operating the trains, but in a field through which the railroad passes, and over which the company had the sole right of way. Some persons or school children living in the vicinity of the railroad track occasionally used it as a footpath, but without the knowledge or permission of the company. It was a license of their own taking which they took cum periculo, or subject to its perils. "Persons," says Mr. Justice Nelson, "living in the vicinity of railroads, who use the tracks or the embankments, or the space between the tracks, as a footpath, are wrongdoers, unless permission is granted by the company so to use its tracks. Although pedestrians, or the public generally, travel over them without objection, people go there at their own risk, and, as said by the supreme court of Massachusetts, 'enjoy the license subject to the perils.' Gaynor v. Old Colony & N. R. Co. 100 Mass. 208, 97 Am. Dec. 96." Grethen v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 22 Fed. Rep. 609. User of this sort will not establish a public way over the track, or relieve those so using it from the imputation of being trespassers.

A railroad company has the right to the exclusive use of its track, unless a right of way or footpath over it has been acquired by its consent, express or implied, or a joint use has been reserved to the public, as at a public crossing. There is no doubt that if the company permitted the public, for a long time, to travel or habitually pass over its track at some given point, or use it as a footpath between different points, without objection or hindrance, its consent or acquiescence in such use might be presumed, and it would be bound to manage and run its trains with reference thereto. In such cases the company and the people have a common right or joint use in the track, as a public way, and the right of each must be regarded. But the mere fact that persons have frequently trespassed upon the track, and that the company has resorted to no means to stop such trespasses, does not amount to a permission or license to use the track as a footpath. There is nothing in the case at bar to indicate that the public have acquired any right to use the track as a footpath or highway, with the consent or by the acquiescence or sufferance of the company, at the place where the accident happened. Such being the case, the deceased was on the track at a place where the company had the sole right of way, without its consent or acquiescence; and, in legal contemplation, he was wrongfully there, and therefore must be regarded as a trespasser.

But, conceding the fact that the deceased child was unlawfully upon the track, and a trespasser, it is insisted by counsel for the plaintiff that as the day was clear, and the track open and straight for nearly half a mile before the place was reached where the accident occurred, if the engineer of the company operating the train had kept such a vigilant outlook as the proper discharge of his duties required, he must have discovered the child in time to have stopped the train before reaching him, and his not doing so is negligence, and the proximate cause of the injury. In this view the railroad company is bound to run its trains with reference to the probability of accident to trespassers on its tracks. This duty is founded upon the assumption that, although the defendant is not bound to exercise that degree of diligence and care for the safety of a person on its track at a place where there is no public crossing required as to passengers, yet, as the defendant employs a dangerous force in running its trains, it is bound at least to exercise ordinary care, when so employing it, so as to avoid injury to persons or property which may happen to be on its track; and if, by using such care, the accident would not have happened, the failure to use it, even though the injured party be a trespasser, is negligence which would render the defendant liable. This principle finds its illustration in Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Symphkins, 54 Tex. 615, 38 Am. Rep. 632, where the plaintiff lying in a state of insensibility on the railroad track, not at a public crossing, was run over by the cars, and seriously injured. The court, in that case, says: "If the engineer on the approaching train keep that lookout which is required of him at all times, not only to secure the safety of the train, but to avoid injury to any animal or person on the track, this person lying there in open view must be discovered. Not to discover him is, under the circumstances, negligence; and that negligence is the proximate cause of the injury, whilst the negligence of the party in going on the track is only a remote cause." Within this principle, "keeping a lookout" is regarded as a duty always devolving upon those running trains; and a failure in its performance, whereby an injury happens to a trespasser on the track, is negligence which must be regarded as the proximate cause of the injury. As, in this view, the duty of keeping a lookout is a requirement of ordinary care, although a person may be improperly or unlawfully on the track of a railroad, still that fact will not discharge the company or its employes from the observance of such care; and hence a "lookout," who does not see what, with due care, should have been seen, would not be in the proper discharge of his duty.

33 L. R. A.

In Harlan v. St. Louis, K. O. & N. R. Co., 65 Mo. 22, Henry, J., states the principle in this wise: "When it is said, in cases where the plaintiff has been guilty of contributory negligence, that the company is liable if, by the exercise of ordinary care, it could have prevented the accident, it is to be understood that it will be so liable if, by the exercise of reasonable care after a discovery by defendant of the danger in which the injured party stood, the accident could have been prevented, or if the company failed to discover the danger through the recklessness or carelessness of its employes, when the exercise of ordinary care would have discovered the danger and averted the calamity." Under this rule, ordinary care with regard to trespassers is exacted, and in the absence of such care a railroad company will be held liable. Hence, the plaintiff contends that the failure of the engineer of the defendant to see the plaintiff's son on the track, although a trespasser, when he could have seen him if he had kept that lookout which his duty required, is a want of ordinary care, or negligence, which was the proximate cause of the injury, and renders the defendant liable. On the other hand, the defendant claims that it is not bound to keep a lookout for trespassers upon its track, but only to avoid injury to them, if possible, when their presence and liability to danger become known, and that this rule applies in the case of a child, just as it does in that of a grown person. In short, the contention for the defendant is that the company is not liable to trespassers on its track, except where the injury was willful, or where the company, after discovering his presence, fails to exercise reasonable care to prevent injury. In this view, the duty of the company begins when the trespasser is first discovered, and its extent is to refrain from doing him willful or wanton injury. It is put upon the principle that it is not negligence to omit to do an act, unless there was a legal duty to perform it. As the railroad company is entitled to the exclusive use of its track, and is bound by no contractual relations to provide for the safety of trespassers, it is under no legal duty or obligation to take precautions or keep a lookout against possible injuries to them, and hence the conclusion that the failure of those operating trains to see trespassers upon the track, whereby injury results to such trespassers, although they could have been seen if they had kept a watch, would not be negligence. The policy of the law is to make the track of a railroad clear of all obstructions which might impede its free and exclusive use, as being necessary, not only for the protection of the company and its employes, but for the safety of the traveling public. "Public policy," says Brannon, J., "looking to the safety of not only those who walk on railroad tracks, but of employes and passengers on trains, requires that the law forbid the use of railroad tracks for that purpose." Spicer v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 34 W. Va. 516, 11 L. R. A. 885.

The track is the private property of the company, and was not built to be used as a highway for pedestrians. Being intended for the sole use of the company, except at public crossings, the law will not sanction its use as a footpath. Nor will the fact that people may have frequently used the track to walk on change the law, or render their act less unlawful. In some countries it is made a penal offense to go upon the track. Although it is not so with us, yet, as Strong, J., says, "it is a civil wrong, of an aggravated nature, for it endangers, not only the trespasser, but all who are passing or transporting along the line." Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Hummel, 44 Pa. 378, 84 Am. Dec. 457. As the law holds the company to a high degree of responsibility for the safety of its passengers, and public convenience exacts rapid transit, common justice requires that the company should have a clear track. Toomey v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 86 Cal. 374, 10 L. R. A. 189. "We hold these corporations," said Paxson, J., "to a strict line of responsibility whenever passengers are injured by accidents to their trains. It follows that we should be equally emphatic as to their control of their tracks. Except at crossings, where the public have a right of way, a man who steps his foot upon a railroad track does so at his peril. The company have not only a right of way, but such right is exclusive at all times, and for all purposes. This is necessary, not only for the proper protection of the company's rights, but also for the safety of the traveling public. It is not right that the lives of hundreds of persons should be placed in peril for the convenience of a single foolhardy man who desires to walk upon the track. In England it is a penal offense for a man to be found unlawfully upon the track of a railroad. It would add materially to the public safety, were there a similar law here." Mulherrin v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 81 Pa. 366. While it is true that the company owes no duty to a trespasser, and is entitled to assume that its track is clear, except at public crossings, or other places which the public frequents, of which it has knowledge, it is not meant that he may be run down, or that a willful or wanton injury inflicted upon him would be justifiable. The fact that a person may be a trespasser when using a railroad track as a sidewalk will not justify the infliction of injury as a punishment, or out of recklessness. After the company discovers the trespasser, it becomes its duty to use care and diligence commensurate with the danger of his position. But the company is no more bound to keep a lookout for a trespasser than it would be to furnish appliances for his benefit as such. "The company," said Zollars, J., "at all times, owes a duty to passengers upon its trains to keep a lookout for obstructions upon the track; and if it fail to do so, and by reason of such failure a passenger suffers injury, the company is liable, on the ground of negligence. But it cannot be said, with reason, that it owes such duty to one trespassing upon the track. As to him, it is not bound to anticipate such intrusion, and is not liable if a collision occurs without its knowledge." Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Graham, 95 Ind. 286, 48 Am. Rep. 719. It is therefore not a part of the duty of a railroad company, in exercising ordinary care in the operation of its trains, to provide against the possibility of trespassers being on its track. This being so, the company is not bound to anticipate their presence, or to take precautions for their safety, nor is it liable for injury to such trespassers if a collision occurs without its knowledge. In Woodruff v. Northern Pac. R. Co., 47 Fed. Rep. 699, it was held that it was not willful negligence in the engineer not to see a trespasser on the track, though, by ordinary care and diligence, he might have discovered him in time to have avoided the injury. In that case the complaint charged that the child, being twenty-two months old, went upon the track, and was run over by a passing train, and so injured as to be crippled for life, and that the engineer could have seen the child on the track in time to have stopped the train and averted the disaster, and that the failure to see the child and stop the train was negligence. Upon demurrer these facts were held insufficient to constitute a cause of action. Hanford, J., said: "The defendant was not bound by any contract with the plaintiff to take care of, or provide for the safety of, his infant, and owed no duty to look out for intruders upon its track, on ground dedicated and reserved for its exclusive use as a right of way. The complaint does not charge that the child was enticed or licensed by the defendant to come upon its track, nor that the place where the injury happened was at a public crossing or within a public highway, nor that the defendant's servants, after seeing the child, intentionally or wantonly committed the injury; and without one or the other of these elements, or something equivalent thereto, I cannot regard the defendant's conduct as being morally culpable or legally wrong, so as to give rise to a legal claim for damages." A like principle is announced in Givens v. Kentucky Cent. R. Co. 12 Ky. L. Rep. 950, where a boy nine years old was killed by a locomotive backing upon him when he was on the track at a place where the company had the exclusive right of way. Holt, Ch. J., said: "The deceased was in fact a trespasser, and those in charge of a train are, under such circumstances, ordinarily, not required to keep a lookout, and guard against danger to such a person. They are not required to presume that any one will trespass upon the exclusive right of way of the company; and they are therefore not bound to look out for them, but only to avoid injury to them, if possible, when their presence and liability to danger become known. This rule applies in the case of a child, just as it does in that of a grown person. If those operating a train were required to look out and guard against danger to children trespassing upon the track, then this would necessarily afford an opportunity to see all other persons who might be upon it, and in danger. Undoubtedly, a greater degree of care is required of them as to children not old enough to be aware of the danger than as to grown persons, when they have been once discovered upon or near the track, but until their presence is known the rule applies equally to both. An exception to this rule exists, however, where a train is passing through a town or city, and where people are likely to cross the track at any point, and are known to be in the habit of doing so by those operating the train. In such a case there is constant danger to life; and, out of regard for it, those in charge of a train must look out for persons who may be upon the track, and give such notice of its approach and movements, and so regulate its speed, as is likely to warn them of danger, and enable them to get out of the way." For further reference, see notes to Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, title "Railroads" pp. 935-937, and notes to Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Troutman (Pa.) 6 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 117-120.

The principle to be deduced from these authorities is that a railroad owes no duty of keeping a lookout for persons on its track, where it is entitled to have it clear, and that as to such it is not liable if a collision occurs without its knowledge. If, therefore, the plaintiff's son was a trespasser upon the company's track, the failure of the engineer on the approaching train to discover him, by reason whereof the accident happened, was not negligence, as the defendant owed the deceased no legal duty to keep a lookout. Now, the facts show that the plaintiff's son was found dead, and that his death was the result of a collision with the train upon the track of the defendant at a place where the railroad company was not bound to anticipate his presence, and where he was a trespasser, and that those operating the train had no knowledge of the fatal occurrence until they were informed by telegraph, after they had reached the city of Roseburg. Assuming, then, that plaintiff's son was on the track, and that the engineer could have discovered him in time to have stopped the train, if he had kept a lookout, his failure so to do would not render the company liable for neglect to perform any duty it owed him, within the principle of the authorities cited, except Houston & T. O. R. Co. v. Symptone, supra, where the fact appeared that the plaintiff was lying on the track, and that the engineer could have discovered him in time to have stopped his train without running over him. But in the case at bar there is no evidence showing that the deceased was on the track when killed, other than the inference from the finding of the body, or, if so, how he came to be there, or how long he had been there when struck by the train, or whether he was on the track a sufficient length of time before the collision, or entered upon it a sufficient distance ahead of the train, so that he could have been seen or discovered by those operating it in time to have avoided injuring him. For aught that appears from the evidence, the boy may have come in sudden contact with the train, in such a way that his presence might not be discovered by the most vigilant "lookout." However this may be, the circumstances attending his death are not known, except that it resulted from collision with the locomotive, which is evidenced by his body having been found on the track. Whether he was on the track, though it was straight and clear, a sufficient length of time before the collision, so that the engineer on the lookout could have seen him in time to have averted the disaster, is not shown by the evidence. While we recognize the rule that, if there is any evidence tending to show negligence upon the part of the company or its employees, or from which an inference of it might be fairly drawn, or about which different men might draw different conclusions, such evidence should be left to the jury, unless it should appear that the accident would not have happened but for the contributory negligence of the party, we do not think the evidence for the plaintiff shows a case of negligence sufficient to be submitted to a jury. In view of these considerations, it is not necessary to consider whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence.

It results that the motion for nonsuit should have been allowed, and that the judgment must be reversed.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (Div. 2).

Christian TRABUE et al., Repts.,
v.

DWELLING HOUSE INSURANCE CO.,
Appt.

(.....Mo.....)

1. Partition of the property among the NOTE.—The above case follows the doctrine as to divisibility or severability of insurance of the earlier Missouri cases notwithstanding the use of the word "entire" in a clause as to forfeiture of 38 L. R. A.

devises of the insured effects a change in the "interest, title, or possession" within the meaning of a clause in an insurance policy avoiding the contract if such change occurs.

2. A clause making the "entire policy void in case of breach of condition in any respect" will not make the policy indivisible so as to the policy. See note reviewing and analyzing the numerous cases on the subject with the case of Wright v. Fire Ins. Assn. of London, (Mont.) 19 L. R. A. 211.

preclude any recovery on it in case it is, for convenience made to cover different kinds of property which are separately valued, although but one premium is paid.

(March 12, 1864.)

CERTIFICATION of an appeal by the St. Louis Court of Appeals for the opinion of the Supreme Court after reversal of a judgment of the Circuit Court of Ralls County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Reversed in part.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Joshua F. Hicklin and Ed. E. Yates, for appellant:

Under the condition: "This entire policy shall be void, if any change [other than by the death of the insured] take place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance, whether by legal process or judgment or by voluntary act of the insured, or otherwise," the will of Anthony E. Trabue and his subsequent death avoided the policy.

Sherwood v. Agricultural Ins. Co. of Watertown, 78 N. Y. 447, 29 Am. Rep. 180; Burbank v. Rockingham Mut. F. Ins. Co. 24 N. H. 550, 57 Am. Dec. 800; Hine v. Woolworth, 98 N. Y. 75, 45 Am. Rep. 176.

The partitioning of the realty after the death of the assured by the voluntary act of the parties in interest, worked a change in title, interest, or possession of the subject of insurance.

Dreher v. Aetna Ins. Co. 18 Mo. 128; Card v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 4 Mo. App. 424; Barnes v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. 51 Me. 110, 81 Am. Dec. 568; Keeler v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 16 Wis. 533, 84 Am. Dec. 716.

The contract is an entirety. "This entire policy shall be void," is its language. Can this mean part of it?

Rapalje's Law Dict. 446; American Ins. Co. v. Barnett, 73 Mo. 364, 39 Am. Rep. 517; Crook v. Phania Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 38 Mo. App. 593.

The only cases in America determining the effect of the language, "this entire policy," are in favor of the entirety of the contract.

Kiernan v. Agricultural Ins. Co. of Watertown, 73 Hun, 519; McWilliams v. Cascade F. & M. Ins. Co. 7 Wash. 48.

Mr. Reuben F. Roy for respondent.

Gantt, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts alleged in the petition and supported by the evidence, and which are not controverted by the parties in this suit, are as follows: The defendant company, by the policy of insurance on which this suit is based, insured Anthony E. Trabue against loss by fire or lightning for a term of five years, beginning at noon on the 20th day of April, 1838, in the sum of $800, on the dwelling house occupied at the time by said Trabue, and the sum of $250 on the contents of said dwelling house, and also $200 on other property which escaped the fire. The insured was the owner of the insured property. On the 1st day of February, 1839, said insured died at his place of residence, which was said dwelling house, in Ralls county, Mo. At the time of his death there were living with him at the said dwelling house his wife, the plaintiff Christiana Trabue, and three of his children, plaintiffs herein, to wit, Taylor J. Trabue, Kitty R. Trabue, and Mary G. Trabue. The insured left a will, by which he devised to his wife, Christiana Trabue one third of his estate during her widowhood, and the residue and remainder he devised to his four children, his only descendants, plaintiffs herein, in equal parts, with the provision that the portion willed to one child, Taylor J. Trabue, should go to him and his bodily heirs. The plaintiff Christiana Trabue was appointed executrix, and was qualified as such. The plaintiff Mary G. Trabue is a minor, and was a member of her father's family at the time of his death. The property was destroyed by fire October 16, 1890. At the time of the loss the plaintiff Christiana Trabue was occupying the house as a dwelling house. Three of her children—the plaintiffs Taylor J. Trabue, Kitty R. Trabue and Mary G. Trabue—were living with her as a part of her family. Prior to said loss the plaintiffs, in an ex parte proceeding in the Ralls circuit court, had the real estate devised to them by said Trabue partitioned among them, and that portion on which said dwelling house stood, including said house, was set off to said Christiana Trabue during her natural life or widowhood. Notice and proof of loss were given, and the property was worth the amount claimed. The personal property insured was in said house in the possession of Christiana Trabue at the time of the loss. In March, 1864, just before their marriage, said Anthony E. Trabue and Christiana Trabue entered into a marriage contract, by which it was agreed that neither should have or inherit any interest in the property of the other, and it was provided that the said Christiana Trabue should not receive any dower or inherit any property of said Anthony E. Trabue, except as he should give or devise to her. The policy contained this clause: "This entire policy shall be void if any change (other than by death of the insured) take place in the interest, title, or possession of the subject of insurance, whether by legal possession or judgment or by voluntary act of the insured or otherwise." The circuit court gave judgment for plaintiffs for the whole amount of the policy, and defendant appealed to the St. Louis court of appeals, where the judgment was reversed without remanding, but, the decision being in conflict with the decision of the Kansas City court of appeals in Crook v. Phoenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 38 Mo. App. 593, the cause was certified to this court under the mandate of section 6 of the Constitutional Amendment of 1864.

1. The St. Louis court of appeals held the policy was avoided as to the dwelling house by the transfer of the title thereto by the partition proceedings and judgment therein between the devisees of Anthony E. Trabue, the loss having occurred after that decree. The court waived all discussion of the effect of the marriage contract, and whether the will alone, which became operative upon his death, worked a change of property,

"other than by death of the insured," and placed their judgment upon the view that the partition proceedings had that effect. In that conclusion we concur. A partition of property, whether by deeds inter sese or by the judgment or decree of court, effects "the change of interest, title, or possession" against which the policy provided. Sherwood v. Agricultural Ins. Co. of Watertown, 78 N. Y. 447, 29 Am. Rep. 180; Burbank v. Rockingham Mut. F. Ins. Co. 24 N. H. 550, 57 Am. Dec. 800; Hine v. Woolworth, 98 N. Y. 75, 45 Am. Rep. 176; Barnes v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. 51 Me. 110, 81 Am. Dec. 562; Finley v. Lycoming County Mut. Ins. Co. 30 Pa. 311, 72 Am. Dec. 705; Dreher v. Aetna Ins. Co. 18 Mo. 128.

2. As this judgment, on its face, only affected the real estate covered by said policy, the plaintiffs insist they are entitled to recover the insurance on the personal property, as to which there was no breach of any condition in the policy; but the defendant insists that by the use of the terms "entire policy" in said clause the whole policy is avoided for a breach in any respect. If defendant's contention be correct, it is a most appropriate subject for legislative correction at the earliest opportunity. But is this clause properly construed by the court of appeals? As early as the case of Loehner v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. 17 Mo. 247, it was held by this court that where a firm obtained insurance upon a storehouse and a stock of goods therein in separate amounts, and the insurance on the house was avoided because the interest in the house was incorrectly described in the application, the policy was not vitiated as to the goods; in other words, this court then held that such a contract was divisible. Afterwards, in Koontz v. Hannibal Sav. Ins. Co. 42 Mo. 126, 97 Am. Dec. 325, the action was on a policy by defendant on a livery stable, the livestock, and personal property, each separately stated and appraised. In that case Judge Wagner reviewed the cases, and admitted there was a conflict between the decisions, but held that Loehner v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. 17 Mo. 247, was a binding authority, and "cheerfully followed it, because this court regarded it as in consonance with justice." These two cases have never been overruled, or their authority questioned, until the decision of American Ins. Co. v. Barnett, 78 Mo. 864, 89 Am. Rep. 517. The very able and learned judge of the St. Louis court of appeals who prepared the opinion in Halloway v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 48 Mo. App. 1, considered American Ins. Co. v. Barnett as the controlling decision, and followed it, as required by the constitution of his court; and in this case Thompson, J., treated the point as decided by the Halloway Case, and as clear of all difficulty. Since then the Kansas City court of appeals, in Shoup v. Dwelling House F. Ins. Co. 51 Mo. App. 286, has followed Judge Rombauer's decision in the Halloway Case; so that it becomes very important to determine the effect of the Barnett Case. An examination of that case will show that the remarks of the learned judge who delivered that opinion were entirely "obiter dicta" as to this question of the divisibility of the contract. He says, "if such a stipulation was in fact in the policy," the plaintiff would be entitled to the full relief prayed; so that it is clear no such clause was before the court; and, while his opinion is entitled to respect on the supposed case, it is equally clear that the court did not overrule the decision in Loehner's Case or Koontz's Case, but, on the contrary, on the only point that was in fact before the court, those cases were treated as binding authority. Our conclusion is that so much of Judge Norton's opinion as referred to the entirety of the policy in the Barnett Case was obiter, and did not overrule the Koontz and Loehner Cases; but, independent of the binding authority of those cases, we think they were correctly decided. In both of those cases "the policy" was to be void upon certain conditions. Here it is said "the entire policy" shall be avoided. "The policy" includes all and every part of it, and the insertion of the word "entire" cannot add anything more to it, so that this mere verbal addition has not, in our opinion, changed the law of the case. The cases cited by Judge Norton from Pennsylvania, Maine, Maryland, and other states are based upon the case of Friesmuth v. Agawam Mut. F. Ins. Co. 10 Cush. 587. By the laws of Massachusetts, the policy in that case was a lien on the interest of the assured in both the building and personal property insured. In holding that such a policy was an indivisible contract Judge Bigelow put it upon the ground "that the consideration was regarded as an entirety, for which the deposit note was given, and the liability of the assured to assessments on that amount in case of losses." He said: "They [the company] had a right to look to their lien on each and all of different kinds of property insured by them for the security of the whole amount of the note;" and so that policy said on its face. Upon the facts of that case no question can be made of its correctness. The lien was given on all the property. A false representation affected all of the lien. On the same principle stand the subsequent cases of Brown v. People's Mut. Ins. Co. 11 Cush. 281; Gould v. York County Mut. F. Ins. Co. 47 Me. 408, 74 Am. Dec. 494. In Gottman v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co. 56 Pa. 210, 94 Am. Dec. 55, Judge Thompson cites the Friesmuth Case, and those based on that case, without, however, advertent to the statutory lien. That other courts have adopted this construction of the entirety of the contract is not questioned, but, entertaining for them, as we do, all due respect, we see no reason for departing from our own decisions when they are based upon what appears to us the soundest reason. When one applies for distinct and separate insurance, a part on real estate, a part on personal property, he can require two separate policies. The accidental circumstance that for convenience merely they are included in one policy does not merge them into one. If the goods alone were destroyed, the terms of the policy applying to them alone could be made the basis of recovery. The supposed danger of making a contract for the parties is not in the case. The question is whether, according to legal principles, the contract made is sev-erable or entire. There is nothing to indicate the company would not have assumed the risk on the house without taking one also on the goods, nor vice versa.

The contract as to each admitted of being separately executed as to the separate subjects of insurance. The application is for separate insurance, and it is kept distinct in the policy. Nor are the cases of Koontz and Loehner, supra, unsupported by authorities in other states. In Phenix Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 4 Met. (Ky.) 9, 81 Am. Dec. 521, the supreme court of Kentucky held that when insurance was obtained upon a storehouse and stock of goods, in an action for loss on the goods the fact that the insurance on the house was void because the interest on the insured was incorrectly stated did not vitiate the policy on the goods, but it would be treated as a separate policy; citing Loehner v. Home Mut. Ins. Co., 17 Mo. 247, with approval. In Clark v. New England Mut. F. Ins. Co., 6 Cush. 842, 58 Am. Dec. 44, a policy made separate insurance on two buildings, with a clause declaring it void if the insured should alienate the property. It was held that alienation of one building did not avoid it as to the other. In Merrill v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 78 N. Y. 452, 29 Am. Rep. 184, the policy was upon several separate and distinct classes and species of property, each, as in the case at bar, separately valued; the sum total of the valuation was insured for a premium in gross; the contract was held severable. Judge Folger reviewed all the cases, including the two cases of Loehner and Koontz, supra, decided by this court, and in a most satisfactory manner sustained the reasoning of those cases upon the analogies of the law and the proper construction of the contract. Johnson v. Johnson, 8 Bos. & P. 162; Mayfield v. Wadley, 3 Barn. & C. 357; Goring v. Insurance Co. 10 Ont. Rep. 236; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Walsh, 54 Ill. 164, 5 Am. Rep. 115; Dats v. Gore Dist. Mut. F. Ins. Co. 14 U. C. C. P. 548; Deidericks v. Commercial Ins. Co. of New York, 10 Johns. 234; Trench v. Chenango County Mut. Ins. Co. 7 Hill, 122; Phillips v. Insurance Co. 46 U. C. Q. B. 334; Heacock v. Saratoga M. & F. Ins. Co. (unreported), referred to in Merrill v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 78 N. Y. 462, 29 Am. Rep. 184; Moore v. Virginia, F. & M. Ins. Co. 28 Gratt. 508, 26 Am. Rep. 373. The Merrill Case came under review in 1896 in Sekuster v. Dutchess County Ins. Co. 103 N. Y. 260, and was unanimously sustained. In 1891, in Pratt v. Dwelling House Mut. F. Ins. Co. 180 N. Y. 206, the question again recurring, the court of appeals says: "Whatever may be the rule elsewhere, it is settled in this state that where insurance is made on different kinds of property, each separately valued, the contract is severable, even if but one premium is paid, and the amount insured is the sum total of the valuations." See also Smith v. Home Ins. Co. 47 Hun, 30; Woodward v. Republic F. Ins. Co. 32 Hun, 365; German Ins. Co. v. Fairbank, 32 Neb. 750.

23 L. R. A.

In the very recent case of Coleman v. New Orleans Ins. Co., 49 Ohio St. 310, 16 L. R. A. 174, the supreme court of Ohio aligns itself in this conflict of authority on the side taken by this court in Loehner v. Home Mut. Ins. Co. 17 Mo. 247, and Koontz v. Hannibal Sav. & Ins. Co. 42 Mo. 126, 97 Am. Dec. 325, holding such contracts as this severable. Vide, also, Rogers v. Phenix Ins. Co. of Brooklyn, 121 Ind. 570; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spankneble, 52 Ill. 53, 4 Am. Rep. 582; Quarrier v. Peabody Ins. Co. 10 W. Va. 530, 27 Am. Rep. 582; State Ins. Co. of Des Moines v. Shreck, 27 Neb. 527, 6 L. R. A. 524.

When this contract was made, then, it was the settled rule of decision in this state that such a contract as this was divisible or severable, although the policy had a clause which would avoid the whole contract. The addition of the word "entire" given its utmost latitude could not avoid any more than the whole policy; hence it added nothing to the policy. Forfeitures are not favored in the law, and will not be enforced if any reasonable interpretation can be made which will prevent one. No reason is given here why a forfeiture should be enforced, except the insertion of the word "entire" into the policy. The risk was not increased. The premiums were taken, kept, and enjoyed for insurance on the personal property. The policy as to the house was avoided, doubtless, through the ignorance of the insured; but they have violated no condition as to this personal property. Holding, then, as we do, that this was a divisible contract, it results that the legal effect is the same as if two distinct and separate policies were issued, and, so reading the contract, we do not reject the word "entire" at all, but apply it to that policy, or portion of this policy, which the insured has forfeited by the change of title to which alone this clause refers; and it avoids that "entire" policy, and not the policy in which no condition or warranty has been broken. This construction logically follows from the divisibility of the contract, and best accords with fair dealing and the presumed intention of the parties. Our conclusion is that neither the law nor common honesty will permit the defendant to avoid paying the loss as to this personal property.

The judgment of the St. Louis Court of Appeals is affirmed in so far as it adjudged the policy on the dwelling house avoided, and reversed in so far as it avoids the insurance on the personal property, and the cause is remanded to that court with directions to affirm the judgment of the circuit court to the amount of $250, the amount of insurance on personal property and piano, and reverse it as to the remainder of said judgment. The costs of the appeal to this court are adjudged to plaintiffs, and the costs of the appeal to the St. Louis court of appeals are adjudged to defendant, as also the costs in the circuit court, after the offer of judgment was made; the other costs to plaintiffs.

All concur.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

Robert GRANT, Piff. in Err.,
v.

STATE of Florida.

(.....Fla.....)

- *1. Before a verdict returned by a jury in cases of felony is complete it must be accepted by the court for record. At any time after the verdict is returned into the

*Headnotes by MABBY, J.

NOTE.—Correction of verdict in criminal cases.

- I. General rules.
- II. By the court.
 - a. General doctrine.
 - b. To assess punishment.
 - c. To find the degree of offense.
- III. By the jury under the court's directions.
- IV. Sealed verdicts.
- V. Effect of discharge.
- VI. Effect of recriminating.
- VII. Special verdicts.
- VIII. English decisions.

I. General rules.

The court cannot withhold from the jury the power to return a verdict according to their will, for any grade of the offense charged against a defendant. Fagg v. State, 50 Ark. 508.

It is the jury's duty to take the court's exposition of the law as that applicable to the case, but the court cannot direct a verdict for a higher offense nor restrain the jury from returning it for a lower grade. Ibid.

The verdict which binds the parties is that at which the jury finally arrive and deliver to the court. State v. Clementson, 69 Wis. 623.

Verdicts are to have a reasonable intendment and to have a reasonable construction, and are not to be avoided unless from necessity originating in doubt of their import or immateriality of the issue found, or they show a manifest tendency to work injustice. McMillan v. State, 7 Tex. App. 100; Curry v. State, Id. 91; Lindsey v. State, 1 Tex. App. 827.

Verdicts are to have a reasonable intendment and to receive a reasonable construction, and are not to be avoided unless from necessity. Welch v. State, 50 Ga. 123, 15 Am. Rep. 690; Ga. Code, §§ 3503, 3561; Arnold v. State, 51 Ga. 144.

The judge should look after its form and substance, so as to prevent a doubtful or insufficient finding from passing into the records of the court. Cattell v. Dispatch Pub. Co. 88 Mo. 856.

It is competent for the court to make such inquiry of the jury as will enable it to comprehend the intention and will of the jury in reference to their finding, where, in the opinion of the court, there is no doubt or uncertainty in the language employed by the jury. Gipson v. State, 38 Miss. 256.

A defective or informal verdict is no verdict. State v. Clifton, 30 La. Ann. 361.

To correct a mistake where no prejudice can result from it, is not only proper but the duty of the court. Levells v. State, 32 Ark. 586; Brister v. State, 26 Ala. 132; Bax v. Parkin, 1 Moody, C. C. 45.

In Fagg v. State, 50 Ark. 508, it is stated as being the better practice, in every case where the verdict is not complete on its face, for the judge to point out its defects before receiving it, and to inquire of the jury what their intention is and show them how to perfect it.

Under section 1260 of the California Penal Code, court, and before it is accepted by the court for record, the accused has the right to have the jury polled in order to ascertain if the verdict offered is unanimous, and in the absence of a polling of the jury any member thereof has the right sua sponte to recede from the verdict agreed upon at any time before it is accepted for record.

2. At common law the verdict of the jury in cases of felony was pronounced in open court, then entered on the record by the clerk, and after this affirmed by the en-the appellate court may reverse, affirm, or modify a judgment appealed from, "and may, if proper, order a new trial."

A verdict of a jury under an indictment for murder must show the degree, and in the absence thereof the court has the power to order the jury to retire and amend the same by adding the degree. People v. Marquis, 15 Cal. 88.

If the facts necessary to sustain the verdict of guilty on one count are inconsistent with a verdict of guilty on the other, further deliberation is necessary in order that the jury may decide between the alternatives, and the judge cannot have cut the knot by drawing a verdict of not guilty upon either. Com. v. Lowrey, 158 Mass. 13.

Where, in an indictment for murder the jury found the defendants guilty as charged in the indictment, a new trial was granted upon the ground that the verdict did not fix the degree of murder, the court stating that when such verdict was announced, it being insufficient, the court, before discharging the jury, should have ordered them to retire and return a verdict in proper form. Ford v. State, 34 Ark. 649.

II. By the court.

a. General doctrine.

In People v. Jenkins, 56 Cal. 7, it is said to be the duty of a court to look after the form and substance of a verdict, so as to prevent a doubtful or insufficient finding from passing into the records of the court. For that purpose, the court can at any time while the jury are before it or under its control, see that it is amended in form so as to meet the requirements of the law.

The courts have power to correct a verdict with the consent of the jury, and an irregularity is never to be presumed, and therefore a formal verdict rendered upon the record may be shaped by the direction of the court with the jury's consent, which need not necessarily be entered on the record. State v. Steptoe, 1 Mo. App. 19, where the defendant was indicted for robbery in the first degree, the jury finding the defendant guilty of robbery, the verdict being corrected by the court.

A verdict may be put in proper form in the presence of a jury with their consent. Pehlman v. State, 115 Ind. 131.

If the jury find a verdict which is informal, their attention should be called to it, and with their consent the verdict may, under the direction of the court, be reduced to proper form. Ellis v. State, 27 Tex. App. 190.

Such a correction may be made in open court, as well as by sending the jury back to their room. State v. Anderson, 24 S. C. 109.

There is no necessity for sending the jury out again to cure a mere technical defect in the verdict. Clough v. State, 7 Neb. 323.

It is within the power of the court to have a second verdict corrected, the jury assenting thereto. Taylor v. State, 14 Tex. App. 340.

tire jury, when it became complete. The manner of receiving and affirming verdicts in cases of felony discussed.

3. When a jury returns into court an informal, insensible, or repugnant verdict, or one that is not responsive to the issues submitted, they may be directed by the court to reconsider it, and present a verdict in proper form. The court should, however, use great caution, and not intimate to the jury the kind of verdict in substance that should be returned.

It has been the practice for the trial judge in the presence of the jury to make formal corrections of the verdict, and he should undoubtedly have this power. Blair v. Com. 14 Ky. L. Rep. 495.

"Howsoever the verdict seem to stray and conclude not formally or punctually unto the issue, so as you cannot find the words of the issue in the verdict, yet if a verdict may be concluded out of it to the point in issue the court shall work it into form, and make it serve." Foster v. Jackson, Hob. 54.

Mere clerical errors are amendable in criminal as well as in civil cases. Sharff v. Com. 2 Binn. 513.

And so as to make them conform to the real intentions of the jury. State v. Underwood, 2 Ala. 744.

In such a case this course may be taken instead of directing the jury to retire for that purpose. People v. Jenkins, supra.

But a direction to the jury to retire and correct such informality is not error. Ibid.

Such amendments are the mere exercise of discretion when kept within proper limits, therefore the refusal to amend is not reversible on error. State v. Underwood, supra.

So the judge has the right to direct that proper corrections shall be made in the minutes, so as to conform the same to the facts within his personal knowledge, even after the trial, the verdict having been rendered. State v. Harris, 39 La. Ann. 1105.

In Guffy v. Com. 2 Grant. Cas. 92, it was held that the court had a supervision over so much of the verdict in a criminal prosecution as related to the costs, notwithstanding an acquittal.

If the jury persist in finding an informal verdict from which, however, it can be clearly understood that their intention is to find in favor of the defendant upon the issue, it should be entered in the terms in which it is found, and the court shall give judgment of acquittal, but no judgment of conviction can be given unless the jury find expressly against the defendant upon the issue, or judgment be given against him upon a special verdict. Laws 1851, § 427, p. 258; People v. Ah Ye, 31 Cal. 451.

When a jury returned a verdict of not guilty in a criminal case, the trial court has no power to set it aside or modify it in any respect. Lowe's App. 46 Kan. 255.

Where, in a conviction of murder the verdict of the jurors was accompanied with a recommendation to mercy, the court ordered the verdict entered without the recommendation, held it was no error, the recommendation being solely addressed to the court and constituting no part of the verdict. People v. Lee, 17 Cal. 75.

So where the jury found "the defendant, J. M. Boggs, guilty" it was held that the words "J. M. Boggs" might have been rejected as surplusage, and their presence worked no injury, it being sufficient that the jury found the defendant guilty. People v. Boggs, 20 Cal. 423.

Where, in an indictment for burglary, the court charged the jury that if they found the defendants guilty they must do so on the first of the two counts of the indictment, as the second was defective, the jury found the verdict "guilty on the first account" the court ordered the syllable "ac" to be erased 23 L. R. A.

4. After the case had been submitted to the jury under the charge of the court they returned into court the following verdict viz.: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of manslaughter in the first degree." The court refused to accept this verdict, and stated to the jury that it was not in proper form, as there were no degrees in manslaughter, and that they must retire and present a verdict in proper form. The jury retired and returned the following verdict, viz.: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, and refrom the last word, having the power to order the correction. Roberts v. State, 14 Ga. 3, 53 Am. Dec. 533.

Upon an indictment for an assault with intent to murder, by shooting with a pistol, the jury returned a verdict, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of shooting, not in his own defense, and recommend him to the mercy of the court." It was held that such verdict was not uncertain, and might properly be aided by the indictment showing that the prisoner shot at the party injured, not in his own defense and without justification. Arnold v. State, 51 Ga. 144.

And where, in an indictment for assault with a deadly weapon upon the person of Mary Danner, it appeared upon the trial that her name was spelled Dannaher, it was held that the difference in the sound in the two names being apparent the incorrect spelling would be disregarded, it being so slight. Gahan v. People, 53 Ill. 160.

Where upon an indictment containing two sets of counts, the first set for robbery, the second for an assault and battery with intent to rob, the jury found the defendant guilty of the charge contained in the second count, and also of grand larceny, and assessed the punishment adapted to the charges in the indictment, it was held, there being no charge of larceny, that there was no error in the prosecuting attorney's ascertaining from the jury in the presence of the court, and with its permission, whether it was a general verdict of guilty which they intended to find, and in his presenting them with the form of such a verdict to be disposed of as they might think proper. McGregg v. State, 4 Blackf. 101.

Upon a prosecution before a justice of the peace for assault, the jury returned a verdict, "We, the undersigned, do find the defendant guilty of a breach of the peace, and agree that he shall pay the sum of five ($5.00) dollars and costs,"—the court held that, the surplusage being left out, the verdict was still good. State v. Douglass, 1 G. Greene, 551.

So where the defendant was indicted for murder, and the jury were instructed that if they found him guilty of murder they should fix his penalty at death or confinement in the state penitentiary for life, and if they found him guilty of manslaughter that the maximum punishment was confinement in the state penitentiary for the term of twenty-one years, and they returned a verdict finding defendant guilty and fixing his penalty in the penitentiary for ninety-nine years, it was held that the court's reformation of the verdict so as to read, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty and fix his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for life," was correct and the verdict as reformed by the court expressing in unambiguous terms, what was manifestly the verdict of the jury, they agreeing in open court, in the presence of defendant and his attorney, that the said verdict as written out by the court was their verdict. Bledsoe v. Com. 10 Ky. L. Rep. 309.

Upon an indictment for uttering a forged writing, the verdict of a jury as follows, "We, the jury, find S. E. Blair guilty of forgery as per indictment, and fix penalty at three years penitentiary,"—was commend him to the mercy of the court," and this verdict was accepted by the court. Held, that the court did not err in refusing to receive the first verdict and in accepting the second one.

5. In the opinion of a majority of this court, the testimony in the record is not sufficient to sustain the verdict of murder in the first degree, and a new trial is awarded.

(March 1, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Duval County to review a judgment convicting altered by the judge so as to read, "We, the jury, find S. E. Blair guilty and fix punishment at three years in the penitentiary,"—it was held, such verdict being afterwards read to the jury, and assented to by them, and so received, that such alteration was not error, such verdict only conforming to the intention of the jury and the real meaning of the finding. Blair v. Com. 14 Ky. L. Rep. 485.

Where the defendant was charged with the embezzlement of a gun, and the jury found him guilty of a breach of trust, the verdict as recorded being: "We, the jury, find the accused guilty in manner and form as he stands charged in the indictment," the indorsement on the indictment showing the verdict: "We, the jury, find the accused guilty of breach of trust and recommend him to the mercy of the court,"—it was held that such verdict showed the intention of the jury and ought not to be sustained. State v. Reonnals, 14 La. Ann. 276.

In an indictment for murder, the jury returned a verdict: "We are the jury find Watkins guilty of manslaughter" signed "Ja. Washington" and upon being polled separately assented thereto, and ordered to be recorded, the court held there was no man on the jury whose name was "Ja. Washington," but one whose name was "Jiles Washington" whose identity was not disputed; that the irregularity was trivial and not worthy of notice. State v. Smith, 38 La. Ann. 1414.

Upon a trial for grand larceny, and for receiving and having stolen goods, knowing the same to have been feloniously stolen, the jury returned a verdict: "Guilty of knowingly receiving stolen property." The court ordered the same annulled, as nothing could be taken by the court by implication or intendment, that which is not found not being supposed to exist. State v. Burdon, 38 La. Ann. 387.

In State v. Pierre, 39 La. Ann. 915, upon a conviction of horse stealing and sentenced to two years' imprisonment at hard labor, the minutes not showing that the indictment was returned into court indorsed by the foreman of the grand jury, who had permitted the district attorney to have them amended by the clerk instant, by inserting the name and capacity of the foreman, it was held that the court might at any time make necessary corrections of its minutes, especially for the purpose of supplying material omission and correcting one within the personal knowledge of the judge, the same being done for no other purpose than to make the minutes conform to the facts. Such a correction might be made after a motion in arrest of judgment was filed.

On an indictment for larceny of bank bills and gold coin, a verdict, "Guilty, but not of taking the gold piece,"—which was recorded as one of not guilty with respect to stealing the gold coin, but guilty as to the remainder, after the jury had separated, was held sufficient although objected to by the defendant. Com. v. Stebbins, 8 Gray, 492.

Where upon an indictment charging an assault with intent to murder, a verdict, "Guilty of assault and battery as charged, but without the defendant of murder in the first degree. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. T. A. MacDonell and B. B. MacDonell for plaintiff in error.

Mr. William B. Lamar, Atty.-Gen., for the State.

Mabry, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The indictment against the plaintiff in error was for murder, and the sentence of the court felonious intent,"—was amended during the sitting of the court, by striking out the words "and battery" so as to conform to the truth. Com. v. Lang, 10 Gray, 11.

Where the verdict did not find that the defendant was the same person whose name purported to be signed to the acceptance set forth in the indictment, or that he had any connection with or interest in the bank on which the draft purported to be drawn, nor that he was a banker or in any manner connected with, responsible for, or interested in the paper in question except it was to be inferred from the single fact of taking it out upon a check drawn upon him, the court held that if any of these facts were omitted the verdict could not be supplied by the court. People v. Wells, 8 Mich. 104.

Where, upon an indictment for unlawful banking a special verdict found that the defendant "did pay out" the paper in question, it was held that the court could not add anything to this finding but could only draw the legal conclusions from the facts found; that no facts could be inferred by the court which the jury had not inferred and set forth, especially against a defendant in a criminal case. People v. Wells, supra.

To such a verdict the maxim applies, "de non apparentibus, non existentibus, eadem est ratio et iudicium."

Upon an indictment for an assault with intent to kill and murder, with a verdict of guilty of an attempt to commit manslaughter and recommendation to mercy, the jury believing that the higher penalties inflicted for the actual commission of such offense were severer than the circumstances attending the case required, such verdict being in writing, the court asked the jury, "If they found the accused not guilty of an assault and battery with intent to kill and murder, and found him guilty of an assault in the attempt to commit manslaughter,"—to which the jury replied in the affirmative, and the verdict was recorded: "We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty of an assault with intent to kill and murder as charged, but guilty of an assault in the attempt to commit manslaughter."—this was held no error. Gipson v. State, 38 Miss. 295.

A verdict which originally read, "We, the undersigned jurors in the above case, find a verdict of guilty as charged in the indictment," was corrected so as to read, "We, the undersigned jurors in the above case find a verdict of guilty as charged in the indictment against A. P. Waterman." The court held there was no error in the correction, both verdicts meaning the same thing and it was always competent for the court to suggest a correction in a mere matter of form. State v. Waterman, 1 Nev. 543.

Where, upon an indictment for embezzlement a verdict, "guilty of embezzlement," was entered and the jury discharged, and subsequently during the term, the court, on motion, directed the finding to be entered: "The jury find the prisoner not guilty of the larceny charged,"—the court held such addition to the verdict after the discharge of pronounced against him was confinement in the state penitentiary for life, based upon a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree with a recommendation of mercy to the court.

A motion in arrest of judgment was made and overruled. The first ground of the motion is, "that the allegations in the indictment are not sufficient to charge the defendant with murder in the first degree, but that necessary and material allegations to constitute such charge are not therein made, and that judgment thereon, in view of the verdict received and recorded by the court, cannot be entered."

The only supposed defect pointed out in the brief under this ground of the motion is, that the indictment does not allege that the wound was the cause of the death of the deceased. We have examined the indictment and find that the objection urged cannot be sustained. It is sufficiently alleged that the deceased died of the wound inflicted upon him by the accused. The other grounds of the motion in arrest of judgment are not discussed by counsel, and may be considered as abandoned. They call for no discussion by us.

The other points presented by counsel for the jury clearly irregular and must be disregarded, being without authority and precedent. Guenther v. People, 24 N. Y. 100.

An indorsement made upon an indictment of a plea of not guilty as on a given date, upon which date the bill was not found nor the crime committed, was held to be a clerical error which was amendable by the insertion of the true facts. Com. v. Chaunoy, 2 Ashm. 91.

In Com. v. Yeager, 3 Pa. Dist. Rep. 237, where the defendant, charged with forgery, was found not guilty, and the costs were placed upon the prosecution, it was held that the court had a right to supervise such verdict so far as it related to the costs and set it aside, the prosecution being founded upon a probable cause, there being no evidence of malice.

In an indictment for murder the jury returned a verdict, "We find the prisoner Samuel Yancey guilty of murder," the words "Samuel Yancey" being interlined by order of the court some days after the verdict was returned into court, the other defendant being found not guilty, and it was held that the amendment of the verdict was irregular but did not vitiate the conviction, which was regular, the verdict although badly written and incorrectly expressed being clear enough and sufficient, there being no reasonable doubt as to which of the indictes the word "guilty" was applied. State v. Yancey, 3 Brev. 142.

Where, in an indictment for feloniously and willfully breaking open and entering a dwelling house, for the purpose of committing a larceny therein, the jury found "defendant is guilty in manner and form as charged in the writ of indictment," and fixed his imprisonment in the jail and penitentiary house of the state at a period of five years, the court held, there being error in the verdict, that it could render no judgment except in accordance with the verdict, having no power to change the verdict or to pronounce any other judgment. Murphy v. State, 7 Coldw. 516.

Where a verdict of the jury found the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, and omitted the word "confinement" before the words "in the penitentiary for life," the court with the consent of the jury inserted the word "confinement" before such words, which was held no error. Taylor v. State, 14 Tex. App. 340.

Upon a conviction for robbery in which there were two trials, the prisoner pleading guilty at the first was convicted of theft, the punishment being assessed at confinement in the penitentiary for thirty years, the foreman requesting the presiding judge to have the verdict put in proper form, and the district attorney wrote a verdict finding the defendant guilty of robbery as charged in the indictment and assessing the punishment as above, such verdict as amended being signed by the foreman, and read to the jury who answered it was their verdict—held the court had the power to amend such verdict, and as amended it was legal, the case standing as though there had been no informal or illegal verdict. Robinson v. State, 23 Tex. App. 815.

In United States v. Keen, 1 McLean, 429, the indictment contained five counts; the jury found the defendant guilty upon the last four but did not pass upon the first, and it was held that the verdict could not be amended so far as to enter "Not guilty" upon the first count nor amend it at all.

Section 334 of the compiled statutes of Montana, ed. 1887, p. 465, gives power to the court to correct the verdict in the jury's presence and with their consent in matters of form.

And under section 343, the court may reduce the sentence.

b. To assess punishment.

Under section 4230 of the Revised Statutes of Missouri, ed. of 1889, p. 361, where the jury find a verdict of guilty and fail to agree on the punishment to be inflicted, or do not declare such punishment by their verdict, or assess a punishment not authorized by law, and in all cases of judgment by confession, the court shall assess and declare the punishment and render judgment accordingly. Rev. Stat. 1879, § 1930.

By section 4232 of the same, if a jury assess a punishment, whether of imprisonment or fine, greater than the highest limit declared by law for the offense of which they convict defendant, the court shall disregard the excess and pronounce sentence and render judgment according to the highest limit prescribed by law in the particular case.

Where the punishment given by the judgment is greater than the law authorizes, it is void. Ex parte Page, 49 Mo. 291.

Where the defendant was convicted of felonious assault, and the jury found him guilty as charged in the indictment, ten being in favor of two years' penitentiary sentence, and two in favor of $100 fine, and, after such judgment was received and the jury discharged, the court fixed the punishment at imprisonment in the penitentiary for a period of two years, it was held that the court had such power to fix the punishment under section 4230 of the above statutes. State v. Dennison, 108 Mo. 541.

Where the verdict of the jury found the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree, but failed to assess the punishment, it was held that the court had power to assess and declare the punishment and render judgment accordingly. State v. Foster, 115 Mo. 448.

Where a jury upon a verdict ascertained a term of imprisonment shorter than that prescribed by law, upon which the court rendered a judgment for a different term, it was held error. Nemo v. Com. 2 Gratt. 558.

c. To find the degree of offense.

Where, in an indictment for murder, no degree of the offense was found by the jury, the court held that there was no power subsequently to ascertain plaintiff in error for our consideration relate to the action of the trial court in refusing to accept the first finding returned by the jury, and in entering judgment upon the second verdict, and to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict accepted by the court. After the case had been submitted to the jury under the charge of the court the bill of exceptions recites the following, viz.: "We, the jury, find the said defendant guilty of manslaughter in the first degree. C. R. Bisbee, Foreman," which said verdict the said judge then and there refused to receive, stating to the jury that the said verdict was not in such form that the court could receive, and that they must return and present a verdict in proper form; that there were no degrees in manslaughter. Whereupon the said jury retired to their room; and afterwards, to wit, on said day, then and there gave their verdict in words and figures following, to wit: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree and recommend him to the mercy of the court. Nov. 28th, '93. C. R. Bisbee, Foreman." Several grounds in a motion for a new trial are based upon the action of the court in rendering the degree by reason of the indictment. Thompson v. State, 26 Ark. 323.

A verdict which does not show the degree of the crime charged is void, where the offense charged is divided into degrees. People v. O'Neil, 78 Cal. 338; People v. Travers, 73 Cal. 580; People v. Campbell, 40 Cal. 129; People v. Travers, 77 Cal. 176.

Where, in an indictment for murder, the jury returned a verdict of manslaughter without stating the degree, it was held the legal presumption was that they intended to find him guilty of the highest grade of that offense, and that a judgment pronounced by the court in the highest grade was no error. Welch v. State, 50 Ga. 123, 15 Am. Rep. 660.

III. By the jury under the court's directions.

After announcing a verdict, if they see fit before they are discharged, a jury may change the same and render a different verdict. State v. Clementson, 60 Wis. 623.

The jury may be examined by the poll and then either of the jurors may disagree to the verdict. State v. John, 30 N. C. 330, 49 Am. Dec. 396.

A juror is not estopped by his signature from refusing his assent to the verdict when it is returned in open court. Stewart v. People, 23 Mich. 63, 9 Am. Rep. 78.

Where express power by statutory enactment was given a jury to determine both the law and facts, it was held the trial court had no power to interfere with the verdict in any prejudicial respect. Lowe's App. 46 Kan. 255.

Where the verdict of a jury is not signed by the foreman before being brought into court, there can be no error in allowing him to subscribe his official character to his signature in open court in the presence of the jury and before they are discharged. Clough v. State, 7 Neb. 323.

The jury may announce its verdict to the court ore tenus or upon paper at their pleasure, and, however rendered, upon the suggestion of the judge it may be varied by the jury in its terms so as to make it speak their intentions, and a change thus made in the finding need not be noted in writing, even if it be such as to entirely supersede the verdict. State v. Underwood, 2 Ala. 744.

The action of the court in permitting a jury thus to correct their finding is clearly competent and proper. Cole v. Laws, 104 N. C. 651; Waller v. State, 40 Ala. 325.

Such a power is essential to securing a fair trial and a correct verdict. Cole v. Laws, supra.

In Fry v. Com. 82 Va. 334, it was held that the court had power, in an indictment for a felony, to permit the jury to retire and amend the verdict.

The jury in such a case should be requested to return to their room with proper instructions as to the correction which ought to be made. Pehlman v. State, 115 Ind. 131.

Where the whole matter is still in the breast of the jury, it is entirely competent to correct an inadvertence so as to make the verdict responsive to the indictment. State v. Bishop, 73 N. C. 44.

23 L. R. A.

If the meaning of the finding is not plain, then the jury must make it so. Blair v. Com. 14 Ky. L. Rep. 495.

Where the jury have manifestly made an omission or mistake in their verdict, it is the duty of the presiding judge to call their attention to that fact and return it to the jury for correction. State v. Clementson, 60 Wis. 623.

The power of the court in this respect is undoubted. State v. Anderson, 24 S. C. 109; State v. Corley, 13 S. C. 5.

The court should refuse it, call the attention of the jury thereto, and give directions as to its amendment. Walker v. State, 13 Tex. App. 618; Code Crim. Proc. art. 715, 716; Aleston v. State, 41 Tex. 39; Woodbridge v. State, 13 Tex. App. 443, 44 Am. Rep. 708; People v. Dick, 34 Cal. 663.

So it is not error for the court to direct the jury to retire and say under which count of the indictment they find the defendant guilty. People v. Graves, 5 Park. Crim. Rep. 134.

A jury may vary the form or correct a verdict before they are discharged and before it is recorded. Burk v. Com. 5 J. J. Marsh. 675.

A jury may besent back to correct a defective verdict. Pehlman v. State, 115 Ind. 131; Com. v. Nicely, 130 Pa. 261.

If the verdict is not full when returned, it is the duty of the court not to receive it, but to require it to be made full. Cook v. State, 26 Ga. 593.

The proper course to be pursued in an important criminal trial is for the judge to inform the jury that their verdict as originally returned was defective or informal, and to instruct them as to the proper form of a verdict just as though nothing had been returned into court by them as a verdict, and that after so instructing them they should be directed and allowed to make up and return their own verdict, whatever it may be. State v. Clifton, 30 La. Ann. 951.

Even if there be a substantial difference between the verdict first originally handed in by the jury and the verdict as corrected by them, there can be objection to the latter after the jury have assented to it. State v. Waterman, 1 Nev. 543.

When a jury after due and thorough deliberation on any case, shall return into court without having agreed on a verdict, the court may explain to them anew the law applicable to the case, and may send them out again for further deliberation, but if they shall return a second time without having agreed on a verdict, they shall not be sent out again without their own consent, unless they shall ask from the court some further explanation of the law. Tuberson v. State, 26 Fla. 472; McClell. Dig. § 23, p. 443.

It is error for the court to allow the jury to return their verdict to the clerk, and the counsel has no authority to assent thereto, or to waive the right of a prisoner charged with felony to be present when the jury delivered their verdict to the court. Waller v. State, 40 Ala. 325; Eliza v. State, 39 Ala. 623; State v. Hughes, 2 Ala. 102, 36 Am. Dec. 411; Prine v. Com. 18 Pa. 108; Nomaque v. People, judgment on the second verdict, and in refusing to accept the first one. One ground is, that the court erred in receiving the second verdict finding the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree for the reason that the verdict for manslaughter in the first degree operated as an acquittal of the said offense of murder, the latter being a higher offense and embracing the former. The effect of the first return of the jury is a matter presented for our consideration. There are now no degrees of manslaughter under our statutes, the only offense under this head being manslaughter. Conceding for the present that the first return of the jury was a good finding of manslaughter, and that the added words, "in the first degree," might have been considered by the court as surplusage, what effect must be given to this finding? In cases of felony according to the common law the verdict of the jury is not complete, or conclusive on them, until accepted by the court and recorded. The procedure in returning verdicts in cases of felony, leaving off some of the formalities in reference

1 Ill. 109, 12 Am. Dec. 157; State v. Buckner, 26 Mo. 168.

Under section 1161 of Deering's Annotated Penal Code of California, vol. 4, page 259, where there is a verdict of conviction in which it appears to the court that the jury have mistaken the law, the court may explain the reason for that opinion and direct the jury to reconsider their verdict, and if after the reconsideration they return the same verdict it must be entered; but when there is a verdict of acquittal the court cannot require the jury to reconsider it. If the jury render a verdict which is neither general nor special, the court may direct them to reconsider it and it cannot be recorded until it is rendered in some form from which it can be clearly understood that the intent of the jury is either to render a general verdict, or to find the facts specially and to leave the judgment to the court.

The criminal act of California provides that if the jury render a verdict which is neither a general nor a special verdict, as defined in sections 418 and 419, the court may direct them to reconsider it, and it shall not be recorded until it be rendered in some form from which it can be clearly understood what is the intent of the jury, whether to render a general verdict, or to find the facts specially and to leave the judgment to the court. Laws 1851, § 457, p. 258; People v. Ah Ye, 51 Cal. 451.

Under article 715 of the Code of Criminal Procedure the court is authorized to call the attention of the jury to any informality in the verdict and have it reduced to proper form. Gage v. State, 9 Tex. App. 269, where the defendant was charged with a misdemeanor.

Under section 2412, article 715, of Wilson's Texas Criminal Statutes, title 8, chap. 6, if the jury find a verdict which is informal, their attention shall be called to it, and with their consent the verdict may, under the direction of the court, be reduced to proper form.

By section 872 of Hill's Annotated Statutes and Codes of Washington, vol. 2, page 196, it is provided when the verdict is given and is such that the court may receive, and if no juror disagrees, or the jury be not sent out, the clerk shall file the verdict. The verdict is then complete and the jury shall be discharged from the case. The verdict shall be in writing and under the direction of the court shall be subsequently entered in the journal of the day's proceedings on which it was given.

By section 1322 of Hill's Annotated Statutes and Codes of Washington, vol. 2, page 510, it is provided when there is a verdict of conviction, in which it appears to the court that the jury have mistaken the law, the court may explain the reason for that opinion, and direct the jury to reconsider the verdict, and if after such reconsideration they return the same verdict it must be entered, but it shall be good cause for new trial.

When there is a verdict of acquittal, the court cannot require the jury to reconsider it. Act of February 24, 1891, § 73.

Where, in an indictment for assault with intent to commit murder with a second count, charging an ordinary assault and battery, the jury returned a verdict of guilty without specifying upon which count, whereupon the court instructed them as to the form of the verdict and directed them to retire again and say upon which count they found the defendants guilty, and the jury retired and returned rendering a verdict of guilty of assault with intent to kill against one defendant, and guilty of assault and battery against the other defendant, the court held there was no error the first being merely informal. Hughes v. State, 12 Ala. 458.

Where, in an indictment for forgery of a receipt, the first verdict was imperfect, the court instructed the jury to retire and consider further, which they did without having dispersed and without having been discharged, and it was held that the court in this only did its duty. Allen v. State, 79 Ala. 324, 53 Ala. 301.

In the above case the verdict of the jury as first rendered was, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty in the second degree," and when returned as corrected it was, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of forgery in the second degree." Ibid.

Where, in an indictment under the statute, for maiming, the offense being a felony, the verdict was, "We, the jury, do find the within named [defendant] not guilty as charged in the within indictment, but find that he and the within named, fought by mutual agreement," upon which the court passed sentence of fine and imprisonment, it was held that although the verdict was not explicit as to fighting by mutual consent, whereby one of the contestants was maimed, yet it bore a construction to that effect and was therefore sufficient. Strawn v. State, 14 Ark. 549.

Where several persons were charged with the same offense, and the jury brought in a verdict fixing a joint fine against them, it was held that the court should send them back with directions to assess a separate fine against each, and a verdict received and recorded imposing such joint fine, should be arrested and a verdict de novo awarded. Straughan v. State, 16 Ark. 37.

Where it was contended, in a prosecution for murder, that the court's telling the jury orally to return when they had brought in a general verdict of guilty, in order to find in what degree they found him guilty, was error, it was held that such direction need not be in writing, their answer being a failure to find and the duty of jury remaining undischarged, they were still under the control of the court, the court not directing them as to the law, but only telling them that they must act and find a verdict on the issues, and not to be error and no charge. People v. Bonney, 19 Cal. 424.

In an indictment charging the defendant with stealing, harboring, hiding, and employing in his own service the slave of another, a verdict that the defendant was guilty of stealing and employing a negro to the injury of the owner, was held amendable by the jury. Cook v. State, 25 Ga. 508.

Where a verdict, guilty of involuntary manslaughter without due caution and circumspection, to forfeiture of estates, is in substance as follows: When the jury have come to a unanimous agreement with respect to their verdict, they return to the box to deliver it. The clerk then calls them over, by their names, and asks them whether they agree on their verdict, to which they reply in the affirmative. He then demands who shall say for them; to which they answer their foreman. This being done, he directs the prisoner to hold up his right hand, and addressing the jury says: "Look upon the prisoner, you who are sworn. How say you? Is he guilty of the felony whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty?" The foreman then answers "guilty" or "not guilty," as the verdict may be. The officer then writes the word "guilty" or "not guilty," as the verdict is, on the record, and again addresses the jury: "Hearken to your verdict, as the court hath recorded it. You say that (A) is guilty (or not guilty) of the felony whereof he stands indicted, and so say you all." 1 Chitty, Crim. L. 686; Com. v. Tobin, 125 Mass. 203, 28 Am. Rep. 320; Givens v. State, 76 Md. 485.

was refused and the jury were sent back charged as to the law as to the two kinds of involuntary manslaughter, whereupon they returned a verdict of guilty of voluntary manslaughter, it was held that the latter judgment was rightly received by the court, there being no error in sending the jury back to make a legal verdict, the judge not intimating that they should not find involuntary manslaughter the court stating that "the second sober thought of the jury was right." Turbaville v. State, 58 Ga. 545.

Upon a charge of burglary the verdict found defendant "guilty of receiving stolen goods" which was not covered by the indictment. The court held such improper finding was rightly rejected as unwarranted by law, and that a direction to find a verdict of guilty or not guilty was not error. Mangham v. State, 87 Ga. 549.

Where, in an indictment for assault with intent to murder by shooting, the jury intended to find the defendant guilty of the offense of shooting at another, not in his own defense, and made efforts to express their finding in writing, using language which in the court's opinion failed to express the finding with sufficient accuracy, it was held not error for the court to require them to put their verdict in such form as to make its meaning entirely clear and free from objection, or to allow the solicitor general at the jury's request to frame their verdict for them, the jury subsequently ratifying and confirming such verdict. Brantley v. State, 87 Ga. 149.

In an indictment charging the defendant with the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, the jury, while in the box and before their discharge, were permitted to insert in their verdict the word "days" after the word "thirty," and the court held there was no error, the defect being apparent on the face of a character amendable before the discharge of the jury, the body expressing the intention to punish by imprisonment, and the insertion of the word "days," only supplying an apparent omission, the amended verdict including shortest period of imprisonment allowed and therefore not prejudicing the defendant. Quinn v. State, 123 Ind. 50.

In an information for murder in the second degree a verdict, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged," signed by the foreman, being informal was amended so as to read, "We, the jury find the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree, as charged in the information" and signed by the foreman, the jury intimating to the court before the amendment of such verdict, that it was their intention to find the defendant guilty of murder in the second degree, and after the verdict was amended it was read to the jury, who collectively answered that it was their verdict, and the court offered to have the jury polled, neither party accepting the offer all being present at the time, and the court held there was no error. State v. Potter, 16 Kan. 80.

Where, in an indictment for permitting unlawful gaming in his house, by the defendant, before the verdict was received or the jury had been asked whether they had agreed to it, the judge had a witness called to prove the identity of the house, whereupon the jury without retiring changed their verdict to one of guilty the court rendering judgment thereon, it was held such verdict was not erroneous, the jury having full control over the case and their verdict until delivered. Burk v. Com. 5 J. J. Marsh. 675.

Where, in an indictment for murder, the jury brought in a verdict of manslaughter under an instruction that if the accused were guilty of manslaughter, his punishment was confinement in the state prison for a period of not less than ten or more than twenty-one years, and the jury fixed the punishment at ten years' confinement in prison, the verdict being announced and the jury polled, when it was found such instruction was erroneous two years being a minimum punishment, and the jury were again instructed and returned to their room, and finally returned a verdict fixing the punishment at four years, the court held such last verdict could not be upheld and did not cure the defect in the former one. Roberts v. Com. 90 Ky. 654.

Where in a prosecution for attempt at murder, the indictment containing two counts, upon the second of which the defendant was convicted, the jury returning a verdict finding "the prisoner guilty of stabbing with intent to kill," which verdict the court refused, explaining the law to the jury and directing them to return to their room for further deliberation and report, when they returned a verdict, "Guilty of stabbing with a knife and inflicting a wound less than mayhem," which verdict was received by the court and the jury discharged,—the court held such verdict regular, and that the court exercised proper power in so directing the jury. State v. Harris, 39 La. Ann. 1105.

Where, in an indictment for assault, the jury found the defendant guilty of both of the charges, and attention was called to the fact that the judge had instructed them that if they found the defendant guilty of the whole charge, they should return a general verdict of guilty, and that if they meant to find a verdict against the defendant of the whole charge, they should return a general verdict of guilty, and thereupon the foreman, being asked by the clerk, rendered a verdict of guilty, which was affirmed, the court held such verdict regular. Com. v. Thompson, 116 Mass. 846.

Where, upon an indictment charging the defendants in one count with larceny, and in the other count with receiving the same property knowing it to have been stolen, the jury returned a verdict of guilty against both defendants upon both counts, which verdict was general and affirmed by the court, the defendants filing a motion to arrest, claiming the verdict as inconsistent and void in law, the court stated it would have been quite proper, before the recording and affirmation of the verdict, for the presiding judge to have called the attention of the jury to their misunderstanding of his previous instructions, and to have explained to them the mode by which it became their duty, if they convicted upon either of the counts, to acquit upon the other.

At common law a verdict was either public or privy. The public verdict was pronounced in open court in the presence of all the jury, and the privy verdict, in order to release a jury from confinement, was delivered to the judge out of court. In all cases of felony and treason the verdict was required to be delivered in open court and in the presence of the prisoner. In the case now before us, the indictment being for murder, the verdict was returned into open court, and it does not become necessary to consider in what cases a verdict may now be rendered out of court. It may be stated, however, that in cases of misdemeanor and in the lower grades of felonies a practice has obtained of consenting for the jury to reduce their finding to writing, and after sealing it up to separate till the next meeting of the court, when the paper being handed to the judge, the verdict is received from the foreman of the jury and recorded in the usual way. The verdict in such a case is not the one written out by the jury, but the one openly delivered in the court, accepted, and recorded. Com. v. Carrington, 118 Mass. 87; Com. v. Durfee, 100 Mass. 146.

er, and to have required of them to retire for further deliberation, and that if after such instruction the jury persisted in returning a general verdict of guilty upon both counts, it would have been proper in the presiding judge, even if not his duty, to set the verdict aside, as the only means of securing to the defendants their rights. Com. v. Haskins, 128 Mass. 60-62.

Where a defendant was indicted for the larceny of a leather trunk containing one new fifty-dollar bill, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty of the larceny of a fifty-dollar bill, counsel not being present at the time, and the court informed them that the prisoner was not indicted for stealing the bill but the trunk, and they retired to their room and after consideration rendered a verdict of guilty of the larceny of the trunk as charged in the indictment, it was held there was no error in the latter verdict, the former one not being received or recorded, nor the jury discharged. State v. Bishop, 73 N. C. 44.

Where, upon an indictment for burglary, the jury were instructed if they found the defendants guilty of breaking and entering on the first count, to find a verdict of not guilty on the third count, which charged one of the defendants with larceny in the building and the other with inciting the commission of that offense, and further to find a verdict for the defendants on the second count, no exceptions being taken to these instructions, the jury rendered a verdict of guilty on the first count, not guilty on the second count, and the foreman being then inquired of concerning the third count answered guilty, the judge reminded the jury of his formal instructions and directed them to find a verdict for the defendants on the third count, which they did, the court held there was nothing upon which the defendants could take exceptions. Com. v. Lowrey, 158 Mass. 18.

Where on an indictment for assault and battery upon a police officer, and for knowingly and willfully obstructing and hindering him in the discharge of his duty the verdict was "Guilty of an assault on a police officer," which was not correct in form, not stating their finding upon the issue tried, it was held to be the right and duty of the judge to instruct the jury as to the correct form of their verdict, and when in answer to his question the foreman replied that they meant a verdict of guilty of assault upon an officer in the discharge of his duty, the judge correctly instructed them that the proper form was a general verdict of guilty, and that their second verdict of guilty was rightly received and recorded and corrected the irregularities in the first verdict. Com. v. Delehan, 148 Mass. 254.

Where, in an indictment for grand larceny, a verdict of guilty was returned and recorded, the court, with the consent of the district attorney and the defense, allowed evidence as to the value of the stolen articles to be given before the jury left the box, and instructed them to retire and reconsider their verdict, which they did, and returned one of petit larceny. People v. Smith, 1 Wheel. Crim. Rep. 112.

23 L. R. A.

Where, in an indictment for feloniously removing the dead body of a human being from the grave for the purpose of dissection and sale, with a count charging the defendant with unlawfully receiving the dead body for the purposes of dissection, knowing the same to have been unlawfully disinterred, a verdict, "We find the prisoner guilty of receiving and dissecting," was entered by the clerk, and subsequently, upon the suggestion of the prosecution and before the jury had separated, the court directed the clerk to change the verdict to that of guilty under the fourth count, to which the jury upon being polled disagreed, and retired again under the court's directions and finally returned with a verdict of "Guilty under a fourth count," the court affirmed the conviction. People v. Graves, 5 Park. Crim. Rep. 184.

Where in an indictment for burglary in the second degree, a jury return a verdict of burglary in the third degree, and the court directed them to retire and instructed them that under the testimony the prisoner could only be convicted of burglary in the second degree, it was held that the court had a right to direct the jury to reconsider their verdict before it had been recorded, and it was his duty to do so if satisfied that there had been a probable mistake. People v. Bush, 3 Park. Crim. Rep. 552.

Where, upon an indictment for assault and battery, it was discovered before the court received and entered the verdict of the jury, and at once suggested, that there was a mistake and misapprehension on the part of the jury, of which fact they became presently conscious upon given explanation and thereon returned for further consideration of their verdict, corrected the error and rendered a verdict of guilty, it was held such verdict was correctly received. State v. Shelly, 98 N. C. 673.

Where the prisoner was indicted for robbery, and with murder while in the commission of the robbery, a verdict, guilty as charged in the first count of the indictment, was refused by the court who instructed the jury to further deliberate, whereupon they returned a verdict, "We, the jury, on the issue joined, find the defendant guilty as he stands charged in the indictment" which verdict was received and excepted to by the defendant, the court held such last judgment was not error as, although the first verdict was sufficient to entitle the court to sentence the prisoner, yet the proper course was for the court to endeavor to obtain a verdict responding to both counts and that course was pursued. Jackson v. State, 39 Ohio St. 37.

Where the verdict in an indictment for murder in the first degree, was, "Guilty in manner and form as they stand indicted," there being no finding as to the degree of the crime, and before such verdict was actually recorded or the jury left the box, the court sent them back to their room with instructions to find the degree, and they returned a verdict of "guilty of murder in the first degree," and upon being polled each returned the same verdict, which was duly recorded and the jury dis-

The common-law procedure in reference to delivering verdicts by juries has been relaxed somewhat in modern practice, but still there must be a substantial compliance with such formalities as have been long in use, as form in such cases becomes substance. Anonymous, 63 Me. 596; State v. Fentason, 78 Me. 495; State v. McCormick, 84 Me. 566; Com. v. Roby, 13 Pick. 496; Givens v. State, and Com. v. Tobin, supra. By the common-law procedure, then, the verdict of the jury was orally pronounced in open court, then recorded by the clerk, and affirmed by the jury, which was done by that officer saying to them to hearken to their verdict as recorded by the court, and repeating to them what had been taken down for record. At any time before the verdict was recorded, the prisoner had the right to have the jury polled in order to ascertain whether or not the verdict as given was unanimous, and in the absence of a polling, any member of the jury had the right, sua sponte, to recede from the verdict as agreed on at any time before it was recorded. As the jury had the right to depart from any finding before it was recorded and affirmed by them, the only complete verdict in charged, the court held such verdict valid. Com. v. Nicely, 180 Pa. 261.

Where a jury was instructed that their verdict should fix the term of imprisonment at a certain number of years, which charge the judge discovered was erroneous and sent the jury out again, when they fixed a longer period, whereupon the judge entered the verdict for the term first returned by the jury and pronounced a judgment thereon, it was held no error. Henslie v. State, 8 Hielsk. 202.

Where a verdict, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged in the indictment, and assess the penalty of five years' confinement in the state penitentiary," was read as such by the clerk of the court on the coming in of the jury, but in the verdict as written by the jury on the back of an indictment and copied into the minutes of the court, and as there found, instead of the word "guilty" the word "guily" was used, the "t" being omitted, the prosecuting counsel filing an affidavit of the juror who wrote the verdict, explaining the mistake as accidental, being written in the dark, or so near the dark that he could scarcely see to write, it was held that the validity of the verdict was not impaired, nor was there sufficient ground for disturbing the conviction, and that the verdict was sufficiently intelligible to preclude any reasonable doubt as to its meaning. Curry v. State, 7 Tex. App. 91.

Where the defendant was convicted of theft, and punishment assessed at confinement in the state penitentiary for a term of ten years, the verdict was, "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty and assess his punishment at ten years in the penitentiary," and the judge, without reading aloud, stated to the counsel on both sides, the defendant being present, that there was no mistaking the intention of the jury, but that the verdict was not altogether as formal as it ought to be and directed the jury's attention to the informality; counsel on both sides offering no exception, the word "confinement" being omitted and subsequently the jury returned their verdict,—accordingly the court held the judgment ought not to be reversed, the action of the defendant's counsel being a virtual assent to the course pursued, and for the further reason that the verdict was sufficient as first brought in by the jury, the course pursued by the court being permissible under article 686 of the Revised Code of Criminal Procedure. Jones v. State, 7 Tex. App. 103.

Where the indictment charged the prisoner and two others jointly with murder in the second degree, and assessed the punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for ninety-nine years, such verdict being informal as to the punishment and contrary to the charge of the court, and not such a verdict as the court could receive, it was held not only proper but the duty of the court to refuse to receive the verdict, and to call the attention of the jury to the charge of the court and send them out again to consider of their verdict. Taylor v. State, 14 Tex. App. 340.

23 L. R. A.

Where in an indictment for murder the jury returned a verdict of murder in the first degree, assessing the punishment at ninety-nine years confinement in the penitentiary, which the court refused, calling their attention to the charge upon the punishment, it was held there was no error, but the proper practice was pursued. Roberts v. State (Tex.), March 4, 1891.

Where the verdict of a jury convicted the defendant of "theft of twenty dollars, and assessed his punishment at confinement in the penitentiary for thirty years," the foreman requesting the judge to have the same put in proper form, whereupon the district attorney wrote, "We, the jury find the defendant guilty of robbery as charged in the indictment and assess his punishment at ten years' confinement in the state penitentiary," which verdict as amended was signed by the foreman, read to the jury who answered that it was their verdict, the jury being polled each returning a like answer, it was held that under the statute as well as at common law, the verdict could be amended and such verdict as amended was legal. Robinson v. State, 23 Tex. App. 315.

In an indictment for theft, the jury found the defendants guilty and assessed their fine at twenty-five years, and the court refused the verdict and instructed them to further consider, and after returning they handed in the following, "We, the jury, find the defendants guilty and assess the punishment at two years imprisonment in the state penitentiary," the court held such first verdict informal as not responsive to the issue, and that it was correctly rejected and did not operate as an acquittal. Alston v. State, 41 Tex. 39.

Where, upon an indictment for burglary and theft against two defendants, the jury found both guilty of burglary and sentenced them to the reformatory, but after being informed that one of the defendants could not be sent to the reformatory, retired and returned a verdict sending both to the penitentiary, the court held such verdict good. Trent v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 251.

Where the prisoner was indicted for felony and the jury agreed upon their verdict, writing the same out in the jury room, the same being read in open court as the verdict, and amended by the clerk in open court before the jury was discharged, in a point immaterial, and before such amended verdict was read, a juror being taken sick retired to the jury room, the amended verdict being read and assented to by only eleven jurors, such verdict was held annulable and ought to be disregarded, not being the verdict of a full jury; until the assent of the jury is expressed the verdict is not perfect. Com. v. Gibson, 2 Va. Cas. 70.

Where, upon an indictment for maliciously stabbing with intent to maim, disfigure, disable and kill, the verdict as first rendered was, "We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty as charged in the indictment, but we find said defendant guilty of unlawful cutting," the court directed the state attorney to put the verdict in proper form and it was written as follows: "We, the jury, find the dea case was that recorded by the court. 10 Bacon, Abr. title Verdict (G) p. 315; Coffee v. Groover, 20 Fla. 64; Jones v. State, 97 Ala. 77; Wright v. Phillips, 2 G. Greene, 191; Bishop v. Mugler, 83 Kan. 145; Burk v. Com. 5 J. J. Marsh. 675; State v. Walters, 15 La. Ann. 648; Edden v. Thompson, 2 Harr. & G. 81; Ford v. State, 13 Md. 514; Lawrence v. Stearns, 11 Pick. 501; Com. v. Dowling, 114 Mass. 259; Com. v. Carrington, 116 Mass. 87; Lord v. State, 16 N. H. 825, 41 Am. Dec. 729; People v. Bush, 3 Park. Crim. Rep. 552; Dornick v. Reichenback, 10 Serg. & R. 84.

It may be well for us to say here, in order to guard against a misapprehension, that we do not determine what is a sufficient recording of the verdict returned by a jury. The practice prevalent in this state is for the jury in all cases to write out their finding, and after announcing in open court that they have agreed thereon, William Davis, not guilty of maliciously cutting, stabbing, and wounding . . . as charged in the within indictment, but we do find him guilty of unlawfully cutting, stabbing, and wounding . . . with intent and by means whereof to maim, disfigure, disable, and kill . . .," and afterwards the jury being polled and one dissenting, it was held that the court rightly directed such jury to retire to their room and further consider the verdict, and that the rendition of the same verdict by the jury after such retirement and reconsideration was no error. State v. Davis, 31 W. Va. 300.

Where, upon an indictment for murder the verdict of the jury convicted the prisoner of manslaughter in the first degree, whereupon the court sent the jury out to find another verdict and refused to take the first the prosecution protesting, it was held that the defendant who had requested such step could not subsequently take advantage of it. Loew v. State, 60 Wis. 559.

Where, in an indictment for forgery, the jury were unable to agree and returned into court, and being polled it was found they agreed upon a verdict of guilty under the first two counts, but could not agree as to the third and fourth counts, when they were again sent out and the court permitted a nolle prosequi to be entered upon the third and fourth counts, and the jury being informed thereof returned guilty upon the remaining counts, it was held a mere error in practice, not affecting substantial rights or amounting to a deprivation of the liberty without due process of law. Cross v. North Carolina, 132 U. S. 132, 38 L. ed. 238.

IV. Sealed verdicts.

Where a jury have been allowed to separate and return a sealed verdict, and upon reassembling the verdict is found to be defective, the jury may be required to retire to their room and make the proper amendments or corrections. Pehlman v. State, 115 Ind. 181.

By permitting a jury to separate after they have agreed upon a verdict, and before it is returned into court, nothing is waived either as to the power or duty of the court to have the verdict amended if it prove defective, or as to the right of either party to object to its reception as an incomplete or imperfect verdict. Ibid.

The above rule is said to be applicable to criminal as well as to civil cases. Ibid.

A sealed verdict having been returned by the jury who retired the evening previous, the foreman was allowed to amend the same as read by the clerk, by inserting therein the word "not" before the word "guilty," after which amendment by the foreman the verdict was affirmed and recorded. It was held, the correction being merely one of a verbal error, thereby reducing the verdict to form and making it indicate truly the result to which the jury had arrived, there was no error. Beal v. Cunningham, 42 Mo. 382.

Where the jury upon retiring at the adjournment of the court for the day, were instructed that when they had agreed upon a verdict they might seal it up and separate, and they agreed upon a verdict and separated, during the night, but had not reduced it to writing, the indictment alone being returned in a sealed envelope, the judge directed them to retire and reduce their verdict to writing, instructing them to return it as agreed upon and without further deliberation on their part, which they did, the court held the verdict invalid. Com. v. Dornia, 108 Mass. 438.

Where, in an action of slander, the judge directed the jury to bring in a sealed verdict, and gave permission to separate after agreeing on the same, no objection being taken by the parties to such direction they will be deemed to have assented thereto, and therefore such a verdict will not be set aside for irregularity where the jury separated after agreeing upon such verdict, and on coming into court one of the jurors dissented, but subsequently the jury being sent out again, agreed to the verdict as originally rendered. Douglas v. Tousey, 2 Wend. 352, 20 Am. Dec. 614.

V. Effect of discharge.

With the assent of the jury to the verdict as recorded their functions with respect to the case cease, and the trial is closed, and after the verdict is received and the jury discharged, the control of the jury and of the court over such judgment is at an end. People v. Lee Yune Chong, 94 Cal. 373.

The office of a juror is thereby discharged. Ibid. The case is then beyond their control. Williams v. People, 44 Ill. 478.

And they cannot be recalled to alter or amend it. Levells v. State, 32 Ark. 585; Sargent v. State, 11 Ohio, 472; Mills v. Com. 7 Leigh, 751; Settle v. Alison, 8 Ga. 201, 52 Am. Dec. 338; Waller v. State, 40 Ala. 325; Brister v. State, 26 Ala. 122, followed.

The jury having become accessible to the parties and subject to their influence. State v. McBride, 19 Mo. 239.

And having had opportunity to intermingle with outsiders about the case. Ellis v. State, 27 Tex. App. 190.

Consequently they cannot afterwards add anything to or subtract anything from the verdict. Allen v. State, 85 Wis. 22.

So the court cannot alter it. People v. Lee Yune Chong, and Sargent v. State, supra.

No matter whether it has been received by a single judge or in open court. Sargent v. State, supra.

Such a course would jeopardize the jealous guards with which the law has surrounded jurors to insure the pure administration of justice and to protect the citizen. Ibid.

Yet if the jury have not separated, and as a body are still in the presence of the court, the order discharging is a venire, and yet in the breast of the court and may be recalled. Levells v. State, supra.

Where error has been committed by the jury, either by returning a verdict against the wrong party, or if not so, for a larger or smaller sum than they intended, and those where, if the amendment or alteration should be increased or diminished, or the verdict reversed, the rights of the parties would be immediately affected and changed, but after the jury had by their separation become accessible to the parties and subject to their influence, there can be no amendment. State v. Mc upon their verdict, to hand the paper to the clerk, and after it is read aloud by that officer, the jury affirm it, and from this paper the permanent record is made. The point for decision in the present case does not make it necessary for us to pass upon the propriety of the practice referred to, as it is clear from the record that the first finding of the jury was not accepted by the court for record. The judge refused to receive the verdict when given by the jury, and they were instructed to retire and present a verdict in proper form. Thereupon they retired and brought in another and different verdict. The first verdict was never recorded, nor does it appear from the record before us that it had ever been affirmed as the unanimous finding of the jury. The jury having retired and brought in a different verdict which was recorded, it cannot be held that the first is the verdict of the jury, or that Bride, supra; Little v. Larrabee, 3 Me. 38, 11 Am. Dec. 43.

When the jury found their verdict, separated, dispersed, and mingled with the community at large for three days, without being under a charge from the court not to converse themselves, nor permit others to converse with them or in their presence about the case, it would be affording every facility for operating on the minds of the jury, and be highly prejudicial to the fair administration of justice, to allow them to reassemble and render a fresh verdict. Williams v. People, 44 Ill. 478.

Where upon an indictment for burglary and grand larceny, upon returning into court the jury handed the clerk the verdict, which was read in open court in the defendant's absence, and the jury discharged, two of the jurors having left the court-room, when the court discovered the defendant was not present, and the court then had the jury recalled within five minutes after the discharge, and the jury then again rendered the verdict of guilty, the court held such verdict void, the court stating that it would be a dangerous practice, after the jury had dispersed among the audience, to hold that the persons composing such jury should be reassembled as such to render a verdict after they had been discharged. Cook v. State, 60 Ala. 30, 31 Am. Rep. 31.

Where, in an indictment for murder, the jury returned a verdict as follows: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, S. Wiggins, foreman," such verdict being read by the clerk, the jury polled, each answering that it was his verdict, the judge discharged the jury, but before they had all left the box, all being in view of the judge and under his control, they were called back to take their seats again without having mingled with the bystanders, and the judge pointed out its defect, there being two counts in the indictment, and gave directions to amend by showing upon which of the counts they found, the court held there was no discharge of the jury and therefore a second verdict finding the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, as charged in the first count of the indictment upon which the jury were polled, each answering that it was his verdict, was not error. Levells v. State, 32 Ark. 365.

Where, in an indictment of murder the jury returned a verdict "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty and fix the penalty at imprisonment for life," such verdict being declared and duly recorded, the jurors discharged and left the court-room and mingled with spectators; subsequently the judge ordered the jury called back into the jury box and told the clerk to make an order as follows, that the order discharging the jury in the case of People v. Lee Yune Chong, be set aside and vacated, and also directed the verdict as recorded, to be set aside and vacated,—the jurors being again brought together and instructed that their verdict was informal and they must find the degree of the crime, when they returned a verdict, "We the jury, find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree and fix the penalty imprisonment for life,"—the court held such verdict invalid, the court having, by the discharge and disbursement of the jury after the record of the verdict, lost control of them. People v. Lee Yune Chong, 94 Cal. 379.

Where a verdict was imperfect by reason of its not finding all the issues submitted, and the court four days after it had been received and recorded and the jury dispersed permitted the jury to reassemble and state what they intended to find by their verdict and to amend it accordingly, the court held such amendment invalid, the jury having been discharged from the further consideration, having mingled with the parties, the witnesses and their fellow citizens generally, ascertaining perhaps the wishes of one of the parties, the intention of the witnesses, or the state of public opinion in relation to their verdict. Settle v. Allison, 8 Ga. 201, 52 Am. Dec. 398.

Where the jury had rendered an imperfect verdict by not finding all the issues submitted to them, which was received and recorded, and the jury discharged from further consideration of the cause, it is error in the court after the expiration of four days to reassemble the jury and amend the verdict according to what the jury then stated that it was their intention to find, such intention not being shown upon the face of the verdict. Mitchell v. State, 22 Ga. 211, 236, 68 Am. Dec. 493; Settle v. Allison, supra.

In Jackson v. State, 45 Ga. 196, it was held that a consent on the part of counsel for the prisoner that the jury might return their verdict to the clerk, implied a consent that they might disperse after doing so, and that if their verdict was for manslaughter not specifying the grade, it was not error in the court to reassemble them and submit the verdict to them again, in order that they might specify the grade of manslaughter, unless the prisoner could show that his case had been prejudiced by reason of the dispersion.

Where the jury returned a verdict finding defendant guilty, and when in the box and before the verdict was received, the defendant's counsel was asked if he desired to poll the jury and replied in the negative, and upon being asked if he knew of any reason why the verdict should not be received, also replied in the negative, and the verdict was then received and read, and the jurors in the box were then discharged, and it subsequently appeared to the court that their names had not been called over when the verdict was delivered, and they were reassembled some five or ten minutes afterwards, the oath administered, and each juror sworn to the fact that he was in the box when the verdict was read; that he heard it read and found the defendant guilty of murder, and that he had agreed to such verdict.—It was held that the statement not only acquitted the judge of error, but made manifest the totā causa difference between that case and that of Settle v. Allison, and Mitchell v. State, supra.

Where, in a prosecution for larceny the jury retired to construct their verdict, under an agreement of the counsel that they might seal the same, place it in the hands of the officer having charge of them, and separate, the clerk received the same and read it the next day in court, when it was it has any validity whatever. The case was still in the hands of the jury upon their second retirement, and, not being bound by their former action, they were at liberty to review the case and bring in an entirely new verdict. Whether the action of the court in refusing to have the first verdict recorded in the proper way, was unauthorized interference with the province of the jury, is another question which will presently be considered, but confining ourselves to the effect of the first finding as given by the jury, it cannot be affirmed on this record that it is of any validity whatever. This being the case we must turn our attention to the objections urged against the verdict that was accepted and recorded by the court.

The refusal of the court to receive the first verdict, and the acceptance and record of the second one, are alleged as errors in the motion for a new trial. It is stated in Wharton's found defective in not finding the value of the property stolen, and was therefore refused, the court directing the sheriff to recall the jury, require them to come into court and amend the verdict, which three days after their finding and delivery of the verdict they did, and under the court's direction returned a verdict which was defective, and again retired, and subsequently brought in a verdict upon which a judgment was rendered, it was held error. Williams v. People, 44 Ill. 478.

Where, in an indictment for murder, the jury returned a verdict, "Both guilty of capital punishment," which was signed by the foreman, and the court again ordered the jury polled and each juror then answered, "Both guilty of capital punishment," which verdict the court ordered recorded, remanded the prisoner to jail and discharged the jury without the slightest effort to call the jury's attention to the absurdity of their verdict, or affording them opportunity for correction or explanation, the court held such verdict could not sustain the death sentence, the verdict convicting the accused of no offense known to the law or charged in the indictment. State v. Foster, 36 La. Ann. 857.

Where the defendant was indicted upon two counts, the first charging him with uttering and publishing a counterfeit bank bill, and the second with an attempt to utter and publish the bill, the jury returned a sealed verdict, after the adjournment of the court for the day, which was delivered to one of the associate judges and the jury discharged, and upon opening the verdict next morning it appeared to be signed by the jurors and was, "We, the jurors, find the defendant guilty on the first count," upon which the prisoner's counsel objected to an entry on the second count against the court's suggestion that not guilty should be entered upon that count, the court recalled the jury and asked if they found the prisoner not guilty on the second count but guilty on the first; the jury's answer being that they considered finding him guilty on the first count was finding him guilty also on the second, and that they intended a general verdict of guilty, whereupon the court ordered a general verdict of guilty on the indictment to be entered, it was held error. Sargent v. State, 11 Ohio, 472.

There can be no correction or alteration of a verdict, after it has been received and recorded and the jury dismissed. Walters v. Jenkins, 13 Serg. & R. 414, 16 Am. Dec. 585.

Where, after the verdict had been rendered and the jury discharged from the case, they were re-impaneled the next day for the purpose of giving them instructions, inadvertently omitted before as to their power to recommend to mercy, the court held there was no authority for such proceeding. State v. Dawkins, 32 S. C. 17.

In such a case the second verdict would be an absolute nullity, and the judgment thereupon rendered without legal foundation. Ibid.

Where, upon a conviction for the theft of a hog, the jury found the defendant guilty and assessed his fine at five ($5) dollars, were discharged, left the court and dispersed, but in five minutes afterwards upon discovering that the verdict was fatally defective, as not assessing some imprisonment in the county jail as required by the statute in case of theft of hogs under twenty ($20) dollars in value, they were recalled and reconvened in the courtroom against defendant's objections, and verbally instructed to find a verdict of imprisonment as part of the punishment, and to retire and consider the verdict, the court held that their subsequent verdict finding the defendant guilty and assessing his punishment at a fine of a less amount than the first verdict, and one day in the county jail, could not be received and was invalid. Ellis v. State, 37 Tex. App. 190.

Where the information charged that the defendant "did wilfully, feloniously, and of his malice aforethought, kill and murder the deceased," and the jury returned a general verdict of guilty, the court held that such defective verdict could not afterwards be corrected, either by the court itself or by reassembling the jury and ascertaining from them what degree of murder they intended to find, the conviction and sentence being founded upon the verdict of the jury and not that of the court. Allen v. State, 36 Wis. 22.

If the jury in a misdemeanor are allowed without consent of the defendant to separate after the case is finally committed to them by the court and before the verdict is returned, the verdict cannot be recorded unless it clearly appears that the verdict was not influenced by anything that took place during the separation. Com. v. Carrington, 116 Mass. 37.

See also "Sealed verdicts," supra.

VI. Effect of recording.

When the jury are asked if they have agreed on their verdict, and they respond that they have and that their foreman shall say for them, and the foreman speaking for the whole panel, find a proper verdict and the same is recorded, the whole panel being called upon to hearken to it as the court has it recorded, no objection being made either by the jury or counsel for the state or prisoner, such verdict is proper as given through the foreman, being the verdict of the whole panel, and it is too late, after the record of it under such circumstances, for any of them to alter or amend it, and it is also too late to poll the panel. Ford v. State, 12 Md. 514, 546.

Where the defendant was charged with keeping and maintaining a tenement for the illegal sale of liquors, the foreman adding to the word "guilty" the words "under the instruction of the court" and the clerk entered only the word "guilty," and read to the jury the verdict "guilty" adding the words "So gentlemen you all say," a motion to the court to instruct the clerk to record the verdict as returned by the jury with the words added by the foreman was properly refused.

When all possibility of improper influences is excluded by conclusive evidence, that the jury arrive at and reduce to writing before their separation the same result which was afterwards in open court, the verdict may be received and recorded. Com. v. Carrington, 116 Mass. 37.

Criminal Pleading & Practice, section 751, that "if there is any informality, uncertainty, or impropriety about a verdict, the court may require the jury to amend it before they separate." And it may be stated generally that when a jury returns an informal, insensible, or a repugnant verdict, or one that is not responsive to the issues submitted, they may be directed by the court to reconsider it and bring in a proper verdict. Thus, when the verdict is guilty as charged, where the indictment is for murder, and the statute requires the degree of the offense to be ascertained in the finding of the jury, the court may tell the jury that their verdict is not in proper form, and that they must retire and designate in which degree they find the prisoner guilty. People v. Bonney, 19 Cal. 426. And so the court may intercede and have the jury correct any informal or insensible verdict. State v. Waterman, 1 Nev.

VII. Special verdict.

There would seem to be no reason why a special verdict should not be rendered in a criminal prosecution. Indeed such verdicts have been upheld. State v. Wallace, 25 N. C. 196; State v. Moore, 29 N. C. 228; State v. Watts, 22 N. C. 309; State v. Curtis, 71 N. C. 50; State v. Bray, 89 N. C. 480; Com. v. Call, 21 Pick. 509, 32 Am. Dec. 284.

By section 1156 of the California Penal Code (Hittell's Cal. Codes and Statutes, vol. 2, p. 1342, § 14156), if the jury do not, in a special verdict, pronounce affirmatively or negatively on the facts necessary to enable the court to give judgment, or if they find the evidence of facts merely, and not the conclusions of fact, from the evidence as established to their satisfaction, the court must order a new trial.

Under section 1156 of the California Code of Criminal Procedure, a new trial must be ordered in the case of a defective special verdict.

Section 1386 of Hill's Annotated Code of Oregon, vol. 1, page 807, contains like provision.

By section 405 of Levisse's Dakota Codes, ed. of 1885, page 1234, if the jury render a verdict which is neither a general nor a special verdict, the court may, with proper instructions as to the law, direct them to reconsider it, and it cannot be recorded until it be rendered in some form from which it can be clearly understood what is the intent of the jury, whether to render a general verdict, or to find the facts specially, and to leave the judgment to the court.

By section 4468 of the Iowa Code of Criminal Procedure (McClain's Anno. Code, vol. 2, ed. 1888, p. 1674, § 5868) if the jury render a verdict which is neither a general nor a special verdict, the court may direct them to reconsider it, and it shall not be recorded until it be rendered in some form from which it can be clearly understood what is the intent of the jury, whether to render a general verdict or to find the facts specially and leave the judgment to the court.

By section 4478 of the Iowa Code of Criminal Procedure (McClain's Anno. Code, vol. 2, ed. 1888, p. 1676, § 5873) if the jury do not, in a special verdict, pronounce affirmatively or negatively on the facts necessary to enable the court to give judgment, or if they find the evidence of facts merely, and not the conclusions of fact from the evidence as established to their satisfaction, the court may order them to retire for further deliberation.

Where the verdict of a jury partook of the nature of a special verdict, and did not pronounce affirmatively or negatively on the facts necessary to enable the court to give judgment, it was held that the order should have been for the jury to "retire for further deliberation." State v. Arthur, 21 Iowa, 322.

It was also competent for the court in such a case to set aside the verdict and order a new trial. Ibid.

Where the prisoner was indicted for the crime of burglary, and the jury found him guilty of entering the house in the night-time, as stated in the indictment, and recommended him to the mercy of the court, the court held such verdict special and 23 L. R. A.

failed to respond to all the facts necessary to the rendition of a judgment, and that a direction to the jury to reconsider it was correct. State v. Maxwell, 42 Iowa, 208.

In such cases there must be a verdict de novo. Com. v. Call, 21 Pick. 509, 32 Am. Dec. 284.

And the same is the practice under the New York Code of Criminal Procedure, § 443. Silvernail's Annotated Penal Code and Code of Criminal Procedure, ed. 1893, p. 174; Donnan's Annotated Code of Criminal Procedure, ed. 1896, p. 178; Cook's Annotated Code of Criminal Procedure, ed. 1892, p. 178.

See also §§ 447, 448, of the New York Code of Criminal Procedure, the former of which gives the court the power to direct a reconsideration of the verdict in cases where the jury have mistaken the law, and the latter points out in what cases the court has power to direct their reconsideration of the verdict.

In Miller v. People, 25 Hun, 473, where the prisoner was indicted for feloniously receiving stolen property, knowing it to have been stolen, and the jury found the prisoner guilty of receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen, it was held not to be a general verdict of guilty, but a special verdict which could not be enlarged by indictment.

Such a verdict cannot be held to mean more than is expressed by it. Miller v. People, supra.

In the above case it was held that such a verdict did not amount to a finding that the prisoner feloniously received the property. Ibid.

In State v. Duncan, 2 McCord, L. 129, a special verdict was rendered upon which the defendant sought his discharge upon the ground that by the finding of the jury he was not guilty, and the court held the verdict defective and awarded a verdict de novo.

So where, upon an indictment for unlawful banking a special verdict was found, that the defendant "did pay out the paper" in question, it was held that the court could add nothing to his finding, but could only draw the legal conclusion from the facts found, it not being competent for the court to infer facts, not inferred by the jury, and set forth, especially in a criminal case. People v. Wells, 8 Mich. 104.

To such verdicts the maxim, de non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est ratio et iudicium, applies. People v. Wells, supra.

In Jones v. State, 2 Swan, 399, when the defendant appealed from a special verdict, it was held that the court could supply no defects in the statement made by the jury on the record, by any indictment or application whatsoever, even though circumstances might be sufficient to warrant an inference or presumption of the existence of the matter omitted.

The court can deduce no conclusion by way of indictment or presumption, from the facts stated in the verdict, in order to supply the omission of a material fact not stated. Jones v. State, supra.

VII. English decisions.

Where upon a trial for larceny, one of the jurors by mistake delivered a verdict of not guilty, which 543; Cook v. State, 26 Ga. 598; Gipson v. State, 38 Miss. 295; Nemo v. Com. 2 Gratt. 558; Levells v. State, 82 Ark. 585; Reg. v. Voddén, 6 Cox, C. C. 226; Reg. v. Meany, 9 Cox, C. C. 281.

While it is entirely clear that the trial judge may send a jury back to the consultation room for the purpose of correcting their finding as to the matters of informality, uncertainty, and where the issue has not been passed upon by them, yet the judge must not even suggest the alteration of a verdict in substance. The action of the judge in the correction of verdicts should be exercised with great caution. The old practice allowed a greater exercise of authority by him over verdicts than is now permissible. 1 Chitty, Crim. L. 648; McConnell v. Linton, 4 Watts, 857. The judge must not throw the weight of his influence into the deliberations of the jury as to matters exclusively within their province. Garner v. State, 23 Fla. 118; Pinson v. State, Id. 735.

Can it be said that the action of the judge in was entered by the clerk on the minutes, and also by the chairman on his note book, and the prisoner was thereupon discharged, when the other juror interfering said the verdict was, "guilty," the prisoner being brought back and the chairman asked the jury what their verdict was, when all pronounced "guilty," and that they were unanimous, it was held that such verdict was correct, as too long a time had not elapsed since the first verdict was entered. Reg. v. Voddén, 6 Cox, C. C. 223, Dears, C. C. 229, 28 L. J. M. C. 7, 17 Jur. 1014.

Where, upon an indictment containing two counts for assault, and unlawfully and maliciously inflicting grievous bodily harm, and also a common assault, the jury found the verdict of guilty of an aggravated assault without premeditation, and that it was done under the influence of passion, whereupon the verdict of guilty was directed to be entered upon the first set of counts, the court held that such verdict was rightly entered. Reg. v. Sparrow, 8 Cox, C. C. 393, Bell, C. C. 393, 39 L. J. M. C. 93, 5 Jur. N. S. 1123, 3 L. T. N. S. 1145, 9 Week. Rep. 58.

A judge both in a civil and criminal court has a perfect right, and sometimes it is his bounden duty, to tell the jury to reconsider their verdict. Reg. v. Meany, 9 Cox, C. C. 231, Leigh & C. C. C. 213, 32 L. J. M. C. 24, 8 Jur. N. S. 1161, 7 L. T. N. S. 393, 11 Week. Rep. 41.

He may send them back any number of times to reconsider their findings. Ibid.

The judge is not bound to record the first verdict, unless the jury insists upon its being recorded. Ibid.

If they find another verdict, that is the true verdict. Ibid.

Where, upon an indictment for obtaining goods by false pretenses, the jury found the defendant guilty, but added that they thought he meant to pay for the goods, and the court refused the verdict telling the jury that they must find the prisoner guilty or not guilty, whereupon the jury after further consideration found the prisoner guilty, held the verdict was correct. Ibid.

In Rex v. Keat, 1 Salk. 47, it is held that a verdict, general or special, might be amended by the notes of the clerk of assize, but this was in civil not in criminal cases. Bold's Case, 1 Salk. 73, to the same effect.

Where, in a prosecution for perjury, the judge instructed the jury that he did not see how, on the evidence, the defendant could be convicted upon the first count, but left it to the jury whether there was not a strong case on the second, and the jury after retiring, found not guilty on the first for want of sufficient evidence, and guilty on the second, such verdict being duly entered, subsequently the judge having no note of his summing up, made one having a distinct remembrance of it, and no doubt of the jury's intention, and allowed the postea to be amended by entering guilty on the first and third assignments and not guilty on the second, it was held that the amendment was bad, there being no note or other document to amend by. Reg. v. Virrier, 12 Ad. & El. 317, 4 Perry & D. 161.

In the above case it was further stated that if there had been a note or other document in existence, the verdict might on proper grounds have been amended, even in a criminal trial. Ibid.

Where the defendant was indicted for forgery of a bond upon which a special verdict was found, and after being drawn up the prosecution moved for leave to amend the nisi prius roll by the record of the indictment which was right, alleging that the record of nisi prius had been made up by the clerk in court of the defendant who might be suspected to have made it wrong on purpose, the court inclined to the opinion that such verdict was amendable at common law as by a fault committed by the defendant who ought not to take advantage of it. Rex v. Hayce, 2 Strange, 844.

Where a jury returned a verdict, "Guilty of the printing and publishing only," upon which the officer entered a verdict of guilty literally, without adding the usual words of reference to connect the verdict with the matters to which it related, by a motion made to fill up the formal words of reference and to omit the word "only," the court was of the opinion that the first was a technical omission of the clerk and ought to be set right, but that the word "only" must stand in the verdict. Rex v. Woodfall, 5 Burr. 2661.

Where the prisoner was prosecuted for the stealing of a bank note, the jury retired and returned saying that they had found the prisoner guilty of having the note in his possession, but how he got it they could not say, whereupon the judge asked if they thought he could have found it three weeks after he was in company with the person whose note it was, when one of them said "Yes," and the judge then ordered an acquittal and a verdict of not guilty was recorded, upon which some of the jury intimated that the jurymen who answered had no authority from his companions to give such answer, and that they differed therefrom, and were thereupon directed to retire and subsequently returned a verdict of guilty, the court held that such mistake in the former verdict might be corrected, and the conviction was therefore proper. Rex v. Parkin, 1 Moody, C. C. 45.

The judge has no power, under the rules of the Supreme Court of 1875, after leaving a question to the jury, to give a judgment contrary to their finding on a question left to them, and in such a case a new trial will be ordered. Parkins v. Dangerfield, 61 L. T. N. S. 353.

Where the prisoner was convicted on an indictment for obtaining goods upon false pretenses, and pleaded guilty to previous conviction and was sentenced to seven years' penal servitude, it was held that the sentence was wrong and was amended by reducing the sentence to five years' penal servitude. Reg. v. Horn, 43 L. T. N. S. 273, 15 Cox, C. C. 206.

Under Statute 11 George IV. and 1 William IV., chap. 70, § 9, in trials for felony or misdemeanor on a queen's bench record, the judgment may be pronounced at the assizes and has the effect of a judgment in the court above, except a rule be granted for a new trial in the first six days of the term, or for an amendment of the judgment. Rex v. Lloyd, 4 Barn. & Ad. 135.

the case before us improperly influenced the jury in returning the verdict upon which judgment was entered? The first finding brought into court was for manslaughter in the first degree, and the judge refused to receive it, and told the jury in effect that it was not in such form as that the court could receive it, there being no degrees in manslaughter, and that they must retire and present a verdict in proper form. We cannot say that the judge, in what he said to the jury, suggested to them the substance of what should be their verdict, as he expressly stated that the verdict was defective in form. The defect as to form is pointed out, it being a finding for manslaughter in the first degree when there were no degrees in manslaughter. The direction was to retire and present a verdict in proper form. There is nothing here to indicate the character of verdict to be returned, except that one for manslaughter in the first degree was not in proper form. If there was any error on the part of the judge, it was in refusing to receive the first verdict as presented and in not proceeding to affirm it in the proper way. It is of course true that when a complete formal verdict is returned by the jury the court has no discretion in the matter and must proceed to affirm it. In the case before us the finding of manslaughter in the first degree was technically informal, as there are no degrees of manslaughter, although we are of the opinion that such a verdict was in legal effect one of manslaughter, and the court might have regarded the words "in the first degree" surplusage and proceeded to affirm the verdict. We cannot say, however, that the court erred in referring the matter to the jury for correction in the particular mentioned, and when this was done they had the right to reconsider the case and bring in a new verdict. What is said disposes of all objections to the verdict.

The remaining point presented by counsel for plaintiff in error relates to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict. There is no question about the fact that the accused shot and killed the deceased, but it is insisted that the testimony does not justify the inference that the killing was done with a premeditated design to effect the death of the deceased.

A majority of the court are impressed with the view that the testimony in the record before us is not sufficient to sustain the verdict of murder in the first degree. As the case has to be tried again, it is deemed best to omit any discussion of the testimony in this opinion.

The judgment is reversed, and a new trial awarded; and it will be ordered accordingly.

Where a defendant was sentenced at the assizes, and applied to the court to amend the judgment by diminishing the punishment upon affidavits in mitigation, or without showing a special defect or matter not deducible at the assizes, the court disallowed the amendment. Id.

In Reg. v. Nott, 4 Q. B. 768, Car. & M. 288, Dav. &

M. 1, 12 L. J. M. C. 143, a judgment on a record of the queen's bench was pronounced at the assizes under the Statute, 2 George IV. and 1 William IV., chap. 70, § 9; it was held that the court might amend the judgment by ordering it to be arrested.

E. W.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

Heil J. EVANS, Committee of Evan Morgan, v.

Omer B. JOHNSON et al., Thornton Pickenpangh, Impleaded, etc., Appt.

(.....W. Va.....)

*1. A county court or its clerk cannot appoint a committee for a person as in-

*Headnotes by BRANNON, P.

NOTE.—Necessity of notice of lunacy proceeding to the alleged lunatic.

It appears, strangely enough, that the statutes in some states providing for inquisition to determine the fact of lunacy are entirely silent as to the necessity for any notice of the proceeding to the person whose status is to be adjudicated. The courts have in some cases required such notice even when the statute did not provide for it, but in other cases have dispensed with any notice to the person in question, and in one or two instances seemed to have regarded it unnecessary to give notice to any one representing him.

Thus in South Carolina an early case declared that no notice was necessary to the party who was found of unsound mind. Medlock v. Cogburn, 1 Rich. Eq. 477.

That notice to a lunatic is not required on an application to the probate court to appoint a guardian is said in Bates Ohio Digest, to have been decided by the Pickaway district court in the case of Davidson v. Tipton, 10 Week. L. Bull. 1021, sane without notice to him. Such an appointment is void, and confers no authority.

23 L. R. A.

2. Until chapter 87, Acts 1891 (Code 1891, chap. 118, § 1), a committee could not resign.

3. No time bars the right, either under the statute of limitations or presumption of payment, of a vendor to recover purchase money for land, if he has not parted with the legal title.

4. The statute of limitations has no ap-

In Southern Tier Masonic Relief Assn. v. Loudenbach, 5 N. Y. Supp. 901, it was said in respect to the lack of notice of the inquest to an alleged lunatic "whether or not the notice shall be required in proceedings in rem depends upon the statute. No question of constitutional power is involved. The Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States has nothing to do with it. That amendment restricts the power of the general government but has no effect upon the statutes." But the court seems to have overlooked the fact that due process of law is demanded by the Fourteenth Amendment, which does apply to the states, as well as by the Fifth Amendment and also by the state constitution. It should be said, however, that the effect of the adjudication on the inquisition seems to have been involved in this case only as evidence of the mental capacity of the alleged lunatic at the time of making an appointment of a beneficiary of a mutual benefit certificate, and that the court decided as a matter of fact that he was not insane at that time, so that no decision was actually plication to bar a lien for purchase money reserved in a conveyance of land. Though action on a note given for such purchase money be barred, so as to defeat its collection out of other property of the debtor, the lien against the particular land conveyed is not barred. Presumption of payment from lapse of time and laches, unless repelled and explained, will defeat enforcement of such lien.

(Dent J., dissents from proposition 1.)

(April 4, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendant Pickenpaugh from a decree of the Circuit Court for Monongalia County in favor of complainant in a proceeding brought to enforce a vendor's lien on certain real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Berkshire & Sturgiss, for appellant:

Nothing can call forth courts of equity into activity but conscience, good faith, and reasonable diligence; and when these are wanting the court does nothing.

Harrison v. Gibson, 23 Gratt. 212.

All these are clearly wanting in this case, and, being absent, should be fatal to the plaintiff's pretensions.

Relief has been denied in cases of laches of fourteen years and as low as eight years.

Cranmer v. McSwords, 24 W. Va. 594.

No liens can be predicated on this alleged deed nor otherwise, against the real estate in controversy in the hands of the defendant, Pickenpaugh. In a case like this a lien can only exist where it is retained in a deed. And it is clear enough that there can be no deed without a seal or scroll making it such; both of which, it will be seen, are wanting in the paper referred to purporting to be the deed from Commissioner Hough to the said E. L. Morgan.

Pratt v. Clemens, 4 W. Va. 443; White v. Denman, 16 Ohio, 59.

Messrs. L. V. Keck and Okey Johnson for appellee.

Brannon, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

Evan Morgan owned an interest in a tract of land in Monongalia county. Omer B. Johnson, as his guardian, upon petition obtained from the circuit court of that county an order to sell his ward's interest in the land, and did sell it to Elza L. Morgan, who executed to said guardian two notes for deferred installments of purchase money. Under authority of the order of sale, a special commissioner made to the purchaser a deed conveying said infant's interest in the tract of land, retaining a lien for said notes. Afterwards, when said infant had become of age, the clerk of the county court of Taylor county appointed Hiel J. Evans committee of said Evan Morgan, as an insane person, and said committee brought this chancery suit against said Johnson, Elza L. Morgan, and others for the purpose of charging Johnson as guardian of said Evan Morgan with liability to his ward for the amount of said notes made to him by the purchaser of said interest in said land, because he rendered in favor of an inquisition without notice.

The view expressed by the court in the above case seems to have been taken by other courts in that state, in which the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 2225) is silent as to notice to the alleged lunatic, but provides for notice merely to the husband or wife of such person or to one or more of the relatives or to an overseer or superintendent of the poor "unless sufficient reasons for dispensing therewith are set forth." Thus under this statute it is held that the neglect to give notice to one or more of the relatives of the alleged lunatic of an inquisition, or to show any sufficient reason for dispensing therewith, is merely an irregularity and not jurisdictional. Re Demelt, 27 Hun, 480.

So it was held in Re Rogers, 9 Abb. N. C. 141, that lack of written notice to one of the relatives of a lunatic where he had full knowledge of the proceedings, is a mere irregularity, under N. Y. Code Civ. Proc., § 2225, especially where he participated to some extent in the proceedings, seeming to ignore the necessity of notice to the alleged lunatic himself.

Again in Re Cook, 6 N. Y. Supp. 720, although the necessity of notice to the party himself is not discussed, it is held that jurisdiction in such a case under the New York statute does not depend on notice to all of the next of kin.

In Re Russell, 1 Barb. Ch. 38, 5 L. ed. 290, it was held that where it is evident that an alleged lunatic keeps out of the way to prevent the service of notice of the execution of a commission of lunacy, service at the place where he makes it his home and also at the several places where he would be most likely to receive it, is sufficient, at least where there is evidence that he must have been aware of the existence of this notice.

In Re Tracy, 1 Paige, 580, 2 L. ed. 700, the chancellor L. R. A.

said it was the privilege of a party against whom a commission of lunacy is issued to have notice and to be present at its execution, yet he added that if there were any peculiar circumstances which render it improper or unsafe to give notice to the party, as in some cases of furious madness, the facts should be stated in the application to the court, so that a provision might be inserted in the commission dispensing with the necessity of notice. But it did not appear that any such exceptional case was there presented, and notice would seem to be possible even in case of furious madness although the attendance of the lunatic might not be proper or possible at the hearing.

In Re Petit, 2 Paige, 174, 2 L. ed. 861, in respect to a commission of lunacy for a nonresident, it was said: "The commissioners must also give her due notice of the time and place of executing the commission, that she may attend if she thinks proper to do so."

In Re Lowe, 45 N. Y. S. R. 914, on a motion to discharge a committee appointed without notice to an alleged lunatic, it is said that no sufficient reason seems to have been given for not having served the notice.

Although the provision for notice in N. Y. Code Civ. Proc., § 2225, does not mention notice to the alleged lunatic in person, it is held by the court of appeals in a recent case that "a very clear case should be made before the court should proceed in lunacy proceedings, in the absence of actual personal and written notice to the party, unless such a case is made by the petition or affidavits, and providing for notice to relatives or otherwise in lieu of personal notice, an adjudication in the absence of such notice should be set aside." Re Blewitt, 131 N. Y. 541.

And in a still later case the same court, in Grid- had been chargeable with their collection, and to settle his account as guardian, and also to enforce the lien existing for the notes under said sale and deed to the purchaser, the bill alleging that they had not been paid. The notes were dated December 3, 1868, and this suit to collect them was brought in 1897. By deed of May 30, 1887, from Elza L. Morgan, for himself and as attorney in fact for a brother and coparcener, to Thornton Pickenpau, and a deed of October 20, 1887, from Minerva A. Fleming, another coparcener, to said Pickenpau, Pickenpau became owner of the entire tract, including the share of said Evan Morgan which had been sold under said court order and purchased by Elza L. Morgan. Pickenpau is a party to the cause. The court entered a decree holding the said interest in said tract of land liable for the payment of said notes given by Elza L. Morgan for said interest, and subjecting it to sale in enforcement of said lien, and from this decree Pickenpau appeals. Pending the suit, Hiel J. Evans resigned his office of committee, and Justus F. Ross was appointed in his place by the county court of Taylor, and the suit was ordered to proceed in the name of said Ross as committee in place of Evans.

The brief of appellant's counsel, in its opening, presents what in its nature is the first question for us to decide, by insisting that the plaintiff has no right to recover in this suit or any suit. The first reason given by counsel for this contention is that the appointment of Hiel J. Evans to be committee of Evan Morgan as an insane person is void for want of notice to said Evan Morgan. In Lance v. McCoy, 34 W. Va. 416, the opinion is expressed that such an appointment by a county court without notice, as required by Code, chap. 58, § 34, is void. A re-examination of this question in this case has confirmed me in the view then expressed. The question is of importance, both because of its frequent occurrence and of its effect upon persons alleged to be insane. So far as my observation has gone, the practice has been, in clerks' offices of the county courts and in county courts, to make such appointments without such notice. It lies at the foundation of justice in all legal proceedings that the person to be affected have notice of such proceedings. As such an appointment takes from the person the possession and control of his property, and even his freedom of person, and commits his property, his person, his liberty to another, stamps him with the stigma of insanity, and degrades him in public estimation, no more important order touching a man can be made, short of conviction of infamous crime. Will it be said, in answer to this, that he is insane, and that notice to an insane man will do him no good? The response is that his insanity is the very question to be tried, and he the only party interested in the issue. Often, if given notice, he will be prompt to attend, and in his person be the unanswerable witness of his sanity; often, if not given notice, those interested in using or robbing him of his property will effectuate a corrupt plan. Almost as well might we convict a man of crime without notice. There is abundant authority for this po-ley v. College of St. Francis Xavier, 137 N. Y. 327, said in respect to a commission de idota inquirendo: "We do not deem it important now to determine whether the proceedings would be absolutely void and a nullity, if no notice whatever had been given to the idiot of any of the proceedings." But it was held that if notice was necessary, jurisdiction was obtained by the notice given of the time and place of the execution of the writ, as this was the vital part of the proceeding, and that lack of notice of a motion to confirm the finding of the jury and for the appointment of the committee would not be jurisdictional. The court also held that in support of a judgment of the court of common pleas, as a court of general jurisdiction, it would be presumed that the proper notices were served on the idiot, and even that she was present in court, if necessary, in the absence of anything in the record to the contrary.

An ex parte proceeding for the condemnation of a person to an inebriate asylum was held unconstitutional in Re Jones, 80 How. Pr. 444, for lack of due process of law, especially where no provision is made for an examination on his own motion before any court officer or jury on which he can be heard for himself.

The doctrine of the highest court in New York as declared in the late cases clearly requires notice to the party whose sanity is in question, although no provision therefor is made by statute, unless some extraordinary reason exists for dispensing with it, but that court has not yet decided whether or not there is a constitutional requirement of notice in every instance.

In a New Jersey case notice on an alleged lunatic was held sufficient without being personally served on such person, where it was served on her brother with whom she lived, and who had taken an active part in resisting several inquisitions concerning her condition, and who refused to allow the person having the notice, but who did not disclose his errand, to see her, and another notice was also served on a lawyer who had appeared for her in similar proceedings and subsequently appeared on the inquisition in question without objecting to the sufficiency of the notice. Re Lindsley, 46 N. J. Eq. 368.

It is declared in Re Vanauken, 10 N. J. Eq. 168, that no verdict of lunacy should be allowed to pass against any man without affording him an opportunity of defending himself, except in extreme cases, when such notice would be nugatory, but the question involved in that case was the reasonableness of the time of the notice that had been given.

In Re Child, 16 N. J. Eq. 498, where the question as to the proper county for the execution of a commission was involved, it was said that it was not necessary for the party to be before the jury, but the question of notice was not touched upon.

The question appears still somewhat unsettled in Pennsylvania. In Re Hambright, 10 Lanc. L. Rev. 161, the court of common pleas of Lancaster county, Pa., upheld a lunacy proceeding in which the notice was given only to a near friend of the lunatic and not to the lunatic herself. The court does not discuss the necessity of notice in such a case to the alleged lunatic in person, but did discuss somewhat at length the power of the court to waive a rule of court requiring notice to be given for ten days. It cited a large number of cases from the records of the court in which less than ten days had been held sufficient, and in many of which it distinctly appeared that no notice was given to the alleged lunatic. No suggestion seems to have been made that there was a constitutional necessity for personal notice to the party most interested.

Service on a friend of the alleged lunatic, who in sition. Even though the statute be silent as to notice, as ours as to appointment of committees by county courts is, though that as to circuit court appointment requires notice, yet the common law steps in and requires it. See Chase v. Hathaway, 14 Mass. 222, 224; Hathaway v. Clark, 5 Pick. 490; Hutchins v. Johnson, 12 Conn. 376, 80 Am. Dec. 622; McCurry v. Hooper, 12 Ala. 823, 46 Am. Dec. 280; Monroe County Supra. v. Budlong, 51 Barb. 493; Eslava v. Lepetre, 21 Ala. 504, 56 Am. Dec. 266; Dutcher v. Hill, 29 Mo. 271, 77 Am. Dec. 572; Buswell, Insanity, § 55; Stafford v. Stafford, 1 Mart. (N. S.) 551.

In Molton v. Henderson, 62 Ala. 426, held that "inquisition of lunacy without personal notice to the alleged non compos is void, and so is the appointment by the probate court of a guardian for said lunatic, and the proceedings by such guardian for a sale of lands belonging to said lunatic." A statute authorizing an inebriate to be committed to a hospital on ex parte proceeding was held void by the New York supreme court. Re Janes, 80 How. Pr. 446. In Georgia the statute required notice to three relatives of the person before appointment of a guardian over him as an insane person. Judge Bleckley, delivering the opinion, thought there ought to be also notice to the person. He said: "It is, to say the least, doubtful whether the property of an adult citizen can be taken out of his custody and committed to guardianship without previous warning served either upon him, or some person duly constituted by law or some legal tribunal to be notified in his stead." If it was unreasonable, in the opinion of a Roman governor, to send a prisoner, and not signify withal the crimes alleged against him, the law judges it to be equally so to pass upon the dearest civil rights of the citizen, without first giving him notice of his adversary's complaint. The truth is that at the door of every temple of the laws in this broad land stands justice, with her preliminary requirement upon all administrations: "You shall condemn no man unheard. The requirement is as old, at least, as Magna Charta. It is the most precious of all gifts of freedom, that no man be dispossessed of his property, or deprived of his liberty, or in any way injured, nisi per legale iudicium suorum, vel per legem terra. It is a principle of natural justice which courts are never at liberty to dispense with, unless under the mandate of positive law, that no person shall be condemned unheard." He said that in that case there was "action, trial, and judgment in two days, and no previous notice." In our practice it often occurs in ten minutes. This practice, I say, as was said by the Louisiana court in Stafford v. Stafford, supra, might put "the wisest man in the community under the control of a curator, and hold him up to the world as an adjudged insane." Both constitution and statute confer this power on the county courts as a jurisdiction. Before appointing, the court must determine whether or not the fact which alone gives it power to act exists; that is, whether the party is in any of the phases or conditions of mind to be considered insane under the statute. It must inquire into the fact, and, in deciding, exercise judgment, and of this case was himself appointed the committee, was held insufficient to sustain the proceedings, in Com. v. Groh, 10 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 557.

In May's Case, 10 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 233, proceedings to declare that a person was insane were held void on the ground that they were ex parte, where the record did not show notice, but did show that the commission was executed the same day the petition was presented, and therefore reasonable notice could not have been given.

An inquisition in another state without notice to the alleged lunatic was held invalid in Pennsylvania. Com. v. Kirkbride, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 419.

In Missouri, although the statute is silent on the subject of notice to the lunatic but directs that the court may in its discretion cause him to be brought before it, it is said in Dutoher v. Hill, 29 Mo. 271, 77 Am. Dec. 572, that it should appear from the proceedings why notice was not given to him, or his attendance required, if this does not appear to have been done.

In Iowa an inquiry to determine the insanity of a person, had in his absence and without notice to him, is held valid under Iowa Code, § 1400, authorizing the commissioners to dispense with the presence of such person if they think it would be injurious to him, or attended with no advantage, and permitting any citizen of the county, or any relative of the person, to appear and resist the application, and also allowing appearance by counsel, with the further requirement of personal examination by some regular practicing physician who shall report to the commissioners. Chavannes v. Priestly, 9 L. R. A. 193, 80 Iowa, 316. The court denies that such a proceeding is a denial of due process of law.

This case cites that of Black Hawk Co. v. Springer, 58 Iowa, 417, which said nothing about notice, but held that an inquest by commissioners was not a criminal proceeding, within the constitutional provisions for speedy and public trial, etc., in criminal proceedings. It also decided that there were sufficient safe-guards given by the statute in a right to appeal from a finding of the commissioners, or to apply for a new commission, or to contest the question of insanity on a habeas corpus proceeding.

In Indiana where the party is in court as required by statute, lack of notice was held immaterial. Nyoe v. Hamilton, 90 Ind. 417.

But the appointment of a guardian for an alleged insane person is void for lack of jurisdiction, if the proceedings were had without notice to him and without his presence in court. Jessup v. Jessup (Ind.) Oct. 11, 1893.

This case says that while the Indiana statute makes no direct provision for the issuing and service of summons on the person whose sanity is to be inquired into, it does require that such person shall be produced in court.

Under the Indiana statute requiring the person whose sanity is to be determined to be produced in court, but not requiring notice on such person, the proceedings may be valid without notice or without the appearance of the party in person, if authorized agents appear in his behalf. Martin v. Motzinger, 120 Ind. 555.

If the statute authorizing the adjudication that a person is of unsound mind and the appointment of a committee for such person was to be construed as authorizing proceedings of an ex parte character, it would be to that extent in conflict with the Constitution of the United States and void, as depriving one of liberty or property without due process of law. Ibid.

The doctrine of the case last cited, although not fully established by express decisions in the other states whose decisions have been considered above, this legal investigation, all important to him, he ought to have notice. He wants to deny the very basis of the proposed order,—his insanity. It is an important transaction to him. Shall he have no notice of it? Am I told that the statute does not in terms require notice? I answer as shown in Lance v. McCoy, 84 W. Va. 416, as a circuit court cannot appoint without, so, by proper construction of the code, neither can a county court. I answer, further, that a statute will not be construed to authorize proceedings affecting a man's person or property without notice. It does not dispense with notice. Bishop, Written Law, §§ 25, 141; Chase v. Hathaway, 14 Mass. 222, 224; Arthur v. State, 22 Ala. 61; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 262; Boonville v. Ormrod, 26 Mo. 193; Wickham v. Page, 49 Mo. 526. Chief Justice Marshall held void a judgment of even a court-marshal imposing fines on militia men, because without notice. Meade v. Deputy Marshal of Virginia Dist. 1 Brock. 824, Fed. Cas. No. 9,872. This statute is one of summary proceeding.

If the case were one of mere error or irregularity, it might be said that the order was good against collateral attack, and must be reversed by a direct proceeding; but the question is one of jurisdiction,—a want of authority to make the order, for want of jurisdiction over the person to be affected. How can his property be affected or title given the committee to enable him to sue for it, if the order is void as to the person? If he is not affected by it, how is his property? If the committee would restrain the person of the non compos, could he not release himself by treating the order as void? I cannot see how an order of a clerk fixing the personal status of a person, without notice, can rob him of his property and vest title in another person. A tribunal may have jurisdiction of cases quodam generis with the matter involved in a proceeding before it, and it may have jurisdiction of the particular matter involved in that particular case; but if it have no jurisdiction of the person, by service of process or appearance, if the proceeding is not in rem, it cannot go on. Though the Taylor county court has jurisdiction to appoint committees for insane persons, and though it had lawful jurisdiction to act on the matter of the appointment of a committee in the particular instance of Evan Morgan, yet it could not act without notice to him, unless we say notice was not required by law, which I have above sought to show is not the case. A sentence of the court without hearing the party, or giving him an opportunity to be heard, is not a judicial determination of his rights, and is not entitled to any respect in any other tribunal. Jurisdiction is indispensable to the validity of all judicial proceedings. Jurisdiction of the person as well as the subject-matter are prerequisites, and must exist before a court can render a valid judgment or decree, and, if either of these is wanting, all the proceedings are void. So said the court literally in Haymond v. Camden, 22 W. Va. 180, syl. §§ 5, 9. So it has often held, as shown by Judge Green in the opinion in McCoy v. McCoy, 29 W. Va. 807. No court has more sturdily held the rule of seems to be the doctrine of the decisions, in most states and the only doctrine that is really defensible. It ought to be noticed that in none of the cases which have held notice to the alleged lunatic unnecessary has there been any real discussion of the constitutional question except in the Iowa case of Chavannes v. Priestley, supra.

In Alabama an ex parte inquisition finding a person a lunatic is void. Esleva v. Lepretre, 21 Ala. 504, 56 Am. Dec. 286; Molton v. Henderson, 62 Ala. 425; McMurray v. Hooper, 13 Ala. 823, 46 Am. Dec. 280; Moody v. Bibb, 50 Ala. 245.

So in Arkansas that an inquest is void if held without notice to the alleged lunatic, is decided in Arrington v. Arrington, 82 Ark. 674.

In Connecticut, in Hutchins v. Johnson, 13 Conn. 376, 30 Am. Dec. 622, it is said that such notice is required "by the fundamental principles of justice," and also that while notice has not been required by statute until recently, the former practice showed the necessity of the regulation.

In Illinois is also reasonable notice to the supposed lunatic is necessary, although the statute is silent on the question. Eddy v. People, 15 Ill. 886.

In this case the court says: "If he be in fact a lunatic, the notice would be entirely useless, and that is the very question to be tried, and until a regular trial is had or inquest made, the presumption is in favor of his sanity."

In Kentucky where the statute required ten days' notice in such a proceeding, lack of notice was fatal. McAfee v. Com. 3 B. Mon. 305.

In Louisiana notice to the person himself in a proceeding of this kind must be given, and it is not sufficient to appoint a curator ad hoc. Segur v. Pelzerin, 16 La. 63; Gernon v. Dubois, 23 La. Ann. 23.

So an earlier Louisiana case held that ex parte proof in such a case would not sustain it, and that where the party on being informed of the proceeding took an appeal, no proof on his side was necessary to reverse the decision. Stafford v. Stafford, 1 Mart. (N. S.) 551.

In Maine want of notice of an inquisition by selectmen for the appointment of a guardian for a person on the ground that he is of unsound mind is a valid objection to the further prosecution of the proceedings, although the statute makes no provision for notice. Holman v. Holman, 80 Me. 180.

In the absence of notice to the alleged lunatic, an appointment of a guardian is void and will not prevent him from maintaining an action of assumpsit to recover his property from the guardian. Coolidge v. Allen, 82 Me. 23.

In Massachusetts it is also held that the silence of the statute as to notice to an alleged lunatic does not make valid an adjudication of lunacy without such notice. Chase v. Hathaway, 14 Mass. 222.

And any judgment or decree that a person is non compos, or appointing a guardian for that cause without notice, is absolutely void. Hathaway v. Clark, 5 Pick. 490; Chase v. Hathaway, supra; Conkey v. Kingman, 24 Pick. 115; Walt v. Maxwell, 5 Pick. 219, 16 Am. Dec. 391.

On the death of a guardian of an insane person, the ward is entitled to notice of the appointment of a new guardian. Allis v. Morton, 4 Gray. 63.

In this case the court says: "To say one is insane and therefore need not be notified is to decide the question before it is tried," and adds: "When would the existence of insanity be a good reason for dispensing with the notice? A man may be insane so as to be a fit subject for guardianship, and yet have a sensible opinion and strong feeling upon the question who that guardian shall be."

In Michigan, in North v. Joelin, 50 Mich. 624, it is said in respect to notice of proceedings to declare a person incompetent that "such notice must be personally served and must be a written one, and this necessity of process or appearance than this court, whether as to proceedings of superior or inferior courts. Must there be process before a superior court can render merely money judgment, and yet no notice before a clerk can stamp a man with insanity, and take from him his property and freedom of person? Cases may exist of appointment of committees or guardians for non compos mentis, without notice appearing, in which they were held good against collateral attack; but it will be found that they were in courts of probate held to be courts of general jurisdiction, or where, after inquisition, the party traversed the finding, or had opportunity to do so.

The next question is if, as in this case, it does not appear from the order of appointment that such notice was given, can want of notice affect the order? The county court is a court of limited jurisdiction, not of record, and as to such courts the rule applies that their jurisdiction must appear, and will not be presumed; whereas, as to courts of general jurisdiction, their jurisdiction will be presumed and need not affirmatively appear, unless the want of jurisdiction does appear. Mayer v. Adams, 27 W. Va. 244; Davis v. Point Pleasant, 32 W. Va. 294; Wandling v. Straw, 25 W. Va. 692; 1 Cooley, Const. Lim. 406. It is a summary proceeding, and notice must appear. Arthur v. State, 23 Ala. 61. The county court being a court of limited jurisdiction, it must appear, not only that it had jurisdiction as to the subject-matter, but over the person, by service of process or notice. Mayer v. Adams, 27 W. Va. 244; 2

Black, Judgm. §§ 282, 683. When we say there must be jurisdiction, we mean both that the matter must be within the jurisdiction of the court and the person to be affected, by service of notice upon him. Cooley, Const. Lim. 408. I maintain that such action as the appointment of a committee for one as insane without notice, being so grave in its effects upon his personal status, his right to vote, liberty, and property, is not due process of law. It violates the definition by Mr. Webster in the Dartmouth College Case, generally received as a proper one of due process of law, that "it hears before it condemns." He resigned, and another was appointed in his room. Invested with no authority, he had none to resign. But, if he had been regularly appointed, could he resign, and could the county court accept his resignation? At common law I do not think so. An executor or administrator, once having taken his office, cannot resign it. Schouler says that, if precedents can be trusted, they cannot resign unless under statute, "for the English rule always discountenanced such a practice as to these and similar fiduciaries." 1 Woerner, Law of Administration, p. 582, § 278; Schouler, Exrs. § 157. In Hensloe's Case, 9 Coke, 36a, the law is stated thus: "For after the executors have once administered, and so have taken upon them the charge of the executorship, they cannot afterwards refuse." And on page 37a it states that the ordinary cannot accept their resignation. So held, also, in Wankford v. Wankford, 1 Salk. 808. So in Parten's Case, 1 Mod. 213. So in Sitman v. Paquette, 18 Wis. 293; Ford is absolutely essential to give the court jurisdiction. No notice whatever seems to have been given in this case to the alleged incompetent person, unless it was obtained indirectly through a letter written to her daughter.

The court adds further: "The notice must be not only a written one, but must be given under the order of the judge of probate."

But where due notice to the supposed lunatic was given before making inquisition, the want of notice of the time of entering the decree is not fatal. Daivson v. Johonnot, 7 Met. 888, 41 Am. Dec. 448.

In North Carolina, in respect to the alleged irregularity of failing to have the lunatic present before the inquest or notified to attend, the court says in Bethea v. McLennon, 23 N. C. 523: "The lunatic is entitled to be present before the jury, and if they deny him this right, such denial will be sufficient cause for setting aside the inquisition, but these alleged irregularities do not so entirely avoid it that the persons may treat it ipso facto as null. In this case the inquisition was upheld against a subsequent grantee of the lunatic.

In Ohio it is said, in Wheeler v. State, 34 Ohio St. 398, 32 Am. Rep. 375, although it does not appear to be necessary to the decision, that in this country notice to the supposed lunatic in some form has been generally regarded as indispensable.

In Tennessee, although the statute did not provide for notice, the court said in Ex parte Dozier, 4 Baxt. 81: "It was never intended by the legislature that so important a proceeding as that of declaring a party a lunatic and taking charge of his person and of his estate should be consummated without personal notice," and for lack of it the proceeding was held void.

In Vermont an inquisition without notice was held void in Shumway v. Shumway, 2 Vt. 330, but here a statute expressly required notice.

28 L. R. A.

In West Virginia, as is shown also in the main case, the doctrine that notice of proceedings to adjudge a person incompetent and to appoint a committee is a prerequisite to the exercise of jurisdiction in such case is declared in Lance v. McCoy, 34 W. Va. 418, in which the main question was as to the right to an injunction against the exercise of the powers of the alleged committee, which was denied on the ground that there was an adequate remedy at law.

In the circuit court of the United States the declaration the courts of probate have no right to put a person under guardianship as unfit to manage her affairs without notice to the party and an adjudication on the facts is made in Smith v. Burlingame, 4 Mason, 121, citing Chase v. Hathaway, 14 Mass. 222.

Waiver of notice.

That the presence of the party and his counsel will not cure the lack of the notice prescribed by statute was decided in Morton v. Sims, 64 Ga. 296. The court in this case said: "The commission issued one day, was executed the next, and the judgment appointing the guardian in two days and no previous notice. The surprise and shock of such swift inquisition into an old gentleman's wits might so confound him as to prepare him for assenting through his counsel to be adjudged an imbecile.

So in Re Whitenack, 3 N. J. Eq. 252, it was said that the ordinary rule which regards an appearance as curing a defective service ought to have little or no effect, where a lunatic or one of doubtful capacity is called upon suddenly to act upon a matter involving the control of his person and property. In that case the inquisition was set aside and a new inquisition ordered on due notice.

The mere fact that an alleged incompetent person was in the court-room at the time part of the

v. Travis, 2 Brev. 299, cited with approval by Chief Justice Marshall in Griffith v. Frazier, 12 U. S. 8 Cranch, 27, 8 L. ed. 476; Washington v. Blunt, 43 N. C. 253; Haigood v. Wells, 1 Hill, Eq. 59; Sears v. Dillingham, 12 Mass. 358. In Flinn v. Chase, 4 Denio, 86, held that the surrogate had no jurisdiction to accept an administrator's resignation and appoint another. At common law a guardian cannot resign. Schouler, Dom. Rel. 426. Under our Code, chap. 82, § 7, a guardian may resign. I have met with only one case (Morgan's Case, 8 Bland, Ch. 332) holding that a committee may resign; but there is no opinion or authority cited, and the facts are not given. I conclude that, without statute leave, a committee cannot resign. An act passed in March, 1891, (Code 1891, chap. 118, § 1) allows a committee and fiduciary to resign on filing a petition and proceeding as therein directed; but this resignation was in 1889. The resignation being ineffectual, it left Evans yet in office, and, the office being full, the appointment of Ross in his place would be void and confer no authority on Ross. Per Moncure, J., in Andrews v. Avery, 14 Gratt. 236, 73 Am. Dec. 855; Griffith v. Frazier, 12 U. S. 8 Cranch, 9, 8 L. ed. 471; Haynes v. Meeks, 20 Cal. 298. It is not meant to say that public officers of government may not resign. As to them the general rule is that they may resign. Mechem, Pub. Off. § 409; Edwards v. United States, 103 U. S. 471, 26 L. ed. 814. Evans, having no office, could resign none; and derivatively from him, as filling his place, no power vested in Ross. But it may be thought that the appointment of Ross ought to be treated not as filling a vacancy caused by Evans' resignation, but as an original appointment. If so, it would be subject to the same objection for want of notice as the appointment of Evans. What is the consequence of neither Evans nor Ross being a committee? A want of title to prosecute this suit. What title has either to enforce the lien, or to the notes secured by it? None. Evans could not bring the suit. It could not be ordered to proceed in the name of his successor, Ross, and the debt could not be decreed to Ross. Would a payment to him be good? If the appointment be void as to the insane person, if he could resist or disregard, would a sale or payment under decree in this case protect against resale at the demand of a lawfully appointed committee, or Evan Morgan himself? Ought the court to impose these dangers on the late guardian, the purchaser, and his alienee, Pickenpugh?

The defense was made that there is no lien for unpaid purchase money, because the deed reserving it has no seal. The order giving the guardian authority to sell the land of the infant provided that either on payment of purchase money, or earlier by retaining a lien for it, Hough, as special commissioner, should convey the land to the purchaser. As there is no scroll or seal to the deed, we must say it is not a deed, and does not pass legal title; but does the purchaser get the land for nothing? Is there no lien? Viewing the said paper alone, if it is effective to pass any interest in the land, it is effective equally so to reserve a lien proceedings were had on an inquisition, and that she had, by persuasion of an attorney whom she had employed, consented to make no defense, being deceived by his representations, without knowledge of the fact that he was seeking his own interest in securing his own appointment as guardian, was held not to waive her right to the notice prescribed by statute, nor to give jurisdiction to the court in the absence of such notice. North v. Joslin, 59 Mich. 624.

And lack of notice to the party, or to his relations, who are friendly to him, is not supplied by bringing him to the inquisition merely for exhibition. Ex parte Hinchman, 4 Clark (Pa.) 184, Brightly, 181, note.

But in Kentucky, where the alleged lunatic was brought into court, and an inquisition held in open court, no notice or writ was held necessary. Lackey v. Lackey, 8 B. Mon. 107.

In Rogers v. Walker, 6 Pa. 371, 47 Am. Dec. 470, which held that a collateral attack could not be made, it was added that the inquisition was actually traversed by plaintiff's next friend, and that any defect of notice was cured by the appearance.

Collateral attack.

In the case last named it was held that lack of notice to the alleged lunatic in such a case could not be urged collaterally in ejectment. Rogers v. Walker, supra.

So the validity of a sale of land under an order of court by a guardian appointed under an inquisition of lunacy cannot be attacked in an ejectment suit on the ground that the inquisition was void for lack of notice. Dutcher v. Hill, 29 Mo. 271, 77 Am. Dec. 572.

But in this case the supposed lunatic had recognized the jurisdiction of the court by applying for his discharge.

28 L. R. A.

Want of the prescribed notice, it was also held in Kimball v. Fisk, 39 N. H. 110, 75 Am. Dec. 218, would not make the inquisition absolutely void on collateral attack. But in this case notice was in fact read in the hearing of the party, but was not given for the time prescribed, and the right of the guardian was upheld in an action of trover.

But in Alabama the invalidity not only of the appointment but also of the proceedings by the guardian for the sale of the lunatic's lands results from lack of notice to the lunatic of the inquest. Molton v. Henderson, 62 Ala. 426.

Although such sale may give color of title for the purpose of adverse possession. Ibid.

The right of guardians appointed in such a void proceeding to represent the lunatic may be contested in a bill of equity relating to the lunatic's estate. Belava v. Lepretre, 21 Ala. 504, 56 Am. Dec. 266.

The guardian's judicial settlement is also void where an inquisition was without notice to the alleged lunatic. Moody v. Bibb, 50 Ala. 245.

Under the Indiana statute, which does not require notice, the lack of notice to the alleged lunatic will not prevent the inquest from being a valid judicial proceeding, so that false testimony given thereon may be ground of perjury. Hutts v. Hutts, 62 Ind. 214.

In the absence of any showing to the contrary, the court is bound to presume in such a case that the lunatic was present or his presence dispensed with by the court as required by statute. Ibid.

See also Gridley v. College of St. Francis Xavier, 137 N. Y. 327.

And the failure of the record to show notice is not fatal on collateral attack, where it is not alleged that notice was not given to the relations or friends as required by statute. Willis v. Willis, 13 Pa. 159.

on that interest. If we treat it as a contract to convey, passing equitable title, of course there is a lien, as a vendor has a lien for purchase money as long as he retains title. Yancey v. Mauck, 15 Gratt. 800, and citations. If another deed were made, a lien could be reserved in it, for, without reserving right in a sale of realty to reserve a lien in the final deed of conveyance, that right exists. Findley v. Armstrong, 28 W. Va. 118. The vendor can never be compelled to part with the legal title without payment or security. It seems to be thought in this case that it is a deed which creates the lien, and, as the paper is not a deed, it creates no lien; but there is an implied lien springing from the sale, existing until the legal title is passed by deed, and that deed, reserving it, only reserves yet an already existing antecedent lien, and does not originate it. That paper, so far as it might be deemed necessary to look to it, is competent to preserve that lien. But the sale under the decree was attended with a lien. The court only directed the legal title to pass on actual payment, or by reservation of a lien. The title has not passed to the purchaser, Elza L. Morgan, and the lien exists. The commissioner could not convey free of lien. Pickenpaugh took it, of course, subject to the lien, because he took only what his vendor, Elza L. Morgan, had,—an equitable, inchoate title; and, also, because he is affected with notice of incumbrance on the face of papers under which Morgan derived title, and both decree and the defective deed told of the lien. If, as suggested in the brief, it be viewed as a private sale by the guardian, the same principle would apply; the lien would exist.

Time is relied on to defeat the debt. In no view can this position prevail. Viewed as a case where the legal title has not passed to the vendee, as it is to be viewed, the statute of limitations has no application. Hopkins v. Cockerell, 2 Gratt. 88; Hanna v. Wilson, 8 Gratt. 243, 46 Am. Dec. 190. The statute has no application to a lien reserved in a deed passing legal title. Hull v. Hull, 35 W. Va. 155, 165; Barton, Ch. Pr. 111, note 5. Though the note given for purchase money be barred as a personal debt, yet the lien remains unaffected by the statute operative against the land. Coles v. Withers, 88 Gratt. 194. The statute, perhaps, is not intended to be specifically relied upon, but laches and staleness of demand are. This defense cannot be maintained. One note fell due December 8, 1869, the other December 8, 1870, and this suit began May 17, 1887. Only a presumption of payment of twenty years would operate, and that had not elapsed. Besides, that is not a positive bar, but only a presumption which may be repelled by proof of the continued existence of the debt. The paper signed by Elza L. Morgan July 5, 1880, admits both notes then unpaid.

As to release dated July 5, 1890, by the mother and brothers of Evan Morgan, it is contended for Pickenpaugh as precluding a recovery of said debt. It recites the sale; that Omer Johnson had, as guardian, never collected the two purchase-money notes of Elza L. Morgan; that recovery was barred as to the surety in them; that said guardian was not at fault for not collecting them, as his omission arose out of an agreement between the brothers and mother of Evan Morgan that Elza L. Morgan should keep Evan when required, and have enough of the notes applied to reimburse him; and then, to indemnify and save harmless the late guardian, Johnson, said mother and brothers released him from all liability as guardian and on account of such sale

The guardianship being void for lack of notice is not a defense to a suit against the ward personally. Hathaway v. Clark, 5 Pick. 490.

The question of collateral attack on an inquisition for lack of notice is manifestly dependent upon the question whether or not the notice is a jurisdictional necessity, or whether the lack of it is a mere irregularity.

Sufficiency of notice.

Service of the writ of arrest, according to the statute, on an alleged lunatic is a sufficient notice of the proceedings. Fore v. Fore, 44 Ala. 478.

Notice to others.

In Rhode Island where the intended ward is a person of full age, he is the only person entitled to notice of the proceedings. Gannon v. Doyle, 16 R. I. 726; Hamilton v. Court of Probate of North Providence, 9 R. I. 204.

But notice to the alleged lunatic and one daughter is held insufficient in Re Myers, 73 Mich. 401, where three sons living in the same town were not notified, although the statute in terms did not provide for notice to any one except the alleged incompetent.

A brother of the alleged incompetent person, who holds a mortgage belonging to the incompetent under an unrevoked power of attorney, should be notified of proceedings for the appointment of a guardian of his property. Partello v. Holton, 79 Mich. 372.

See also New York cases, Re Demelt, 27 Hun, 480 28 L. R. A.

Re Rogers, 9 Abb. N. C. 341, and Re Cook, 6 N. Y. Supp. 720.

English cases.

In Ex parte Cranmer, 12 Ves. Jr. 445, Erskine, Lord Chancellor, said: "The party certainly must be present at the execution of the commission. It is his privilege."—but the question of notice does not seem to have been involved.

In Ex parte Southcot, 2 Ves. Sr. 401, Ambli. 111, a commission was issued as to the lunacy of a party beyond thesea, but as to notice it was merely stated that the laying hold of his lands is notice to him.

Notice given to one who acted as solicitor, whom it was sworn the alleged lunatic distrusted, was given in Ex parte Hall, 7 Ves. Jr. 231, and on a petition to quash the proceedings made by another person who was interested, the court refused to quash, but gave leave to traverse.

In proceedings to adjudge the lunacy of a non-resident, the court in Re Lanwarne, 45 L. T. N. S. 668, 30 Week. Rep. 759, ordered a registered letter to be sent to such person, and another to a step-father with whom she resided.

These cases indicate that personal notice to the alleged lunatic is not regarded as a jurisdictional necessity in England. This accords with the statement of Shelford in his Work on Lunacy that in ordinary cases notice is not given to the party "inasmuch as such proceedings are ex parte and not conclusive," and he adds that "it is a subject of surprise" that proceedings of this kind should be taken without any notice to the party to be affected or some of his relatives.

B. A. R.

and delay of collection further than if Johnson should collect said notes. Now, the whole purpose of this instrument was to release the guardian, not Elza L. Morgan. Instead of releasing him, it closed with a proviso looking to the probability of the collection of valid notes. As to any agreement between the mother and brothers of Evan Morgan, how could it release a debt due him? Who gave them power to stay the enforcement of the debt? The fact that they would be distributees in the event of Evan Morgan's death gave them no vested interest whatever to sell, release, or in any manner to affect the debt. The mother of Evan Morgan has kept him, not Elza L. Morgan. It is claimed he paid her some money for keeping him. She positively denies it on oath. Why did not Elza Morgan give evidence of it? A witness states a circumstance—a mere circumstance—tending slightly to show the probability that he made a payment; but it is inconclusive, very weak in effect. The amount is not shown. He must make it certain. No payment of the debt by Elza L. Morgan, by paying Mrs. Morgan for keeping Evan or otherwise, is shown.

The argument that there is an adequate remedy by suit on the guardian's bond, forbidding a chancery suit, is without force. Equity is the proper forum to enforce the liens, and it is proper to enforce that lien to collect the debt before going on the guardian to make good the debt. There stands the land for the debt. The ultimate responsibility rests on Elza L. Morgan and the land; and no court of justice would lodge the liability in the first instance on the guardian, Johnson, and exonerate the land, at the instance of Elza L. Morgan, the debtor, who agreed to pay Johnson, and never paid him, or, at Pickenpaugh's instance claiming under Elza L. Morgan, even without the existence of said paper releasing Johnson, which paper Elza L. Morgan executed; and more surely yet would not do so in view of that release. With what justice can he or one claiming under him ask that the liability, at the first step, be saddled on Johnson? To do so would be inequitable, and against the contract of the parties.

It is suggested, if I am not in error as to the brief of counsel, that there is no privity between the plaintiff and Elza L. Morgan and Pickenpaugh, as the notes were made to Johnson as guardian. If it is meant to say that because the notes were made to Johnson, a lawful committee of Evan Morgan cannot sue on them, I cannot concur in that view. When the guardianship ended, upon the majority of Evan Morgan, he was entitled to the debt, and even if we could say that the legal title to the debt under the notes was in Johnson, which I doubt (but have not examined the question, because immaterial), I am very sure that a court of equity would entertain a suit by a lawful committee, and having Johnson and other proper parties before it, would decree the debt into the hands of the committee.

The decree is reversed and the bill dismissed, without prejudice to any other suit by Evan Morgan or any lawful committee. No prejudice against the collection of the debt shall result from this decision.

23 L. R. A.

Dent, J., dissenting:

In so far as the foregoing decision is in effect a determination that a conceded idiot must have notice before the clerk of the county court can appoint a committee for him, I cannot concur. "An idiot or natural fool is one that hath had no understanding from his nativity, and therefore is presumed never likely to attain any." 1 Bl. Com. 301. "An idiot is known by his perpetual infirmity of nature, a nativitate, for he never had any sense or understanding." Elwell, Lead. Cas. 528. "Idiots are classified by themselves as mental infants, with congenital obstacles to development." Ordranax, Judicial Aspects of Insanity, 50. Evan Morgan is conceded in this case to be a helpless idiot from his birth, never having been able to hear, speak, or take care of himself. This is undeniable. Such being his undisputed state, a committee was appointed for him by the clerk of the county court of Taylor county at the instance of those having him in charge. This appointment is held void because the order of the clerk does not show that the idiot had been served with notice? Why give him notice? His capacity was less than a child's three months old, yet the court could hardly hold that a child of such an age must have notice before a guardian could be appointed for it. A dumb-brute has more intelligence, and a notice served on such would be just as effective. The court answers, "So that, in case he is not an idiot or his sanity is in question, he may defend himself." In cases of doubtful sanity or insanity the clerk has no jurisdiction, and an order appointing a committee made by him, with or without notice, would be a nullity just as if he should appoint a guardian for an adult. The jurisdiction in cases of suspected insanity is conferred exclusively on justices and the circuit courts by sections 9, 33-35, chap. 58, of the Code, and there is no statutory enactment conferring such jurisdiction on county courts or their clerks. The clerk acts merely in a ministerial capacity in appointing a committee for a known idiot, and therefore a notice is neither required nor would it be otherwise than useless. An idiot needs no adjudication to establish the fact that he is so by nature, known and recognized by all men; and whenever notice is necessary, the clerk is without jurisdiction, and his proceedings are void, as the subject of the notice would not be an idiot. It is true that this court in the case of Lance v. McCoy, 34 W. Va. 416, under a misconception of the jurisdiction of the county court, finding a supposed hiatus in the law proceeded to legislate, at least impliedly, in favor of the jurisdiction of said court in cases of suspected insanity, and enacted, by a kind of parity of reasoning, that the county court should not appoint a committee without first giving five days' notice to the suspected; and now, by this decision, the provisions of this enactment are extended to include well-known idiots as well as suspected lunatics, not, however, for the purpose, in its result, of protecting the idiot or his estate, but to allow the appellant to escape his liability temporarily, with the sure promise of bringing him to certain justice later on. The justification of this exercise of legislative functions is section 24, art. 8, of the Constitution, to wit: "They shall have jurisdiction in all matters of probate, the appointment and qualification of personal representatives, guardians, committees, and curators." And this is construed, without legislative enactment, to include authority to examine into cases of suspected insanity. The legislature did not so consider it, and hence it conferred exclusive power in such cases on the justices of the circuit courts. If it had deemed it wise or necessary to do so, it would have conferred this power on the county courts by legislative enactment, as it was formerly under the laws of Virginia, but never has been the law of this state, except by judicial construction as aforesaid, directly in contravention of the will of the legislature. To my mind, such decisions as these are unjustifiable and unnecessary usurpation of legislative powers on the part of this court. As to the laws of Virginia, see Code 1860, chap. 85, §§ 50-53.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SECOND CIRCUIT.

Grace Howard POTTER et al.

THE MAJESTIC, Ocean Steamship Navigation Co., Claimant, App't.

(60 Fed. Rep. 628.)

1. A contract for transportation from Liverpool to New York, made in Eng-

NOTE.—Notice to passenger of conditions on ticket.
It is plain that when a ticket is signed by a purchaser conditions therein are to be regarded as part of the contract of transportation, and no question of notice to the passenger by stipulations therein is really left open.

The question whether or not a ticket constitutes a contract is somewhat related to the question of notice to the passenger of stipulations printed on the ticket, but is, nevertheless, not the same question and is presented in different phases, as for instance in respect to oral evidence to show what the contract of transportation was. No attempt to consider this question of the nature of a ticket as a contract is made here, except so far as it is involved in the question of notice.

Steamship tickets.

A steamship ticket entitled "Passenger contract ticket," at the bottom of which appears the words, "The passenger's luggage is carried only on the conditions on the back hereof," while on the back was found among other things a provision that the company was not liable for loss of or injury to the passenger or his luggage, or delay in the voyage from any cause, was held to constitute notice to the passenger, although he did not sign the ticket, and there was a blank space for his signature and it was signed by the agent of the carrier. Fonseca v. Cunard S.S. Co. (Mass.) 12 L. R. A. 340.

In this case the action was for loss of the passenger's trunk, but recovery was denied.

A ticket for passage to Europe, all printed on one side of the paper above the signature of the carrier's agent, was held to give notice of its provisions as to baggage to a passenger who had for several days before starting on the voyage had possession of the ticket. Steers v. Liverpool, N. Y. & P. S. S. Co. 57 N. Y. 1, 15 Am. Rep. 453.

The court said in this case that it could "take notice that an acknowledgment for a voyage across the ocean is a matter of more deliberation and attention than buying a railroad ticket or taking an express company's receipt for baggage or for freight." The contract in question limited liability for loss or damage to baggage, except in case of gross negligence, and limited the amount of liability to $50 in any event, unless a bill of lading or receipt therefor was signed specifying the articles and their respective values, with a pro-land between a citizen of the United States and a British shipowner, is an English contract governed by the laws of England, in the absence of anything to show an intent that it is to be controlled by the law of the United States.

2. A condition restricting the liability of a steamship company to a passenger by exempting it from liability for perils of the sea and negligence in navigation.

vision that money, jewelry, and valuables were entirely at the passenger's risk unless placed in the company's charge and a bill of lading or receipt signed therefor.

That an exemption from liability for baggage in a ticket for an ocean voyage, unless bills of lading are signed therefor, is binding on the passenger, is decided in Wilton v. Atlantic Royal Mail Steam Nav. Co. 10 C. B. N. S. 453, but the ticket is treated as a contract and there is no discussion in respect to the passenger's notice of the condition. See also Nevins v. Bay State S. R. Co. infra.

Railroad tickets.

Special terms and conditions printed on railroad tickets are not binding on passengers who are unable to read or understand the language, in the absence of any explanation, or of calling their attention to the provisions. Mauritz v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 765.

So notice on a railroad ticket that the baggage is at the owner's risk is not binding on a passenger if he is ignorant of the language. Camden & A. R. Co. v. Baldauf, 16 Pa. 67.

The mere delivery of a ticket which has a notice printed on the back of it does not raise a presumption of law that the passenger has actual notice of it; but this may be a question for the jury under the circumstances. Wilson v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 21 Gratt. 654.

Thus a condition on the back of a railroad ticket limiting liability for baggage is not notice to a passenger as a matter of law, but the question of notice may be left to the jury. Brown v. Eastern R. Co. 11 Cush. 97.

The words "Look on the back" printed on the face of a railroad ticket are not sufficient as matter of law to charge the passenger with notice of a stipulation on the back of the ticket limiting liability for baggage, but the question of notice may be submitted to the jury as one of fact. Malone v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 12 Gray, 388, 74 Am. Dec. 598.

And a mere notice, although on the face of the ticket, as to the terms upon which a passenger's baggage will be carried do not constitute a part of his contract with the railroad company or limit the liability of the carrier. Rawson v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 48 N. Y. 212, 8 Am. Rep. 643.

In Nevins v. Bay State S. R. Co., 4 Bosw. 225, it was held that a memorandum on a ticket limiting among other things, is so material a restriction of a carrier's liability that it cannot be made by notice on the back of a steamship contract ticket, although the words "See back" are conspicuously placed on the face of the ticket.

3. A regulation limiting the amount of liability for injuries to baggage of a passenger may be made by notice on the back of a steamship contract ticket, where attention is directed thereto by the words "See back" conspicuously printed on the face of the ticket, since the carrier's liability as to baggage not being exactly defined may be made definite and certain by reasonable restrictions. Reversed, 168 U. S. 375, 41 L. ed. 1039.

(March 12, 1894.)

A PPEAL by the claimant of The Majestic from a decree of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York in favor of libelants in a libel to recover for an injury to libelants' baggage, which was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Modified.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Lacombe and Shipman, Circuit Judges.

liability as to baggage is not a contract. In this case the ticket was from Boston to New York partly by rail and partly by steamboat.

In Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Campbell, 38 Ohio St. 447, 38 Am. Rep. 617, also it was held that notice on a railroad ticket or baggage check attempting to limit liability for baggage is not binding on the passenger.

A limitation in a ticket called "a special limited ticket" as to the amount of liability for baggage is not necessarily notice to a passenger who does not sign the ticket, although there is a blank for his signature. Kansas City, St. J. & C. R. Co. v. Rodebaugh, 38 Kan. 45.

The court says "the object of that blank space being left there was, doubtless, that the attention of a purchaser might be called to the conditions of the ticket, and when called to sign it he would then know its contents. This would constitute a contract between them, but without it there would be no contract and no restriction or limitation of the liability of the company."

A restriction in small type on an omnibus check for baggage, on which the general object of the check is emblazoned in large letters is not sufficient notice to the passenger of the restriction, although by the law of Pennsylvania a general notice may operate to restrict liability. Verner v. Sweitzer, 32 Pa. 208.

A limitation on a railroad baggage check of the amount of liability for baggage does not constitute notice to the passenger. Indianapolis & C. R. Co. v. Cox, 25 Ind. 560, 95 Am. Dec. 640.

A baggage receipt given in exchange for a check to a passenger on a railroad train does not constitute a contract. Madan v. Sherrard, 10 Jones & S. 353.

Merely putting into the hands of a passenger a card in exchange for baggage checks which contained a stipulation limiting liability in addition to the numbers representing the baggage, the name of the expressman, and an advertisement of his business, does not charge the passenger with notice of the limitation. Prentice v. Decker, 49 Barb. 21. Limbarger v. Westcott, Id. 283.

A receipt from the messenger of a baggage express company taken by a passenger, who surrenders to him his checks for baggage while on a railroad train, is not binding on the passenger as a contract restricting the amount of liability for the
73 L. R. A.

Mr. Everett T. Wheeler for appellant.
Mr. Willard Parker Butler for appellees.

Shipman, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The two ladies and their maid who are the three libelants took passage on January 20, 1892, at Liverpool for New York, on board the steamer Majestic. The vessel arrived in New York on January 28. The contents of their trunks were found to have been saturated with salt water, and to have been damaged to the amount of $2,828.50. The baggage was stowed in compartment No. 8 of the orlop deck, where the mails were also stowed. This compartment is about 25 feet in length, has watertight bulkheads at each end, and is ordinarily a safe and convenient place for the baggage of passengers. On the morning of January 25, 1892, there was a pretty rough sea, and from 7 to 8 o'clock A. M. the vessel passed through a quantity of wreckage, apparently broken planks, and about 8 o'clock A. M. it was found that the after port in No. 8 had been broken, and that baggage, unless extra charge is paid, where the passenger did not know of such condition and it was printed obscurely, although on one end of the receipt were plainly printed the words "Read this receipt." Blossom v. Dodd, 43 N. Y. 234, 3 Am. Rep. 701.

A receipt for a check given by a baggage transfer clerk to a girl who, after delivering her check, had come back and asked for a receipt, was held not notice to her of a stipulation therein limiting liability to the sum of $100. The court said that if the clerk could not properly give what was asked for, he should have so explained, and held there was no implied assent on her part sufficient to create a contract. Woodruff v. Sherrard, 9 Hun. 322.

A ticket for luggage deposited in a railway cloak room, which contained a condition limiting liability was held binding on the passenger in Harris v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 515, 45 L. J. Q. B. 729, 34 L. T. N. S. 647, 25 Week. Rep. 68. In this case the passenger said he did not read the conditions, gave them no thought, but admitted that he believed there were conditions on such tickets.

And this is regarded as material in the later case of Parker v. South Eastern R. Co., L. R. 2 Q. P. Div. 416, 46 L. J. C. P. 463, 37 L. T. N. S. 540, 25 Week. Rep. 534, in which it was held by two of the three judges that if a passenger had no information, or good reason to believe that there were any conditions on such a ticket, he was not bound to read the ticket to ascertain the fact.

That a railway ticket from London to Paris, stipulating against liability of a carrier beyond its own line, binds the passenger according to its terms, although he did not sign it, was decided in Zunz v. South-Eastern R. Co. L. R. 4 Q. B. 544, 38 L. J. Q. B. 209, 20 L. T. N. S. 873, and Lord Cockburn said that while it might appear hard that small print conditions should bind a man when he only obtained his ticket at the last minute and was nine times out of ten hustled out of his place by the next man, the court was bound by the authorities to hold that when a man takes a ticket with conditions on it, he must be presumed to know the contents and be bound by them.

But in Henderson v. Stevenson, 2 H. L. Sc. App. 485, 470, 32 L. T. N. S. 709, this statement of Lord Cockburn is criticised as not supported by authorities. In that case the house of lords held that a large quantity of water had entered and damaged the mails and luggage. There were three port holes on each side of the compartment, which were closed in the usual way, with thick glass, and an iron cover or "dummy," screwed up tightly. The glass was broken in many fragments, and the iron dummy was forced from its hinges, and turned back,—an accident which could not have been caused by the sea alone. The ports are examined at the commencement of the voyage in Liverpool. The chief officer of the ship was at this compartment the day after the vessel left Queenstown. It was the custom to inspect the baggage rooms after heavy weather, and accordingly the chief officer opened the door on the morning of January 25, and discovered, by the wash of water, that an accident and injury had taken place. The facts that the glass was splintered into many fragments, and that the iron dummy was forced from the hinges, and thrown backward, show that the accident must have been caused by a violent blow coming from the ocean. It is reasonable to infer that it was caused by an apparent and adequate cause, rather than by one which rests entirely upon surmise, and we are therefore led to conclude that a blow from one of the floating planks inflicted the injury. The district judge was of opinion, assuming that the accident was caused by wreckage, that the ship must be deemed guilty of negligence in not checking her speed when passing through material capable of inflicting such damage. If such an injury could have been anticipated, the speed should have been slackened, but it is apparent that the injury was of an extraordinary character, and that the propriety of taking precautions to avoid it would not naturally have occurred to the mind. It was an unanticipated peril of the sea.

The questions in the case which are of general importance arise upon alleged limitations of the carrier's liability, which are expressed in the notice printed upon the back of the libellant's ticket. One ticket was purchased in England, and was issued to the three libellants. It was a maritime contract, for the performance of which the ship became liable, entered into by a common carrier by sea, the terms of which were expressed in a notice limiting liability as to baggage printed on the back of a ticket, which had on its face only the words "Dublin v. Whitehaven" was not binding on the passenger.

But where a second-class railroad ticket from London to Paris and return consisted of a little book of coupons, the whole book was held to constitute a contract, and a condition on the inside of the cover limiting the carrier's liability to its own line was held binding, although the passenger had not read it. Burke v. South-Eastern R. Co. L. R. 5 C. P. Div. 1, 49 L. J. C. P. 107, 41 L. T. N. S. 554, 23 Week. Rep. 306, 44 J. P. 226. The case of Henderson v. Stevenson was distinguished on the facts.

One who received a mileage ticket without actual knowledge of conditions therein, one of which required his signature to the ticket, is not chargeable with notice of the condition, and the carrier waives it by delivering the ticket and allowing him to use it several trips before objecting. Kent v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 45 Ohio St. 284.

This case is very near the line of cases following in which on the other hand a passenger is held chargeable with notice of conditions in tickets purchased at reduced rates.

Where a special excursion ticket had on its face a notice to purchaser in large letters requiring the ticket to be stamped at destination before it could be accepted for return trip on presentation by the original purchaser, it was held that the passenger was charged with notice and that it was his duty to inform himself of the existence of the condition and comply with its terms. Bowers v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 158 Pa. 302.

In Abram v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co., 88 Tex. 61, it was held that a passenger was rightly put off for failure to have himself identified as required by a condition in his ticket before offering it on a return trip, although he had not signed the contract, which was made out in form for his signature. But the court declares that if he was in fact ignorant of the conditions of the ticket, and had been misled by the agent who sold it to him in regard to the necessity of being identified as the ticket required, he would be entitled to ride on the ticket, and under proper pleadings could show these facts in avoidance of his failure to comply with the requirements of the ticket.

The validity of a stipulation in a ticket sold at a reduced rate that in order to make it valid for a 23 L. R. A.

return passage the purchaser must identify himself at his destination and sign a contract that he is the original purchaser is upheld in Edwards v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 81 Mich. 384, in which the passenger attempted to ride without complying with these conditions on the return trip, but in which nothing is said about the effect of this stipulation as notice to him, although it is said that the conditions rested upon a consideration in the reduced rate of fare.

One who purchases tickets of a broker at less than the regular fare, although he is not required to sign the contract in the usual way, is bound by the terms of the contract on the ticket prohibiting its transfer. Drummond v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 7 Utah, 118. In addition to the terms of the tickets as notice, it was said in this case that the fact that the broker gave the passenger a letter to the conductor was sufficient to suggest suspicion as to the validity of the ticket.

Where a ticket is sold at less than the usual rate, on the condition that it shall not be used after a limited time, if the passenger accepts and uses it he makes a contract with the company according to the terms stated, and the reduction in the rate is the consideration for his contract. Pennington v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 62 Md. 65.

The court said in this case that there was evidence that the passenger did not read the ticket, but that he had ample opportunity to read it if he had chosen to do so, and that he could not on any principle hold the railroad company to any terms except those stated.

It was also said "that if there was a contract these terms were embraced in it; if there was no contract he had no right to the reduction in the fare."

Where the words "Good for this day only" were plainly printed on the face of a railroad ticket which a passenger had in his possession for several days, it was presumed that he had knowledge of them, but it was said that whether he did or not, he knew that he was bound to pay his fare or present a suitable voucher, and that a passenger should see to it, if he prefers not to pay in the cars, that he has a proper voucher. Elmore v. Sands, 84 N. Y. 512, 12 Am. Rep. 617.

A ticket having on its face stamped in red ink the words "Good only two days after date" which the passenger purchased from a connecting road under an arrangement between the carriers for the sale writing. The portion relating to the contract was headed "Cabin Passenger's Contract Ticket." Then follow the words: "These directions and the notices to passengers below form part of, and must appear on, each contract ticket." Five "directions" which are required by the British merchant shipping act are then inserted. The undertaking or agreement of the steamship company is next printed. The part of this agreement which is important to this case is as follows: "In consideration of the sum of £124 10, I hereby agree with the person named in the margin hereof that such person shall be provided with first-class cabin passage in the above-named British steamship, to sail from the port of Liverpool for the port of New York, in North America, with not less than twenty cubical feet for luggage for each person; . . . and I further engage to land the person aforesaid with their luggage at the last-mentioned port, free of charge beyond the passage money aforesaid. For and on behalf of the Oceanic Steam Navigation Company, Limited, of Great Britain.

"Thomas Henry Ismay,
"Per R. Martckellell."

The last name was written. Then follow two notices to cabin passengers, and a caution in regard to the care of their baggage and valuables. At the bottom of the face of the ticket are the words, in conspicuous, black-faced type, "See back." Upon the back of the ticket are the words: "Notice to Passengers. This contract is made subject to the following conditions." Seven important conditions are then stated. The third, fourth, and seventh are as follows:

"(3) Neither the shipowner nor the passage broker or agent is responsible for loss of or injury to the passenger or his luggage or personal effects, or delay on the voyage, arising from steam, latent defects in the steamer, her machinery, gear, or fittings, or from act of God, queen's enemies, perils of the sea or rivers, restraints of princes, rulers, and people, barratry or negligence in navigation, of the steamer or of any other vessel. (4) Neither the shipowner nor the passage broker or agent is in any case liable for loss of or injury to or delay in delivery of luggage or personal effects of the passenger beyond the amount of £10, unless the value of the same in excess of that sum be declared at or before of through tickets, was held to limit the right of the passenger to the time stipulated. The court said that courts of law must enforce contracts as the parties make them and said nothing about notice or the passenger's knowledge of the limitation, although his counsel contended that there was nothing to show notice. Boston & L. R. Co. v. Proctor, 1 Allen, 267, 79 Am. Dec. 722.

A ticket marked "Good for this day only" was held binding in Boice v. Hudson River R. Co., 41 Barb. 611, where the purchaser after taking it and finding out that the train was late requested the ticket agent to take the ticket back, and was told that he could use it on another day. No question is raised in the case, however, about the effect of such words as notice in case the passenger had no actual knowledge of them.

The doctrine that a ticket is only a token or voucher adopted for convenience and not in itself a contract is applied in Nelson v. Long Island R. Co., 7 Hun, 140, to a case in which a passenger was put off the train on the ground that his ticket had expired.

So a time limit in a through ticket sold at less than local rates which is printed on the ticket is held binding on the purchaser, in Shedd v. Troy & B. R. Co., 40 Vt. 88.

And an excursion ticket at reduced fare, with a condition as to time limit, binds the passenger according to its terms. Farewell v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 15 U. C. C. P. 497.

The question as to the right of one who has purchased a through ticket for less than the fare charged for the same distance on separate tickets for portions of the trip does not depend upon his knowledge at the time of the purchase of his ticket of the difference in price between a through ticket and the corresponding tickets for separate portions of the trip. Cheney v. Boston & M. R. Co., 11 Met. 121, 45 Am. Dec. 190.

In this case, however, it appears that the passenger was fully apprised of the rules as to continuous passage on such ticket and the different rates of fare before he stopped off and claimed the right to continue on another train.

In Johnson v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co., 68 Md. 107, the right to change trains on a ticket sold at a reduced rate with a condition that it should be good only for a continuous passage is denied. The court treats the ticket as a contract and does not touch the question of the passenger's notice of the conditions.

A limitation in an excursion ticket to the effect that it should not be good on certain trains was held binding in Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 9 Jones & B. 541, but without any discussion of the question of notice.

So it was held to be a reasonable regulation that an excursion ticket should be good only on an excursion train. McRea v. Wilmington & W. R. Co., 88 N. C. 525, 43 Am. Rep. 745. And the court declared that in buying his ticket a passenger "should inform himself as to the usual mode of travel on the road," and that he must travel in accordance with the custom of the road.

Similar language was used in Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Randolph, 53 Ill. 515, 5 Am. Rep. 60, but in that case there was no question of notice by the ticket, but there was a question as to the right of the passenger to have a train stopped to let him off.

That a passenger is bound to inform himself of the rules and regulations of the company governing the transit of trains is declared in Dietrich v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 71 Pa. 432, 10 Am. Rep. 711, but in this case there was no question of notice by conditions on a ticket, as the passenger knew of the regulations in question.

Somewhat connected with this subject of notice of conditions on tickets is the decision that where second-class tickets were given to a man who paid for first-class tickets, it was held that he was not chargeable with negligence in failing to discover the fact before attempting to use the tickets. St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Mackie, 1 L. R. A. 667, 71 Tex. 497.

Also that a passenger who, by mistake of the ticket agent, is given a ticket for the wrong route is not necessarily negligent in failing to discover the mistake before objection is made to the ticket by the conductor to whom he tenders it. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Rather, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 72.

A large number of other cases, like some of those above cited, have assumed that a passenger was charged with notice of conditions in railway tickets, or that his knowledge of such conditions was immaterial, without discussing at all the questhe issue of this contract ticket, and freight at current rates for every kind of property (except pictures, statuary, and valuables of any description, upon which one per cent will be charged) is paid." "(7) All questions arising on this ticket shall be decided according to English law, with reference to which this contract is made."

The signature of Thomas Bruce Ismay, for the steam company, is printed. The father of the two young ladies who were passengers bought the ticket. Neither he nor any of the three passengers read it, or knew its contents. The father and daughters had abundant opportunity to do so. The steamship company claims that, under the third condition, it is not liable for injury to any passenger's baggage which arises from perils of the sea or from negligence in navigation of the steamer or any other vessel, and that, under the fourth condition, the amount of liability to a passenger for injury to his baggage is limited to £10, unless the value of the same in excess of that sum was declared when or before the ticket was issued and freight was paid. No declaration was made in their case. The seventh condition specifies that the contract is an English one, and has particular reference to the limitation in regard to liability for negligence.

The contract was made in London or in Liverpool, where the shipowner had a place of business, between a British corporation, which was the shipowner, and a citizen of the United States. The contract was for the transportation, upon the high seas, of passengers and their baggage, from the city of Liverpool to the city of New York; and, if the statement that it was made with reference to English law had been omitted, nothing in the contract would have indicated an intent that it was to be controlled by the law of the United States. Under such circumstances, it was an English contract, and governed by the law of England. "The general rule that the nature, the obligation, and the interpretation of a contract are to be governed by the law of the place where it is made, unless the parties, at the time of making it, have some other law in view, requires a contract of affreightment, made in one country, between citizens or residents thereof, and the performance of which begins there, to be governed by the law of that country, unless the parties, when entering into the contract, clearly manifest a mutual intention that it shall be governed by the law of some other country." Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 129 U. S. 397, 32 L. ed. 788; Fonseca v. Cunard SS. Co. 153 Mass. 553, 18 L. R. A. 340.

It is well known, and in the Liverpool & G. W. Steam Co. Case the Supreme Court has declared, that, by the law of England, common carriers, by land or sea, except so far as they are controlled by the provisions of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act of 1854, are permitted to exempt themselves, by express contract, from responsibility for losses occasioned by the negligence of their servants. A like exemption from other portions of their common-law responsibility can also be made by special contract. As negligence has been found not to have existed, it will not be necessary to dwell longer upon the part of the third condition which purports to relieve the carrier from responsibility occasioned by its servant's negligence.

In the absence of a special contract, the common carrier of merchandise was only exempted from liability for those losses which were occasioned by the act of God or the public enemy. York Mfg. Co. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 70 U. S. 8 Wall. 107, 18 L. ed. 170. The third condition extends these two exemptions to those occasioned by diverse other causes, one of them being "the perils of the sea." While it has been thought that tion of notice. These are cases as to the right of stop-over, the limitation of time, continuous passage, or similar matters relating to the carrier's rules and regulations governing transportation. As to all this class of matters, the cases quite uniformly hold the passenger bound by such regulations, if reasonable, and seem to decide or assume that it is the passenger's business to inform himself concerning them and therefore that the terms of his ticket may be sufficient to charge him with knowledge of them.

As it is clear that the right of passage purchased by a passenger must be subject to reasonable regulations, such as those distinguishing between local and through trains, and to some limitation of time, there is some reason in holding the passenger chargeable with notice of conditions of this kind without holding him chargeable with notice of conditions which go beyond the mere regulation of passage and undertake to make a substantial change in the nature of his contract. At all events considering all the cases together in which the question is decided expressly or by implication it seems to be established, (1) that conditions on railroad tickets are binding on a passenger, when they refer to reasonable regulations of transportation; (2) that when tickets are purchased at reduced rates, regulations may be reasonable and binding and notice thereof on the tickets sufficient to bind the passenger in respect to matters in which he would not be bound if he purchased an ordinary ticket at full fare.

While the distinction above suggested does not seem to have been made in any of the cases, it seems to be necessary to harmonize them and at the same time to be a reasonable one. It is somewhat similar in the main case between conditions attempting to destroy the substance of the carrier's liability, and those in respect to the amount of liability for injuries to baggage. It will be noticed, however, that this limitation of liability in the main case in respect to baggage by notice on the back of the ticket is contrary to the decisions which have been made in respect to such notices on railroad tickets.

The validity of a stipulation in a free pass that the carrier shall not be liable for injury to personal property is upheld in Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 41 Ala. 438, 94 Am. Dec. 607, but the question whether such stipulation is constructive notice to the passenger is not touched upon.

A notice on the back of a free pass is held to constitute a contract when the pass is accepted. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Read, 37 Ill. 484, 87 Am. Dec. 280.

As to rights of passenger on pass, see note to Muldoon v. Seattle City R. Co. (Wash.) 23 L. R. A. 794.

R. A. R.

the term "perils of the sea" had the same and no larger meaning than losses or injuries "by the act of God," it is now generally considered that it has a broader signification, and includes calamities which were not caused by a violence or convulsion of nature, such as lightning, flood, or tempest.

In Parsons on Shipping (vol. 1, p. 255), the learned author states what he conceives to be the proper definition, and the reason for it, as follows: "The 'act of God' is limited to causes in which no man has any agency whatever, because it was never intended to raise in the case of the common carrier the dangerous and difficult question whether he had any agency in causing the loss, for, if this were possible, he should be held."

In this case the district court thought that the injury was one from which the steamship could have turned aside. It certainly was not a peril of the same class as lightning or hurricane, from which there is no escape, and to call it an "act of God" would be a strained use of language. When, therefore, the third condition excludes from the carrier's liability losses from those perils of the sea which are not included in those occasioned by the act of God, it excluded what was included upon the face of the contract.

The next question is whether this limitation is one which was entered into by express contract, or is a mere notice by the carrier of a desired limitation. The reported English cases do not contain a construction of this ticket, or of a ticket of the same character. There are cases which construe the effect of conditions which the passenger has admitted by his signature (Peninsular & O. Steam Nav. Co. v. Shand, 8 Moore, P. C. N. S. 272), and also the legal meaning of a railroad pasteboard ticket or check, one side of which contains merely the names of the towns where the passenger's journey begins and ends, and the other side containing limitations upon the carrier's responsibility (Henderson v. Stevenson, 2 H. L. Sc. App. Cas. 470). Other cases construe the meaning of checks or vouchers for the return of parcels deposited in a railway office for temporary safe-keeping (Parker v. Southeastern R. Co. L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 416; Harris v. Great Western R. Co. L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 515), and others construe the meaning of conditions contained upon the face of a railway ticket, or in a book of railway coupon tickets (Zuns v. Southeastern R. Co. L. R. 4 Q. B. 539; Burke v. Southeastern R. Co. L. R. 5 C. P. Div. 1); but no case declares the legal construction which the English courts place upon important conditions attached to a contract which expresses, in legal phrase, the undertaking of a carrier by sea to transport a passenger and his baggage from one point to another, the conditions not being referred to in the body of the contract, but referred to upon the bottom of the face of the paper by the words "See back," and indorsed upon the back of the ticket, the signature or assent of the passenger not appearing upon the paper. The general principle which controlled the various cases, and which is plainly stated in the discussions of the judge in 23 L. R. A.

Henderson v. Stevenson, supra, is that courts should insist upon the importance of a distinct declaration or reference by the carrier in that part of the ticket which contains his contract with respect to limitations in derogation of his common-law liability; so that it may manifestly appear that such limitations could not have been misunderstood and were accepted by the passenger. These exemptions must be directly stated, or the assent of the passenger will not be inferred. Attempts, "by indirection," to obtain an assent to exemptions, will not, unless the attempt is positively sanctioned by the passenger, receive the favor of courts. The principle is the one which is the foundation of the important decision in Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Mineral Springs Mfg. Co. 88 U. S. 16 Wall. 818, 21 L. ed. 297. But there is a distinction between regulations for the conduct of business and limitations upon common-law obligations, and this rule is not intended to be so stringent as to prevent the carrier from prescribing reasonable regulations for the conduct of his business, not in derogation of his responsibility at common law, for the purpose of preventing imposition upon him, and of establishing proper charges adequate to the extent of the risks to be undertaken, provided such regulations are brought to the knowledge of the person who intrusts merchandise to the carrier. York Mfg. Co. v. Illinois Cent. R. Co. 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 107, 18 L. ed. 170.

Turning now to the ticket which was issued to the libelants, we find that certain directions are expressed in the body of the ticket, which, with two notices to passengers, are expressly said to form part of the contract, and no other condition is referred to in the body of the agreement. At the foot of the page, by the words "See back," the purchaser is referred, under the heading "Notice to Passengers," to important modifications of the carrier's liability as expressed in the face of the contract. If these conditions are to be construed as a part of the express contract, they make a clumsily and artificially drawn document. They are of such a vital character that they should have been embodied in the contract, or unmistakably made a part of it. There is no reason why agreements of this nature should not be so distinctly and definitely stated or referred to in the body of the contract as to remove all uncertainty on the part of courts, or cause of complaint on the part of the passenger. The modifications in the third condition of the agreement entered into upon the face of the ticket, and which did not allude to these proposed modifications, are so great that they cannot be considered to have been made by special contract, in the absence of evidence of positive assent upon the part of the purchaser of the ticket or of the passenger.

The regulation in regard to a limitation of liability for the value of baggage of which the carrier is not informed, and the amount of a risk for which he is not paid, rests upon a different principle. The common-law liability of common carriers for the safety of baggage of travelers is not exactly defined, but it is not unlimited. The carrier is not to be called upon to take an unusual quantity of trunks, as the baggage of a single traveler, nor is he under obligations to pay large sums for the value of articles which are in excess of a traveler's ordinary wants. The rule which the common law laid down upon this subject is well understood. "The contract to carry the person only implies an undertaking to transport such a limited quantity of articles as are ordinarily taken by travelers for their personal use and convenience; such quantity depending, of course, upon the station of the party, the object and length of his journey, and many other considerations." Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Swift, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 272, 20 L. ed. 428. And therefore, as this obligation on the part of the carrier is not unlimited, but is at common law not exactly defined, the carrier has a right, "by reasonable regulations, of which the passenger has knowledge," to define and make certain to both parties the extent of an implied undertaking to carry baggage (New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Fraloff, 100 U. S. 29, 25 L. ed. 534), and of an express undertaking, where the contract includes baggage by name; for an express contract which simply mentions baggage would not be construed to mean baggage unlimited in quantity or in value. By the contract in question the amount of space which the baggage could occupy was expressly provided for. The power of the carrier to define by regulations, communicated to the traveler, the amount of his pecuniary liability for baggage, has been well understood in the law of England and in this country. "It is undoubtedly competent for carriers of passengers by specific regulations, distinctly brought to the knowledge of the passenger, which are reasonable in their character, and not inconsistent with any statute or their duty to the public, to protect themselves against liability, as insurers for baggage not exceeding a fixed amount in value, except upon additional compensation, proportioned to the risk." New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. Fraloff, supra.

23 L. R. A.

The regulations or the notices upon the tickets or contracts which bring this class of limitations home to the knowledge of the passenger are of a very different character from the notices of which we have been speaking, and which limit or attempt to annihilate the common-law responsibility of a carrier. This class of regulations is intended to make certain what is uncertain, to define what is otherwise indefinite, to prevent mistakes, complaint, and litigation, and to promote fairness of dealing. The ticket was purchased by the father of the young lady passengers, a gentleman of large business experience, who had frequently used similar tickets. He kept the ticket for a while in his office in London, but did not read it, and had never read the tickets which he had purchased for his own use. He had abundant opportunity to read it, and to make himself familiar with the reasonable and ordinarily well-understood regulations of carriers by land or sea in regard to baggage. The regulation was distinctly brought to the knowledge of Mr. Potter by his reception of the ticket (which was far more than the ordinary railroad check, indicating the two points between which the passenger is to be carried), in ample time to make himself acquainted with its regulations. He was not hurried on board with no opportunity to know the rules of the company, and it cannot be safely asserted that with adequate means of knowledge placed in his hands, and with ample opportunity to possess himself of the information which the carrier gave him, knowledge of the regulations was not brought home to him.

The decree of the District Court is modified, with costs of this court, and the cause is remanded to the District Court, with instructions to enter a decree in favor of each libellant for the sum of $43.67, and interest from January 25, 1892, and their costs in the District Court.

Reversed 166 U. S. 375, 41 L. ed. 1039.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

James CROAN et al., Appts.,
v.
PHELPS et al.

(14 Ky. L. Rep. 915.)

1. A statute providing that "bastards shall be capable of inheriting and transmitting an inheritance on the part of or to the mother" does not provide for the transmission of the estate through the mother to her collateral kindred.
2. The word "kindred," in a statute providing for the descent of property in the absence of kindred, means those who can lawfully inherit, and does not include illegitimate blood relatives, unless they are given the right by statute to inherit.

(March 25, 1893.)

APPEAL by James Croan and others from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Bullitt County distributing the estate of Wesley Phelps, deceased, to the devisees of his widow rather than to the collateral heirs of his deceased mother, he being an illegitimate child.
Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles Carroll and J. W. Croon for appellants.

Messrs. Fairleigh & Straus for appellees.

Haselrigg, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Wesley Phelps, at quite an advanced age, died intestate, and without issue, the owner of a large estate in Bullitt county, Ky. The proof is clear that he was the illegitimate son of Alice McDaniel, whose death preceded his some years. He left a widow, who claims the entire property. It is also claimed by the descendants of the brothers and sisters of Phelps' mother, Alice; and the sole question presented upon this appeal is, Who takes the property? The lower court gave it to the widow, or rather to her devisees and legatees, she having died after instituting this action. The appellees base their claim to the estate under subsection 9, § 1, chap. 81, of the General Statutes, which provides that, if there be neither paternal nor maternal kindred, the whole estate shall go to the husband or wife of the intestate. They say that by "kindred" is meant such as can lawfully inherit. The mother being dead, and there being no legal father, and no provision for the transmission of inheritance from a bastard to collaterals, the appellees contend it is as if the paternal and maternal kindred were wholly extinct, and that the contingency arose upon which the widow became entitled to take the whole estate. The appellants contend that, under section 5 of the statute quoted, the mother, if living, would have taken, and that her brothers and sisters or their descendants must now take in her stead; that the intestate was capable under the statute of transmitting the estate to and through his mother on to them. That section is as follows: "Bastards shall be capable of inheriting and transmitting an inheritance on the part of or to the mother; and bastards of the same mother shall be capable of inheriting and transmitting an inheritance on the part of each other, as if such NOTE.—Inheritance by, through, or from illegitimate persons.

On the part of the mother.

In construing the phrase illegitimates may inherit and transmit inheritance "on the part of the mother," there is some conflict of authority, many cases holding with the main case for a strict construction of this statute and extending its provisions no farther than absolutely required under the words of the act, as in Jackson v. Jackson, 78 Ky. 290, 39 Am. Rep. 246; Scroggin v. Allan, 2 Dana, 333; Allen v. Ramsey, 1 Met. (Ky.) 636; Berry v. Owens, 5 Bush, 452; Bent v. St. Vrain, 30 Mo. 268; Gibson v. Moulton, 2 Disney (Ohio) 158; Curtis v. Hewins, 11 Met. 294; Grubb's App. 58 Pa. 56; Steckel's App. 64 Pa. 423; Stover v. Boswell, 3 Dana, 233; Sutton v. Sutton, 87 Ky. 216; Remington v. Lewis, 8 B. Mon. 606; Little v. Lake, 8 Ohio, 239.

But in Lewis v. Kutsler, 4 Ohio St. 354, the court disapproves the decision of Little v. Lake, supra, and claims that any relative on the part of the mother could inherit of such child, but that was not necessarily involved in that case.

And this phrase is given a strict construction in Texas on account of another clause in the same section of the same statute, which provides that they may take personal estate of their mother as though lawfully begotten, the court holding that this limitation to a personal estate gives a qualifying construction to the phrase "on the part of the mother," and that his property does not descend to his brothers and sisters. Blair v. Adams, 59 Fed. Rep. 243.

And in Bacon v. McBride, 32 Vt. 585, it was held that it was intended by this phrase, that illegiti-mates should only inherit from the mother and she from them, virtually overruling the case of Burlington v. Fosby, 6 Vt. 83, 27 Am. Dec. 536, which held that illegitimates might inherit from each other.

To the contrary, other states construe this phrase liberally and under it illegitimates inherit property from or through their mother and transmit it to or through their mothers as though they were legitimate. Grundy v. Hardfield, 16 R. L. 579; Briggs v. Greene, 10 R. L. 426; Garland v. Harrison, 8 Leigh, 366; Bennett v. Toler, 15 Gratt. 538, 78 Am. Dec. 638; Brewer v. Blougher, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 173, 10 L. ed. 408; Stevenson v. Sullivant, 18 U. S. 5 Wheat. 207, 5 L. ed. 70; Kingsley v. Broward, 19 Fla. 722.

In Dickinson's App., 42 Conn. 491, 19 Am. Rep. 553, it discusses that question on the part of the mother, whilst it does not appear that such a statute was in force in Connecticut and the court refused to follow the strict construction based upon such a statute by the courts which held that it does not mean through mother.

These cases will be found infra under the appropriate subdivisions.

Marriages null.

Under statute legitimating the issue of a marriage deemed null in law, the children may inherit as if legitimate. Hartwell v. Jackson, 7 Tex. 576; Dyer v. Braunhook, 66 Mo. 391, 27 Am. Rep. 869; Buchanan v. Harvey, 85 Mo. 376; Wright v. Lore, 12 Ohio St. 619; Abston v. Abston, 6 La. Ann. 137; Workman v. Harold (Ky.) Jan. 20, 1887; Heckert v. Hiles (Va.) Jan. 11, 1894; Eubanks v. Ranks, 34 Ga. 407; Harris v. Harris (Ky.) Jan. 18, 1887; Sneed v. Ewing, 5 J. J. Marsh. 460, 22 Am. Dec. 41.

bastards were born in lawful wedlock of the same parents."

It is insisted that the expression "on the part of or to the mother" must be construed liberally, and as meaning transmissibility of estate, not only "to," but through, the mother, and on to her collateral kindred. In determining the meaning of these words and the proper legal exposition of the statute, we must keep in mind that by the rules of the common law a bastard had no inheritable blood, and could neither receive from nor transmit an inheritance to his father, mother, brothers, or sisters. The Kentucky Statute of Descents of December, 1796, was an innovation on the common law, and reads as follows: "Bastards also shall be capable of inheriting, or transmitting inheritance, on the part of their mother, in like manner as if they had been lawfully begotten of such mother." This was a copy of the Virginia Statute of 1787, and with reference to which the Supreme Court of the United States, in Stevenson v. Sullivan, 18 U. S. 5 Wheat. 253, 5 L. ed. 82, said: "We understand it to be that they [bastards] shall have a capacity to take real estate by descent immediately or through their mother in the ascending line, and transmit the same to their line as descendants, in like manner as if they were legitimate." The expression "on the part of their mother" was not held to confer the right to inherit on the mother from her bastard child, but the whole effect of the section and this expression was simply to enable the bastard to take by inheritance from or through the mother in the direct line, and to pass that inheritance with the same directness to his own issue; and the illegitimate brothers in that case were denied the right to inherit from their legitimate brother. While quasi legitimate in some limited respects, they were nevertheless said to be bastards in all others, and as such could have neither father,

By the Spanish law, children begotten after both parents know of impediments to the marriage are illegitimate, and cannot inherit, but may where either party is ignorant. Patton v. Philadelphia & New Orleans, 1 La. Ann. 98.

Legalizing illegimates by statute and recognition.

Subsequent marriage and recognition legitimate the children under a statute so providing, and they may inherit as though legitimate. United States v. Skam, 5 Cranch, C. C. 387; Ash v. Way, 2 Gratt. 204; Caldwell v. Miller, 44 Kan. 12; Rice v. Efford, 3 Hen. & M. 225; Jackson v. Moore, 8 Dana, 170.

Although born before the act legalizing such children. Sleigh v. Strider, 5 Call (Va.) 439.

The New York act providing that illegitimate children in default of lawful issue may inherit real and personal property from their mother as if legitimate does not affect any vested right as the act so provides. Ferrie v. The Public Administrator, 3 Bradf. 249.

The child born within ten months after the death of the intestate, from his widow, inherits from his father under Ky. Gen. Stat., chap. 31, providing for such inheritance. Messie v. Hiatt, 88 Ky. 814.

Under a statute legitimating the issue where parents marry and recognize the offspring, the recognition must take place after passage of act. Edwards v. Gaulding, 38 Miss. 118; Brown v. Belmarde, 3 Kan. 42; Stevenson v. Sullivan, 18 U. S. 5 Wheat. 207, 5 L. ed. 70; Hartinger v. Ferring, 24 Fed. Rep. 15.

And the bastard cannot inherit from his father who does not comply with the statutes, in regard to his illegitimate children. Dupre v. Caruthers, 6 La. Ann. 156; Willoughby v. Motley, 38 Ky. 207.

A child may be legitimated by the act of legislature, and rendered capable of inheriting. Beall v. Beall, 8 Ga. 210; Shelton v. Wright, 25 Ga. 636; McGinnis v. McKee, 77 Pa. 81, 18 Am. Rep. 428; Lee v. Shankle, 51 N. C. 313; Miller's App. 52 Pa. 113.

Although the act does not say they are legitimated to the person who is recited in the act to be their father. Perry v. Newsom, 36 N. C. 23.

But in Edmondson v. Dyson, 7 Ga. 512, where the child was made legitimate and capable of inheriting without being legitimated to any particular person, she could not inherit as the act did not say from whom she could inherit.

The act of congress does not repeal the Utah act, authorizing children of polygamous marriages to inherit. Chapman v. Handley, 7 Utah, 49; Cope v. Cope, 187 U. S. 682, 24 L. ed. 832, rev'g 7 Utah, 68, and Re Pratt's Estate, Id. 273.

23 L. R. A.

An illegitimate child takes from his father where there are no brothers and sisters under 1 Ind. Rev. Stat. 1873, providing for such descent if there are no resident heirs in the United States. Borroughs v. Adams, 78 Ind. 160.

Bastard children legitimated by decree of the county court, under Tenn. Code, chap. 3640-3642, inherit as if born in wedlock. McKanne v. Baskerville, 98 Tenn. 450.

The collaterals who have recognized the child of a married woman as legitimate cannot thereafter question his right of succession. Saloy's Succession, 44 La. Ann. 433.

Inheritance by illegitimate from his mother.

Some states provide that illegitimate children may take and inherit from their mother. Opiyke's App. 49 Pa. 373; Jenkins v. Drane, 121 Ill. 217; Earle v. Dawes, 3 Md. Ch. 230; Blacklaws v. Milne, 82 Ill. 505, 15 Am. Rep. 339; Goodwin v. Colby, 64 N. H. 401; McCalla v. Bane, 45 Fed. Rep. 823; McGuire v. Brown, 41 Iowa, 650.

In Helms v. Franciscus, 2 Bland, Ch. 544, 20 Am. Dec. 402, it was stated in 1818, that bastards have the capacity to take from their mother as next of kin, but the statute is not given, and this is not the question involved.

An illegitimate child can inherit from her mother in Connecticut. Heath v. White, 5 Conn. 223.

And most states now provide by statute that an illegitimate child may inherit from the mother as though legitimate.

Inheritance by illegitimate under will.

By the term "child or children" means legitimate children. Cartwright v. Vawdry, 5 Ves. Jr. 530; Orthwein v. Thomas (Ill.) Sept. 27, 1887; Swaine v. Kennersley, 1 Ves. & B. 468; Godfrey v. Davis, 6 Ves. Jr. 43; Porter v. Porter, 7 How. (Miss.) 108.

By the term "issue" is meant legitimate children. Black v. Cartmell, 10 B. Mon. 183; Kingsley v. Broward, 19 Fla. 722.

But an illegitimate child will take under a devise to a daughter for life, and at her death to her children, under Va. Rev. Code, 355, providing that bastards shall be capable of inheriting and transmitting on the part of the mother as if lawfully begotten. Bennett v. Toler, 15 Gratt. 583, 78 Am. Dec. 638.

And where a devise was to his daughter Mary, and after her death to such of her children as she should by will appoint, those born before the will could take, although the mother married her de-brothers, nor sisters, and their inheritable blood was confined within the narrow limits of the very letter of the law. This restricted construction was followed by the Kentucky courts until the Act of 1840, though not without a strong dissent in Scroggin v. Allen, 2 Dana, 368 (decided in 1834). This act provided "that the mother shall be and is hereby rendered capable to inherit as heir or distributee of her bastard child; and brothers and sisters of the same mother born out of wedlock shall be capable to inherit, and take by descent a distribution from each other, as though born in wedlock, and as brothers and sisters of the whole blood." And notwithstanding the seeming generous intention of the statute to make the illegitimate child legitimate ex parte materna to all intents and purposes as though born in wedlock yet in Remington v. Lewis, 8 B. Mon. 606 (decided in 1848), the court used this language: "It is impossible, upon any admissible construction of the language of the act, to consider it as establishing a legal relationship for the purpose of inheritance between a bastard and any other of his bastard relations but his mother and such other illegitimate issue as she may have." It does not operate to establish a right either in the legitimate children to inherit from the legitimate or in the illegitimate children to inherit from the illegitimate. "Under this construction," says the court, "the bastard has, in view of the law of descents, no brothers or sisters except the illegitimate children of the same mother, and no other collateral kindred who can take his estate as heirs; and upon his death without issue, without lineal maternal ancestor alive, and without brother or sister, the illegitimate issue of his mother, or the descendants, his wife, if he leaves one, is his heir, under the fourteenth section of the statute, and not the legitimate son of his mother."

If the legitimate son of the mother of the ceased sister's husband. Crook v. Hill, L. R. 6 Ch. 311, 40 L. J. Ch. 216, 24 L. T. N. S. 488, 19 Week. Rep. 649.

Illegitimate children born after the date of the will do not take as against the will. Kent v. Barker, 2 Gray, 535; Mortimer v. West, 3 Russ. 370, 5 L. J. Ch. 181; Metham v. Devon, 1 P. Wms. 629.

But an after-born child takes his portion without regard to the will, under N. Y. Laws 1869, chap. 22, providing that where a child is born to the testator, and after making a will, unprovided for in it, they shall take under statute of descent and distribution. Gardner v. Heyer, 2 Paige, 11, 2 L. ed. 782; Bunce v. Bunce, 14 N. Y. Supp. 659, 20 N. Y. Civ. Proc. Rep. 332.

And the same was held in Milburn v. Milburn, 60 Iowa, 411; Bunce v. Bunce, supra; McCulloch's App. 113 Pa. 247.

Under the South Carolina Act of 1795, avoiding gifts to a mistress or the bastard children of all over (¼) one fourth, where the wife and legitimate children do not avoid it, the next of kin cannot. Breithaupt v. Bauskett, 1 Rich. Eq. 465; Ford v. McElroy, Id. 474.

And under this act the excess only is void. Bouknight v. Brown, 16 S. C. 155.

And this act does not control a divorced husband who is the father of legitimate children. Hull v. Hull, 3 Strobb. Eq. 174.

Illegitimate children may take under a will, where they are sufficiently described. Bentley v. Blizard, 4 Jur. N. S. 652; Clifton v. Goodbun, L. R. 6 Eq. 278; Beachcroft v. Beachcroft, 1 Madd. 430; Stewart v. Stewart, 31 N. J. Eq. 398; Rivers's Case, 1 Atk. 410; Dawson v. Dawson, 6 Madd. 232.

And a devise to children which I may have living at my decease, by A. was sustained. Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 Ves. & B. 422, affirmed 12 Price, 470.

A bequest to a child of which a woman was anciente was sustained. Gordon v. Gordon, 1 Meriv. 141; Medworth v. Pope, 27 Beav. 71; Pratt v. Flamer, 5 Harr. & J. 10.

But an illegitimate child not begotten cannot take under a will by any description. Re Connor, 2 Jones & L. 456; Kingsley v. Broward, 19 Fla. 722; Pratt v. Mathew, 22 Beav. 828, 2 Jur. N. S. 364, 26 L. J. Ch. 409, 4 Week. Rep. 418; Blodwell v. Edwards, 2 Cro. Eliz. 508, F. Moore, 420; Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 1 Younge & C. Ch. Cas. 667, 6 Jur. 921.

And in Earle v. Wilson, 17 Ves. Jr. 628, it was held that a bastard could not take as the issue of a particular person before its birth.

Notwithstanding a declaration in a devise that the testator's daughter is illegitimate, it may be 23 L. R. A.

shown that she was legitimate, so as to take under the devise. Ehringhaus v. Cartwright, 30 N. C. 39.

Inheritance by illegitimates from brothers and sisters.

Under a statute providing that a bastard shall inherit or transmit inheritance on the part of the mother as though legitimate, illegitimate children may inherit from each other. Garland v. Harrison, 8 Leigh, 368; Burlington v. Fosby, 6 Vt. 83, 27 Am. Dec. 535; Briggs v. Greene, 10 R. I. 495.

See subdivision "(in the part of the mother.)"

They may inherit from each other under Ill. Stat. 1853, providing that the property vests in next of kin to the mother. Miller v. Williams, 66 Ill. 91; Rogers v. Weller, 5 Bias. 166.

They inherit from each other under Md. Act 1825, providing that they inherit from their mothers as if born in lawful wedlock. Brewer v. Blougher, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 178, 10 L. ed. 408.

And in Connecticut they are heirs of each other. Brown v. Dye, 2 Root, 280.

And illegitimates inherit from each other under N. C. Bat. Rev., chap. 36, providing that the estate descends to such person as would inherit if he was born in wedlock. McBryde v. Patterson, 78 N. C. 412.

Where the bastard dies intestate leaving the daughter of a bastard brother born of the same mother, and bastard's widow, they take his property under N. C. Act 1836, providing that if natural born children die intestate without issue, his estate is divided among his brothers and sisters born of the same mother, as if born in lawful wedlock. Coor v. Starling, 54 N. C. 243.

And a child may inherit through his grandmother his brother's estate in Connecticut where a bastard has inheritable blood, for the purpose of collateral as well as lineal descent through him. Dickinson's App., 42 Conn. 491, 19 Am. Rep. 553.

But in Woltemate's App., 86 Pa. 212, it was held that they do not inherit from each other under Pa. Act 1855, providing that they and their mother shall respectively take or inherit from each other.

And do not take as against a husband, under Tenn. Code, § 2423, providing that if there is no wife or husband then it goes to their mother, and if none then to brothers and sisters by the mother. Soiggins v. Barnes, 8 Baxt. 560.

Illegitimates do not inherit from legitimate children of the same mother under a statute providing that bastards shall be capable of inheriting and transmitting inheritance on the part of the mother. Bacon v. McBride, 32 Vt. 565.

bastard cannot inherit his estate through their common mother, how can the collateral kindred of the mother in his case hope to do so? It cannot be contended that our statute is more liberal than that of 1840. Indeed, it is only by a forced construction that the mother herself can be said to inherit from her bastard child. The plain Act of 1840 confers for the first time that right on her, in its opening clause, thus: "That the mother shall be and is hereby rendered capable to inherit as heir of her bastard child" which was not inserted in the Revised Statutes (1852) or the General Statutes (1878). Instead thereof, the old eighteenth section of the Kentucky Act of 1796, copied from the Virginia Act of 1787, was adopted with the interpolation of the words "or to" after the words "on the part of." And suppose we adopt the construction given this statute by the Supreme Court of the United States in Stevenson v. Sullivant, supra, and followed by a majority of this court in Seroggin v. Allen, above quoted, we would have this state of the case: Bastards shall be capable of taking real property by descent immediately or through their mother, or on the part of their mother, and of transmitting that same estate without alleviation to their own issue and "to the mother." The old statutes were consistent and harmonious, simply empowering the bastard, though within narrow limits, to inherit property from his mother, which under the common law he could not do, and transmit the same to his own issue. Now, singularly enough, after so inheriting it, he is permitted to transmit it "to the mother" from whom he has just inherited it. The well-known legal meaning of the expression "on the part of the mother," as construed by the courts, must therefore be discarded, and it must be supposed that they were used in the statute in the sense of "from the mother;" hence the meaning is as if the reading was: "Bastards shall be capable of

See subdivision "On the part of the mother," supra.

The same was held under Tenn. Act 1819, providing for the descent of property of an illegitimate to brothers and sisters. Grimes v. Orrand, 2 Helsk. 298; Melton v. Davidson, 88 Tenn. 122; Woodward v. Duncan, 1 Coldw. 522.

Inheritance by illegittimates through mother or father.

In some states illegittimates cannot inherit through their mother, from their mother's collaterals. Jackson v. Jackson, 78 Ky. 380, 39 Am. Rep. 246; Allen v. Ramsey, 1 Met. (Ky.) 635.

And the same was held under a statute providing the estate shall descend to the relatives on the part of the mother. Gibson v. McNeely, 11 Ohio St. 181.

And the same was held under Mass. Stat. 1851, providing that he shall be heir of his mother and of any maternal ancestor, and that his issue may take by descent of such ancestor. Pratt v. Atwood, 108 Mass. 40.

And cannot inherit from any collateral relative of the mother, under Tenn. Act 1819, providing that if they die intestate without children, his or her brothers take his or her estate. Brown v. Kerby, 9 Humph. 460.

And cannot take from collateral kindred of their mother under statute providing that bastards shall be capable of inheriting or of transmitting inheritance on the part of their mother as if born in lawful wedlock. Gibson v. Moulton, 2 Disney (Ohio) 158.

And cannot claim his nephew's estate in Massachusetts under statute, providing only for descent from his mother or her lineal ancestors. Haraden v. Larrabee, 113 Mass. 480.

But in Grundy v. Hadfield, 16 R. I. 579, and Sutton v. Sutton, 87 Ky. 218, it was held that they could take from their mother's brother under statute, providing that bastards may inherit or transmit on the part of the mother as if legitimate.

See subdivision, supra, "On the part of the mother."

And may take under Ill. Rev. Stat., chap. 80, providing that illegitimate person shall take any estate which the parents might have taken if living. Jenkins v. Drane, 121 Ill. 217.

And in Connecticut they inherit and transmit on the part of the mother collaterally like other persons. Dickinson's App. 42 Conn. 491, 19 Am. Rep. 653.

Illegitimate children inherit property through the mother equally with legitimates, under Fla. M. C. Dig. p. 470, and Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, providing 23 L. R. A.

that they shall inherit from the mother as if legitimate. Parks v. Kimes, 100 Ind. 148; Keech v. Enriquez, 28 Fla. 597.

But such child does not inherit his grandfather's estate through his mother where she died before her father, as N. C. Rev. Stat., chap. 64, provides for the descent of a mother's estate to her legitimate children of which she dies possessed. Waggoner v. Miller, 26 N. C. 480.

And cannot inherit from his grandfather through his father under Vt. Gen. Stat., chap. 58, providing that an illegitimate as respects the father shall be capable of inheriting as though born in lawful wedlock. Safford v. Houghton's Estate, 48 Vt. 235.

Inheritance by brothers and sisters of mother or father of illegittimate.

The brothers and sisters of the mother of an illegitimate do not inherit under Ohio Act 1881, providing that bastards shall be capable of inheriting or transmitting inheritance on the part of their mother as if born in wedlock. Little v. Lake, 8 Ohio. 239. See subdivision supra, "On the part of the mother."

And do not inherit under Tex. Rev. Stat., art. 1667, providing that they may inherit from and through their mother. Blair v. Adams, 59 Fed. Rep. 243.

And do not inherit under Ind. Rev. Code 1881, providing that in want of father, mother, brothers, and sisters, the estate goes to the wife as at common law he has no father, mother, brothers, or sisters. Doe v. Bates, 6 Blackf. 583.

And do not inherit under Pa. Act 1855, providing that the mother and her illegitimate child shall be next of kin to each other. Grubb's App. 53 Pa. 58.

And do not inherit under La. Code, which makes no disposition in favor of natural collateral kindred except brothers and sisters and descendants, preferring a wife. Montegut v. Bacas, 48 La. Ann. 158.

But the brothers and sisters of a mother inherit the estate of her illegitimate child under Mass. Pub. Stat., chap. 125, providing that his estate goes to the person who would have been entitled through the mother if he had been legitimate. Parkman v. McCarthy, 149 Mass. 503.

The brothers and sisters of a father may inherit the estate of an illegitimate child under N. C. Rev. Stat., chap. 38, providing that if such children die after issue his estate descends to his or her brothers born of the same mother. Sawyer v. Sawyer, 28 N. C. 407.

inheriting and transmitting an inheritance from or to the mother." And even this solution is well-nigh spoiled by the rejection of the alternative "or" properly used in the old statute, and inserting the word "and" in the present one, thus requiring the same estate to be inherited and transmitted to or from the mother. However, the statute must be construed to mean that bastards shall be capable of inheriting from the mother, and of transmitting an inheritance to the mother, and so must be held to embody, in substance, the provisions of the Acts of 1796 and of 1840, but certainly not to extend or broaden them. In the case of Sutton v. Sutton, 87 Ky. 217, some progress was made towards liberalizing this section, and there the legitimate children of a bastard take what he, if alive, would have taken from an illegitimate brother of the same mother. But it was done under the statute making bastards capable of inheriting and transmitting an inheritance on the part of each other as if born in lawful wedlock of the same parents. There is no such statute in aid of the collateral kindred of the mother. In Allen v. Ramsey, 1 Met. (Ky.) 635, and Berry v. Owens, 5 Bush, 452, the right of the bastard to inherit from the mother's collateral kindred was very decidedly negated. In Jackson v. Jackson, 78 Ky. 390, 39 Am. Rep. 246, this court, through Judge Cofer, held that the bastard could not inherit through his mother from her ancestors. "It must be regarded," says the court, "as the settled law of this state that a bastard cannot inherit from collaterals from whom his mother, if living, would have inherited; and it would seem to follow, as a necessary logical sequence, that he cannot inherit from the ancestors of his mother." And while the exact question was not before the court, the learned judge added: "And this construction is somewhat fortified by the fact that a bastard can only transmit an inheritance in the as-

Inheritance by mother from an illegitimate child.

A mother may inherit from an illegitimate child, under Va. Code 1819, providing that bastards shall be capable of inheriting on the part of the mother and transmitting on the part of the mother as though lawfully begotten. Garland v. Harrison, 8 Leigh, 368. See subdivision supra, "On the part of the mother."

And may inherit to the exclusion of a half brother under similar act. Stover v. Boswell, 3 Dana, 238.

And may inherit the property of an illegitimate who died without descendants, in Texas. Pettis v. Dawson, 82 Tex. 12.

And may inherit under Pennsylvania Act 1856, providing that illegitimate children with their mother may take and inherit from each other as next of kin. Nell's App. 22 Pa. 183.

The mother is the sole heir of a bastard who has no brothers or sisters. Langmade v. Tuggle, 78 Ga. 770.

A mother inherits to the exclusion of natural brothers, under La. Code, art. 916, providing that the estate of a natural child without posterity, belongs to the father or mother who has acknowledged it. Nolasco v. Lurty, 13 La. Ann. 100.

But she cannot inherit from an illegitimate child under North Carolina Act 1799, providing that his estate shall be divided among his brothers and sisters born of the same mother. Flintham v. Holder, 16 N. C. 845.

A mother cannot inherit from an illegitimate child under Md. Act 1823, providing that illegitimate children and their issue take from their mother or from each other. Miller v. Stewart, 8 Gill, 128.

In Cooley v. Dewey, 4 Pick. 98, 16 Am. Dec. 828, and Jones v. Burden, 4 Desaus. 439, and Harwick v. Miller, Id. 424, in 1814, it was held that a mother could not inherit from her illegitimate child.

The natural parents cannot claim as heir of an illegitimate child who disposes of his estate by will. Wood v. January, 15 La. Ann. 518.

Inheritance through illegitimate.

The child of an illegitimate may inherit through his mother under a statute making him heir of his mother or parents. Magee's Estate, 68 Cal. 414; Brewer v. Hamor, 33 Me. 261.

The uncle and aunt on the father's side inherit the estate of a child of an illegitimate under N. C. Rev. Stat., chap. 83, providing that if such illegitimate die without issue his estate shall descend to 23 L. R. A.

his or her brothers born of the same mother, and the inheritance by collaterals on the maternal side is excluded by the illegitimacy of the mother. Sawyer v. Sawyer, 28 N. C. 407.

The child of an illegitimate may inherit through his mother, under Illinois Act 1872, providing that an illegitimate child shall be heir of any person from whom his mother might have inherited if living, and the lawful issue may take her part. Bales v. Elder, 118 Ill. 438.

But in Berry v. Owens, 5 Bush, 452, it was held that the child of an illegitimate cannot inherit from her mother's brother.

The child of a bastard does not inherit through his mother or from his mother, under Pennsylvania Act 1856, providing that illegitimate children or their mother may take or inherit from each other. Steckel's App. 64 Pa. 493.

A child of a bastard does not inherit from a bastard's mother, under Mass. Rev. Stat., chap. 61, § 2, providing that every illegitimate child shall be heir of his mother, as this does not apply to grandchildren. Curtis v. Hewins, 11 Met. 294.

The brothers and sisters of a bastard do not take the estate of his son as against a bastard's wife, under an act providing that the mother shall not succeed to an estate if there are brothers and sisters of his father as these are not recognized as brothers and sisters. Soroggin v. Allan, 3 Dana, 368.

Inheritance by widow or husband of illegitimate.

The widow of an illegitimate takes under Pa. Act 1833, providing that in default of known heirs the estate vests in the widow. Kennedy's Estate, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 230.

And takes under Mich. Act 1892, providing that in default of issue or lineal descendants, or father, mother, brother, or sister, the husband or wife shall take. Keeler v. Dawson, 73 Mich. 600.

And takes under La. Code, art. 911, providing that where deceased has no descendants nor ascendants, nor collaterals, the estate goes to the husband or wife. Briscoe's Succession, 2 La. Ann. 268.

And she takes under Ill. Act 1872, providing that on the death of an illegitimate without descendants the estate will vest in the widow or husband. Evans v. Price, 118 Ill. 563.

And the husband takes under Maryland Act 1820, providing that if there are no descendants or kindred the estate shall go to the husband or wife. Southgate v. Annan, 31 Md. 112.

But the mother of an illegitimate cannot take under Maine Laws 1821, providing that if there is cending line, 'to his mother,'—and, to preserve harmony in the construction of the statute, the court was constrained to adopt this confessedly strict construction. Whatever might have been the original intention of the lawmakers towards broadening the inheriting capacity of these innocent off-spring of their mother's incontinence, it must be confessed that a rather illiberal view of the statutes respecting them has obtained, which, however must now be adhered to.

Let the judgment below giving the estate to the wife's beneficiaries be confirmed.

no kindred the widow shall take. Hughes v. Decker, 38 Mo. 153.

Inheritance by legitimate children from illegitimate children of the same mother.

Legitimate children inherit property of illegitimate children of the same mother under N. C. Bat. Rev., chap. 36, providing that when any person shall die leaving none who can claim as heirs his widow shall inherit. Powers v. Kite, 38 N. C. 156.

And they inherit in Indiana. Ellis v. Hatfield, 20 Ind. 101.

And they inherit under Ala. Code 1886, § 1922, providing the mother, or kindred on the part of the mother in default of descendants of illegitimate, inherit. Butler v. Elyton Land Co., 34 Ala. 384.

And they inherit under Ohio Act 1871, providing that bastards shall be capable of inheriting or transmitting inheritance on the part of the mother. Lewis v. Butlee, 4 Ohio St. 334.

And they take under Tennessee Act 1819, providing should bastard die without issue his and her brothers take his estate. Riley v. Bryd, 3 Head, 20.

But they do not inherit under Kentucky Act 1840, authorizing illegitimate children to inherit from each other. Remington v. Lewis, 3 B. Mon. 606.

But in Bent v. St. Vrain, 30 Mo. 268, it was held under Mo. Rev. Code 1845, providing that bastards shall be capable of inheriting and transmitting inheritance on the part of their mother, that the brothers could not take.

And do not inherit under Mississippi Act 1845, providing only for inheritance between legitimates. Irvine v. Newlin, 63 Miss. 182.

And do not inherit under a statute providing that this child shall be upon equal footing of other children of the father. McCormick v. Cantrell, 7 Yerg. 615.

The grandchildren of the brother of a bastard may inherit his property under Ga. Code 1791-1792, providing that legitimates and illegitimates inherit from the mother, as the Act of 1816 provides that collaterals take as though the deceased was born in wedlock, and the Act of 1850 extends the distribution to collaterals and embraces the children of the intestate's nephew. Houston v. Davidson, 45 Ga. 574.

In this note cases in regard to evidence as to legitimacy, and conflict of laws as to who will be held legitimate in certain states are omitted.

L. T.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

John H. FISHER

WEST VIRGINIA & PITTSBURGH
R. CO., Plff. in Err.

(.....W. Va.....)

1. A railroad company chartered by the state cannot, without legislative authority, by lease, or by any other contract or arrangement, turn over to another company its road, and the use of its franchises, and thereby exempt itself from responsibility for the conduct and management of the road.

2. A railroad company, as a carrier of passengers, is not an insurer, but its duty is to carry them safely, using the utmost care, as far as human skill, diligence, and foresight can reasonably be required to go, but the passenger must not be guilty of contributory negligence.

3. A passenger is riding on the platform of a car in such a state of intoxication as to be careless and heedless of the danger to which he is exposed. It is the duty of the railroad company after the conductor has notice of his condition and exposure to danger, to use the ordinary precautions for his safety, such as calling his attention to the danger, and the rules of the company forbidding such exposure, and inviting him to go inside of the car.

4. It is the duty of a passenger unnecessarily riding on the platform of a car in motion to go into the car when requested by the conductor or other person having charge of the train, when there is standing room inside; and if by reason of such refusal, and by going down onto the steps of the car without the knowledge of the conductor or other person having charge of the train, he loses his balance, falls overboard, and is injured, he is guilty of contributory negligence, such as will preclude his recovery for such injury.

5. The question of contributory negligence is a mixed question of law and fact, and while it is a question for the jury to determine, it must be determined by them by applying the law to the facts; and where instructions are given by the court, pertaining to the questions at issue, which propound the law correctly, they cannot be disregarded in reaching their verdict, and if instructions asked for by the plaintiff, and given, are calculated to mislead the jury as to the questions at issue, which are excepted to by the defendant, a verdict in accordance therewith will not be sustained.

*Headnotes by ENGLISH, J.

NOTE.—The duty of carriers toward drunken passengers has been touched in several cases in this series. One somewhat similar to the present being a case of a drunken passenger falling from a moving train, in Cincinnati, I. St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Cooper (Ind.) 6 L. R. A. 241.

As to exposure of drunken passenger to danger 23 L. R. A.

by ejection from car, see Roseman v. Carolina Cent. R. Co. (N. C.) 19 L. R. A. 327, and note.

As to right to remove drunk and disorderly passengers, see Sullivan v. Old Colony R. Co. (Mass.) 1 L. R. A. 513, and note; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Logan (Ky.) 3 L. R. A. 38.

6. One cannot voluntarily incapacitate himself from ability to exercise ordinary care for his own self-protection, and then set up such inability as an excuse for his failure to use care; and if the intoxication contributed to the injury, as a proximate cause thereof, it is a complete bar to any action for any damages sustained in consequence of it.

(Holt, J., dissent.)

(April 11, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Lewis County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John Brannon and W. W. Brannon, for plaintiff in error:

Although instructions No. 1 and 2 may be correct as mere abstract propositions of law, they are not based upon the evidence in the case.

Johnson v. Jennings, 10 Gratt. 1, 60 Am. Dec. 523; Kincheloe v. Tracewells, 11 Gratt. 587; Kerr v. Lunsford, 2 L. R. A. 668, 81 W. Va. 683; Pasley v. English, 10 Gratt. 286; Rea v. Trotter, 26 Gratt. 594; 1 Barton, Law Fr. 656, and note 5.

Where the facts, although undisputed, are of such character that different minds may draw different inferences therefrom as to whether such facts establish negligence, it is a proper question for the jury and not for the court, but the inference of negligence must be a reasonable one, and the question of its reasonableness—that is to say, whether the particular act of negligence charged can be found from the established facts of the case, without reasoning irrationally, and without rejecting common sense as well as the rules of cause and effect, is one exclusively for the court.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Landauer, 86 Neb. 642.

Plaintiff now complains that he was treated by the defendant as a rational and intelligent being. He complains the defendant did not treat him as a child and put him under restraint.

Malcom v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 106 N. C. 63; 2 Wood, Railway Law, 808; Beach, Railway Dig. 1889, p. 205, § 65.

If a passenger violates a reasonable rule, and such violation contributes to his injury, he cannot recover therefor.

Buswell, Personal Injuries, § 156; Wills v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 129 Mass. 351.

On the question of exposure of person to danger, see—

Patterson, Railway Accident Law, 272, 273; 2 Beach, Railways, §§ 860, 998; Beach, Contrib. Neg. 149; Malcom v. Richmond & D. R. Co. supra; 2 Wood, Railway Law, § 308; Weber v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 7 L. R. A. 819, 100 Mo. 194; Deering, Neg. 92; Dun v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. 78 Va. 645, 49 Am. Rep. 388; Carriaco v. West Virginia Cent. & P. R. Co. 35 W. Va. 389; Schouler, Bailm. § 652, p. 707, note 3.

Where it appeared that the plaintiff had been drinking, was riding on the front platform, although without objection, and stepped to the lower step to permit persons to pass, and that a sudden movement of the car, by which he was injured, was not unusual, and should not have been unexpected, it was held that a nonsuit should have been granted.

Beach, Contrib. Neg. 286, and note 3. See also 4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 78, § 34; Butcher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 519, 37 W. Va. 180.

Messrs. J. J. Davis and C. C. Higginbotham for defendant in error.

English, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action of trespass on the case brought by John H. Fisher, an infant acting by his next friend, John S. Fisher, against the West Virginia & Pittsburgh Railroad Company, in the circuit court of Lewis county, to recover from the defendant damages alleged to have been occasioned by the negligence of the defendant in carrying the plaintiff, as a passenger over its road, from the town of Weston to the town of Buckhannon, in this state. The defendant appeared at rules, demurred to the declaration, and pleaded not guilty; also, filed a special plea in writing, setting up therein that at the time the injury occurred, and before that time, the defendant had leased its road to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and the said last-named road was the lessee in possession, and operating the said road, at the time the alleged injury occurred, and should have been made sole defendant, which plea was rejected, and issue was joined upon the plea of not guilty. The case was tried before R. G. Linn, special judge. The defendant's demurrer to the declaration was overruled, and, it appearing that said John H. Fisher was then over the age of twenty-one years, it was ordered that the case proceed in the name of said John H. Fisher. On the 15th day of March, 1893, the case was submitted to a jury, which resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff, assessing his damages at $3,500; and thereupon the defendant moved the court to set aside the verdict, and grant it a new trial, on the ground that the same was contrary to the instructions of the court and to the evidence, and for other grounds set forth in the bill of exceptions, which motion was overruled; and judgment was rendered for the plaintiff on the verdict, and this writ of error was applied for and obtained.

The first error assigned by the plaintiff in error is that the court erred by rejecting the plea in writing filed by the defendant. This assignment, however, I do not regard as well taken, as the question raised by this plea was before this court in the case of Ricketts v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 38 W. Va. 433, 7 L. R. A. 354, in which it was held that "a railroad company chartered by a state cannot, without distinct legislative authority, by lease, or any other contract or arrangement, turn over to another company its road, and the use of its franchises, and thereby exempt itself from responsibility for the conduct and management of the road;" the plea relied on in this case averring that the defendant had leased its road and rolling stock, etc., to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company before this injury occurred, and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company was the lessee of the defendant at the time supposed grievance occurred, etc.

The next assignment of error pertains to the action of the court in giving instructions No. 1 and 2 asked for by the plaintiff, which read as follows: Instruction No. 1: "The court instructs the jury that, in the transportation of passengers, a railroad company is bound to exercise more than ordinary care and diligence, and is liable for the slightest negligence, against which prudence and foresight could have guarded." Instruction No. 2: "The court instructs the jury that although the plaintiff may have been guilty of negligence, and although that negligence may in fact have contributed to the injury, yet if they find from the evidence that the defendant, after having notice of plaintiff's dangerous exposure, did not exercise ordinary care and diligence to prevent his injury, the plaintiff's negligence will not excuse nor relieve the defendant from liability,"—which instructions were objected to by the defendant, the objection was overruled by the court, the instructions given to the jury, and the defendant excepted. Do these instructions propound the law correctly? As to instruction No. 1, in my opinion the circuit court erred in giving it to the jury without qualification. While it is true that it is the duty of a common carrier of passengers to use the utmost care in providing for their safety, yet I can well see how a jury might be misled by the instruction referred to. To instruct the jury that, in the transportation of passengers, a railroad company is bound to exercise more than ordinary care and diligence, is a proposition we can readily accede to; but to add, without qualification, that it is liable for the slightest negligence, against which prudence and foresight could have guarded, appears to me to have a direct tendency to mislead the jury to the prejudice of the defendant, especially under the state of facts disclosed in this case, unless the jury had been further instructed that the plaintiff could not recover if he himself was guilty of contributory negligence. The facts proved in this case clearly show that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence; and instruction No. 1, taken by itself, leaving out any reference to the question of contributory negligence, would have a strong tendency to mislead the jury, and should not have been given. Barton states the law, in his Law Practice, as follows (in volume 1, p. 656): "The court is not bound to give an instruction upon a mere abstract question, and, if it does so under circumstances calculated to mislead the jury, such an instruction will be error for which the judgment will be reversed;" citing Pasley v. English, 10 Gratt. 236. Again, in the case of McKelvey v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 35 W. Va. 501 (sixth point of syllabus), this court held that a bad instruction is not cured by a good one; though they be given on the motion of adverse litigants, the bad instruction should be withdrawn. Brannon, J., delivering the opinion of the court in that case, says: "I find it stated in 28 L. R. A.

Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Maffit, 67 Ill. 481, that the fact that the law is accurately stated on one side will not obviate errors in instruction on the other side; and in Imhoff v. Chicago & M. R. Co. 20 Wis. 344, "Error in instructions is not cured by the court afterwards instructing directly to the contrary, and so leaving the jury to digest the contradiction. The error should be retracted;" also, in Clay v. Miller, 3 T. B. Mon. 146, "An erroneous instruction cannot be corrected by another instruction which may state the law accurately, unless the erroneous instruction be thereby plainly withdrawn;" citing Kingen v. State, 45 Ind. 518; Southern R. Co. v. Kendrick, 40 Miss. 374, 90 Am. Dec. 383; Pendleton Street R. Co. v. Stallmann, 22 Ohio St. 2.

In considering the propriety of instruction No. 2, which was asked for by the plaintiff, and given to the jury by the court, it becomes necessary to inquire what is intended in said instruction by the words "dangerous exposure," of which it is implied the defendant had notice by the wording of said instruction, and what was the proximate cause of the injury complained of; and first let us inquire what was the condition of the plaintiff at the time he took passage on the cars, and at the time the accident occurred. On cross-examination the plaintiff himself was asked, "Had you been drinking when you were making that trip?" His reply was, "I had a drink or two." He was asked, "You were a little intoxicated?" and answered "I wasn't drunk." Again the question was propounded, "Where did you drink?" and he said in reply, "I don't know but that I took a drink or two on the train. I think I did." He also stated that his father was in the car. Now, when we consider the fact, shown by the testimony, that the car was running at the rate of ten miles an hour, and that this young man met with his sad misfortune only seven miles and a half from Weston, and that he had taken two drinks in traveling that distance, the strong inference is that his object in remaining on the platform was not to get fresh air, as he stated, but that he might take an occasional drink as he went along. The quantity he took at these drinks does not appear. Neither does it appear that the conductor had notice that he had liquor with him. But the inference is plain that his condition at the time of the accident may have been very different from what it was at the time the conductor took up his ticket. Now, then, as to the position the plaintiff was occupying at the time of the accident. He says: "I was standing on the platform; may be, one step down on the steps. Had one hand hold of the iron next to the coach, and one in front of the coach, on the left side, going to Buckhannon." That he was standing there, and let loose with his left hand, still holding with his right hand, and the train made a sudden tilt, and threw him right face first. That he held on, but his hand slipped down to the bottom of the rail, as far as it would go, and he let loose and fell. And on cross-examination, in answer to the question, "You say you were on the steps, and went out?" answered "Yes, sir."

Now the exposed position the plaintiff took upon the steps of the car was manifestly the proximate cause of his injury, and no witness in the case states that the conductor, or any other officer of the car or train, had notice of the fact that the plaintiff was on the steps, holding to the iron railing on the sides thereof. This court has frequently held that instructions which are not based upon or applicable to the facts proven should not be given to the jury, although they may be correct, as abstract principles of law. See Coffman v. Hedrick, 33 W. Va. 120; Kinsley v. Monongalia County Ct., 31 W. Va. 464; Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 662, 3 L. R. A. 668; Evans' Case, 33 W. Va. 417; Wheeling Bridge Co. v. Wheeling & B. Bridge Co., 34 W. Va. 155.

In the case of Carrico v. West Virginia Cent. & P. R. Co., 35 W. Va. 390, in the seventh point of the syllabus, this court held as follows: "The general rule in regard to contributory negligence is that, if the negligence be mutual on the part of the plaintiff and defendant, there cannot be a recovery. But if the injury would have happened just the same, although the plaintiff had been in no wise negligent, his negligence will not prevent his recovery, or if the defendant, after he has discovered the dangerous exposure, refuses or neglects to practice any care or precaution to prevent the injury, he will be held liable." The instruction we are considering in this case should not have been given to the jury, because it is not based upon, or applicable to, the facts proven. It assumes that the evidence shows that some officer of the train had notice of the plaintiff's exposed position on the steps of the car, and no witness proves such notice. The fact that the conductor had notice of the fact that the plaintiff was on the platform of the car will avail him nothing, unless he received his injury from occupying that position. We can well see a great difference, so far as danger is concerned, between occupying a position on the steps of a moving car, and occupying the platform, which the evidence shows was surrounded by railing; and notice of one would be no notice whatever of the other, and the defendant could not have been expected to exercise ordinary care or diligence to prevent the plaintiff's injury until it had notice of his dangerous position. The plaintiff might have gone onto the engine or the cowcatcher, and thus exposed himself to imminent danger, but if he had done so without the knowledge of the defendant, although he had been injured, as a consequence, the defendant would not be liable. And for these reasons I think said instruction No. 2 should have been rejected.

The next assignment of error is to the action of the court in refusing instructions Nos. 4 and 5 asked for by the defendant. These instructions, as asked for by the defendant, were modified by the court, and given as follows: Instruction No. 4. "If the jury believe from the evidence that both the plaintiff and defendant were guilty of negligence; that such negligence of both was concurrent, or running together, and co-operated to produce the injury complained of, they should find for the defendant, unless it appears from the evidence that the defendant had notice of the negligence of the plaintiff, and refused or neglected to practice any care or precaution to prevent the injury." Instruction No. 5: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the injury in the declaration mentioned was the result of the concurrent negligence of both the plaintiff and the defendant, the jury has no right to apportion the fault, and to find a verdict for the plaintiff upon that ground. But in such case they should find for the defendant, unless they further find that the defendant had knowledge of the danger of the plaintiff, and refused or failed to practice any care or precaution to prevent the injury." The modification in each of these instructions consists in the words following the word "unless," and these instructions, in the form in which they were given, as modified, were erroneous, and should have been rejected, because the modification is not supported by, or applicable to, the evidence in the case. The defendant, by its counsel, moved the court to set aside the verdict of the jury and grant it a new trial on several grounds, and, among others, because the verdict was contrary to the instruction of the court, and the court, at the instance of the defendant, instructed the jury that, "as a matter of law, a regulation of a railroad company which forbids passengers to stand upon the platform while the car is in motion is a reasonable and proper rule; and if a passenger, in violation of such regulation, unnecessarily exposes himself, he does so at his own peril." Now, Mr. Jeffries, the conductor, on cross-examination, when asked what he said to the plaintiff, replied that he took plaintiff's ticket up, and told him to go inside and ride; that it was against the rules; and after going three miles he again asked him to go in; that it was against the rules of the railroad company; and he talked very mildly, and said he wanted to ride out there, and get some air. Upon the question of fact, as to whether the conductor told plaintiff it was against the rules of the company, the plaintiff himself, when placed on the stand, does not contradict the conductor, and there is no conflict upon that point of evidence. Upon this question, Beach on Contributory Negligence, in section 151, states the law as follows: "If the passenger would hold the carrier to the full measure of his responsibility for safe carriage, he must conform to all the reasonable rules the carrier makes, looking to the passenger's safety and convenience; and, if he violates such rules and regulations by riding where he has no right to ride, it is no very harsh rule that requires him to do it at his own peril." After commenting on the law, in the same section, as to where the conductor or trainmen consent or encourage a passenger to ride in a place of danger, the section concludes with a quotation from the opinion of the court in the case of Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Langdon, 92 Pa. 21, 37 Am. Rep. 651, as follows: "We are unable to see how a conductor, in violation of a known rule of the company, can license a man to occupy a place of danger, so as to make the company responsible." Beach on Contributory Negligence (page 874) says: "Where it appeared that the plaintiff had been drinking, was riding on the front platform (although without objection), and stepped to the lower step to permit persons to pass, and that a sudden movement of the car, by which he was injured, was not unusual, and should not have been unexpected, it was held that a nonsuit should have been granted." Wood on Railway Law (vol. 2, § 804, p. 1277) states the law on this point thus: "A passenger who voluntarily rides in a baggage car or other known place of danger in violation of the known rules of the company, and is injured in consequence of such violation, cannot recover damages therefor, even though he is there by permission of the conductor; and, in the absence of any proof upon that point, it will be presumed that the passenger knew of the danger, and the regulations forbidding passengers from riding in the baggage car," citing Houston & T. O. R. Co. v. Clemmons, 55 Tex. 88.

The rule is also stated—as we think, properly—in Patterson's Railway Accident Law (page 250, § 248), where it is said: "It is both the right and the duty of the railway to make regulations for the safe conduct of its business; but those regulations must be reasonable in themselves, and must be so published that all persons who are to be affected thereby may have an opportunity of learning the existence and effect of such regulations. Where the regulations are in themselves reasonable, and have been properly published, the passenger is bound to inform himself as to their effect, and he must conform thereto. Thus, in Sullivan v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 30 Pa. 238, 72 Am. Dec. 698, Woodward, J., said the passenger's consent is implied to all the company's reasonable rules and regulations for entering, occupying, and leaving their cars; and, if injury befall him by reason of his disregard of regulations which are necessary to the conduct of the business, the company are not liable in damages, even though the negligence of their servants concurred with his own negligence in producing the mischief;" citing Britton v. Atlantic & C. Air Line R. Co. 88 N. C. 536, 43 Am. Rep. 749; Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Rose, 11 Neb. 177.

So far as publishing the rules is concerned, in the case under consideration, that was not necessary, for the reason that the conductor gave the plaintiff personal notice that it was against the rules to ride outside of the passenger car. Wood, Railway Law (vol. 2, p. 1272, § 803), under the heading, "Injuries Resulting from Passenger Putting Himself Voluntarily in a Dangerous Position," says: "Railroad companies are only bound to exercise due care that a passenger is not injured through their fault, and are not required to exercise such a supervision over him as absolutely prevents his being injured by his own fault;" citing Malcom v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 106 N. C. 63, where the text is quoted with approval. In other words, if a passenger puts himself in a dangerous position, he cannot claim indemnity from the company. In a case where a stock drover was riding on an engine with several others, when another engine suddenly came in sight, round a curve, and all the others jumped off, but the decedent, who remained and was killed, the court charged the jury that if the defendant's employes were negligent, and the decedent was rightfully riding on the engine, the plaintiff could recover; and this was held, under the pleadings, to be erroneous, as it disregarded the question of contributory negligence of the decedent. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Shacklet, 105 Ill. 367, 44 Am. Rep. 791.

In the case of Malcom v. Richmond & D. R. Co., supra, it was held that a passenger on a freight train, who stands on the rear platform without holding to anything, is guilty of contributory negligence, and cannot recover for any injury which he may sustain by reason of the sudden starting of the train. The court, in its opinion, says, after speaking of the duty of the railroad to give signals when starting: "Apart from this, we are of opinion that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence." "Railroad companies are only bound to exercise due care that a passenger is not injured through their fault, and are not required to exercise such a supervision over him as absolutely prevents his being injured by his own fault. In other words, if a passenger puts himself in a dangerous position, he cannot claim indemnity from the company." 2 Wood, Railway Law, § 803. The company, as held in some of the cases, cannot be expected to treat its passengers as children, or to put them under restraint. Passengers must take the responsibility of informing themselves concerning the every-day incidents of railway traveling; the company could do business on no other basis. Mitchell v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 51 Mich. 236, 47 Am. Rep. 566. The court further says: "The plaintiff must have been aware of the dangerous position in which he placed himself. He was warned of the danger by the regulations of the defendant forbidding passengers to ride upon platforms. He must have known of the sudden startings and joltings peculiar to freight trains, and he must also have known when he placed himself upon the platform, that the train was likely to start at any moment. Notwithstanding all this, he leaves his seat in the coach, and puts himself in this dangerous position, without even taking the simple precaution of supporting himself by holding to the railing, or anything else. That no recovery can be had, under such circumstances, is, it seems to us, too plain for further discussion." On the question of the duty of the passenger, it was held in the case of Graville v. Manhattan R. Co., 105 N. Y. 525, 59 Am. Rep. 516, that "it is the duty of the passenger standing on the platform of a steam-railroad car to go inside, when requested so to do by a person having charge of the train, if there is standing room inside, although there are no vacant seats. The fact that the passenger has a well-founded ground of complaint against the railroad company, for not providing adequate accommodations for passengers, does not release him from the duty of leaving the platform. As to whether, where a passenger refuses to go inside the car when so requested, the brakeman or conductor has the right to force him to do so, quære."

Returning to the point as to the position occupied by the plaintiff at the time the accident occurred, it may be said that the steps of the car form a part of the platform, and that being on the steps was the same as being on the platform. The steps, however, constitute no part of the platform. The steps might be removed or broken off, and the platform might still remain. The steps are the means of ingress and egress to and from the platform, and we cannot say that a party who was standing on the steps of the car was standing on the platform. The steps must be regarded as a more dangerous place for a passenger to occupy while the car is moving than the platform; and a conductor might be under the impression that a passenger was on the platform, and act very differently from what he would if he had notice that he was standing down on the steps. It is true that when the plaintiff refused to go inside the car, upon request of the conductor, the conductor might, under the regulations, have stopped the car, and put the plaintiff off; but no conductor, under the circumstances of this case, would feel warranted in resorting to such an extreme measure. While it is true this young man was not conducting himself altogether as he should,—was drinking to some extent,—yet the conductor could not say that he was so much under the influence of liquor as to render him incapable of taking care of himself, and the plaintiff himself swears that he was not drunk. His father was present in the car, and was evidently trying to get his erring son to return to his home; and a conductor possessing the instincts of a gentleman would not feel warranted in seizing the young man, and forcibly ejecting him from the cars, because he objected to going on the inside, and by so doing he might have incurred the risk of a suit against his company. He says he was not drunk, and his counsel say the same, by putting him on the stand to contradict the conductor as to what passed between them when requested to go in the cars, and also as to whether there were vacant seats in the car. It is presumed, however, that his father would not have done such an idle thing as to request the conductor to get him to come in, if there was no room in the car. The evidence, however, shows that he was drinking before he came on the car, and after he came on the car; and the court instructed the jury that, in determining the question of contributory negligence, they might take into consideration the condition of the plaintiff at the time,—that is, if he were intoxicated at the time of the injury, or partly so, they might take this fact into account, in determining whether he was guilty of contributory negligence. Upon this question, Wood, Railway Law (vol. 2, p. 1457) states the law as follows: "The fact that the person injured was at the time intoxicated does not necessarily constitute contributory negligence on his part, though this fact is to be considered with others in determining whether or not he exercised ordinary care to protect himself. One cannot voluntarily incapacitate himself from ability to exercise ordinary care for his own self-protection and then set up such incapacity as an excuse for his failure to use care; and if the intoxication contributed to the injury, as a proximate cause thereof, it is a complete bar to an action for damages sustained in consequence of it,"—citing Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Cragin, 71 Ill. 177; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Pankhurst, 86 Ark. 371; Fitzgerald v. Weston, 52 Wis. 354; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Bell, 70 Ill. 102, and other cases.

28 L. R. A.

Now, while it is true that negligence is a mixed question of law and fact, and Wood, Railway Law (vol. 2, p. 1458) so states the law, and says that when there is no dispute about the facts, nor any doubt as to the proper inference to be drawn from them, the question as to what is proper care may be a question of law; but where either the facts, or the conclusions to be drawn therefrom, are at all doubtful, the question must always be submitted to a jury. And because, in determining the character of plaintiff's conduct, it is necessary to find whether or not he acted as a man of ordinary prudence would have acted under the same circumstances, the question is necessarily one for the jury, except in very plain cases, where there is no room for a reasonable difference of opinion. If the facts are such that a verdict for the plaintiff could not be sustained, the question is one of law, and should be determined by the court. Upon this question the case of Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Landauer, 86 Neb. 642, states the law as follows (this case was from the supreme court of Nebraska): "It is the settled rule in this state that where different minds may draw different inferences from the same state of facts, as to whether such facts establish negligence, it is a proper question for the jury, and not for the court; but that rule is subject to the qualification that the inference of negligence must be a reasonable one. Where it is impossible to infer negligence from the established facts without reasoning irrationally, and contrary to common sense and the experience of average men, it is not a question for the jury, and the court should direct a verdict for the defendant." Now, what negligence was the defendant guilty of in this case? If the injury resulted from intoxication, this was the fault of the plaintiff, and not of the defendant. If he was slightly intoxicated when he took the train, and increased his intoxication after he became a passenger, this fact does not appear to have been known to the defendant; and it is held in the case of Milliman v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 86 N. Y. 643, that "the fact that a man is intoxicated does not, alone, deprive him of the right to ride upon a railroad car, nor does it free the company from its duty to render him, as a passenger, due care. It is the duty of a carrier of passengers to observe the same care to a drunken as to a sober passenger." It does not appear that any officer of the train knew of the dangerous position the plaintiff had taken upon the steps. It does appear that he refused to go in the car, when politely invited so to do; and he does not complain that the car was not stopped, and himself ejected therefrom. It cannot be said that the defendant, after it discovered the dangerous exposure, refused or neglected to practice any care or precaution to prevent the injury. Neither can we say that the injury would have happened just the same, although the plaintiff had been in no wise negligent. Therefore, the defendant cannot be held liable, under our ruling in the case of Carrico v. West Virginia Cent. & P. R. Co., 85 W. Va. 890. As we have seen, the question of contributory negligence is a mixed question of law and fact; and, while it may be a question for the jury, yet the jury must take the questions of law involved in the case from the court, and apply them to the facts, in reaching their conclusion, and if, at the instance of the plaintiff, instructions are given to the jury which are misleading, and not in accordance with the law, or if the jury disregards instructions which are given at the instance of the defendant, and which propound properly the law, the question becomes a question for the court, and the verdict may be set aside. My conclusion, therefore, is that the court erred in refusing to set aside the verdict in this case, and award the defendant a new trial.

The judgment complained of is reversed, the verdict set aside, and a new trial awarded the defendant; and the defendant in error must pay the costs of this writ.

Holt, J., dissenting:

This is a suit brought in the circuit court of Lewis county on the 29th of August, 1891, by John H. Fisher, by his next friend, against the West Virginia & Pittsburgh Railroad Company for injury inflicted on plaintiff, by defendant's negligence, while being carried as a passenger on its train. A trial by jury, on plea of not guilty, resulted in a verdict for plaintiff for $3,500, for which the court gave judgment, having overruled defendant's motion for a new trial, and this writ of error was allowed. As to the material facts, there was but little, if any, conflict of testimony. But giving the plaintiff the vantage ground of his verdict, where and if such conflict exists, the facts are, in substance, as follows: On the 18th day of October, 1890, defendant ran a local mixed train—freight and passenger car—from Weston to Buckhannon; but one passenger car, and that in the rear. Plaintiff and his father, John S. Fisher, bought tickets, and were passengers. The father had a seat, but the car was crowded full of people; but little, if any, sitting room. There was standing room. Perhaps a seat could have been found, but plaintiff was drinking,—was intoxicated. He did not enter the car, but rode standing out on the front platform. He was under the influence of whiskey; at least, seemed to be so to the conductor; according to his testimony, had whiskey with him, and took two or three drinks on the platform. The father knew that plaintiff had been drinking some, and, being uneasy, went out to where his son was, on the front platform, and told him he had better come in the car. Plaintiff said he would do so in a few minutes; but, not coming in, the father requested the conductor to go out and bring him in. The conductor stood around for a short time, and then went out on the platform where plaintiff was. He came back without him; told John S. Fisher, the father, that he was in no danger; "that, as long as they did not stagger, they were all right." The conductor states in his testimony that the platform is regarded as a very dangerous position to occupy, and that the rules of his company required him to make plaintiff come into the car; and if he refused it was his duty to stop the train, and put him off. Plaintiff remained on the platform; and about seven and one half miles out on the road, about halfway back to Buckhannon, in running at ten or twelve miles an hour round a sharp curve plaintiff was thrown out, or fell out, to the left. The hind truck ran over both feet, making amputation of both feet, back to the heels, necessary. He was taken up, and carried to his home at Buckhannon, where this surgical operation was at once properly performed, leaving him a bad cripple for life, unable to stand or walk without crutches and artificial feet, which he has, at a cost of $100. He was about twenty years of age, earning about $1.25 per day. He can now do nothing requiring him to walk or to stand; and the left foot, not being healed, will, in all likelihood, soon require some further amputation. His condition shows that he was intoxicated to such a degree as not to realize the danger of falling off, to which he was exposed. He stood upon the step, holding with one hand. He was plainly, to some extent, unconscious of his exposure to the danger of falling off, and did not anticipate, and therefore was heedless of, the accident likely to ensue. The conductor noticed his intoxication, and, telling him that it was against the rule to ride there, asked him to go in. The brakeman noticed, when he got on the train, that he had been drinking; he acted like he was intoxicated; asked him to go into the car. And, as we have already seen, the father, seeing that his son had not come into the car, and knowing his condition, felt uneasy for his safety, and requested the conductor to go out and bring him in. The conductor went out on the platform where the plaintiff was, and came back without him, and told John S. Fisher, the father, as already stated, that plaintiff was in no danger. "As long as they did not stagger, they were all right." The foregoing statement of facts is intended to present "the exact anatomy of the case." As is usual in such cases, this one has opened up a wide field for discussion, as appears from the cases and books cited. Still, in my view, in the attitude in which it is here presented, giving the plaintiff the vantage ground of a verdict and judgment in his favor, in an action for negligence against a carrier of passengers conceded to be to some extent in fault, its determining factors, both of law and fact, ought to lie within a narrow compass. Four grounds of error are assigned by plaintiff in error: No. 1. The court erred in rejecting a special plea. No. 2. In giving to the jury the two instructions asked by plaintiff. No. 8. In modifying defendant's instructions Nos. 4 and 5. No. 4. In overruling defendant's motion for a new trial.

No. 1: This special plea averred, in substance, that at the time of the accident and injury complained of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company was the lessee, owner, and operator of the West Virginia & Pittsburgh Railroad, by virtue of a deed of lease before that time duly signed, sealed, and delivered; that if there was any cause of action, as averred, the Baltimore & Ohio Company, alone, ought to be made defendant,—praying judgment that the writ and declaration might be quashed, etc.; that is, that, without reference to the merits, the suit has been brought against the wrong person, in an improper manner, as to the party made defendant. This, if true, would go in support of the general issue, as it contradicts the declaration on a material point. Nor does it in its nature belong to that class of defenses which are good in bar or abatement, at the option of the defendant. A judgment on the plea for defendant that the writ and declaration be quashed must, in its nature, in such a case, if it amounts to anything, be conclusive of the right of action against defendant, either alone or conjointly with another: for it would not have been good if it had averred as the ground that the Baltimore & Ohio Company was a joint doer of the thing complained of, for, in such case of tort, plaintiff may sue one or both. It was intended, no doubt, to give notice of one of the grounds of defense, or rather to raise in advance the question of defendant's liability under the state of facts averred in the plea. As a plea in abatement, it was excepted to for want of affidavit; for, by the statute (sec. 89, chap. 125), "no plea in abatement or plea of non est factum shall be received, unless it be verified by affidavit." But the true question on the merits is settled by the case of Ricketts v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co., 88 W. Va. 488, 486, 7 L. R. A. 854: "We think it may be stated, as the just result of the decided cases, and on sound principle, that a railroad corporation cannot, without distinct legislative authority, by lease or any other contract, turn over to another company its road, and the use of its franchises, and thereby exempt itself from responsibility for the conduct and management of the road." For, if the defendant railroad corporation still conducts the business of the road as owner, it is liable; if as agent of the lessee, it is liable for its torts; and if the lessee conducts the business in that name, and under the defendant's charter, then, according to the averments contained in the plea, it would be liable under that charter, and in that name. There was no error in rejecting the plea.

Error No. 2: The two instructions given for plaintiff against the objection of defendant are as follows: No. 1: "The court instructs the jury that, in the transportation of passengers, a railroad company is bound to exercise more than ordinary care and diligence, and is liable for the slightest negligence, against which prudence and foresight could have guarded." No. 2: "The court instructs the jury that although the plaintiff may have been guilty of negligence, and although that negligence may in fact have contributed to the injury, yet if they find from the evidence that the defendant, after having notice of plaintiff's dangerous exposure, did not exercise ordinary care and diligence to prevent his injury, the plaintiff's negligence will not excuse nor relieve the defendant from liability." Both are taken from the case of Carrico v. West Virginia Cent. & P. R. Co. 35 W. Va. 889. It is conceded in argument that these instructions do, perhaps, propound the law correctly; but the contention is that they are abstract, not being based upon any evidence in the cause.

The court, at the instance of defendant, gave ten several instructions, which, as modified, were not objected to, and which read as follows: No. 1: "The jury are instructed that the plaintiff, as passenger on the defendant's car, as a matter of law, is presumed to have taken upon himself all the risks necessarily incident to that mode of traveling; and if the jury believe from the evidence that without the fault of the defendant, but by inevitable accident, plaintiff was injured, the jury should find for the defendant." No. 2: "The court instructs the jury, as a matter of law, that a passenger upon a railroad train takes all the risk attending that mode of travel, except such as may be caused or incurred by the negligence of the railroad company or its servants; and, unless such negligence by the defendant is shown by the evidence, the jury should find for the defendant." No. 3: "The court instructs the jury that, as a matter of law, a regulation of a railroad company which forbids passengers to stand upon the platform while the car is in motion is a reasonable and proper rule; and if a passenger, in violation of such regulation, unnecessarily exposes himself, he does so at his own peril." No. 6: "The court instructs the jury that railroad companies are only required to exercise due care that a passenger is not injured through their fault, and they are not required to exercise such supervision over him as absolutely prevents him from being injured by his own fault." No. 7: "The court instructs the jury that a railroad company has no right or authority, under the law, to impose upon its passengers any restraint, even to enforce its reasonable rules." No. 8: "The court instructs the jury that, in determining the question of whether the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, they may take into consideration the condition of the plaintiff at the time; that is, if he were intoxicated at the time of the injury, or partly so, they may take this fact into account, in determining whether he was guilty of contributory negligence." No. 9: "If the jury find that the injury complained of was contributed to by plaintiff's own negligence, and did not result by act of defendant purposely, intentionally, wantonly, maliciously, or recklessly done, they should find for the defendant." No. 10: "The plaintiff, to recover, must have observed ordinary care to avoid the injury, and, if he does not do so, he cannot recover."

One of the lines of argument and presentation of their case made by plaintiff's counsel is as follows: The evidence showed there was only one passenger car on the train. There was no mail car or baggage car, but mail and baggage were piled in one end of the passenger car, and that was full of people. That defendant was negligent in not providing a proper place, and in not publishing or making known its rule against riding on the platform, and that although plaintiff's intoxication may have contributed to his taking his place and riding on the front platform, and, together with such dangerous exposure, may have caused his falling off, yet defendant had notice of his dangerous exposure, and that he was under the influence of liquor, yet did nothing to prevent such dangerous exposure to injury, and, so far from enforcing the rule of the company which prohibited the conductor from allowing any one to ride on the platform, and made it his duty to make the passenger go in, or get off, the conductor misled the father, who otherwise might have had the plaintiff (his minor son) brought in out of such danger. The other line of argument of plaintiff's counsel proceeds upon the theory that their case is made out without reference to the one crowded car, and the failure of the defendant to publish its rule against riding on the platform. It seems to be as follows: The conductor knew that plaintiff had been drinking, and was under the influence of liquor; that plaintiff was on the platform in that condition; that it was a dangerous place for a sober man,—much more, for one intoxicated. The conductor knew that the rules of his company prohibited him from allowing any one to ride on the platform, in consideration of its being a dangerous place. He knew it was his duty to get plaintiff to go in, and, on his refusal, to stop the train, and put him off. In other words, if the conductor had done his plain and simple duty, he would have prevented the accident, and injury resulting therefrom. The case was evidently tried, and the jury instructed, on the theory that it involved the doctrine of contributory negligence, as laid down and applied in the case of Carrico v. West Virginia Cent. & P. R. Co., 35 W. Va. 389 (see point 7), viz., that if the defendant, after he has discovered the plaintiff's exposure to danger, refuses or neglects to practice any care or precaution to prevent the injury, he will be liable; for instructions No. 1 and No. 2, given for the plaintiff, are taken literally from the Carrico Case, and the qualifications appended by the court to defendant's instructions No. 4 and No. 5 are the same as plaintiff's instruction No. 2. In that case there was evidence tending to show that plaintiff received his injury by riding with his elbow out of the window, beyond the line of the body of the car, by reason of which it was struck and broken in two places by a pile of stone recently quarried, and piled up close to the track for the purpose of being loaded and transported. There was also evidence tending to prove that defendant, by its employés, had knowledge of the stone piled up close to the track, and saw plaintiff's elbow protruding, but failed to give him any warning.

23 L. R. A.

The court held that "it is legal negligence for a passenger to ride in a fast-going passenger coach with his arm protruding out of the window, and beyond the line of the body of the car" (point No. 5), and that "if the defendant, after he has discovered the dangerous exposure refuses or neglects to practice any care or precaution to prevent the injury, he will be held liable" (point No. 7). The case was sent back, retried, and again appealed; and in the same case, at this term, the same doctrine has been again laid down. See same case, 39 W. Va. —. In that case the evidence showed that plaintiff, Carrico, was riding with his elbow in the open window at the time of the accident, but, as to whether it was protruding or not, the direct evidence was somewhat conflicting; and, in addition to that conflict, it was also conflicting as to the fact of the conductor having discovered plaintiff's dangerous exposure of his arm before the accident, but there was enough for the case to go to the jury. In this case three questions of fact were involved: (1) Was the plaintiff riding on the platform in such a state of intoxication as to be, in an obvious degree, unconscious or heedless of his danger? (2) If so, was such fact in any way brought home to the knowledge of the conductor? (3) If the conductor had such knowledge of plaintiff's dangerous exposure, did he refuse or neglect to practice the proper care or precaution to prevent the injury? If so, the court, by its instruction, told the jury that the defendant would be liable. I have carefully re-read the record, and the briefs, and, in my view, no other material facts were involved. These the jury, on the evidence, found for the plaintiff, and the court approved the finding. I do not well see how the jury could have done otherwise, unless it would be on the supposition that the conductor had done all to bring him in, or put him out of danger, that was incumbent on him to do; and this is a question of law, for what he did do in that behalf appears affirmatively, and without dispute. What, then, is the duty of carriers of passengers for hire? For this state the question was authoritatively answered, in 1854, in the case of Farish v. Reigle, 11 Gratt. 697, 62 Am. Dec. 666; again, in 1859, in the case of Virginia Cent. R. Co. v. Sanger, 15 Gratt. 230. They are bound to use the utmost care and diligence of cautious persons to prevent injury to passengers, and are bound to carry their passengers safely, so far as human care and foresight can go, being liable for injuries resulting from the slightest negligence. See Pennsylvania Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451, 26 L. ed. 141. See also Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Wightman (1877) 29 Gratt. 431, 445, 26 Am. Rep. 384. The law, in tenderness to human life and limb, holds railroad companies liable for the slightest negligence, and compels them to repel by satisfactory proof any imputation of such negligence. They are held to the highest degree of practical care, under the circumstances presented, and to this standard a philanthropic age must adhere. See Thomp. Carr. p. 197, § 7, notes, et seq.; Ingalls v. Bills, 9 Met. 1, 43 Am. Dec. 346, notes.

Although the term "ordinary care," properly qualified and explained, may be made to measure perhaps more accurately the amount of care, foresight, diligence and skill required in the particular case, according to its facts, yet the term "extraordinary care" may have a wholesome effect; for one is then more apt to bear in mind the care exacted of a carrier in so perilous a business, and not to confound this particular ordinary care with ordinary care in general, and especially to note that the distinction involved may be one of kind, as well as of degree, so the common mind understands it. I believe it is not claimed that the conductor used the utmost care. I do not see how it can, by this record, be said that he performed his whole duty, was wholly without fault in the matter, whatever be the degree of negligence such fault may imply, or the degree of diligence exacted. But it is answered that plaintiff cannot recover because he was guilty of contributory negligence. He was negligent in becoming intoxicated, for that was his own voluntary wrong. He was negligent in riding upon the platform, for the conductor told him it was against the rules of the company. And although there was but one car, and that was full of people, with one end used to carry baggage, yet, no doubt, he could have found standing room inside, if not a seat. Why did he not go in? He was, in a plainly obvious degree, unconscious of the danger in riding on the platform in his condition, and therefore heedless of it. We need not consider to what extent the conductor had discovered these facts by his own observations; for there is not a particle of evidence, direct or inferential, in contradiction of what the father of the young man said to him, and of the request he made. The knowledge then imparted, if not known before, and the request of the father then made, imposed upon the conductor a new duty. This new duty he violated; not only willfully neglected to perform it, but, in all likelihood, prevented the father from securing its performance in some other way by lulling his apprehensions of the danger to which his son was exposed, soon resulting in the accident that caused the injury. In such a case, plaintiff's negligence was not the proximate cause, in whole or in part, of the injury, but the remote cause; the inducing cause; the condition which gave rise to the new duty, the existence of which the new duty, from its nature, necessarily presupposed. If plaintiff's negligent exposure to danger imposes upon the conductor the new duty to take the proper care or precaution to prevent injury resulting from it, such negligence of plaintiff cannot at the same time be, in whole or in part, the proximate cause of the injury, the happening of which as the result of plaintiff's negligence, the new duty exists only to avoid or avert. See Downey v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 28 W. Va. 732, 737. Such a test of the proximate cause, in whole or in part, of the injury, is, in my view, just as much out of place in this case as it would have been in the Carrico Case, supposing the plaintiff in that case to have been riding with his elbow protruding out of the window, and, in the language of Dr. Bishop (Non-Cont. L. § 476), "Reverse the result in numberless plain cases," from the Donkey Case (Davies v. Mann, 10 Mees. & W. 545) and the case of Radley v. London & N. W. R. Co. L. R. 1 App. Cas. 754, down to the case of Carrico v. West Virginia Cent. & P. R. Co. 35 W. Va. 389, and the same case decided at this term, not yet officially reported. 39 W. Va. —. See 2 Thomp. Neg. 1104, et seq. For a discussion of the character and test of contributory negligence, see, among others, Bishop, Non-Cont. Law, § 458, et seq.; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. *816; Whart. Neg. 300 et seq.; Bigelow, Torts, 4th ed. p. 332; Buswell, Personal Injuries, § 97; Whittaker, Smith, Neg. chap. 5, p. 373; Pollock, Torts, p. 374, and Append. D, p. 484; Beach, Contrib. Neg. 2d ed. § 7 et seq.

This duty thus cast upon the conductor by the request of the father is no relaxation of any duty of plaintiff, nor excuse of his negligence, but, on the contrary, a new duty, which presupposes and springs out of such negligence of plaintiff, calling upon the conductor to anticipate and avert the injury likely to ensue therefrom. It will not do to say, under the peculiar circumstances of such request, plaintiff's intoxication is his own voluntary and wrongful incapacitation. Apart from the father's special request, "it is consistent, not only with common humanity, but with the legal obligations of the carrier, that if a passenger is known to be in any manner affected by a disability, physically or mentally, whereby the hazards of travel are increased, a degree of attention should be bestowed to his safety, beyond that of an ordinary passenger, in proportion to the liability to injury from the want of it." Thomp. Carr. pp. 270, 271, § 5. But the condition of the passenger calling for it must be made known. "It may call for special care arising from the particular danger." Bishop, Non-Cont. Law, § 513. See 4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 79; Milliman v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 66 N. Y. 648.

If the plaintiff had been, not a drunken passenger on the platform, but a drunken trespasser on the track, known to be unconscious or heedless of his dangerous exposure,—say near Miller's crossing, where the accident occurred,—it will not be denied that the duty would have arisen to take such precautions as were proper to avoid inflicting injury. Is the duty to a passenger less? The conductor is, in a sense, an officer of the common law; and that law is not only tender of life and limb, but also considerate toward human frailties, as far as may be. And besides being the conductor, and, as such, in command of the train he is also an officer by statute (Code, chap. 146, § 31), made so expressly that he may the more efficiently discharge his duties, and meet more effectually the exigencies of such cases as this; and, as I read the law, it does not hear to any such excuses as are offered on his behalf. A helpless passenger on the platform and steps is certainly entitled to not less care and precaution to avert the dangerous ex-posure, of which he is unconscious or heedless, than the helpless or unconscious trespasser on the track. Apprehending the danger,—as it appears from his own testimony he did foresee and apprehend it,—it was his plain duty to take the ordinary steps, such as the occasion might have required, to make the young man go in off the platform, which he could have done without trouble, or, if that could not have been done, make him get off at one of the several stations or stopping places.

I have given the facts proved fully. They correspond, in substance, with the essential facts alleged. The two instructions given for plaintiff are short, and to the point; both taken, literally, from a recent case three times argued here, and twice affirmed. The jury applied the law given them by the court to the facts as found by themselves from the evidence; and the result is a verdict by the jury, and a judgment by the court, containing, impliedly, the point of law involved correctly drawn, as I think, from the case as made. Ten instructions were given for defendant. To two of them the court added a qualification in order to make them consistent with the instructions given for plaintiff.

If any of them are faulty,—and I dare say some flaw can be found in so long a list,—the plaintiff does not, and defendant cannot, complain. Under such circumstances, it would seem hard to let the defendant's fault spoil the plaintiff's verdict. However, amid the confusion that seems to prevail on the subject of contributory negligence, I may be mistaken in my view of it, especially in the application attempted to be made, for here, as in other cases, but perhaps to a larger extent, the difficulty lies. The loitering on the platform of passengers is matter of common observation, and it is well understood that they do so at their own risk, and therefore I concede the danger of giving verdicts in such cases. This one, however, has a clearly-defined and strongly-marked exceptional feature. On that I have, for the main, rested my view of this case; for I cannot bring myself to believe that the conductor discharged the obligation of the new duty imposed upon him by his knowledge of plaintiff's negligent exposure to danger, and the father's request.

Brannon, P., did not sit.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, EIGHTH CIRCUIT.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA & SANTA FÉ R.
CO., Plff. in Err.,

v.
David B. REESMAN.

(60 Fed. Rep. 370.)

1. A railroad is liable to a brakeman on a train for its failure to maintain fences as required by statute, in consequence of which an animal gets upon the track, causing a derailment of a train and injury to the brakeman.
2. Evidence in rebuttal, which further refers to repairs made by a railroad company to an alleged defective fence after an accident, will not require reversal, if the company first gave evidence of such repairs.
3. Disobedience by a brakeman of the company's rules, which contributes to an injury received by him, will constitute contributory negligence, although his disobedience was with the knowledge and consent of the conductor of the train.

(January 2, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Argued before Brewer, Circuit Justice, and Sanborn, Circuit Judge.

Messrs. Gardiner Lathrop and Ben Eli Guthrie for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. B. R. Dysart, John F. Mitchell, Joseph Park, and R. G. Mitchell, for defendant in error:

A statute requiring companies to fence their rights of way is not only to protect domestic animals, but to protect the passengers on the trains.

Thornton, Railway Fences & Private Crossings, § 167, p. 271.

The statute positively requires the erection and maintenance of a lawful fence on each side of the track, sufficient to prevent cattle and other stock from getting on the railroad, and the failure to comply with the lawful statutory provision is negligence per se, and renders the company liable for all damages resulting from any such failure.

Murray v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 101 Mo. 286; 2 Thomp. Trials, § 1672, p. 1218; Karlo v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 55 Mo. 476.

The master is required to furnish the servant a safe place in which to work—a safe and unobstructed track.

Tries v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 49 Mo. 488; Barnett v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 68 Mo. 56, 30 Am. Rep. 778; Rutledge v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 78 Mo. 286; Silver v. Kansas City, St. L. & C. R. Co. Id. 528, 47 Am. Rep. 115; Rozelle v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 79 Mo. 849; Isabel v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 80 Mo. 475; Schmidt v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 23

NOTE.—As to duty to fence railroad tracks in general, see Gallagher v. New York & N. E. R. Co. (Conn.) 5 L. R. A. 737, and note; State v. Chicago M. & N. R. Co. (Wis.) 12 L. R. A. 180, and note; Perkins v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Mo.) 11 L. R. A. 423, and note; also as affecting liability to brakeman, Donegan v. Erhart (N. Y.) 7 L. R. A. 537.

kins v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Mo.) 11 L. R. A. 423, and note; also as affecting liability to brakeman, Donegan v. Erhart (N. Y.) 7 L. R. A. 537.

25 L. R. A.

Wis. 186, 99 Am. Dec. 153; Singleton v. Eastern Counties R. Co. 7 C. B. N. S. 237; Keyser v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 56 Mich. 559, 56 Am. Rep. 405; Hayes v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 111 U. S. 228, 28 L. ed. 410; Donnegan v. Erhardt, 7 L. R. A. 527, 119 N. Y. 468; Blair v. Milwaukee & P. du C. R. Co. 20 Wis. 262; Fordyce v. Jackson, 56 Ark. 594; Lackawanna & B. R. Co. v. Chenoweth, 52 Pa. 382, 91 Am. Dec. 168; Gulfs, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wilson, 11 L. R. A. 486, 79 Tex. 371.

The brakemen or other trainmen come within the protection of the statute.

Donnegan v. Erhardt, supra; Jetter v. New York & H. R. Co. 2 Keyes, 154; Henry v. Wabash Western R. Co. 109 Mo. 488; Wood, Mast. & S. 677; Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. ed. 605; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wilson, 4 U. S. App. 25, 48 Fed. Rep. 57.

To insure such protection railroads are imperatively required to fence their track.

Trice v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 49 Mo. 440, affirmed in Barnett v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 68 Mo. 56, 80 Am. Rep. 773; Ruledge v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 78 Mo. 290; Silver v. Kansas City, St. L. & C. R. Co. Id. 532, 47 Am. Rep. 118; Rozelle v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 79 Mo. 85.

The violation of a statutory requirement is negligence per se, and damages caused by an omission to perform a statutory duty renders the company liable.

Bowman v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 85 Mo. 533; Karle v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 55 Mo. 476; Robertson v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 84 Mo. 119.

Experience shows that a railroad company may and can at small cost and inconvenience, make and keep its track reasonably safe and unobstructed, and free from the dangerous presence of cattle upon it, either by a fence or by watchmen on the sections, and one or the other they must provide.

Hayes v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 111 U. S. 228, 28 L. ed. 410; Donnegan v. Erhardt, Fordyce v. Jackson, Gulfs, O. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wilson; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Wilson; Henry v. Wabash Western R. Co. supra.

The doctrine of exemption for the fault of a fellow servant can have no application in this case.

Reesman was not the fellow servant of the conductor, Agnew.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. ed. 787; Dayharsh v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 103 Mo. 570.

Reesman was not the fellow servant of the section hands, whose duties were to inspect and repair the fence.

Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, supra; Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 792, 109 Mo. 413; Henry v. Wabash Western R. Co. supra.

Brewer, Circuit Justice, delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action to recover damages for personal injuries. Plaintiff below (defendant in error) was on the 17th day of June, 1891, in the employ of the railroad company as brakeman. He had been in such employ for about three years. At the time of the injury he was on a ditching train, composed of an engine and four cars, the engine pushing the cars. Just in front of the engine was a flat car, then a car on which the ditching machine was placed, then a box car fitted up for the men to sleep in, and in front of that a way car or caboose. Plaintiff had been at work on this train only eight or ten days, though for two years he had been acting as brakeman between Marceline, Mo., and Ft. Madison, Iowa, and was therefore familiar with the track at the place where the injury happened. On the morning of June 17 the train left Marceline for the purpose of doing work at a place six miles east thereof. The track, for some distance, was nearly straight. After going about a mile and a half, and while running at a rate of speed of from fifteen to eighteen miles an hour, the train ran over a steer, which derailed it, and caused the plaintiff's injury. The crew of the train consisted of the engineer and fireman, conductor, head brakeman, and the plaintiff,—the rear brakeman. From the time of leaving Marceline up to the time of the accident, the conductor and the plaintiff were on the platform of the caboose at the head of the train. The head brakeman was on the inside, in the cupola, while there was no one on top. The ditching machine had arms or dippers extending on either side in such a manner and to such an extent as to interfere with the view of the engineer of the front end of the train.

Rule 104 of defendant's rules was in force at the time of the accident, and is as follows: "When a train is being pushed by an engine (except when shifting and making up trains in yards) a flagman must be stationed in a conspicuous position on the front of the leading car, so as to perceive the first sign of danger, and immediately signal the engineer!"

There was testimony on the part of the defendant tending to show that the conspicuous place on the ditching train, within the meaning of that rule, was on top of the caboose, where the flagman could be seen by the engineer whenever he made any signals, and that it was the plaintiff's duty to be at that place. The burden of the plaintiff's case was that the defendant company had negligently suffered the fences along its right of way to become and remain out of repair, and insufficient to keep cattle off the track; that in consequence thereof a steer broke through such insufficient fence, got upon the track, and derailed the train, causing the injury to plaintiff. The defendant denied that this steer entered onto the track through any defective or insufficient fence; claimed that, even if it did, the duty to erect and maintain a fence was not one which would avail one of its employes in an action for damages resulting from a neglect of such duty; and, third, that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, in not being in his proper place, on top of the caboose, and in a place where he could see the danger, and give the signal to the engineer.

The provision of the Missouri statutes in reference to the fencing of railroad tracks is found in Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, p. 659, § 2611. The first part of the section is as follows:

"Every railroad corporation formed or to be formed in this state, and every corporation to be formed under this article, or any railroad corporation running or operating any railroad in this state, shall erect and maintain lawful fences on the sides of the road where the same passes through, along, or adjoining inclosed or cultivated fields or uninclosed lands, with openings and gates therein, to be hung and have latches or hooks, so that they may be easily opened and shut, at all necessary farm crossings of the road, for the use of the proprietors or owners of the land adjoining such railroad, and also to construct and maintain cattle-guards, where fences are required, sufficient to prevent horses, cattle, mules, and all other animals from getting on the railroad; and until fences, openings, gates, and farm crossings and cattle-guards as aforesaid shall be made and maintained, such corporation shall be liable in double the amount of all damages which shall be done by its agents, engines, or cars to horses, cattle, mules, or other animals on said road, or by reason of any horses, cattle, mules, or other animals escaping from or coming upon said lands, fields, or enclosures occasioned in either case by the failure to construct or maintain such fences or cattle-guards. After such fences, gates, farm crossings, and cattle-guards shall be duly made and maintained, said corporation shall not be liable for any such damage unless negligently or willfully done."

Following this provision are others, giving adjoining proprietors the right to construct the fences on the failure of the railroad company so to do, and recover the cost thereof from the company, and declaring that any person leading or driving stock onto the track within such fences should forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding $10, and should also pay to the party injured all damages sustained thereby.

In respect to the liability of the company under this section, the court gave this instruction to the jury: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant suffered the fence along its right of way to become and remain out of repair in the manner described by plaintiff's witnesses, so that cattle could with little difficulty get through or under the fence, and if you believe from the evidence that, by reason of its being so out of repair and defective, a steer did in that manner go upon defendant's right of way and track, and cause the derailment of the ditching train, by which plaintiff was injured, then you will be authorized to return a verdict in plaintiff's favor, provided you further believe from the evidence that defendant's section men in charge of that section had knowledge of the defect in the fence in time to have repaired it before the accident, or that such defect in the fence had existed for such length of time that, by the exercise of ordinary care, they ought to have had knowledge of it, and repaired it, before the derailment," and refused an instruction that, under the pleadings and evidence, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

In this is presented the most important question arising in this case. The contention of the company is that the fence statute referred to was enacted for the benefit of the proprietors of adjoining lands, and that the plaintiff, as an employé of the railroad company, takes nothing by reason of the failure of the company to comply with its terms. It is doubtless true that, when a right is given by statute, only those to whom the right is in terms given can avail themselves of its benefits, but it does not follow that when a duty is so imposed a violation of that duty exposes the wrongdoer to liability to no person other than those specifically named in the statute. On the contrary, it is not unreasonable to say that every party who suffers injury by reason of the violation of any duty is entitled to recover for such injuries. At any rate, it is clear that the fact that certain classes of persons were intended to be primarily protected by the discharge of a statutory duty will not necessarily prevent others, neither named nor intended as primary beneficiaries, from maintaining an action to recover for injuries caused by the violation of such legislative command. It may well be said that, though primarily intended for the benefit of one class, it was also intended for the protection of all who need such protection. In this case a technical argument might be made from the mere language of the section. It provides that the corporation shall be liable in double the amount of all damages, not only for those "done by its agents, engines, or cars to horses, cattle," etc., but also for those done "by reason of any horses, cattle," etc., "escaping" from such contiguous fields. As the presence of the steer on the track was the cause of the derailling of the train, and as that steer escaped from the adjoining field through the defective fence, it may plausibly be argued that the recovery in this case comes within the express language of the statute, as being for damages done by reason of the escape of the steer from the adjoining field through the defective fence. But we do not care to rest our conclusions upon this technical construction. The purpose of fence laws, of this character, is not solely the protection of proprietors of adjoining fields. It is also to secure safety to trains. That there should be no obstruction on the track is a matter of the utmost importance to those who are called upon to ride on railroad trains. Whether that obstruction be a log placed by some wrongdoer, or an animal straying on the track, the danger to the trains, and those who are traveling thereon, is the same. To prevent such obstruction being one of the purposes of the statute, any one whose business calls him to be on a train has a right to complain of the company, if it fails to comply with this statutory duty. The authorities are clear on this proposition. In the case of Hayes v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 111 U. S. 228, 28 L. ed. 410, the facts were these: A railroad company was required by an ordinance of a municipal corporation to erect a fence upon the line of its road, within the corporate limits. It failed to comply with this ordinance, and the plaintiff, a boy of tender years, while running near the track, fell on it, and was run over by the passing cars. An action having been brought to recover for such injuries, the trial court directed a verdict and judgment for the defendant, but this judgment was reversed by the supreme court. Mr. Justice Matthews, in the course of his opinion, discussed the question of general liability in these words: "It is said, however, that it does not follow that, whenever a statutory duty is created, any person who can show that he has sustained injuries from the nonperformance of that duty can maintain an action for damages against the person on whom the duty is imposed; and we are referred to the case of Atkinson v. New Castle & Gateshead Water Co., L. R. 2 Exch. Div. 441, as authority for that proposition, qualifying, as it does, the broad doctrine stated by Lord Campbell in Couch v. Steel, 3 El. & Bl. 402. But accepting the more limited doctrine admitted in the language of Lord Cairns in the case cited,—that whether such an action can be maintained must depend on the 'purview of the legislature in the particular statute, and the language which they have there employed,'—we think the right to sue, under the circumstances of the present case, clearly within its limits. In the analogous case of fences required by the statute as a protection for animals, an action is given to the owners for the loss caused by the breach of the duty. And although, in the case of injury to persons by reason of the same default, the failure to fence is not, as in the case of animals, conclusive of the liability, irrespective of negligence, yet an action will lie for the personal injury, and this breach of duty will be evidence of negligence. The duty is due, not to the city as a municipal body, but to the public, considered as composed of individual persons; and each person specially injured by the breach of the obligation is entitled to his individual compensation, and to an action for its recovery. 'The nature of the duty,' said Judge Cooley in Taylor v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co., 45 Mich. 74, 'and the benefits to be accomplished through its performance, must generally determine whether it is a duty to the public in part or exclusively, or whether individuals may claim that it is a duty imposed wholly or in part for their especial benefit.' See also St. Louis, J. & C. R. Co. v. Terhune, 50 Ill. 151, 99 Am. Dec. 504; Schmidt v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 28 Wis. 186, 99 Am. Dec. 158; Siemens v. Eisen, 54 Cal. 418; Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Loomis, 13 Ill. 548, 56 Am. Dec. 471; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. McClelland, 25 Ill. 140; St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Dunn, 78 Ill. 197; Massoth v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 64 N. Y. 524; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 29 Md. 252, 96 Am. Dec. 528; Pollock v. Eastern R. Co. 124 Mass. 158; Cooley, Torts, 657."

And again, answering the objection that the want of a fence was not the proximate cause of the injury, observes as follows: "It is further argued that the direction of the court below was right, because the want of a fence could not reasonably be alleged as the cause of the injury. In the sense of an efficient cause, causa causans, this is no doubt strictly true, but that is not the sense in which the law uses the term in this connection. The question is, Was it causa sine qua non? (a cause which, if it had not existed, the injury would not have taken place,—an occasional cause); and that is a question of fact, unless the causal connection is evidently not proximate. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. ed. 256. The rule laid down by Willes, J., in Daniel v. Metropolitan R. Co., L. R. 3 C. P. 216, 222, and approved by the exchequer chamber (Id. 591) and by the house of lords, L. R. 5 H. L. 45, was this: It is necessary for the plaintiff to establish by evidence circumstances from which it may fairly be inferred that there is reasonable probability that the accident resulted from the want of some precaution which the defendant might and ought to have resorted to."

Another case—and it is exactly in point—is that of Donnegan v. Erhardt, 119 N. Y. 468, 7 L. R. A. 527. In discussing this question the court said: "A railroad company, for the safety of its passengers, as well as its employes upon its engines and cars, is bound to use suitable care and skill in furnishing, not only adequate engines and cars, but also a safe and proper track and roadbed. The track must be properly laid and the roadbed properly constructed, and reasonable prudence and care must be exercised in keeping the track free from obstructions, animate and inanimate; and if, from want of proper care, such obstructions are permitted to be and come upon the track, and a train is thereby wrecked, and any person thereon is injured, the railroad company, upon plain common-law principles, must be held responsible. Experience shows that animals may stray upon a railroad track, and, if they do, there is danger that the train may come in collision with them, and be wrecked. Adequate measures, reasonable in their nature, must be taken to guard against such danger. Independently of any statutory requirement, a jury might find, upon the facts of a case, that it was the duty of a railroad company to fence its track to guard against such danger. But, whatever the rule would be independently of the statute, there is no reasonable doubt that it imposes the absolute duty upon a railroad company to fence its tracks. That duty, it is reasonable to suppose, was imposed, not only to protect the lives of animals, but also to protect human beings upon railroad trains. It is made an unqualified duty, and for a violation thereof, causing injury, the railroad company incurs responsibility. The sole consequence of an omission of the statutory duty is not specified and was not intended to be specified, in the statute. Responsibility for injury to animals was specially imposed because in most cases there would, independently of the statute, have been no such responsibility, as at common law the owner of animals was bound to restrain them, and if they trespassed upon the railroad there was no liability for their destruction, unless it was willfully or intentionally caused. We are therefore of the opinion that the railroad company was responsible to the plaintiff for the injuries he received without any fault on his part, and for this conclusion there is much authority in judicial utterances;" citing a large number of cases, and overruling the case of Langlois v. Buffalo & R. R. Co., 19 Barb. 364, so far as it holds a different doctrine. See also Quackenbush v. Wisconsin & M. R. Co., 62 Wis. 411.

In Thornton on Railway Fences & Private Crossings, p. 571, it is said: "The cases are full of expressions touching the object of a statute requiring railroad companies to fence their rights of way, and there is an almost unanimous opinion that it is not only to protect domestic animals, but to protect the passengers on the trains."

So, also, in Missouri,—the state where this cause of action arose. In Trice v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 49 Mo. 438, 440, the court, referring to the claim that the provisions of a section substantially like the one in controversy were for the exclusive benefit of the landowner observed: "But such is not the theory upon which this statute has been uniformly sustained. While the protection of the property of adjacent proprietors is an incidental object to the statute, its main and leading one is the protection of the traveling public. To insure such protection, railroads are imperatively required to fence their tracks, and the penal liability deemed necessary to enforce this requirement is a matter of legislative discretion."

To like effect are the cases of Isabel v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 60 Mo. 475; Barnett v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 68 Mo. 56, 30 Am. Rep. 778; Rutledge v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 78 Mo. 286; Silver v. Kansas City, St. L. & O. R. Co. Id. 528, 47 Am. Rep. 118; Rosselle v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 79 Mo. 849.

Nor is there anything in the cases of Berry v. St. Louis, S. & L. R. Co. 65 Mo. 172; Harrington v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 71 Mo. 384; Johnson v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 80 Mo. 620; Peddicoord v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 85 Mo. 160,—cited by plaintiff in error,—antagonistic to the views expressed in the cases cited. The proposition is laid down, it is true, that remote landowners were not within the protection of the statute, and that it was intended for the owners of contiguous lands, but nowhere is it said that protection to the traveling public was not also one of the objects intended to be secured by the statute. And, if the purpose is to protect the traveling public, a party riding upon a train may invoke the statute, in case injury results to him through the failure of the company to comply with its requirements, because he is one of the parties for whose benefit it was enacted. Within the reasoning of all these authorities, and by the express decision of Donnegan v. Erhardt, and Quackenbush v. Wisconsin & M. R. Co., supra, an employé has the same right as a passenger to complain of injuries caused by a violation of duties imposed by such a statute. The purpose is protection to the train. All who are on that train are exposed to equal danger. It is not a case where the employé has the means of protecting himself, and the traveler not, for if the train be derailed the danger to each is equal. It is urged, however, by the defendant, that the failure to keep the fence in repair is the negligence of a coemployé, and that, therefore, it is not responsible.

28 L. R. A.

But the duty is cast by the statute upon the company, and it is cast as an absolute duty. It must erect and maintain safe and secure fences. It is a duty whose object is the securing a safe place for the employés on the train to do their work, and that, as is known, is an absolute duty cast upon the company, responsibility for neglect of which cannot be evaded by intrusting it to some employé. Our conclusion, therefore, is that there was no error in the instructions of the court in respect to this matter, and that the law is that if, through a failure of the company to erect and maintain a sufficient fence as required by the statute, an animal gets onto the track, whereby a train is derailed, and an employé on that train is injured by such derailment, the latter is entitled to maintain his action for damages against the company.

A second objection is to the admission of testimony as to work done subsequently to the accident in the way of repair to the fence at the place where the steer entered upon the track, and we are referred to the two cases of Columbia & P. S. R. Co. v. Hawthorne, 144 U. S. 202, 36 L. ed. 405, and Alcorn v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 108 Mo. 81, as authorities for the proposition that proof of such subsequent repairs is not admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing the existence of a defect. But the difficulty with the objection is that this testimony was introduced, at least in the first place, by the company itself. After proof of such repairs had been made by the company, the mere fact that the plaintiff, on his rebuttal, introduced further testimony in reference to the matter, is not sufficient to justify any interference with the verdict. It is unnecessary to inquire whether the court erred in not giving, when requested, an instruction as to the consideration to be given to this testimony, for on the new trial, which we are compelled to award, probably no such question will be presented.

The only remaining matter that we notice is in respect to the instructions concerning contributory negligence. This instruction was asked by the defendant, and refused: "If the jury believe from the evidence that plaintiff voluntarily assumed his position on the platform of the way car, and that, under defendant's rules, his proper place was on top of that car, and if the jury further believe from the evidence that he was not in such position, and that, by reason of his failure to be on top, he was unable to immediately signal the engineer on first perceiving the steer, and thereby contributed in any way to produce the wreck and his consequent injury, then he cannot recover."

It is obvious that if there was in the charge no reference to the matter of contributory negligence, and the case stood alone upon the refusal to give this instruction, the ruling could not be sustained. But the court did refer to the matter; and the question to be determined is whether the charge, as given, fully and accurately stated the law in respect to contributory negligence, so as to obviate any objection which arises from the failure to give this instruction. This was its language: "Again, it is suggested (and it seems to be claimed) that Reesman was guilty of contributory negligence in not taking a proper position on the way car, and with reference to that specification of negligence the court gives you this instruction: It was the duty of Reesman to comply with the rules made by the defendant company for the government of its brakemen. If a rule of the company required Reesman to be on top of the way car on the occasion of the accident, and he was on the rear platform, without the consent of the conductor, then he was guilty of such contributory negligence as will prevent a recovery, provided you believe that his being on the platform, instead of on the top of the way car, helped, in any direct way, to occasion the derailment; but if being on the platform, instead of on the top of the car, did not in any way help to occasion the accident, or if Reesman was on the platform with the knowledge and consent of the conductor of the train, under whose orders he worked, then he was not guilty of contributory negligence merely because he was on the platform, though the rule did require him to be on the top or roof of the car. In other words, gentlemen, although they may have had rules requiring him to be on the roof of the car, and he was not on the roof, yet, unless you are able to say that if he had been on the roof the accident would not have occurred, why the fact that he was not on the roof is no defense. It is not contributory negligence, such as will preclude the plaintiff from recovering. If the position which he took on that rear platform on the morning of the accident was a position which he took with the knowledge and consent of the conductor who had charge of the train, the fact that he was there, and not on the roof of the car, does not make him guilty of contributory negligence, notwithstanding the rule which has been read in evidence."

The proposition here plainly stated is that if plaintiff disobeyed the rules of the company, and such disobedience contributed directly to the injury, he may nevertheless recover, and cannot be held guilty of contributory negligence, providing that such disobedience was with the knowledge and consent of the conductor of the train. Or, in other words, if the conductor fails to enforce the rules of the company the employé may knowingly disregard them, and yet in no manner be barred from recovering for injuries which would not have resulted but for such disobedience. With that doctrine we cannot concur. It is not pretended that the conductor directed the plaintiff to remain on the platform, and not go onto the top of the caboose. A different question may arise in case the violation of the rules of the company is in obedience to a direct command from the immediate superintendent, but a decision of that question is unnecessary in this case. The duty of obedience to the rules of the employer is one resting alike upon all employes; and, when an employé claims to recover from his employer for injuries resulting through the latter's negligence, he cannot escape the consequences of his own act contributing to such injury—an act done in known violation of the rules of such employer—on the ground that his immediate superintendent knew and assented to such act of violation. If it were otherwise, then the supineness and negligence of any superintending officer of a corporation would relieve a subordinate from responsibility for his own conduct. In other words, the wrong of one employé is excused by a like wrong of another. The employé injured through his own omission of duty escapes liability for such omission because some other employé is equally careless. The question has not infrequently arisen whether knowledge and assent on the part of the conductor, or other official on a train, of a violation of one of the rules of the company by a passenger, relieves the latter from the burden of contributory negligence arising from such violation, and the response has almost uniformly been in the negative. It is true that in those cases the party injured was not an employé, subject to the control of the officer whose knowledge and assent to the violation was relied upon as an excuse, but the principle underlying is the same. The question is not one of obedience to orders, but of a compliance with rules; and, generally speaking, the duty of compliance is not waived by the mere fact that some controlling official has knowledge of the failure to comply. In the case of Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 489, 24 L. ed. 506, the party injured, who though an employé was not employed on the train or subject to the control of the conductor, was riding on the pilot of the locomotive, contrary to the directions of his employer, but with the knowledge and assent of the persons in charge of the train; and it was held that his thus riding was contributory negligence and not excused, the court observing, "The knowledge, assent, or direction of the company's agents as to what he did is immaterial." In Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Langdon, 92 Pa. 21, 87 Am. Rep. 651, the plaintiff, a passenger, was injured while riding in the baggage car in violation of the rules of the company. It was held that he could not recover although such riding was with the knowledge of the conductor of the train. In the course of the opinion the court said, "We are unable to see how a conductor in violation of a known rule of the company, can license a man to occupy a position of danger so as to make the company responsible." See also the following cases: Hickey v. Boston & L. R. Co. 14 Allen, 429; Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Moore, 49 Tex. 81, 30 Am. Rep. 98; Virginia Midland R. Co. v. Roach, 88 Va. 375; Shenandoah Valley R. Co. v. Lucado, 86 Va. 390; Georgia Pac. R. Co. v. Davis, 92 Ala. 300. Nor is there anything in the case of Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Nickels (decided by this court) 4 U. S. App. 369, 50 Fed. Rep. 718, in conflict with the views herein expressed. In that case a brakeman was injured while coupling a car, and on the trial an instruction was asked of the court to direct a verdict for defendant on the ground of the contributory negligence of the plaintiff, in failing to use a stick in making such coupling, as required by the rule of the company, which instruction was refused and the matter of negligence submitted to the jury. There was testimony tending to show that the rule was universally disregarded, and that the superintendent of the road was fully aware of its constant violation; and it was held that under the circumstances the jury were at liberty to consider whether the rule was not, in effect, abrogated. The court thus disposed of the question (page 382, 4 U. S. App., and page 718, 50 Fed. Rep.): "To hold that this defendant company could make this rule on paper, call it to plaintiff's attention, and give him written notice that he must obey it, and be bound by it, one day, and know and acquiesce, without complaint or objection, in the complete disregard of it by the plaintiff, and all its other employes associated with him on every day he was in its service, and then escape liability to him for an injury caused by its own breach of duty towards the plaintiff, because he disregarded this rule, would be neither good morals nor good law. Actions are often more effective than words, and it will not do to say that neither the plaintiff nor the jury was authorized to believe, from the long-continued acquiescence of the defendant in the disregard of this rule, that it had been abandoned, and that it was not in force. The evidence of such abandonment was competent and ample, and the ruling and charge of the court below on this subject were right."

It is unnecessary to pursue this matter further. It may be laid down as a general rule that the mere knowledge and assent of his immediate superior to a violation by an employe of a known rule of the company—the employer—will not, as a matter of law, relieve such employe from the consequences of such violation.

The judgment of the court below must be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FIFTH CIRCUIT.

W. R. HAILE, Curator, etc., of James T. Haile, Plff. in Err.,

v.

TEXAS & PACIFIC R. CO.

(60 Fed. Rep. 557.)

Insanity resulting from the shock and excitement caused by a railroad accident to a passenger who sustained no bodily injury will not make the railroad company liable.

(January 23, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Louisiana to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for insanity alleged to have been produced by the negligent acts of defendant. Affirmed.

Statement by Toolmin, District Judge:

In his petition the plaintiff in error (also plaintiff in the lower court) avers: That on or about January 29, 1892, in company with James T. Haile, his ward, he took passage on the passenger train of the defendant company, at Dallas, Tex., and paid fare, and provided tickets, for himself and his brother, to Baton Rouge, La., in consideration of which fare the said company contracted and bound itself to convey them safely, and without delay and harm, to such destination. "That this trip was undertaken under directions of a physician, who advised that rest, quiet, and change of scene would restore to full vigor of mind and body the said James T. Haile, who had for some time previous been suffering from an attack of grippe, and was at this time, and in consequence thereof, greatly depressed, mentally and physically, and in an intense nervous condition. That the greater part of said journey had been accomplished in safety, and without any bad effect upon the said James T. Haile, until on the next day, January 30, 1892, about 8 A. M., when near the town of Robeline, La., the said train was suddenly, and without warning, precipitated through a burning bridge, and was completely wrecked, and immediately after caught fire and was destroyed. That the shock from the accident was so great that it hurled said James T. Haile from his seat to the floor, where he lay utterly helpless and prostrated by the shock, and unable to move. The train having in the mean time caught fire, petitioner was forced to carry his brother out of the car, and, on account of the marshy condition of the surrounding country, and his nervous and prostrated condition, to place him on the roadbed, where he was in full view of the burning wreck, and in the midst of the wounded and dying, whose cries and lamentations, added to his already intense nervous state, caused by the accident itself, threw him into a state of excitement, so that petitioner, and those around him, were unable to control or quiet him. That his nervous state became greatly worse during the several hours they were forced to wait on the scene of the wreck for conveyance to the town of Robeline, where they were to wait for the relief train to be sent out by the railroad company. After a further delay of some hours, the relief train arrived, consisting, as petitioner afterwards found, of what is in which nervous convulsions and illness resulting from fright were held to constitute an actionable injury.

NOTE.—The present case is akin to those respecting a right of action for mere fright which are collected in the note to Ewing v. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. (Pa.) 14 L. R. A. 686.

But the present case more nearly approaches Purcell v. St. Paul City R. Co. (Minn.) 16 L. R. A. 208, 23 L. R. A.

The question is a nice one and the authorities have not clearly developed the answer.

known as an 'emigrant coach,' drawn by a freight engine. The coach was overcrowded with passengers from the wrecked train. The seats and other accommodations were of the crudest kind, entailing great discomfort and inconvenience upon the passengers, and especially upon petitioner's ward, who, in his exhausted, excited, and overwrought state of mind and body, was forced to use same. That the hardships, together with the constant and sudden jerkings and stoppings of the train, caused by the engine used not being properly constructed for such purposes, or because it was improperly handled, kept petitioner's ward and the passengers in constant fear and excitement; and finally, on entering the company's yard in Algiers, La., the train on which was petitioner and his ward was suddenly and violently run into from the rear by a switch engine, through the negligence of defendant's employes. The shock was so violent as to knock petitioner's ward off the seat, to the car floor, and caused great excitement among the passengers, who feared another accident had befallen them. Now, petitioner alleges that since this time his ward has become rapidly worse, as a result of the shock, excitement, and hardship he suffered from the said accident, and he is now insane, and confined in a bettering house, with little or no hope of recovery; and he has therefore been interdicted, and petitioner duly appointed his curator. Petitioner therefore alleges and charges that the present state of his ward's mind was caused and brought about by the injuries and sufferings he underwent on account of the accidents and hardships aforesaid; and he alleges that the said accidents and injuries were caused by the negligence of the defendant company, its employes and agents, for the reason that, by the exercise of due care and caution in the management of its road and the selection of agents, the said accidents could have been avoided. That the said road employed no track walkers to guard against such accidents, and to see that the road was in proper condition, and safe for travelers on the company's trains, as it was in duty bound to do. And by reason of the fact that this section of the road was made up of wooden trestle work, which needed constant vigilance and care to keep it in safe condition, the burning of this bridge for hours before the accident was evidence of gross negligence on the part of the company. That the train to which the accident happened was running at a rate of speed that was dangerous and negligent, considering the character of the roadbed, and the fact that a dense fog obscured the view of the trainmen. For these reasons, and for the conduct of the company and its agents in the careless transportation of petitioner and his ward, the said company is chargeable with gross negligence. Petitioner alleges and avers that for the pain, anxiety, and loss of his mind, the expense he has incurred, and in the future must incur, petitioner's ward has been damaged in the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars by the said company." The defendant company, also defendant in error, excepted or demurred to the petition on the following grounds: "Because said petition, on its face, shows no cause of action against defendant. Because, under the law, no right of action can arise for damages for the insanity of a human being. Because said petition does not show any right to recover damages for insanity. Wherefore, defendant prays that these exceptions may be maintained, and plaintiff's suit dismissed, with costs." The exceptions were sustained by the lower court, and judgment was rendered dismissing the suit. This ruling is assigned as error.

Argued before McCormick, Circuit Judge, and Locke and Toulmin, District Judges.

Messrs. W. B. Spencer, Charles E. Fenner, Samuel Henderson, Jr., and Charles Payne Fenner, for plaintiff in error:

The plaintiff in this case is not seeking to recover for the mental pain or anxiety of his ward, but for his insanity or loss of mind, the absolute destruction of his intellect.

"A man's mind is no less a part of his person than his body," says the supreme court of Connecticut (Seger v. Barkhamsted, 23 Conn. 298), and any injury resulting in the loss of mind or insanity is as much a subject of legal damage as injury to any other part of his person.

The petition charges physical as well mental suffering which, considering the condition of his ward's health, might have been sufficient to cause his insanity and the case should have been given to the jury on that issue.

Fitzpatrick v. Great Western R. Co. 12 U. C. Q. B. 645.

The failure to carry passengers safely is in the nature of a tort, and to be treated as such independently of the contract of carriage, the courts seeming to regard it as a breach of public duty, rather than as a violation of a particular contract.

16 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 416, 417, and notes 1, 2; Brown v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 54 Wis. 847, 41 Am. Rep. 41; Wood v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 82 Wis. 398; Walsh v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 42 Wis. 23, 24 Am. Rep. 876; Oraker v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 36 Wis. 657.

In Rigby v. Hewitt, 5 Exch. 243, where the learned judge said: "Every person who does a wrong is, at least, responsible for all the mischievous consequences that may be reasonably expected to result under ordinary circumstances from such misconduct." From this guarded expression the converse of this proposition has been drawn by some courts, viz., that unless the consequences of an act might have been reasonably foreseen by the defendant himself, no liability accrues. But the very gist of actions for mere negligence is, that the consequences of the act could not be reasonably expected, for if these consequences could reasonably have been foreseen and expected, an intention to produce these consequences could properly be inferred, and the act would be a malicious tort.

Simpson v. London General Omnibus Co. L. R. 8 C. P. 890.

In suits for mere actionable negligence there is no ground to charge the defendant with a deliberate attempt to injure, but only that though there was only a slight chance that such an injury would result, he was so negligent or heedless as not to provide against such chance.

Smith v. London & S. W. R. Co. L. R. 6 C. P. 14; Simpson v. London General Omnibus Co. supra.

It is no defense that the particular consequence is improbable and not to be reasonably expected, if it really appear that it naturally followed from the negligence under examination.

Whart. Neg. 1st ed. § 77; Pittsburgh v. Grier, 22 Pa. 54, 60 Am. Dec. 65; McGrew v. Stone, 58 Pa. 442; Higgins v. Dewey, 107 Mass. 494, 9 Am. Rep. 68; White v. Ballou, 8 Allen, 408; Luce v. Dorchester Mut. F. Ins. Co. 105 Mass. 297, 7 Am. Rep. 522; Dowell v. General Steam Nav. Co. 5 El. & Bl. 195; Burrows v. March Gas & Coke Co. L. R. 5 Exch. 67.

He who commits a tort must be held to contemplate all the damages which may legitimately flow from his illegal act, whether he may have foreseen them or not, and so far as plainly traceable thereto, he must repair them.

Hill v. Winsor, 118 Mass. 251; Eten v. Luyster, 60 N. Y. 252; Lane v. Atlantic Works, 111 Mass. 186; Keenan v. Cavanaugh, 44 Vt. 268; Little v. Boston & M. R. Co. 66 Me. 289; Coltard v. South Eastern R. Co. 7 Hurlst. & N. 79; Hart v. Western R. Corp. 18 Met. 99, 46 Am. Dec. 719; Wellington v. Downer Kerosene Oil Co. 104 Mass. 64; Metallic Compression Casting Co. v. Fitchburg R. Co. 109 Mass. 277, 12 Am. Rep. 689; Kellogg v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 26 Wis. 228, 7 Am. Rep. 69; Williams v. Vanderbilt, 28 N. Y. 217, 84 Am. Dec. 838; Bowas v. Pioneer Tow Line, 2 Sawy. 21; Schumaker v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 12 L. R. A. 257, 46 Minn. 88; Brown v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 54 Wis. 842, 41 Am. Rep. 41.

Nor is the defendant excused, because he did not know the state of the injured man's health, and the result is his negligence would have upon him.

Brown v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 54 Wis. 857, 41 Am. Rep. 41; Stewart v. Ripon, 88 Wis. 591; Baltimore City Pass. R. Co. v. Kemp, 61 Md. 74, 48 Am. Rep. 184.

The test of reasonable anticipation or foresight is, considering all the circumstances of the case, this result in the ordinary natural sequence from the negligence complained of. If it is, then the damage is the proximate result of the negligence.

1 Smith, Lead. Cas. Eng. ed. 182.

Is it not likely that "in the long run" such a result as that in this case would happen from a series of such negligent acts as that charged against the defendant?

Whart. Neg. § 78.

Injuries resulting from fright are actionable.

Oliver v. La Valle, 86 Wis. 597; Purcell v. St. Paul City R. Co. 16 L. R. A. 203, 48 Minn. 139; Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. 4 Misc. 575.

Messrs. W. W. Howe and S. S. Prentiss, for defendant in error:

This is a case where, by an accident which injured some one else, the plaintiff's ward was excited and alarmed.

In such a case the law does not afford any action for damages,—and, a fortiori, where as in the case at bar the parties contracting could not have contemplated the result alleged.

28 L. R. A.

Ewing v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 14 L. R. A. 666, 147 Pa. 40.

In no case has it ever been held that mental anguish alone, unaccompanied by injury to the person, afforded a ground of action.

Wood's note on Mayne, Damages. See also Wyman v. Leavitt, 71 Me. 227, 36 Am. Rep. 303; Fox v. Borkey, 126 Pa. 164; Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 577; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Stables, 62 Ill. 313; Canning v. Williamstown, 1 Cush. 451; Johnson v. Wells, Fargo & Co. 6 Nev. 224, 8 Am. Rep. 245.

Damages for mental suffering alone are too remote, uncertain, and speculative.

Western U. Tele. Co. v. Wood, 21 L. R. A. 706, 57 Fed. Rep. 471.

In Scheffer v. Washington City, V. M. & G. S. R. Co. 105 U. S. 249, 26 L. ed. 1070, by reason of a negligent collision of railway trains, a passenger sustained terrible physical injuries, resulting in nervous prostration and disorder which induced suicide.

It was held that the collision was not the proximate cause of the death.

In order to warrant a finding that negligence or an act not amounting to wanton wrong, is the proximate cause of an injury, it must appear that the injury was the natural and probable consequence of the negligence or wrongful act, and that it ought to have been foreseen in the light of the attending circumstances.

Pittsburg, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Staley, 41 Ohio St. 118; Jackson v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 18 Lea, 491, 49 Am. Rep. 663; Eames v. Texas & N. O. R. Co. 63 Tex. 660; Cooley, Torts, p. 69.

Toulmin, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The first and third grounds of exception to the petition are, in effect, the same, and if they are well taken the judgment of the court below must be affirmed. The plaintiff claims damages for the pain, anxiety, and loss of mind alleged to have been suffered by his ward, James T. Haile, and avers that this state of said Haile's mind, which is now one of insanity, "was caused and brought about by the injuries and sufferings he underwent on account of the accidents and hardships" complained of. He avers that the shock of the accident was so great as to hurl Haile from his seat to the floor of the car, where he lay prostrated by the shock. A shock is a sudden agitation of body or mind. It may affect the body or mind. The petition avers that Haile lay helpless and prostrated, but whether from a bodily or mental shock is left somewhat uncertain by the averments of the petition. The shock averred may reasonably be construed to mean the one or the other. But there is no charge that any bodily injury was sustained by the shock, and no claim for damages for any such injury. The charge is that Haile's insanity was caused and brought about by the injuries and sufferings he underwent on account of the accidents and hardships complained of; and the claim for damages is for the pain, anxiety, and loss of his mind, and the expenses incurred and to be incurred incidental thereto. The learned counsel for the plaintiff concedes "that pain and anxiety of mind the law cannot value, and does not pretend to redress, when the unlawful act complained of causes that alone." They say that the plaintiff, in this case, is not seeking to recover for the mental pain or anxiety of his ward, but for his insanity,—the loss of his mind,—and they present to the court an able argument to show that "the two are entirely separate and distinct phenomena." They contend that insanity is not to be "placed in the same category with such trivial mental phenomena as mere anxiety and worry." They say, "It is a disease of the mind, and the law could as well weigh and determine the damage a man has as suffered by the loss of his mind as it could the loss of his leg, or of the power of sight," etc. It is not necessary for us to decide the question raised by this contention, which is whether, under the law, any right of action can arise for damages for the insanity of a human being. The question we are called on now to decide is whether the facts set forth in the petition show any right to recover damages for insanity, as is therein claimed. That question we will proceed to consider.

The negligence of defendant, as charged, being admitted by the exceptions, the question is, Was that negligence the proximate cause of the injury complained of? It is well settled that the damages sustained by a wrongful act must be the natural result of the act,—such a consequence as, in the ordinary course of things, would flow from it. As expressed by some of the authorities, "Proximate damages are those that are the ordinary and natural results of the negligence, such as are usual, and might therefore have been expected." "Remote damages are such as are the result of an accidental or unusual combination of circumstances, which would not be reasonably anticipated, and over which the negligent party had no control." Boeing v. Pittsburg, O. C. & St. L. R. Co. 14 L. R. A. 866, 147 Pa. 40; Victorian R. Co. v. Coultas, L. R. 18 App. Cas. 222; Cooley, Torts, 69; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1083.

The contention is that the insanity for which damages are claimed was caused by the excitement, hardship, and suffering which resulted from the accident. According to the great current of modern medical authorities, insanity is a disease,—a disease of the mind,—the existence of which is a question of fact, to be proved, just as much as the possible existence of any other disease. As said by Dillon, Oh. J., in Fetter's Case, 25 Iowa, 68, "That insanity is the existence of mental disease, both medicine and law now recognize." While the defendant, as a common carrier, had reason to anticipate that an accident would cause physical injury, and would produce fright and excitement, it had no reason to anticipate that the latter would result in permanent injury, as a disease of the mind, or any other disease that might be caused by excitement, exposure, and hardship sometimes incident to travel. If the disease was not likely to result from the accident, and was not one which the defendant could have reasonably foreseen, in the light of the attending circumstances, then the accident was not the proximate cause. The defendant had no reason to anticipate that the result of an accident on its road would so operate on Halle's mind as to produce disease,—the disease of insanity,—any more than that the exposure and hardships he suffered would produce grippe, pneumonia, or any other disease. He sustained no bodily injury by the accident, so far as the petition shows; but it caused a shock and an excitement, which, under his peculiar mental and physical condition at the time, resulted in his insanity. The defendant owed him the duty to carry him safely,—not to injure his person by force or violence. It owed him no duty to protect him from fright, excitement, or from any hardship that he might subsequently suffer because of the unfortunate accident.

The case of Scheffer v. Washington City, V. M. & G. S. R. Co., 105 U. S. 249, 26 L. ed. 1070, was where, by reason of a collision of railway trains, a passenger was injured; and, becoming thereby disordered in mind and body, he, some eight months thereafter, committed suicide. The court held in a suit by his personal representative against the railroad company, that as his own act was the proximate cause of his death, there could be no recovery. In the opinion the court said: "The suicide of Scheffer was not a result naturally and reasonably to be expected from the injury received on the train. . . . His insanity, as a cause of his final destruction, was as little the natural or probable result of the negligence of the railway officials, as his suicide, and each of these are casual or unexpected causes, intervening between the act which injured him, and his death."

There was no error in the ruling of the Circuit Court, and the judgment is affirmed.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

John G. BOGGESS, Plff. in Err.,

v.

CHESAPEAKE & OHIO R. CO.

(37 W. Va. 297.)

*1. A person having a ticket for pas-

*Headnotes by BRANNON, J.

NOTE.—For cases similar to the above except in respect to the good faith of the person injured and his intent to ride lawfully as a passenger, see Farber v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (Mo.) 20 L. R. A. 350; 23 L. R. A.

sage upon a railroad, who boards a freight train which does not carry passengers believing the ticket good on that train, is to be treated as a passenger, and is not a trespasser.

2. The conductor orders such persons to get off the train while running at a speed which would endanger him in getting off, the conductor refusing to stop the train to allow him to get off, and in violent and insulting language threatens to eject the person from the train by force if such order is not obeyed, and has force at his command to execute such threat, and the person jumps from the train to avoid ejection by force. This is sufficient compulsion or show of force to excuse the person from the charge of contributory negligence in so jumping from the train.

Plans v. Boston & A. R. Co. (Mass.) 17 L. R. A. 885. For exhaustive note on injuries received in getting on or off railroad trains, see Carr v. Bel River & E. R. Co. (Cal.) 21 L. R. A. 354.

(December 10, 1902.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Kanawha County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Okey, Johnson and A. Burlew, for plaintiff in error:

The defendant is liable notwithstanding the negligence of the plaintiff, if an injury could be prevented by ordinary care on the part of the defendant.

Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Jones, 95 U. S. 489, 34 L. ed. 506; Twomley v. Central Park N. & E. R. Co. 69 N. Y. 158, 25 Am. Rep. 162; Northern Cent. R. Co. v. State, 29 Md. 420, 96 Am. Dec. 545; Kay v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 65 Pa. 269, 8 Am. Rep. 628; Lynch v. Nurdin, 1 Q. B. 29.

If there be negligence on the part of the plaintiff, yet, if at the time the injury was committed, it might have been avoided by the defendant in the exercise of reasonable care and prudence, an action will lie for the injury.

Huelsenkamp v. Citizens R. Co. 87 Mo. 537, 90 Am. Dec. 899; Macon & W. R. Co. v. Davis, 18 Ga. 679; Morrissey v. Wiggins Ferry Co. 43 Mo. 380, 37 Am. Dec. 402, 47 Mo. 521; Brown v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 50 Mo. 461, 11 Am. Rep. 420; Harlan v. St. Louis, K. C. & N. R. Co. 65 Mo. 22; Hicks v. Pacific R. Co. 64 Mo. 480; Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. McGowan, 62 Miss. 688, 52 Am. Rep. 205; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Gretener, 46 Ill. 75; 2 Rorer, Railroads, pp. 1040, 1054.

A person taking passage on the wrong train cannot be expelled as a trespasser although he had no right to a passage on that train, but having a ticket, had a right of passage on the proper train.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Rosensweig, 118 Pa. 519.

The commission of a trespass does not justify the infliction of an injury by way of punishment, or revenge, or out of mere recklessness.

Toomey v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 10 L. R. A. 139, 86 Cal. 374, and cases there cited; Williams v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 72 Cal. 120; Patterson, Railway Accident Law, § 198, p. 189; Hoffman v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 87 N. Y. 25, 41 Am. Rep. 387; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Dunkin, 92 Ind. 601; Schultz v. Third Ave. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 242; Western & A. R. Co. v. Turner, 72 Ga. 292, 58 Am. Rep. 842; Carter v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 98 Ind. 552, 49 Am. Rep. 780; Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. v. Kelly, 38 Kan. 655, 59 Am. Rep. 596; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Rosensweig, supra.

In Benton v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 55 Iowa, 502, it was held a proper case for the jury, when a boy was roughly ordered off a 28 L. R. A. moving train, and in attempting to obey was killed.

The same was held in California in Kline v. Central Pac. R. Co. 37 Cal. 400, 99 Am. Dec. 282.

Mr. J. E. Chilton, for defendant in error: The plaintiff alleges that he got on a freight train of the defendant. This was a known dangerous place and not such a train as any person could believe or suppose was intended to carry passengers. The company had the right to refuse to carry passengers on its freight trains.

Hobbs v. Texas & P. R. Co. 49 Ark. 357; Hutchinson, Car. 538, note 2.

The plaintiff alleges that he undertook to jump from a train running at a dangerous rate of speed—at a speed, to use his language, that made it extremely dangerous for him to attempt to get off—and was hurt while doing so.

It is negligence to attempt to get off a moving train, especially when running at an extremely dangerous rate of speed.

Cram v. Metropolitan R. Co. 112 Mass. 38; Ginnon v. New York & H. R. Co. 3 Robt. 25; Southwestern R. Co. v. Singleton, 67 Ga. 306.

It is not sufficient to allege that the plaintiff believed that the conductor would do an unlawful and improper act, by putting him off a moving train, but he must show that the conductor or some employé of the company used some force or made some "demonstration of force sufficient to impress a reasonable person with the belief that force would be employed."

Kline v. Central Pac. R. Co. 37 Cal. 406, 99 Am. Dec. 282; Cauley v. Pittsburg, O. & St. L. R. Co. 95 Pa. 898, 40 Am. Rep. 664.

Brannon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

John G. Boggess brought an action of trespass on the case in the circuit court of Kanawha county against the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway Company, and a demurrer to the declaration was sustained, and judgment rendered for the defendant, and the case was brought here by the plaintiff. The declaration alleges that the plaintiff purchased of the defendant a ticket for his passage upon its railroad from Brownstown to Charleston, and got upon a freight train to go to Charleston, and that he believed that the ticket entitled him to ride upon said train, and that while the train was running at a speed which made it extremely dangerous for one to get off it without suffering serious bodily injury, the conductor "ordered and directed the plaintiff to leave said train, and refused to stop said train to enable said plaintiff to do so without injury, and there and then, in violent and insulting language, threatened to put said plaintiff off said train by force if he declined to obey said order; and believing that said agent, with such force as he could command, would be able to and would eject the plaintiff from said train by force if he undertook to resist him, and believing, also, that an attempt to resist said agent would result in more serious injury to the plaintiff than he would be likely to receive by attempting to get off said train without collision with said agent, and to avoid being forcibly ejected from said train, he undertook to get off said train, and in doing so used every care and precaution possible, but said train was running at such a rapid rate that in jumping from it he was injured," etc.

We cannot regard the plaintiff a trespasser, if that be material; for even a trespasser on a train must be ejected at a proper time and in a proper manner. Having a ticket, and getting aboard a wrong train, believing his ticket would entitle him to ride upon it, he is not a trespasser, but a passenger. There is no question that a railroad company may make reasonable rules and regulations for the conduct of its business, nor that it has the right to appropriate certain of its trains for freight exclusively, and others for passengers, and refuse to carry passengers on freight trains; but when a person with a ticket giving no notice of such rule is on a freight train, believing he has a right to ride on it, he is a passenger, and entitled to a passenger's rights while on it. 2 Rorer, Railways, 984; 2 Wood, Railway Law, 1047. We do not question the right of a conductor of a freight train, which, by the rules of the company, is forbidden to carry passengers, to require a passenger to leave it, and even forcibly eject him, if necessary, in a manner such as is required by law; but it must be in that manner. In this case the declaration states that the train was running at a speed rendering it extremely dangerous to get off it, and that the conductor refused to stop it to enable the plaintiff to get off it and that the conductor nevertheless required the plaintiff, under such circumstances of imminent danger, to leave the train. Certainly, we are compelled to say that in this the conductor was in the wrong. If determined that the plaintiff must leave the train at once, he must stop it for the purpose, or if that was inconvenient, or he did not choose to do so, he must allow the passenger to remain on the train until his next stopping place is reached, and not compel him, at risk of his life, to jump from the rapidly moving train. It needs no authority, though it is abundant, to show that neither a passenger nor trespasser can be expelled from a train under circumstances imperiling his life or limb. Thus the company is in the wrong.

But it is said that while this may be true, and while, if the plaintiff had been ejected from the train by force, or a demonstration of force equivalent thereto, the company might be liable, yet the declaration does not show this to be the case, and that the plaintiff, without actual compulsion, though capable of seeing and judging the danger of the act, voluntarily risked that danger, and jumped from the running train. Instead of acting prudently and standing his ground until ejected by actual force, and therefore he is guilty of contributory negligence preventing recovery in this case. Here, in fact, is the crucial point in the case. Now, first, it may with force be said that it lies not in the company's mouth to say, after giving a command to the plaintiff to leave the train, that he ought not to have obeyed, but ought to have waited until the actual forcible compulsion came. It gave the command. Can it complain that it was obeyed? But the quotation above from the declaration requires us to interpret it as stating that the conductor ordered the plaintiff to get off the train, and besides threatened to put the plaintiff off by force, conveying such threat in insulting and violent language, indicative of earnestness and determination to execute the threat, and that the plaintiff believed he would execute it, and that the conductor, with help at his command, could execute it, and that the plaintiff, under all the circumstances, believed that an effort to resist being ejected by force would entail more danger of bodily injury than his getting off the train without collision with the conductor, and that the plaintiff jumped from the train to avoid being ejected by actual force. If these things be true, we must say that the declaration alleges that the force would have come. If so, was the plaintiff compelled to wait for it, when it would certainly increase his danger? It would seem useless to await the force, if come it will. Must he who is about to receive the deadly blow wait till it fall before exercising self-defense? Or, rather, if he flees to escape it, and in so doing, and because of his flight, receives an injury, would not the one wrongfully compelling the flight be answerable? Can he say his adversary should not have fled? In Kline v. Central Pac. R. Co., 87 Cal. 400, 99 Am. Dec. 282, where a boy was ordered to get off a train while moving, the opinion said: "There may be moral as well as physical compulsion, and the former may prove as effectual as the latter. How, then, is one who resorts to the former less culpable than one who resorts to the latter? Or how can one who finds himself unable to resist the former be held more responsible for the consequences than when he yields, from necessity, to the latter? Can his obedience in the former case be considered the result of his own will, any more than his ejection in the latter? If, as the testimony tends to show, the conductor sharply ordered the plaintiff to get off the cars, at the same time putting his hand upon his shoulder as if to enforce obedience, and the boy jumped, without waiting for further actual force, or resisting until thrust off by the superior strength of the conductor, can we say judicially that his act was in any degree voluntary? The tone, manner, and whole bearing of the conductor may have satisfied the boy that force would be used. If so, was not such a demonstration on the part of the conductor equivalent to actual and superior force? We have no doubt, in such a case, a show or demonstration of force sufficient to impress a reasonable person with the belief that it will be employed must be held to be equivalent to actual force. The danger of sustaining personal injury is much greater where a person is ejected by the use of actual force than where he is ejected under circumstances which permit the exercise of some care on his part. It would be a rigid rule which would require a person to subject himself to such extra hazard, after it has become morally certain that actual force will be used, in order to free himself from all responsibility in respect to consequences, and fasten it upon his adversary." I think the general principles stated in the California case correct. It is a difficult matter to define "force," or say in exact language what in such a case as this is the show of force, short of actual force, which would justify the party in jumping from the train into danger. It assimilates itself somewhat to the question of duress under the law of contracts. There the question is, Is this contract the act of the will of its maker, or his enforced act,—the creature, not of his will, but of coercion by the other party? Here the question is, Was the act of jumping from the train the willing but reckless act of the plaintiff, or his unwilling act, attributable to the wrongful act and coercion of the conductor? Mr. Bishop, in his work on Contracts (sec. 716), says: "It is immaterial whether the duress is actual or only, in a serious and effectual manner, threatened. This idea is expressed in the older books by dividing it, in the words of Blackstone, into two sorts,—duress of imprisonment, where a man actually loses his liberty, and duress per minas, where the hardship is only threatened and impending." In this case there is, if the declaration be true, much more than command. There is a threat, serious and violent, with ample capacity to execute it, and its execution certain to endanger the plaintiff more than if, without waiting for its execution, he jumped from the train, and this act was done only to avoid forcible ejection. Was there not a demonstration of force equivalent to actual force?

We think there is error in sustaining the demurrer, and we reverse the judgment, and remand the case for further proceedings, adding that we pass only on the face of the declaration, and indicate no opinion on the merits of the case, as it may appear on the evidence when tried.

Reversed and remanded.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

C. W. ROBISON, Appt.,

v.

W. W. GRAY.

(.....Iowa.....)

Taking possession of mortgaged chattels and selling them at once is authorized by a chattel mortgage which provides that the mortgagee may take possession and sell whenever he "shall choose to do so," especially when the statute provides that the mortgagee is entitled to possession in the absence of stipulation to the contrary, notwithstanding the fact that the mortgage is given to secure notes which are payable at different times in the future.

(Given, J., dissents.)

(January 26, 1894.)

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Webster County in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce payment of certain promissory notes. Reversed.

Statement by Rothrock, J.:

This is an action upon four promissory notes executed by the defendant, and an account for interest on a balance alleged to be due the plaintiff. The defendant, by his answer, denied indebtedness upon the account, and alleged that the promissory notes were fully paid by the seizure of certain property rights and credits of defendant under a chattel mortgage given to secure the payment of said notes. In another count of the answer the defendant alleges that the plaintiff maliciously and wrongfully seized, and converted to his own use, the property described in the chattel mortgage, by reason of which wrongful acts the defendant was damaged in the sum of $2,000 actual damages, and $1,000 exemplary damages. The action was

NOTE.—Effect of "danger," "safety," or "insecurity" clause in a chattel mortgage.

A striking effect which is somewhat at variance with the general intention and understanding of the purpose of such clauses is that shown by the decision in Hall v. Sampson, 85 N. Y. 274, 91 Am. Dec. 56, where it was held that the insertion of a safety clause in the mortgage impliedly authorizes the mortgagor to retain possession of the property. That ruling was followed in Hathaway v. Brayman, 42 N. Y. 322, 1 Am. Rep. 524.

When the fact is considered that without such clause or some other giving the mortgagor the right to possession the mortgagee might take the property immediately, the effect is seen to be that while such clause is as is sometimes stated "for the benefit of the mortgagee" its absence might be more for his benefit.

The lower court in New York had previously held that a clause that if the mortgagee should at any time deem himself in danger of losing his debt by delaying the collection thereof until it became due, he might take possession of the property at any time does not by implication give the mortgagor the right to retain possession of the property until the happening of the contingency (Rich v. Milk, 20 Barb. 616), but that holding is expressly repudiated in the Hall Case, and the rule adopted by the court of appeals seems to have been followed in other states.

The insertion of a provision of this kind is inconsistent with the mortgagee's right to possession in the absence of the conditions specified. Woods v. Gaar, 98 Mich. 143.

So the mortgagor is entitled to possession until the mortgagee deems himself unsafe. Sherman v. Clark, 24 Minn. 37.

Right to interfere with third persons.

The effect of holding that such a clause gives the mortgagor the right to possession is to disable the mortgagee from bringing an action in the nature of trover against strangers who interfere with the property and limit him to his right to follow the property. So in New York it was held that if the mortgage contains a clause that in case the mortgagee shall deem himself unsafe it shall be lawful for him to take possession, the rights of the parties are the same as they would have been if the mort-aided by an attachment, which was based upon the grounds that the defendant was about to dispose of his property with intent to defraud his creditors, and that the debt sued on was incurred for property obtained under false pretenses. The writ of attachment was levied upon certain real estate of the defendant. A levy was also made upon certain personal property. The defendant, by way of counterclaim, averred that the grounds upon which the attachment was procured were false, and that plaintiff had no reasonable grounds for believing them to be true, but knew the same to be false and untrue, and that the same were made willfully and maliciously, by reason of which the defendant was damaged in the sum of $2,000 actual, and $3,000 exemplary, damages, for which judgment was demanded. The counterclaim was denied by the plaintiff. The cause was tried to a jury, and a verdict was returned for the defendant for $528.48. It was found specially by the jury that the attachment was wrongfully and maliciously sued out, and the seizure and sale of the property under the channel mortgage was wrongful, and an allowance was made in the sum of $511 damages for the wrongful suing out of the attachment. Plaintiff appeals.

Messrs. Blake & Mitchell and Frank Farrell for appellant.

Messrs. Yeoman & Kenyon for appellee.

Rothrock, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The matter of account involved in the controversy consisted of claimed balances due upon accounts of the plaintiff against the defendant. The court instructed the jury that there was no evidence authorizing a recovery of the interest claimed. It is insisted that this instruction was erroneous. An examination of the evidence satisfies us that the instruction of the court as to this item of the claim was correct.

2. It appears from the evidence that the plaintiff is a wholesale lumber dealer, and that the defendant was for several years a retail dealer in that line at Lehigh, in Webster county, and that he made the principal part of his purchase of lumber from the plaintiff on credit. He did not make prompt payments for his purchases, and at times his indebtedness to the plaintiff amounted to considerable sums. On the 11th day of June, 1891, the defendant executed to the plaintiff the four promissory notes upon which this suit is founded. The aggregate amount of the notes was $1,868. The first of said notes was made payable in thirty days, the next on the 9th day of September, the next on the 9th day of October, and the last on the 8th day of November, in the same year. The mortgage given to secure the payment of the notes was executed on the same day. The property mortgaged consisted of all of defendant's stock of lumber, and his books of account, and the accounts contained in said books, and all notes taken in settlement of said accounts. The mortgage was recorded on the 12th day of June, and on the next day it was placed in the hands of the sheriff of Webster county for foreclosure. The said sheriff took possession of the property, and sold the same at public sale, as provided in the mortgage. The sale under the mortgage was made on the 8d day of July, 1891, before any of the notes became due. It is claimed by counsel for appellee that there was no authority given in the mortgage to foreclose the same before it became due, and the court instructed the jury on this question as follows: "It is conceded on the trial that on the 11th day of June, 1891, defendant gave plaintiff his four promissory notes sued upon, which said notes were made payable at various dates in the future, from July 11 to November 8, 1891, and that, to secure the payment of said notes, defendant then and there made and delivered to plaintiff a chattel mortgage upon certain personal property, rights, and credits. It is also conceded that immediately or very soon after the giving of said mortgage, plaintiff proceeded to take possession of said property described therein, and to offer the same for sale, and did in fact make public sale of said property on the 8d day of July, 1891.

gave had contained the express condition that the mortgagor was to continue in possession until default, or until the mortgagee should deem himself unsafe, and therefore the sale of the property by the mortgagor to a third person will not authorize an action for conversion, but the only remedy is to take possession of the property. Hathaway v. Brayman, 42 N. Y. 823, 1 Am. Rep. 534.

That decision apparently overrules a prior one by the lower court holding that trover will lie for the conversion of the mortgaged property before the debt is due, if the mortgage contains an insecurity clause. Chadwick v. Lamb, 20 Barb. 518.

Outside of New York, however, that doctrine is not recognized, but it is held that in case the mortgage authorizes the mortgagee to take possession and sell whenever he shall feel himself "unsafe or insecure," the mortgagee may maintain trover against the purchaser in case the property is sold to a third person. Bailey v. Godfrey, 54 Ill. 507, 5 Am. Rep. 187; Sandager v. Northern Pac. Elevator Co. 2 N. Dak. 2.

At least if the property is purchased with notice of his rights. Jorgensen v. Tait, 26 Minn. 387.

So the mortgagee may maintain an action against one seizing the property, although his debt is not due. Frisbee v. Langworthy, 11 Wis. 376; Welch v. Sackett, 12 Wis. 242.

Of course decisions upon this question are influenced more or less by the positions which the various courts have taken upon the general question of the mortgagee's right to maintain trover, a question which will not be considered here.

Effect of taking possession.

When the right of taking possession is exercised the title vests in the mortgagee. Durfee v. Grinnell, 60 Ill. 371.

So that thereafter the possessory right of the mortgagor ceases and he has no remaining interest subject to levy and sale on execution. Hall v. Sampson, 36 N. Y. 274, 91 Am. Dec. 53, overruling 23 How. Pr. 84.

How far right is without control.

The courts have taken quite opposite views as to how far the right of the mortgagee is absolute for the exercise of which there is no power to call him to account regardless of how arbitrarily he acts.

Upon these admitted facts you are instructed that, under the terms of the mortgage given by the defendant, plaintiff had the right to take possession of the mortgaged property at any time he chose so to do, and no damages can be assessed against him in this action for such taking. He did not, however, have any legal right to sell said property before the debt secured thereby became due, and by such sale he became and is liable to account to defendant for the fair and reasonable value of the property so sold, without regard to the amount for which the sale was made." That part of the mortgage which provides for its foreclosure is as follows: "And I, the said W. W. Gray, do hereby covenant and agree with the said C. W. Robinson that in case of default made in payment of the above-mentioned promissory notes, or any part thereof, either principal or interest, and all taxes assessed against said property before any part thereof becomes delinquent, or in case of my attempting to dispose of, or remove from said county of Webster, the aforesaid goods and chattels, or any part thereof, or whenever the said mortgagee or his assigns shall choose so to do, then, and in that case, it shall be lawful for the said mortgagee or his assigns, by himself, or agent, or any officer, to take immediate possession of said goods and chattels wherever found, the possession of these presents being sufficient authority therefor, and to sell the same at public or private sale, or so much thereof as shall be sufficient to pay the amount due or to become due, as the case may be, with all interest and taxes, costs, charges, expenses and attorney's fees pertaining to the taking, keeping, advertising, and selling said property and the collection of this debt." The instructions above quoted were evidently given in reliance upon the case of Bank of Carroll v. Taylor, 67 Iowa, 572. The language employed in the mortgage which was construed in that case was somewhat similar to the provisions of the mortgage in the case at bar. It was held in that case, because the mortgage provided "that in case of failure to pay the amount due hereon at maturity, or whenever the holder hereof may deem himself insecure, then he may take said property by virtue of this mortgage, and sell the same at public auction, . . . and the proceeds of said sale to be applied on said note," that "this provision, standing alone, would doubtless empower both the seizure and sale of the property before the maturity of the debt, if the holder considered himself insecure." But it was further held that said clause in the mortgage should be construed with another condition of the instrument, which was as follows: "That, if this note and mortgage shall be paid on or before the maturity thereof, then this mortgage to be void;" and the conclusion was reached that under the stipulations of the mortgage in that case the mortgagee had the right to take possession of the property before the debt became due, but that, if he considered himself insecure, he had not the right to sell the same to pay the

One class of decisions give him absolute discretion holding that—

Giving the mortgagee permission to take possession if he deems himself unsafe is equivalent to giving him the right to possession whenever he chooses to demand the property. Gage v. Wayland, 67 Wis. 536.

The mortgagee's discretion is absolute. Huebner v. Koebke, 42 Wis. 219; Cline v. Libby, 46 Wis. 123; Hill v. Merriman, 72 Wis. 483; Allen v. Vose, 34 Hun, 57. Although in the latter case the court found that there was reasonable ground for the mortgagee's considering himself unsafe.

Such provision authorizes the mortgagee to take possession when in his judgment he deems it best for the safety of his demand to do so, and no proof is required to show that he considered himself unsafe, as the legal presumption is that such is the fact when he takes possession before the debt is due. Smith v. Post, 1 Hun, 518.

For later New York decisions, however, see infra. Permission of the mortgagor is not necessary to enable the mortgagee to take possession under a mortgage providing that for further security the mortgagee may take possession at any time he may think proper. Braley v. Byrnes, 21 Minn. 483.

If the mortgagee authorizes the mortgagee to take possession when he deems himself insecure, he may do so even if no reasonable ground exists therefor. Werner v. Bergman, 28 Kan. 60, 42 Am. Rep. 152.

In that case Furlong v. Cox, 77 Ill. 203, is distinguished on the ground that in it the mortgagee did not claim that he had any apprehension that there was any danger, and Davenport v. Ledger, 80 Ill. 574, was distinguished on the ground that no evidence was introduced to show that the mortgagee felt himself unsafe or insecure, and that moreover there was evidence of express malice, and that possession was taken immediately after execution of the mortgage and at an unreasonable hour.

The mortgagee's right to take possession is not to be measured or determined by the fact that he deemed himself unsafe, but is absolute, at least in the absence of anything to show bad faith or an express purpose to oppress the mortgagor. Richardson v. Coffman (Iowa), Jan. 31, 1883.

If the mortgagee swears that he considered himself insecure, and he is uncontradicted, it is sufficient to entitle him to an instruction that he was entitled to possession. Evans v. Graham, 50 Wis. 450.

The majority of the courts refuse, however, to recognize a doctrine so extreme as those above, and limit the rights of the mortgagee more or less. Thus—

The question of the sufficiency of the reasons for the mortgagee deeming himself insecure cannot be submitted to the jury. The mortgage vests in the mortgagee a discretion which cannot be taken from him by the jury, so long as it is honestly exercised. The question of good faith is for the jury, and the right to take possession and at once proceed to sell the property is not a mere option to be arbitrarily exercised without reference to changed conditions or conduct of the mortgagor. Woods v. Gaar, 33 Mich. 143.

The mortgagee cannot act because he says he thinks himself unsafe, nor can he act from malice or caprice. His mind must be moved by facts, not by opinions or questions of law, and the facts must be those arising after the giving of the mortgage. The mortgagee may testify as to whether or not he deemed himself in danger of losing the debt, and then the grounds of such thought may be tested to ascertain whether or not he did deem himself in such danger. Barrett v. Hart, 48 Ohio St. 41, 51 Am. Rep. 801.

The mortgagee must show some ground for claiming that he deemed himself unsafe; and when evidence on that subject is offered, the question becomes one for the jury whether or not he did in reality feel unsafe, or whether it was a mere per-debt before the debt became due. It will be seen, from an examination of that part of the mortgage in the case at bar, that the provisions thereof are not the same as those in the cited case. In this case it is provided that the mortgagee may take possession of the mortgaged property whenever he "shall choose so to do." It may be conceded that this right or option to take possession of the property is not materially different from the mortgage in the cited case, which was an option to the mortgagee to take possession when "he may deem himself insecure." In both cases there is an absolute right to take possession of the property under the stipulations named. But in the case at bar there is the further provision that, after seizing the property, the mortgagee may "sell the same at public or private sale, or so much thereof as shall be sufficient to pay the amount due or to become due, as the case may be." How could it be possible to make a sale of the property, and pay the amount to become due, unless the sale was made before the amount became due? The authority given to sell as plainly provides that a sale may be had before the amount becomes due as if it had been so stated in exact language. There is no room for construction, as in the case of Bank of Carroll v. Taylor, supra. In the case of Wells v. Chapman, 59 Iowa, 658, where the provisions of the mortgage as to the right to take possession of the property and sell the same were, in substance, like the mortgage in the case at bar, it was said that "under this stipulation the mortgagee had the right, whenever he should 'choose so to do' to take possession of the property, and foreclose the mortgage, whether the debt was due or not." It may be conceded that in that case the mortgagee did not take possession of the property, and sell it, before the debt became due; but his right to do so was fairly involved in the question determined. In Richardson v. Coffman, 54 N. W. Rep. 356, this court followed the rule announced in the case of Wells v. Chapman. In the case of Richardson v. Coffman, it appears that the mortgagee took possession of the property, and sold it, before the debt secured by the mortgage became due. Whatever may be thought now of the correctness of the rule in the case of Bank of Carroll v. Taylor, it appears to us very plain that it ought not to be applied in construing a mortgage which plainly provided, not only for possession, but for a sale, of the property, before the maturity of the debt. The consequences of holding that there may be possession, but no sale, are apparent. If the mortgage in such case be upon livestock, and the debt has a long time to run before maturity, such a procedure would be ruinous to the security, and a loss to both parties.

8. We discover no other error in the case. For the error above pointed out, the judgment of the District Court is reversed.

Given, J., dissenting:

I do not concur in the conclusion that ap-teness for the purpose of enforcing the payment before maturity. Hawver v. Bell, 46 N. Y. S. R. 447.

In Newlean v. Olson, 22 Neb. 717, in deciding that there must be cause for the seizure, the court says: "If this were not so a mortgagee might induce the mortgagor amply to secure the debt upon the implied promise that credit for a certain length of time would be given, and the instant after receiving the mortgage declare that he felt unsafe and insecure and proceed at once to a foreclosure and sale." Such a rule would place the mortgagor entirely at the mercy of the mortgagee, and in many, if not most, cases, deprive the mortgagor of the very means by which he could pay the debt.

Such clause does not authorize the seizure and sale of the property, unless the mortgagor is about to do or has done some act which tends to impair the security. J. I. Case Plow Works v. Marr, 33 Neb. 215; Hull v. Godfrey, 31 Neb. 204; Rector Wilhelmly Co. v. Nissen, 35 Neb. 716.

Such clause authorizes the mortgagee to deem himself unsafe and to take possession only when the mortgagor has done, or is about to do, some of the acts specified in the mortgage, as grounds upon which the mortgagee may proceed to take possession. Humpfner v. D. M. Osborne & Co. (S. Dak.) Oct. 20, 1891.

In Lichtenberger v. Johnson, 32 Neb. 185, it was found by the jury that at the time the property was seized the mortgagee was better secured than at any former period, and the court said his distrust of the mortgagor was a mistaken want of confidence for which he is to be held responsible. His suspicion lacks that faith and reliance due to the value of material things presented to the senses.

Under the statutes in Minnesota the mortgagee has no right arbitrarily to take possession, but can only take it for just cause based upon the actual existence of facts constituting a reasonable ground for believing himself insecure. Deal v. D. M. Osborne & Co. 42 Minn. 102.

28 L. R. A.

Although the mortgage provides that the mortgagee may take possession, if at any time he shall "feel himself unsafe or insecure," he cannot take such possession unless there is reasonable ground or probable cause for such action. Roy v. Goings, 96 Ill. 361, 36 Am. Rep. 151.

In that case the principle of Furlong v. Cox, 77 Ill. 203, was followed, in which the right to take possession was given in case the property was in danger of being sold, etc., which principle was afterwards approved in Davenport v. Ledger, 80 Ill. 574.

Under a clause permitting possession to be taken in case of diminution in value of the property, a substantial and not mere nominal diminution is intended. Solomon v. Friend, 42 Ill. App. 407.

The effect of malice.

Acting from malicious motives or without any reasonable belief that the debt is unsafe or insecure will render the mortgagee liable for damages. Davenport v. Ledger, 80 Ill. 574.

If the mortgagee acts from malice and a pressing need for money, he is not protected by the power given him by the mortgage. Hyer v. Sutton, 59 Hun. 40. In that case the court says, in the absence of proof it will be assumed that the taking was by virtue of the authority conferred in the instrument, and no bad faith will be presumed, but if the bad faith is admitted by demurrer or proof, the mortgagee is given no protection.

Facts which justify taking possession.

In some of the cases the courts have expressed opinions upon the sufficiency of given states of fact to warrant the mortgagee in taking possession.

Reason to believe himself to have been overreached as to the value of the property is sufficient to entitle a mortgagee to regard himself as insecure. Botsford v. Murphy, 47 Mich. 533.

When the mortgagee is given power to seize the pellant had a right to sell the mortgaged property before the condition upon which it was conveyed was broken. The conveyance is upon the express condition that if appellant paid each of the four promissory notes on or before maturity, and taxes before delinquent, the conveyance should be void. By the notes, time was given, extending over several months, for the payment of the debt, and, by the mortgage, appellee conveyed his property as security upon the condition named. To permit appellant to sell the property, and apply the proceeds to the payment of the debt before due, is to deny to appellee the time given him in which to pay the debt, and the privilege reserved to him in the contract,—to redeem his property from the pledge by paying the debt at maturity. The conclusion of the majority is based upon that clause in the mortgage providing that, whenever the mortgagee "shall choose so to do," he might take possession of the mortgaged property, and sell the same, "or so much thereof as shall be sufficient to pay the amount due or to become due." The conclusion is that this authorized appellant to take possession of and to sell the property before default was made in paying the debt or taxes. The right to take possession is not questioned. That right is clear, under section 1927 of the Code, which provides that, in the absence of stipulation to the contrary, the mortgagee is entitled to possession. To take possession did not deprive appellee of the time given for payment, nor of the right to redeem by payment at maturity. The fact that possession, and not sale, is provided for, emphasizes the distinction which I think exists. To me it seems clear that this clause, taken alone, does not authorize a sale before default in payment, and that such a right should not be inferred from the power to sell sufficient to pay the amount due or to become due. There were four notes falling due at different times, a failure to pay any of which at maturity would be a breach of the condition, and in that case the holder of the mortgage had the right to sell sufficient to pay that which was to become due, as well as that which was already due, because of the breach. If it may be said that, taken alone, this clause does authorize a sale before condition broken, still it seems to me that, when considered in connection with the other provisions of the mortgage, it should not be so construed. We may not ignore any part of the instrument in giving a construction to it, but, taking the whole together, arrive at the intention of the parties. Construing the language conferring power to sell in connection with the time given to appellee in which to pay the debt, and the right to redeem his property by payment at maturity, I am convinced that it was not mutually understood property whenever he shall choose to do so, he may seize it when it is levied on under an execution in favor of a third person. Wells v. Chapman, 50 Iowa, 658.

The levying of an execution on the property and advertising it for sale under a judgment in favor of a third person is sufficient to warrant the mortgagee in exercising his right to take possession when he feels himself unsafe or insecure. Lewis v. D'Arcy, 71 Ill. 648.

In Farrell v. Hildreth, 38 Barb. 178, the court held that from the state of facts presented, the jury would have been warranted in finding that the mortgagee felt himself unsafe and insecure, but the question of the necessity of such finding is not considered.

Selling.

Notice is not necessary before sale. Harris v. Lynn, 25 Kan. 281, 37 Am. Rep. 253; Chamberlain v. Martin, 43 Barb. 607.

Nor is demand upon the mortgagor. Huggans v. Fryer, 1 Lans. 276.

When the mortgage provides that if the debt shall be paid on or before the maturity thereof the mortgage shall be void, but gives the mortgagee power to take possession and sell at any time he deems himself insecure, he may take possession before maturity of the debt, but cannot sell until the debt matures. Bank of Carroll v. Taylor, 67 Iowa, 572.

A clause that for further security the mortgagee may take the property into his possession whenever he deems himself insecure does not authorize him to sell prior to the maturity of the debt. Harder v. Hosp, 69 Wis. 288.

The application of proceeds to a note not due is not justified, where the mortgage authorizes the seizure of the property in case the mortgagee deems himself insecure, and the sale of the same at public auction, or as much thereof as shall be sufficient to pay the amount due. Loeb v. Milner, 21 Neb. 368.

33 L. R. A.

Construction, of different provisions and circumstances.

A clause that the mortgagee may take possession whenever he considers his claim in jeopardy is equivalent to the usual provision as to taking possession when the mortgagee considers himself insecure. McGraw v. Bishop, 85 Mich. 72.

A mortgage providing that the mortgagor shall retain possession until default, but containing the provision that such possession shall always be "at the will of the mortgagee" does not entitle the mortgagee to take possession before default. Anderson v. Holmes, 14 B. C. 162.

Giving of further time for payment upon the execution of a new note with security, upon condition that certain suits shall be suspended and the mortgaged property used in a certain way, will not take away the right to take possession under the danger clause. Fox v. Kitton, 19 Ill. 519.

The mere taking possession under such clause two days after the execution of the mortgage, although the mortgage states that the property is to remain in the possession of the mortgagor, is not of itself sufficient to show fraud in the execution of the mortgage in favor of a third person. Hoey v. Fleeson, 67 Wis. 238.

Other rights conferred.

In Matthews v. Cooper, 49 N. Y. S. R. 792, a receiver who had been appointed over the property was directed to give up possession to the mortgagee, claiming under a danger clause.

The mortgagee's right cannot be impaired by subsequent legislation. Boice v. Boice, 27 Minn. 371.

The election to take possession of the property before the maturity of the debt confers the right on the mortgagor to pay the amount due and retain his property. Rice v. Kahn, 70 Wis. 383.

H. P. F.

or intended that appellant might, at his own option, and without cause, sell the property before default in payment, and thereby deprive appellee of the time allowed in the contract for payment and redemption. It may be that, had appellee attempted to dispose of or remove the property from the county, appellant, having seized it, might sell it before the debt was due. But no such cause for the sale is alleged or proven; hence that question is not in the case. If causes arose requiring a sale of the property before default in payment, whether or not such causes were named in the mortgage, a court of equity would authorize a sale. If, by reason of the perishable nature of the property, or other cause, the security would be impaired by delaying a sale thereof until the maturity of the debt, appellant's remedy was ample in a court of equity. It may be said that it is a hardship to hold him to that remedy; but surely not so great a hardship as to deny to appellee, without cause, the time accorded him by the contract in which to pay his debt and redeem his property. Appellant could not sue upon these notes before maturity without other cause than his arbitrary will, nor could he have a decree foreclosing this mortgage; yet it is held that he may, at his own option, do for himself what the courts would not do for him,—that he may not only compel payment of the notes before any of them are due, but may forever put it beyond the power of appellee to redeem his property according to the contract. I see no distinction in principle between this case and Bank of Carroll v. Taylor. A like discretion is given to the mortgagee in both cases, and the law announced in that case is supported by reason and the current of authorities. Cases will be found, from states not having a statute like our section 1927, wherein the right to take possession before default is considered, and, in connection therewith, the right to sell; but in none of them, so far as I have been able to discover, is it held that a mortgagee may sell the property without cause, at his own option, before condition broken. Wells v. Chapman does not seem to me to be in conflict with Bank of Carroll v. Taylor. The question certified was whether the mortgagor, he being in possession, had any interest in the mortgaged property subject to execution. This court held that, as the mortgagee had the right to take possession whenever he chose, "and foreclose the mortgage, whether the debt was due or not," there was no interest left in the mortgagor subject to execution. This decision is grounded on the right of the mortgagee to take possession and sell, but not upon the right to sell before default. The right to sell after default extinguished all interest in the mortgagor, subject to execution, as effectively as would the right to sell before. Richardson v. Coffman, follows Bank of Carroll v. Taylor, but does not, as I view it, decide the question under consideration. After remarking upon the disagreement in the adjudicated cases as to the right to take possession, Wells v. Chapman is referred to as "the only case we have been able to find where the provision in the mortgage for taking possession is like that in the case at bar. It was held that the mortgagee might seize the property whenever he elected so to do, whether the debt was due or not. That case is decisive of this question." An examination of the further statements in the opinion well show that the right to take possession and to sell for good cause was the subject under consideration, rather than the right to sell without cause, at the option of the mortgagee. To me, this case furnishes an apt illustration of what I believe to be the error in the conclusion of the majority. By that conclusion the mortgagee is sustained in seizing the mortgaged property on the second day after the mortgage was given, and proceeding at once to sell the same, without cause or excuse, in payment of a debt for which he had extended credit running over several months. I cannot think that the sanction of the law should be given to such arbitrary and unconscionable acts.

Rehearing denied.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

PEOPLE of the State of New York, ex rel.
NEW YORK HOTEL & RESTAURANT CO., Appt.,

v.

Edward P. BARKER et al., Respts.

(140 N. Y. 437.)

A domestic corporation may be "prevented by absence or illness" from making complaint of a tax or assessment, under the New York Consolidation Act of 1882, chap. 410, § 522, when all its officers and agents who have charge of the matter are prevented by absence or illness from making the complaint.

(December 12, 1893.)

A PPEAL by relators from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming an order of the Special Term for New York County denying relator's application for a writ of mandamus to compel respondents, as commissioners of taxes of the City and County of New York, to hear relator's claim to a reduction of its assessment. Reversed.

NOTE.—The great growth of corporations is resulting in a constant increase of questions concerning them. That they are usually regarded as "persons," see note to Dollman v. Moore (Misc.) 19

L. R. A. 222; and the present case strengthens the rule by reason of provision as to absence or illness.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Messrs. Charles E. Coddington and Alfred B. Cruikshank, for appellant:

The strict language of the statute does not exclude domestic corporations from its benefits.

The word "person" in the statute includes corporations.

Field v. New York Cent. R. Co. 29 Barb. 176; Johnson v. McIntosh, 81 Barb. 267; Cary v. Marston, 56 Barb. 27; Wallace v. New York, 2 Hilt. 440; United States Teleg. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 56 Barb. 46; Pharmaceutical Soc. v. London & Provincial Supply Asso. L. R. 5 App. Cas. 857; People v. Rector of Trinity Church, 22 N. Y. 44; Olcott v. Tioga R. Co. 20 N. Y. 210, 75 Am. Dec. 393; Hoyle v. Plattsburgh & M. R. Co. 54 N. Y. 314, 18 Am. Rep. 595; Pembina Consol. Silver Min. & Mill. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 31 L. ed. 650; Republic of Honduras v. Soto, 2 L. R. A. 642, 112 N. Y. 810.

Under the tax and assessment laws the word "person" has always been held to include corporations.

La Farge v. Exchange F. Ins. Co. 22 N. Y. 352; People v. New York Tax Comrs. 23 N. Y. 242; British Commercial L. Ins. Co. v. New York Tax Assessment Comrs. 1 Keyes, 308; People v. McLean, 80 N. Y. 254.

It is elementary that statutes are to be construed with a view to the mischief and the remedy designed.

Tonnele v. Hall, 4 N. Y. 140; James v. Paten, 6 N. Y. 9; Murray v. New York Cent. R. Co. 8 Abb. App. Dec. 839; Tracy v. Troy & B. R. Co. 38 N. Y. 433; Smith v. People, 47 N. Y. 303; Re Folsom, 56 N. Y. 60; Drake v. Gilmore, 52 N. Y. 809; Re Union College Trustees, 129 N. Y. 308.

The statute is highly remedial, and should be liberally construed.

People v. Home Ins. Co. 92 N. Y. 847.

Messrs. David J. Dean and James M. Ward, with Mr. William H. Clark, for respondents.

Earl, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The relator the hotel and restaurant company is a domestic corporation having its principal place of business in the city of New York, and its personal property was assessed, for the purposes of taxation for the year 1892, at the sum of $200,000. It is provided in the consolidation act relating to the city of New York (Laws 1892, chap. 410, §§ 817-820), that the assessment books shall be kept open by the commissioners of taxes and assessment for examination and correction from the second Monday in January until the first day of May in each year, and that during that time "application may be made by any person considering himself aggrieved by the assessment of his personal or real estate to have the same corrected." Section 822 provides as follows: "Sec. 822. The commissioners of taxes and assessments are hereby invested with power to remit or reduce a tax imposed upon real or personal estate. It shall require a majority of the commissioners to correct or reduce the assessed valuation of the personal property of any person, and no tax on personal property shall be remitted, canceled or reduced unless the applicant or party aggrieved shall satisfy the commissioners that he has been prevented by absence from the city or by illness from making his complaint or application to them within the time allowed by law for the correction of taxes. Any remission or reduction of taxes upon real estate must be made within six months after the delivery of the books to the receiver of taxes for the collection of such tax. The board of aldermen shall have no power to remit or reduce any tax." Within the six months specified in this section the relators applied to the commissioners upon affidavits to have the assessment canceled and removed from the assessment books, upon the ground that the corporation had no personal property liable to assessment; and the commissioners, after hearing the relators and reading the affidavits, determined that their application should be dismissed, and they refused to pass upon the merits of the same, upon the sole ground "that the said commissioners had no power to entertain or grant the same, for the reason, and claiming, that a domestic corporation having its place of business in the city of New York could not be prevented by absence or illness from making complaint, within the meaning of the consolidation act." The relators then applied to the special term for the writ of mandamus directed to the commissioners, commanding them to entertain and consider their application for the cancellation of the assessment. Their application was denied upon the same ground taken by the commissioners, and the order denying the writ was affirmed by the general term upon the same ground.

We think the construction of section 822 by the commissioners and the courts below is too narrow, and that the section is applicable as well to domestic corporations as to individuals. It is a remedial provision of law, which should be fairly and comprehensively construed, with the view of giving all parties aggrieved the benefit of the remedy therein provided. The purpose of the provision is to prevent unjust and unequal taxation, and no reason can be perceived for denying the application to domestic corporations. Literally speaking, a domestic corporation cannot be "sick" or "absent from the state;" but corporations must act through their officers and agents, and if they are all absent from the state, or are prevented by sickness from making the application within the time limited by the prior sections, we know of no reason why they should not have the benefit of section 822. The terms "he," "his," and "person," used in the statute, may comprehend a corporation. Various decisions and authorities upon this subject are found in the brief for the appellants, and are referred to without repeating them here. There is no reason why the party aggrieved in such a case may not act by an agent who has sufficient knowledge of the facts to present the proofs; and if the party should be absent from the state, or confined by illness to his house for several months, it would be a very narrow construction of the statute to hold that he could not appear and make the application under that section by an agent or attorney who had sufficient knowledge of the matter. We have held that on what is called "grievance day" the person assessed may appear by agent to procure a reduction or correction of an assessment made against him. Re Corwin, 185 N. Y. 245. So, too, we think it is a fair construction of this section that if the owner of property, residing in the city of New York, places his entire business in the hands of an agent, who has full knowledge in respect thereto, such agent may appear for the owner and make the requisite proof upon an application for the correction of an assessment; and if that agent be prevented by absence from the state, or illness during the proper time, from making the application, it may be made afterwards under this section. In such case the party assessed has been prevented by "absence from the state" or by "illness," to wit, by the absence or illness of his agent, from making the application. So, when a domestic corporation, by the absence or illness of all its officers and agents who had charge of the matter, is prevented during the proper time from making the application, such corporation may afterwards make the application under section 822. It is undoubtedly true that this section may be construed as it has been by the commissioners and the courts below; but we think the intention of the legislature and the beneficent purpose of the provision will be best subserved by the construction we give.

Our conclusion, therefore, is that the orders of the General and Special Term should be reversed, and the case remitted to the special term for its action upon the application for the peremptory writ; and that the appellants recover their costs in all the courts of the respondents.

Ordered accordingly.

All concur.

COLORADO SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE of the State of Colorado, ex rel.
Charles CONNOR,
v.
William STAPLETON et al.

(.....Colo.....)

1. Ratification by the publishers of an article constituting contempt of court put into a newspaper by a reporter will render them liable therefor.
2. It is a contempt of court for a newspaper to charge that persons stigmatized as boodlers and corruptionists have influence enough with the court to prevent the handing down of a decision in a case in which they had been convicted of crime, to charge the court with shielding them from punishment, and to state that it would be interesting to know what mysterious but powerful influence has retarded the machinery of justice so strikingly.
3. A statutory enumeration of acts which shall constitute contempts of court does not deprive the court of jurisdiction over other contempts.
4. Courts have not unlimited power to determine what shall be regarded as contempts, but in the absence of valid statutory specifications they must be governed by the common law.

(May 15, 1893.)

ON rule to show cause why respondents should not be punished for contempt of court for the publication of certain articles in their newspaper, the facts in regard to which were brought to the attention of the court by an affidavit filed by relator. Respondents discharged on payment of costs.

NOTE.—The above case presents in a very admirable way the limits of journalistic criticism of judicial action. The doctrine taught is one that needs some emphasis in view of the recklessness of some able journals in attacking the good faith of

Statement by Elliott, J.:

The facts necessary to an understanding of the opinion are as follows:

A little more than three years ago, James Connor, Charles Connor, and James W. Marshall, having been convicted in the district court of Arapahoe county for conspiracy, and sentenced to a term of imprisonment in the county jail, brought the record of such conviction to this court for review. Upon examination of the record, it appearing probable that error prejudicial to the legal and substantial rights of the accused had been committed on the trial, a supersedeas was granted, and the cause was regularly docketed. The record was very voluminous. It was four months before the abstract and brief were filed in behalf of the accused. No brief in behalf of the people was filed until more than a year and a half after the cause was docketed. Neither party ever filed any petition, or made any motion asking to have the cause advanced. The cause was regularly reached for final hearing, and was placed upon the calendar for oral argument with other causes, in March last. Counsel for the accused then appeared and argued the cause. No one appeared in behalf of the people. The legislature was then in session, and frequently requested opinions from this court. Many important causes were then under advisement, so the cause could not be immediately taken up and disposed of. Not long after the oral argument the municipal election occurred in the city of Denver, April 4, 1893. While the Connor case was still under consideration by the court, Charles Connor, by a sworn petition presented to this court by his counsel, Mr. Carpenter, set forth, among other things, the following:

the judges when an unwelcome decision is made. See also Cooper v. People (Colo.) 6 L. R. A. 430.

As to the power of a court to restrict publication of its proceedings, see Re Shortridge (Cal.) 21 L. R. A. 755.

That on April 14 and 15, 1893, the Denver Republican was a newspaper published in Denver, and having a general circulation throughout the state, and that the respondents, William Stapleton and Kemp G. Cooper, were, respectively, the editor and manager of said paper. That on April 14, 1893, there was published a lengthy article in the local columns of said newspaper, in which it was asserted, among other things, that one of the recently elected aldermen had been bribed to betray his party, and that James Connor and Charles Connor, "notorious political thugs, who walk the streets of Denver as living examples of the law's delay, engineered the plot." It was further stated that from $1,000 to $5,000 had been made use of for such corrupt purpose. The article also contained the following:

"It is a disgrace to the courts that the Connors should be allowed to remain at large to prey upon the political cancers and failings of humanity. Jim Connor is under conviction for train robbery, and he is also under sentence of penal servitude for having stolen a ballot box. His brother, Charles Connor, participated in the train robbery.

"Their Train Robbery Record.

"The first crime was committed four years ago. Jim Connor was then a lieutenant of police, and his brother was also in the service. With Jim Marshall of Kansas, a bird of the same feather, and a messenger, they conspired to rob the Denver & Rio Grande Express. A package, the most valuable in the train, was to be thrown out at an appointed spot, and Connor was to be in readiness to receive it. Some of the conspirators wilted at the last moment, and the express company was informed. The plot was foiled, but the evidence against the principals was overwhelming, and they were convicted. The Connors appealed to the supreme court nearly three years ago, but the court has taken no action, and the culprits are abroad, buying aldermen, and helping Tammany to retain control of the city government. It is humiliating to the whole state that a man like Jim Connor could have influence enough to prevent the highest tribunal from handing down a decision in his case. There must be influence of some kind at work somewhere."

In the same issue of said newspaper there was published a lengthy editorial charging the Connors with inducing said alderman elect, by despicable and dishonest means, to vote against his party in the organization of the aldermanic board. This editorial also contained the following: "In this connection it is pertinent to call the attention of the supreme court of the state to the fact that for more than three years the appeal taken by Jim Connor and Charley Connor from the decision of the court which sentenced them to prison for attempted train robbery has remained undecided on the calendar of that tribunal. It would be interesting to know what mysterious, but evidently powerful, influence has retarded the machinery of justice so strikingly in this case. It would also be interesting to know how soon the supreme court can make up its mind to render a decision upon that appeal." On the next day, April 15th, there was published another lengthy local article denouncing the Connors with the corruption of the alderman elect, and again stating the money used to be from the sum of $1,000 to $5,000. This article, among other things, contained the following:

"It Seems So.

"Some people claim that there is no use in indicting or convicting men like Jim Connor, as they are never punished. The history of Connor's crimes would lend some semblance of truth to this argument, but the people of Denver have had enough of Connor, and others of his kind. The citizens will not tolerate longer the methods of screening blackguards who may have some political influence because of their past crimes against the ballot. The city of Denver is not big enough for Jim Connor and Charley Connor, and other jail birds who are a menace to society every day they are allowed to be at large. The time has arrived when these corruptionists and political thugs, who have been found guilty of various crimes, shall receive their deserts. It is an opportune moment to clear the atmosphere. The present grand jury can do a great deal in that respect. Every day the supreme court allows to pass without its taking action on the appeal of the Connor brothers is an encouragement to commit crime. The city should have been rid of these men long ago. There can be no earthly excuse for the supreme court in any manner shielding them from the punishment they so richly deserve."

The petition of relator further alleged, in effect, that the articles so published were false, defamatory, and malicious, and were designed to prejudice his cause so pending before this court; that said publications were calculated to convey the idea that the judges of this court had been improperly and corruptly influenced in his cause; and that such charges against the honesty and integrity of the court were meant to intimidate, influence, and coerce the judges, and to embarrass them in the administration of justice. Petitioner prayed that respondents might be proceeded against for contempt. Upon the presentation of said petition this court entered a rule against respondents, requiring them, and each of them, to "appear and answer, in writing, showing cause, if any they have, why they have published, or caused to be published, so much of said newspaper articles as charge this court with dishonesty or want of integrity, or with being improperly influenced in and about said cause of James Connor et al. v. The People," etc. The rule was "expressly limited to so much of said newspaper articles as contains charges and imputations against the honesty and integrity of the members of this court in and about said Connor case." The rule was based upon the ground "that said charges are designed and intended to interfere with, intimidate, and embarrass this court in the due and impartial administration of justice, and that said charges, if allowed to pass unnoticed, may injure the standing and usefulness of this court, by impairing public confidence in the honesty and integrity of its members." The answer of respondents is sufficiently set forth in the opinion. The sufficiency of the answer was challenged by demurrer filed by the attorney-general in behalf of the people.

Messrs. Eugene Engley, Atty-Gen., and S. L. Carpenter for petitioner.

Mr. L. B. France, for respondents:

If this is to be treated as a case of contempt, it can only be constructive, and not direct.

Stuart v. People, 4 Ill. 405; People v. Wilson, 64 Ill. 208, 16 Am. Rep. 528; Dunham v. State, 6 Iowa, 245; Ex parte Hickey, 4 Smedes & M. 751; Storey v. People, 79 Ill. 50, 22 Am. Rep. 158.

The question of intent is material to be considered in this case.

Thomas v. People, 9 L. R. A. 569, 14 Colo. 257; People v. Wilson, 64 Ill. 232, 16 Am. Rep. 528; Ex parte Biggs, 64 N. C. 202; Re Woolley, 11 Bush, 95.

Lack of knowledge prior to the publication enters into the question of intent.

People v. Rucker, 5 Colo. 455; Tripp v. Overacker, 7 Colo. 72; People v. Goddard, 8 Colo. 483.

Elliott, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is the first proceeding of the kind, originating in this court. A few cases have been brought here for review, involving contempts against other courts of record, and in such cases the law relating to contempts of the kind now presented has been carefully considered, and conservatively declared. In thus declaring the law this court has always kept in view the rights of the people, as well as the maintenance of lawful judicial authority for the protection of litigants, and the welfare of society. No attempt has been made to abridge the freedom of speech, nor the liberty of the press, though in some instances persons have been held responsible for the "abuse of that liberty," as our constitution provides they may be. The liberty of the press is a great blessing. It is entitled to full protection. But the "abuse of that liberty" is a great evil, against which the people are entitled to be protected; and for their better protection, when necessary in the interest of litigants, resort may be had to summary proceedings. Colo. Const. art. 2, § 10; Hughes v. People, 5 Colo. 436; Cooper v. People, 13 Colo. 856-873, 6 L. R. A. 430, and cases there cited.

2. This court has never lost sight of that cardinal principle of free government that judicial tribunals are created and maintained, not for the benefit of those occupying judicial positions, but for the benefit of society, and the protection of the people in the enjoyment of their rights. To this end it is essential to uphold the courts in the lawful exercise of their authority and jurisdiction. The law-abiding people of the state are primarily interested in the due administration of justice, since it is only by such means that they can be made secure in their persons and property. It is a matter of congratulation that proceedings of this kind have been of rare occurrence in this state. It shows that the publishers of newspapers, for the most part, have been loyal to the courts as tribunals of justice, and have sought to uphold, rather than impair, their usefulness.

28 L. R. A.

3. This proceeding was not instituted or instigated by this court of its own motion. A party whose cause was pending in this court presented his sworn petition, complaining of the articles published by respondents, and praying protection from such assaults pending the consideration and determination of his cause. We were thus bound to take cognizance of his petition, or give some reason for refusing to do so. If we refused, what reason could we give? Could we say to the petitioner, "You are a convicted criminal, and therefore you have no rights which this court is bound to respect?" The true spirit of our institutions, and the fixed policy of our government, require that courts of justice shall be no respecter of persons. The courts are bound to hear and determine causes according to settled rules of law, without regard to the bias or prejudice of interested parties, or the force of popular clamor. The law must be declared fairly and impartially, no matter who may be parties to the record. In this way, and in this way alone, can courts of justice fulfill their mission as conservators and protectors of public and private rights under a free government, which guarantees to all persons "the equal protection of the laws." These principles are as applicable to appellate tribunals as to courts of original jurisdiction. Parties must be allowed to appeal their causes to this court with the assurance that they will be heard and determined as they appear upon the record, and that without fear or favor from any one, either of high or low degree. We cannot assent to the demand that the settled rules of law relating to substantial rights shall be disregarded in order to convict unpopular persons, or persons of mean reputation. Such persons, as well as the more fortunate classes, are entitled to have the law fairly and impartially adhered to, when they are put upon trial. It is true this court could have disposed of the petition in this case by quietly declining to take cognizance of it. Only petitioner, his counsel, and a few of their confidential friends, perhaps, would have known of our refusal. But we should always have been conscious that we had been wanting in courage to meet a disagreeable issue, and that we had declined to hear a suitor because he was under the ban of a public newspaper's displeasure. The only just and honorable way, therefore, was to take jurisdiction of the proceeding, and require respondents to show cause, if any they had, why they had thus deliberately and repeatedly assailed the honesty and integrity of this court in and about petitioner's cause.

4. By joining in their answer, respondents place themselves upon the same level in respect to the publications. Their counsel in his argument suggests that respondent Cooper was not aware of any of the articles until after they were published. No such fact, however, is pleaded, and the well-known skill and customary diligence of the learned counsel in matters of pleading forbid that we should regard this as an oversight. If it had been requested, leave would have been given for said respondent to amend his answer. Where an unlawful publication is shown to have been made without the previous knowledge of the proprietor of a newspaper, such fact may be shown in mitigation, though not in justification, of the publication; and it would seem that the mitigation would be slight, unless accompanied by a retraction. In this case, however, respondents do not deny previous knowledge as to the editorial article, nor do they express regret for any of these articles. On the contrary, they seek to defend them all upon various grounds.

5. The answer of respondents alleges that the first local article "was published without the direction, instigation, or knowledge of said respondents, and that they, nor neither of them, were cognizant of said article until after the publication of the same." As to the local article published next day a similar allegation is made. These allegations may be literally true; that is, the local articles may not have been expressly directed or instigated by either respondent Stapleton or respondent Cooper, and the articles may not have been seen or communicated directly to either of respondents until after they appeared in print. Nevertheless, considering the subject-matter of the first local article, and the subject-matter of the editorial published on the same day, it is impossible to believe that the editor and reporter did not have a perfect understanding as to the position which the paper should take in reference to this court, as well as the other matters discussed by them in their respective articles. The views of the editor supplement and indorse, in substance, the language of the reporter, and the very next day the columns of the paper are again made use of by the reporter to repeat the attack thus made upon this court. When the act of an employé is either directed or afterwards ratified by his employer, it becomes the act of the employer, and the maxim respondeat superior applies.

6. Respondents further allege that the "reference to said cause and to this honorable court was for the purpose, rather, of calling attention to the dilatory conduct of those having charge and management of said cause in said court, and not for the purpose of casting any reflection whatever in the premises upon the court itself, or upon any judge thereof." The sufficiency of this defense cannot be accepted. Let any intelligent person read the articles, and then say, if he can, that they were written for no other purpose than "calling attention to the dilatory conduct of those having charge of the management" of the Connor case. By a simple inquiry at the clerk's office, respondents would have learned that the Connor case was brought here and docketed the same as hundreds and thousands of other cases; that the cause had been given its regular place upon the docket; that neither party had ever asked to have the cause advanced for final hearing; that the cause had already been argued orally in open court; and that the judges then had the cause, as well as many other causes, under consideration. Every lawyer and every intelligent citizen understands that it is not the province of this court either to prosecute or defend causes brought here for review. It would be quite out of place for this court of its own motion to advance or dispose of any cause out of its order. It is the well known practice of this court to advance a criminal cause, and hear and determine the same as speedily as practicable, when asked to do so by either party. But, if a cause were advanced without any such request, such action might well be taken to indicate undue zeal, or some ulterior motive, on the part of the court. The supreme court is not charged by law with the management or prosecution of criminal causes, and we are confident that respondents well understood this much of the law and practice. Why, then, did they not arraign those whose duty it was to prosecute the Connor case, instead of directing their attack solely against this court? Not one word is said against those whose duty it was to prosecute causes in this court. The claim that respondents only intended "calling attention to the dilatory conduct of those having charge and management of said cause" is evidently an afterthought,—an excuse without foundation, put forth at this time to enable them to escape the consequences of their conduct.

7. Again, respondents allege that a fair construction of the articles published by them "will not warrant the inference or implication against the good faith or integrity of this honorable court, or that they were or had been improperly influenced in and about the cause of the said relator" (the Connor cause), and that the articles were published, "not for the purpose of casting any reflection whatever, in the premises, upon the court itself, or upon any judge thereof." Respondents are certainly entitled to have the articles published by them fairly interpreted. The articles require very little construction. It is safe to say that every intelligent and impartial person who may have read said articles at once inferred that such articles were designed to convey the impression that this court had in some way been improperly and dishonorably influenced in the matter of the Connor litigation. Bear in mind that the first local article charged the Connors with handling money, by thousands of dollars, for corrupt purposes, in the organization of the municipal government. In view of this, what other meaning or construction could be put upon such language as the following in the first local article: "It is humiliating to the whole state that a man like Jim Connor could have influence enough to prevent the highest tribunal from handing down a decision in his case. There must be influence of some kind at work somewhere?" What other interpretation or construction could be put upon the second local article, wherein it is said: "There can be no earthly excuse for the supreme court in any manner shielding them [referring to the Connors] from the punishment they so richly deserve?" How can it be claimed that respondents did not intend by said article to impute anything dishonorable to this court, when in their paper they charge that a convicted criminal, whom they have stigmatized as the worst of characters.—a boodler and a corruptionist,—has influence enough to prevent this court from handing down a decision in a case wherein he had been convicted of crime? The next article charges that this court is shielding convicted criminals from the punishment they so richly deserve, and yet respondents say that such charges imply nothing dishonorable on the part of this court! Can it be that respondents are insensible to the significance of such language? The editorial article is scarcely more guarded. It is more crafty, but not less poisonous and suggestive. The editorial is a severe arraignment of a certain political organization and certain individuals, including the Connors, charging them with dishonesty, fraud, and corruption in and about their efforts to defeat the will of the people, and obtain control of the municipal government of the city of Denver. With the editorial as a discussion of municipal politics, this court, as a court, has no concern. But let any intelligent and impartial person read the editorial from beginning to end, and then explain, if he can, why it was pertinent, in connection with the other matters discussed in that editorial, to call the attention of the supreme court to the Connor case, and thereupon to remark: "It would be interesting to know what mysterious, but evidently powerful, influence has retarded the machinery of justice so strikingly in this case?" Why was such language used, unless it was intended thereby to indicate that the supreme court was in league or in sympathy with the Connors, and was so acting as to shield them while they and their associates were corrupting, and seeking to subvert and destroy, good government in this city? Every right-minded judge may well be sensitive to any charge made by a responsible party affecting his judicial integrity. In any light in which the articles published by respondents can be viewed, the attack upon this court was as cruel and malignant as if the judges had been severally stabbed in the back with a dagger, without provocation, and without warning. If the attack did not wound so deeply, it was not for want of the means employed by respondents, but because the people did not believe the aspersions cast upon the integrity of their judges. Since the issuance of the citation in this proceeding the case of James Connor et al. v. The People has been decided. Referring to this circumstance, it was intimated in argument that this court cannot properly say, and cannot afford to say, that it was intimidated, coerced, or influenced in its decision of that cause by the conduct of respondents; that respondents, therefore, committed no contempt, and should be discharged. As well might a person, after making a violent assault upon another, insist that he had committed no offense because he had not succeeded in overcoming his victim. It is true the members of this court did not suffer themselves to be intimidated nor coerced, nor are we conscious of having been influenced in the determination of the Connor case, by anything respondents have published. Nevertheless, the conduct of respondents in making charges and imputations against the integrity of this court in and about the Connor case was well calculated to embarrass, was undoubtedly intended to embarrass, and to some extent did embarrass the court in rendering its decision in that case, and thus a most serious offense against the administration of justice was committed. Contempts, as was said by Mr. Justice Breese in Stewart v. People, 4 Ill. 405, necessarily include "all acts calculated to impede, embarrass, or obstruct the court in the administration of justice." This language was approved and applied thirty years afterwards in the case of People v. Wilson, 64 Ill. 211, 16 Am. Rep. 528. As was said by Mr. Justice McAllister in the latter case, "the tendency of the article is to degrade and scandalize the court, to overawe its deliberations, and extort a decision against the accused." Judges are human. They are possessed of human feelings, and when accusations are publicly made, as by a newspaper article, charging them, directly or indirectly, with dishonorable conduct in a cause pending before them, and about to be determined, it is idle to say that they need not be embarrassed in their consideration and determination of such cause. They will inevitably suffer more or less embarrassment in the discharge of their duties, according to the nature of the charges, and the source from which such charges emanate. When a judge tries and determines a cause, in connection with which public charges against his judicial integrity have been published, the public, as well as parties interested, are frequently led by the publication of the charges to distrust the honesty and impartiality of the decision, and thus confidence in the administration of justice is impaired. It is not only important that the trial of causes shall be impartial, and that the decision of the court shall be just, but it is important that causes shall be tried, and judgments rendered, without bias, prejudice, or improper influence of any kind. It is not merely a private wrong against the rights of litigants, and against the judges. It is a public wrong, a crime against the state, to undertake, by libel or slander, to impair confidence in the administration of justice. That a party does not succeed in such undertaking lessens his offense only in degree.

8. The answer of respondents denies the jurisdiction of the court to proceed against them in this proceeding. It is unnecessary to enter into a lengthy discussion of the law relating to newspaper interference with the administration of justice. In the case of Cooper v. People, 18 Colo. 337, 378, 6 L. R. A. 480, the law upon that subject was very fully considered, and explicitly declared. The case of Hughes v. People, 5 Colo. 436, is also a valuable decision upon a similar subject. In the argument of this case, nothing essentially new has been presented. In fact, upon the oral argument, the law, as declared by the former decisions of this court, was not seriously controverted, except upon a single point, which will be briefly noticed. The learned counsel for plaintiffs in error in the case of Cooper v. People appeared also for respondents in this case, and in argument claims that his position in the former case was misunderstood. He says that he did not mean to be understood as contending in the former case "that the publishers of newspapers have a constitutional right to assail the integrity and impugn the motives of a judge in relation to his judicial action, even in cases pending and undisposed of, without being amenable to contempt proceedings therefor;" and that he does not now contend for such doctrine. He says he intended to concede then, as he concedes now, that the jurisdiction to punish for contempt is inherent in superior courts of record; that such power is essential to their existence and to the maintenance of their authority; that such power existed at common law, and is not essentially abridged by the constitution of this state; but that, while he concedes the existence of such power, he nevertheless insists that such power is subject to legislative control, and that such power has been limited to such causes of contempt as are specified in the code of civil procedure. We are glad to note this explicit statement of the learned counsel's position. Though he may have been misunderstood by the writer of the separate opinion in the former case, his views in respect to the effect of the code were not misunderstood, nor overlooked. In the leading opinion, delivered by Mr. Justice Hayt, and concurred in by the whole court, the effect of the code provisions was considered and passed upon. Reference was made to the opinion of Hughes v. People, 5 Colo. 486-446, where it was held, as early as 1880, that "the right of self-protection is inherent in the courts. The power to punish for contempt is an incident to all courts, independent of statutory provisions." In the Hughes Case, also, this court, speaking by Mr. Justice Stone (Chief Justice Elbert concurring, Mr. Justice Beck not sitting), said: "Such a statutory enumeration of causes as is found in our code, when applied to the ever-varying facts and circumstances out of which questions of contempt arise, cannot be taken as the arbitrary measure and limit of the inherent power of a court for its own preservation, and for that proper dignity of authority which is essential to the effective administration of law." The Hughes Case was based upon the Code of 1877, which was repealed in 1887. Chapter 80 of the present Code is, however, a substantial re-enactment of the former provisions relating to contempt proceedings. These provisions were re-enacted more than six years after the announcement of the decision in the Hughes Case. Thus, by a well-known rule of statutory construction, it must be presumed that the legislature had knowledge of, and were satisfied with, the construction given to such provisions, and so re-enacted them without change. Harvey v. Travelers Ins. Co. 18 Colo. 354. Moreover, neither in the Code of 1877 nor in the present code are there any negative or other qualifying words limiting contempts to such causes as are therein specified.

9. Upon the oral argument the learned counsel for respondents invigilged strongly against what he termed the claim of unlimited power on the part of the courts in the matter of contempts. So far as we are advised, no court in this country has ever claimed any such power. This court certainly has not. It is idle to speak of the power of the courts as being unlimited in contempt proceedings, or in any other proceedings, for that matter. No department of the government possesses unlimited power, under a constitution like ours. This subject has recently received the consideration of this court. See Greenwood Cemetery Land Co. v. Routt, 17 Colo. 163, 15 L. R. A. 369, wherein it is said: "Thus it appears that the different departments, though separate, distinct, and independent to a certain extent, are by no means absolute. The distribution of governmental powers to different departments was obviously intended as a check upon the exercise of arbitrary power by any department. Thus a government of balanced powers was established, with checks and counter checks, for the better protection of society, and the better security of private rights and individual interests."
28 L. R. A.

10. The courts of this country, so far as we are advised, have never claimed the arbitrary right to declare what should or what should not be deemed contempts, nor have they claimed unlimited power or discretion to affix the penalty in such cases. In the absence of valid written law specifying what shall and what shall not be deemed contempt, the common law must govern. The constitutional provision (art. 2, § 20), "that excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted," is binding upon all departments of the government, and is a special restraint upon the courts. By the common law the punishment for contempt extended only to fine and imprisonment, and certainly no court in this country has ever claimed that such punishment can be inflicted except within reasonable limits, proportionate to the offense. Speaking upon this subject, Mr. Justice Hayt, in Cooper v. People, after quoting from Blackstone and Cooley, said: "It must not for this reason be understood that we claim the power of the courts to punish as for contempt is now as indefinitely broad as stated by Blackstone. However, upon principle and authority, we must hold that at common law superior courts of record have the inherent power summarily to convict and punish as for a contempt of court those responsible for articles published in reference to a cause pending, when such articles are calculated to interfere with the due administration of justice." Chief Justice Helm, in the same case, also said: "We recognize in this case, as we have heretofore done, the inestimable value of a fearless and independent press, but we would be grossly neglectful of our official duty were we, while carefully guarding the independence of the press, to forget that independence of the judiciary which is absolutely essential to constitutional government and liberty." In Wyatt v. People, 17 Colo. 261, it was said: "Though the legislature cannot take away from courts created by the constitution the power to punish contempts, reasonable regulations by that body touching the exercise of this power will be regarded as binding." While the courts do not possess unlimited power to declare what shall be deemed contempts, and what shall be the measure of punishment therefor, neither do the publishers of newspapers possess unlimited license to punish whatsoever they please. The liberty of the press is one thing. The "abuse of that liberty" is quite another. The former is guaranteed by the constitution. The latter is as clearly interdicted. If the liberty of the press is abused, the offender may be held responsible therefor. Such is the common law; such is our constitutional provision; and such offenders may be dealt with summarily for contempt when their publications are calculated to impede, obstruct, or embarrass the administration of justice. It has not been deemed expedient by our people that any class of persons should be privileged to attack the courts, with the view to interfere with the rights of litigants, or to embarrass the administration of justice. Hence they have never adopted any constitutional provision granting such dangerous license. Nor do we believe that publishers of newspapers generally would approve of such license being granted. If they should, we are confident that the intelligent people of Colorado cannot be deceived or led into a course of action that would jeopardize their rights and interests as litigants, and imperil the safety of our free institutions. If courts of justice may be publicly assailed by libel and slander, or otherwise threatened and traduced in respect to causes, civil or criminal, pending before them for hearing or trial, then, indeed, no one's rights are any longer safe, and life, liberty, and property are held by a feeble tenure in this commonwealth. Do the good people of the state of Colorado desire that the judges whom they have chosen shall be threatened, maligned, intimidated, or dictated to, in respect to the trial or decision of causes? Is it desired that courts of justice shall sit in this state to register the behests of a public newspaper? Is it desirable that the law should be so framed that the publisher of a newspaper may interfere with the orderly administration of justice in the courts? If a publisher shall thus undertake to interfere, is it desirable that the courts shall be powerless to hold him responsible therefor in such time and manner as that the mischief he seeks to accomplish may be avoided, or summarily punished? In short, is it desirable that causes shall be tried and determined by the courts, or by the publisher of some newspaper? With all due respect for the profession of journalism, and with no desire to restrict or interfere with its sphere of usefulness, we must declare that the courts possess advantages superior to the journalist in the matter of hearing, trying, and determining causes affecting public and private rights. The law, as administered by the courts, gives each party an opportunity to present his cause by pleading and proof, each party having had previous notice of what the other claims. The court decides only after each party has had opportunity to be heard. The enterprising journalist acts promptly in gathering news. His information is frequently ex parte, and his comments and conclusions thereon are hurriedly announced. The demands of the public require this course of action at the hands of the journalist. But it is not demanded that he shall assume the duties of the judiciary. Imperfect as may be the conclusions of the courts on some cases, it would be a great mistake to substitute in their place the local comments, or even the editorial opinions, of the press. The injuries to public and private rights occasioned by the present methods of administering justice are as nothing to what would result if causes were determined without fair opportunity for hearing and trial. As was said by the wise man of old, "He that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him." Thoughtful citizens know very well that there is far more danger to our institutions, and far more danger to the rights of the people, and especially to the rights of litigants, to be apprehended from the power of the press over the courts than from the power of the courts over the press. It would be a strange anomaly in a free government, where judges are elected for comparatively short terms, and where the right of suffrage is practically universal, if the judges elected by the people were to become arbitrary oppressors of the people, or of any class of the people. Thoughtful citizens understand that the danger now threatening our institutions is that courts are not independent enough, instead of being too arbitrary; and that there is too great laxity instead of too great severity in the administration of justice, for public as well as for private good. The courts of this state have not been oppressors of the people. The power of punishing for contempt has been seldom resorted to. Since Colorado became a member of the federal Union, nearly seventeen years ago, only one case has reached this court where the publishers of a newspaper have been adjudged guilty of contempt for attempting to interfere with judicial proceedings. Other instances, perhaps, may have occurred where newspapers have gone beyond their legitimate limits, of which the courts, with their customary forbearance, have not thought proper to take notice. It is a matter of common observation, that the courts of this country are reluctant to exercise the extraordinary power vested in them in regard to such matters.

11. As a conclusion to their answer, respondents insist that it was their duty, as editor and manager of a newspaper, to examine, criticize, comment upon, or condemn publicly, in said paper, the proceedings and conduct of the persons mentioned in the said articles, and that said articles, and all of them, were published with just, legal, and proper motives, and without any intention whatever to reflect upon this honorable court. It would be a very pleasant way to dispose of this proceeding for us to accept these oft-repeated assurances that respondents did not intend or design, by their publications, to convey the impression that this court had been actuated by unworthy motives, or controlled by dishonorable influences, in the Connor case. But it would be an affectation of credulity on our part to profess to believe such assurances. It is the province of the court to interpret and construe written language. In a case of this kind, if there were any doubt as to the meaning of respondents' published articles, we should certainly be glad to give them the benefit of the doubt. Re Woolley, 11 Bush, 95; People v. Freer, 1 Cal. 435. It is an elementary rule of construction that a writing consisting of common words shall be interpreted and construed according to the ordinary meaning of the words employed. The articles complained of contain only common words, and it would be a perversion of their ordinary meaning to hold that the words as used were not designed to charge and impute unworthy motives, dishonorable conduct, and a want of integrity, to this court, as has already been shown in a former part of this opinion. We should stultify ourselves, as judges, to accept the construction which respondents now seek to give their language. We do not believe, nor can we, for the purpose of escaping an unpleasant responsibility, affect to believe, that persons capable of writing such articles did not intend to convey the meaning which their own words import. The rule is elementary that a person is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his own voluntary act, and such rule is certainly applicable to words deliberately written or printed.

12. The learned counsel for respondents complains that the law relating to contempts by newspaper publications, like the law of libel, is very uncertain, and that there is a want of uniformity in the precedents and adjudicated cases. It is true the adjudicated cases are widely variant, but this is no fault of the law. It results rather from the fact that the forms of words, and other methods by which the motives and integrity of courts and individuals may be assailed and maligned, are so numerous that it is impossible that the law should be more specific. It would be idle to declare that particular words, or a particular method of defamation, should be unlawful, so long as other words and other methods, equally defamatory, may be resorted to. But we need not prolong this opinion. We are confident that respondents have for a long while understood the law relating to this subject, and that they have deliberately disregarded it in this instance. They had no reason for imputing dishonorable conduct, or a want of integrity, to this court, in respect to the Connor case, and they knew they had no reason for so doing. Nevertheless, they made such imputations, and suffered the same to be repeated in their newspaper. Where a wrongful act is willfully done the law presumes the wrongdoer to have been actuated by motives of malice. Knowing the customary forbearance of the courts in such matters, respondents doubtless thought this court would not undertake to protect itself from their assaults. Notwithstanding their attitude, we have no desire to exercise great severity in the present case. We see no necessity for exhausting the power of the court in the present instance. But it must be understood that this court will not, from any personal consideration, shrink from the responsibility, however onerous, of protecting the administration of justice from embarrassment by assaults of the kind under consideration. Attacks upon the judicial integrity of this court, calculated to prejudice the rights of litigants in particular cases, or to impede, obstruct, or embarrass the administration of justice, cannot always be suffered to pass unnoticed. If we were to forbear too much in matters of this kind the confidence of the people might well be impaired in the firmness and stability, if not in the integrity, of the judiciary. As was said by Chief Justice Lawrence in deciding the case of People v. Wilson, 64 Ill. 217, 16 Am. Rep. 528: "We have personally felt great reluctance to taking notice of the publication, but our consciousness of the mischief that may be done in embarrassing the administration of justice, and impairing the moral authority of the judiciary throughout the state, if this article is to stand as an unpunished precedent, has compelled us to issue the rule, and now compels us to order an attachment." The facts and circumstances set forth in respondents' answer will not be disregarded so far as the same are entitled to any weight as matters of mitigation; but the answer is not, in the opinion of the court, sufficient, in law, as a defense or as a justification of the matters complained of against respondents. It is therefore ordered by the court that a writ of attachment issue, in due form, for the arrest of respondents, and each of them, and that they, and each of them, be brought forthwith before the court, that it may be inquired of them if anything further they have to say why they should not be found and adjudged guilty as charged, and punished accordingly.

Hayt, Ch. J., and Goddard, J., concur in the foregoing opinion.

The foregoing opinion having been announced, the writ of attachment was issued, and respondent Stapleton was brought before the court in obedience thereto. In behalf of respondent Cooper, it was said by his counsel that he was temporarily absent from the state and leave and time were asked in behalf of respondents to present something further in writing in their behalf. A brief time was granted, and thereupon respondent Stapleton presented the following:

"Comes now William Stapleton, respondent above named, and for further answer and explanation touching the offense whereof, by the opinion of this honorable court, he has been adjudged guilty, respectfully submits the following: That he has read the opinion heretofore in this cause filed, and is now convinced that the objectionable language referred to therein was fairly and reasonably open to the construction put upon it by this honorable court though no such construction was intended or thought of when the same was written and published. That he does not believe, and never did believe, that this court, or any member thereof, was in any manner improperly influenced in the Connors case, or in any other case. That the articles referred to in the opinion were written hast-fly, incident to the hurry of the publication of a morning paper, and at a time when there was intense feeling occasioned by the action of a member of the city council of Denver in the organization of the board of aldermen. That the purpose of these articles was solely to call public attention to the conduct of parties occupying no official position whatever in connection with this court, and to prevent further improper influence upon the organization of said board of aldermen. That there was no intention to reflect in any manner upon this court, or upon any member thereof. That he very much regrets having permitted the publication of language seemingly, though unintentionally, calculated to question the motive or independence of this court, or the honorable justices composing the same. That there was no desire whatever to interfere in the slightest degree with the due and proper administration of justice. That respondent realizes the great importance of having a pure, unimpeded, and dignified administration of justice by this and all other courts. That neither respondent, nor any one else connected with the ownership, publication, or management of said paper, has ever intentionally or knowingly consented to the insertion therein of matter in any way tending to annoy or embarrass this court in the performance of its judicial duties, and that, in connection with the subject-matter of the articles in question, there was never any justification for adverse criticism of this court, or for reflection upon the conduct of either of its members. Upon the foregoing statement, and the other matters herein appearing of record, respondent respectfully submits to the finding and judgment of the court.

WILLIAM STAPLETON.

"State of Colorado, County of Arapahoe,— ss.: Subscribed and sworn to by the said William Stapleton, respondent in the above-entitled cause, before me, a notary public in and for said county and state, this 18th day of May, 1893. [Seal.] CYRUS E. COOPER, Notary Public."

Per Curiam:

In view of the acknowledgment, retraction, and regrets now expressed by Mr. Stapleton in writing, and under his oath, accompanied by the assurance that the matters thus expressed will be published by him as widely and as conspicuously as the articles complained of, it is the opinion of the court that in the present instance further proceedings against him are unnecessary, and that severity of punishment is not required. It is therefore ordered by the court, all the justices concurring, that this proceeding be dismissed, as to Mr. Stapleton, and that he be discharged upon payment by him of his share of the costs herein, and, further, that the proceeding stand continued, as to respondent Cooper, until such time as he can be brought before the court.

Subsequently, respondent Cooper, by leave of the court, presented his further answer under oath, which, omitting the formal parts, was as follows: "That this respondent did not cause or procure the publication of any of the objectionable articles mentioned in this proceeding, and that he had no knowledge whatever of any or either of them until after the same had been published in the Republican; that he did not nor has he ever approved of said articles, or either of them, so far as the same have any reference whatever to this honorable court; that he very much regrets the publication of language seemingly, though unintentionally, calculated to question the motive or independence of this court, or the honorable justices composing the same; that this respondent has no desire whatever to interfere in the slightest degree with the due and proper administration of justice, and that he realizes the importance of having a pure, unimpeded, and dignified administration of justice by this and all other courts; that this respondent has never intentionally or knowingly consented to the insertion in said paper of matter in any way tending to annoy or embarrass this court in the performance of its judicial duties; and that, in connection with the subject-matter of the articles in question, there never was, as respondent believes, any justification for adverse criticism of this court, or for reflection upon the conduct of either of its members."

And thereupon it was ordered that, upon the payment of the residue of the costs herein, Mr. Cooper be discharged, and this proceeding dismissed.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

Otto LOBECK, Admr., etc., of C. A. Fried, Deceased, App't,

v.

LEE-CLARKE-ANDRESEN HARD-WARE CO. et al.

(.....Neb.....)

1. Upon the dissolution of a partner-

*Headnotes by RYAN, C.

ship firm by the death of one of its members the surviving partners may carry on the same line of business at the same place as was transacted the firm business, without liability to account to the legal representative of the deceased partner for the good-will of said firm, in the absence of their own agreement to the contrary.

2. Where the legal representative of a deceased member of a partnership firm, as such, without words of limitation, joins in the sale of all the stock and

NOTE.—In connection with the above case as to good-will of a partnership dissolved by death of a partner, see the note to Vonderbank v. Schmitt 23 L. R. A.

(La.) 15 L. R. A. 462, in respect to the business name of a firm as part of the good-will.

fixtures of such firm to the surviving members thereof, such legal representative cannot maintain an action against such survivors for the good-will of said firm, or for any portion thereof.

(June 6, 1893.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Douglas County in favor of defendants in an action brought to compel defendants to account for decedent's share of the good-will of a business, which has been carried on by a firm of which decedent was a partner during his lifetime, and to continue which the defendant corporation was organized. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Cowin & McHugh and Gregory, Day & Day, for appellant:

The contract by its term precludes the construction that the good-will was to be included in the price affixed to the stock, for it provides that the stock should be inventoried with freight added; for under that well-known rule of interpretation, that when the method of doing a thing is specified it carries with it the preclusion of any other method as fully as if specifically stated.

The contract taken in itself designates the good-will as property, as a thing of value, to be by and of itself inventoried at its market value as distinctly and definitely as that of the stock and fixtures named therein.

Good-will is a proper subject of sale or bequest, and passing to the owner or assignee in bankruptcy.

Greenhood, Pub. Pol. p. 729; Sheppard v. Boggs, 9 Neb. 258; Wallingford v. Burr, 15 Neb. 204, 17 Neb. 187; Austen v. Boys, 4 Jur. N. S. 719.

The good-will does not survive, but is partnership property; if not disposed of by consent it must be sold like other partnership effects.

Dougherty v. Van Nostrand, Hoffm. Ch. 68, 6 L. ed. 1066; Lindley, Partn. p. 448; Hall v. Barrows, 4 De G. J. & S. 150.

This contract must be interpreted also in the light that the administrator of the estate of C. A. Fried became a tenant in common with the surviving partners in the copartnership estate.

And such a contract made by him with the surviving partners in the absence of fraud or mistake would be binding upon all the parties and upon all persons claiming through them.

Sage v. Woodin, 66 N. Y. 578; Lindley, Partn. p. 614; Smith v. Everett, 27 Beav. 446.

There could have been no misunderstanding, but these defendants regarded themselves as liable to the plaintiff for one fourth the value of the good-will of Lee, Fried & Co.

Singer Mfg. Co. v. Doggett, 16 Neb. 609; Dodge County School Dist. No. 8 v. Estes, 13 Neb. 53.

Mr. John L. Webster, for appellees:

The contract of December 30, 1887, recites that the "corporation agrees to buy the stock, . . . as per inventory, taken between December 26 and December 31, 1887." This is a recital that the inventory had been taken. It appears that in the setting down of the items to be valued, that the good-will was not so set down as a separate item for separate valuation. From all that appears in the petition Lobeck knew that fact when he signed the contract, and he was satisfied with the prices put down in the inventory.

There is no averment of fraud or mutual mistake, Lobeck by diligence or care could have ascertained the mistake if one existed. Lobeck had a statement showing a stated account of his interest in the firm assets.

2 Bates, Partn. § 958; Stettheimer v. Killip, 75 N. Y. 286.

Lobeck recognized and ratified the transfer of the property by the surviving members of the firm, to defendant corporation, on the basis of that inventory.

Cobb v. Hatfield, 46 N. Y. 533; Van Trott v. Wiess, 86 Wis. 439.

Without some allegation of actual fraud or collusion, or mistake, to justify such an opening up of the inventory, the action cannot be maintained.

Stettheimer v. Killip, supra; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1376; Story, Eq. § 151.

Good-will is not a subject-matter of separate inventory.

Parsons, Partn. p. 274; Bazler v. Connolly, 1 Jac. & W. 580; Thackray's App. 75 Pa. 132; 2 Bates, Partn. § 661; Rammelsberg v. Mitchell, 29 Ohio St. 22; Chicago L. Ins. Co. v. Auditor of Public Accounts, 101 Ill. 82; Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler, 62 Cal. 69, 118; Chicago v. Garrity, 7 Ill. App. 474; Mitchell v. Read, 84 N. Y. 556; Chisum v. Deves, 5 Russ. 29; Dougherty v. Van Nostrand, Hoffm. Ch. 68, 6 L. ed. 1066; Elliot's App. 60 Pa. 161; Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 22 Beav. 84.

In the cases where the courts have held the good-will to be a valuable interest, and ordered the same to be sold for the benefit of the firm, it has been by a sale of the business itself, and not by a separate appraisal and sale of the good-will as an individual item of property.

Williams v. Wilson, 4 Sandf. Ch. 379, 7 L. ed. 1141; Holden v. M'Kain, 1 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 270; Collyer, Partn. 80; McFurland v. Stewart, 2 Watts, 111, 26 Am. Dec. 109; Turner v. Major, 3 Giff. 442; Levy v. Walker, L. R. 10 Ch. Div. 496; Musselman's App. 62 Pa. 81, 1 Am. Rep. 882.

The good-will of the firm passed to the survivors of the firm on the death of Fried. The plaintiff had no interest therein.

8 Kent, Com. p. 64, citing Hammond v. Douglas, 5 Ves. Jr. 539; Farr v. Pearce, 3 Madd. 74; Lewis v. Langdon, 7 Sim. 421; Parsons, Partn. p. 274; Robertson v. Quidington, 28 Beav. 529.

The surviving members of the firm had the legal right to dispose of the good-will, together with the property, upon such terms as they should think proper, and Lobeck would be bound by the disposition, unless the defendants were guilty of fraud.

Anderson v. Ackerman, 88 Ind. 485; Miller v. Jones, 39 Ill. 60; Barry v. Briggs, 22 Mich. 205.

Under the contract, surviving members of the firm were to determine the value of the good-will, if any, likewise the manner in which the same was to be inventoried.

The title to the whole property, including the good-will, went to the defendant corporation, under the bill of sale of January 16, 1888, and such sale is binding upon the plaintiff.

Lobeck must stand by that contract of sale, or offer to rescind, and return the $5,000 received by him.

Van Trott v. Wiess, 86 Wis. 489; Masson v. Bonet, 1 Denio, 69, 43 Am. Dec. 651; Cobb v. Hatfield, 46 N. Y. 538; Voorhees v. Earl, 2 Hill, 288, 38 Am. Dec. 588; Hogan v. Weyer, 5 Hill, 389; Hammond v. Pennock, 61 N. Y. 158; Latham v. Hicky, 21 La. Ann. 425; Wilbur v. Flood, 16 Mich. 40; Woodbury v. Woodbury, 47 N. H. 11, 90 Am. Dec. 555; Downer v. Smith, 32 Vt. 1, 76 Am. Dec. 148; Evans v. Gale, 17 N. H. 578, 43 Am. Dec. 614.

The rescission must be in toto, and property received under the rescinded contract must be returned, and the adverse party put as far as possible in statu quo, whatever may be the ground of rescission.

Conner v. Henderson, 15 Mass. 819, 8 Am. Dec. 108; Carneal v. May, 2 A. K. Marsh. 587, 12 Am. Dec. 453; Durrett v. Simpson, 3 T. B. Mon. 517, 16 Am. Dec. 115; Southern L. Ins. & T. Co. v. Lanier, 5 Fla. 110, 58 Am. Dec. 448; Perley v. Bulch, 28 Pick. 283, 84 Am. Dec. 56; Kimball v. Cunningham, 4 Mass. 502, 3 Am. Dec. 280; Fay v. Oliver, 20 Vt. 118, 49 Am. Dec. 764; Jennings v. Gage, 13 Ill. 610, 56 Am. Dec. 476; Emerson v. McNarruma, 41 Me. 565; Katabrook v. Sweet, 116 Mass. 808; Cook v. Gilman, 34 N. H. 556.

It is too late to put the party in statu quo at the time of trial.

Herman v. Haffenegger, 54 Cal. 161.

The failure to offer to return the consideration received will be treated as an affirmation of the contract.

Sanborn v. Osgood, 16 N. H. 112; Ayers v. Hewitt, 19 Me. 281; Rowley v. Bigelow, 12 Pick. 307, 28 Am. Dec. 607; Bigelow, Fr. p. 410.

Ryan, C., filed the following opinion:

In the month of March, 1881, Henry J. Lee, C. A. Fried, E. M. Andreesen, and H. T. Clarke entered into a written agreement whereby they associated themselves as partners under the firm name of Lee, Fried & Co., for the purpose of dealing at wholesale in nails, hardware, and tinners' stock. This partnership business was to commence in March, 1881, and to expire January 1, 1888, probably upon the same terms as provided in said contract, though we find in the record no direct evidence of any agreement as to such continuance. The business was carried on by the firm of Lee, Fried & Co. until the death of C. A. Fried, which occurred August 16, 1887. Indeed, even then matters continued as before, except that Otto Lobeck, having qualified as executor of the estate of C. A. Fried, acted in place of said decedent. On the 30th day of December, 1887, Henry J. Lee, Henry T. Clarke, Edward M. Andreesen, and one John T. Clarke entered into a written contract to which said executor, as such, was a party, of which contract the following is a copy: "This contract, made on the 29th day of December, A. D. 1887, by and between the surviving partners of the firm known as Lee, Fried & Co., to wit, 23 L. R. A.

Henry J. Lee, Henry T. Clarke, Edward M. Andreesen, and Otto Lobeck, executor of the estate of C. A. Fried, deceased, parties of the first part, and Henry J. Lee, Henry T. Clarke, Edward M. Andreesen, and John T. Clarke, parties of the second part, witnesseth: That for and in consideration of the covenants hereinafter contained, to be kept and performed by the respective parties to this contract, the parties of the second part agree to form a corporation prior to January 2d, A. D. 1888, to be known as Lee-Clarke-Andreesen Hardware Company, for the purpose of conducting a general hardware business. The said parties of the first part agree to sell to such corporation, when formed, and said parties of the second part, as such corporation, agree to buy, the stock, fixtures, and good-will of the business owned and conducted by the former firm of Lee, Fried & Company at the market value thereof, as per inventory taken between December 26th and December 31st, A. D. 1887; said stock to be inventoried with freight added. The said parties of the second part, as such corporation, agree to pay and the said parties of the first part agree to accept therefor stock in said corporation at par value or part cash at the option of said corporation; said transfer to take place January 1 or 2, A. D. 1888. The said parties of the first part agree to pay all outstanding indebtedness of said firm. The said parties of the second part, as such corporation, agree to make collection of all outstanding accounts of said old firm without costs to said parties of the first part, unless for extraordinary expenses, such as attorneys' fees, court costs, etc.; said collections, when made, to be turned over to said parties of the first part, or an authorized representative, and to be used in paying the liabilities of the old firm of Lee, Fried & Co. And the parties of the first part agree among themselves that the stock in said corporation received in payment for the stock, fixtures, and good-will of said partnership shall be apportioned and partitioned among the surviving member of said firm and the executor of C. A. Fried deceased, according to their interest in the partnership, as the same may appear from the books of account of said partnership: provided, however, that if the said Otto Lobeck, executor of the estate of C. A. Fried, deceased, shall elect to receive money in lieu of said stock for the interest of his decedent in said partnership, then the other members of said partnership, to wit, Henry J. Lee, Henry T. Clarke, and Edward M. Andreesen, shall purchase from said Lobeck the amount of stock in said corporation to which his decedent would be entitled as a member of said partnership, at its par value, each an equal one third of said stock, to be paid for therefor in money. Witness our hands this 30th day of December, A. D. 1887. Lee, Fried & Company, Henry J. Lee, Lee, Fried & Co., Henry T. Clarke, Edward M. Andreesen, Otto Lobeck, administrator with will attached, parties of the first part. Henry J. Lee, Henry T. Clarke, Edward M. Andreesen, John T. Clarke, parties of the second part."

Consistently with the terms of the above contract, the said Henry J. Lee, Henry T. Clarke, Edward M. Andreesen, and John T. Clarke organized a corporation under the name of Lee-Clarke-Andreesen Hardware Company, which took possession of the entire property invoiced as described in the aforesaid written agreement and the bill of sale, executed January 16, 1888, of which the following is a copy: "Know all men by these presents, that for a valuable consideration we, Henry J. Lee, Henry T. Clarke, and Edward M. Andreesen, surviving partners of the late firm of Lee, Fried & Company, have bargained and sold, and by these presents do bargain and sell, unto the Lee-Clarke-Andreesen Hardware Company the stock of hardware, warehouse, and fixtures of said late firm according to the inventory taken between December 26th and December 31st, 1887, amounting to $198,486.75, together with the good-will of the business of said late firm; to have and to hold the said property and good-will unto the said Lee-Clarke-Andreesen Hardware Company, its successors and assigns, forever. This bill of sale being made in execution of said contract dated December 29th, 1887, for the sale of said property. Witness our hands this 16th day of January, 1888. Lee, Fried & Co. Edward M. Andreesen. H. T. Clarke. H. J. Lee."

It does not satisfactorily appear why the above bill of sale was not signed by Otto Lobeck, as the representative of C. A. Fried, for, while it purports to be made to carry into execution the written contract of date December 29, 1887, in which said Lobeck, in his representative capacity, appeared as one of the parties of the first part, he seems by common consent to have been omitted from even mention in the bill of sale. It might be inferable from the draft of date December 31, 1887, made by Otto Lobeck as administrator of C. A. Fried's estate, upon the firm of Fried & Co. in favor of C. O. Lobeck, for $5,000, that the said administrator had elected to, and had thereby in part consummated his said election to, withdraw from said firm. If this satisfactorily appeared, the determination of this appeal would be much simplified. As the evidence does not explain the nonjoinder of Lobeck as administrator in the bill of sale, and as it does not point to sufficient certainty of intent to warrant placing great stress upon it, the bill of sale will be assumed to have been made in execution of the contract entered into on December 29, 1887, and upon that assumption the rights of the parties will be considered, without reference to said draft.

This action was brought in the district court of Douglas county by Otto Lobeck, as the representative of C. A. Fried, against the Lee-Clarke-Andreesen Hardware Company, Henry J. Lee, Henry T. Clarke, and Edward M. Andreesen. The prayer of the petition was that said defendants be required to make a just and fair inventory and valuation of the good-will acquired as above described, and be required to account for the same, either by the issuance of stock or in money, as to the court should seem equitable and proper, and for such other and further relief as to the court might seem meet. The answer, in addition to other denials, which need not be detailed, denied that the good-will was of any value, but alleged that it passed incidentally with the stock of goods purchased; that the invoice covered such good-will; and that, by said executor having accepted payment on account of the interest of the estate of his decedent under the terms of said written agreement, he was estopped to make claim for the value of the good-will of the firm of Lee, Fried & Co. There was a reply, which was in substance a denial of the various affirmative matters pleaded in the answer. On the 11th day of February, 1891, a trial was had to the court, upon which the court found for the defendants, and adjudged that the cause be dismissed for want of equity, and that said defendants recover their costs. During the trial of the case plaintiff offered to show the value of the good-will of the firm of Lee, Fried & Co. as a fact independent of and in addition to the price paid for the merchandise of said firm purchased by the defendants. This offer of evidence was refused, and in various ways the questions which shall now be considered were properly presented for adjudication. These involve the construction of the contract between plaintiff and the other parties to the above contract, and the respective rights and remedies of such parties, with reference to the good-will of the firm of Lee, Fried & Co. Only one member of the firm of Lee, Fried & Co. had died at the date of the above contract, and his executor, with the other members of said firm, constituted the parties of the first part. The parties of the second part were the surviving members of the firm of Lee, Fried & Co. and John T. Clarke. The subject-matter of this contract was "the stock, fixtures, and good-will of the business owned and conducted by the former firm of Lee, Fried & Co." The price to be paid was the market value of the subject-matter of the contract, to be determined as per inventory therein described; said stock to be inventoried with freight added. This contract, however, did not contemplate the purchase by the parties of the second part, as individuals, of the subject-matter thereof, but that such purchase should be made by them as a corporation to be formed thereafter, under the name of the Lee-Clarke-Andreesen Hardware Company. Another peculiarity of this contract was in the media of payment. The consideration recited was the keeping and performing of certain conditions, which were, payment either wholly or partly in stock of the corporation contemplated at its par value, and the balance in cash, at the option of said corporation, and the payment of all outstanding debts and the collection of all outstanding accounts of the firm of Lee, Fried & Co. After providing for payments and collections as above, the parties of the first part—Henry J. Lee, Henry T. Clarke, Edward M. Andreesen, and Otto Lobeck, executor of the estate of C. A. Fried—agreed among themselves that such stock as should be issued by the proposed corporation in payment for the stock, fixtures, and good-will of said partnership should be apportioned and partitioned among the surviving members of said firm of Lee, Fried & Co. and the executor of C. A. Fried deceased, according to the interest of each in the partnership as such interest appeared by the books thereof, provided, that if said executor elected to receive money in lieu of stock for the interest of C. A. Fried, then that Henry J. Lee, H. T. Clarke, and Edward M. Andresen should purchase from said executor the share of stock to which, as such executor, he would be entitled at its par value.

From this synopsis it is evident (aside from paying the indebtedness of the firm of Lee, Fried & Co., and making collections of its outstanding accounts for that purpose) that each of the said first parties to said contract agreed to accept payment for the property inventoried in the stock of the proposed corporation, or partly in stock and the balance in money, at said proposed corporations' option. Among themselves, the parties of the first part further agreed that, in event payment should be made in the stock of said proposed corporation, it should be divided in a certain manner, with the proviso, however, that, if the executor of C. A. Fried should elect to receive money, rather than stock, each of the other parties of the first part would pay him in cash one third of the par value of said stock. This action was brought against the Lee-Clarke-Andresen Hardware Company, Henry J. Lee, Henry T. Clarke, and Edward M. Andresen. There is no averment in the petition of any demand for the delivery to plaintiff of stock by the Lee-Clarke-Andresen Hardware Company, nor of a refusal by that corporation to issue stock alone, or make payment partly in its stock and partly in money, as provided in said agreement. The complaint of violations of the above contract is made solely as against Henry J. Lee, Henry T. Clarke, and Edward M. Andresen; the said hardware company being only incidentally mentioned as having ratified said contract, and assumed all the rights to and secured all the benefits thereof by taking possession of all the property, assets, and estate of the former firm of Lee, Fried & Co., by, through, and under said contract, and appropriating the stock, fixtures, good-will, and certain leasehold interests and estates of said firm of Lee, Fried & Co. for the purpose of specially protecting and securing the full benefits of the good-will of the last-mentioned firm, and as having appropriated the same to their own use and behoof exclusively. As the antecedent portion of the last paragraph had reference solely to the above corporation, it is probable that the closing sentence was intended to be limited in like manner, though it is spoken of in the plural number. However that may be, it is clear that the petition predicated plaintiff's rights upon the primary liability of the surviving members of the firm of Lee, Fried & Co., and as whatever liability may be found to exist as against the Lee-Clarke-Andresen Hardware Company must in any event, under the averments of the petition, be secondary and only collateral to that of H. J. Lee, H. T. Clarke, and Edward M. Andresen, the alleged liability of these three last-named parties to the estate of C. A. Fried must necessarily be the test of plaintiff's right of recovery. As the judgment prayed was for the value of the "good-will" of the firm of Lee, Fried & Co., it may not be without profit to define that term. In Dougherty v. Van Nostrand, Hoffm. Ch. 69, 6 L. ed. 1066, it was said: "The good-will of a trade is called by Lord Eldon the probability that the old customers will resort to the old place. Cruttwell v. Lye, 17 Ves. Jr. 346." In Parsons on Partnership, on marginal page 262, the term "good-will" is thus discussed: "It is a hope or expectation which may be reasonable and strong, and may rest upon a state of things that has grown up through a long period, and been promoted by large expenditures of money. And it may be worth all the money it has cost, and a great deal more; but it is, after all, nothing more than a hope grounded upon a possibility." These definitions have reference to but one, though the generally employed, use of the term "good-will." In Lawson's Rights, Remedies & Practice (sec. 685), the same form of good-will is defined, in conjunction with which, however, is found another meaning, which must be taken into account as the sense of the term as treated of in one class of adjudicated cases, of which Smith v. Walker, 57 Mich. 456, is an example. This language (italicized to challenge attention to the superadded meaning) is employed in the section above referred to: "The good-will of a business is defined as the benefit which arises from its having been carried on for some time in a particular house, or by a particular person or firm, or from the use of a particular trade-mark or trade-name. Its value consists in the probability that the old customers will continue to be customers, notwithstanding a change in the firm name or place of business. It is a species of personal property." Still another meaning is sometimes included in the definition of the term "good-will," as illustrated by the following language, quoted from Collyer on Partnership, as embodied in section 161: "The term 'good-will' is used in two distinct senses. It is applied either to an advantage arising from the fact of sole ownership simply, without reference to other persons, or as an advantage arising from the fact of sole ownership, to the exclusion of other persons. The latter species of good-will is founded on special contract, and is a commodity upon which a valuation may be fixed. Therefore the interest of an outgoing partner in such good-will may be valued and assigned, with the rest of the effects, to the remaining partner. A good-will of this kind, being a valuable addition to a trade, and arising, as it does, in contract, must be created by some appropriate words. It cannot be implied from the general words 'stock, effects,' etc. Therefore, where one partner had agreed to sell to his copartner 'his inheritance in their nursery for £10,000,' and the other partner, in answer to the proposal, wrote as follows: 'I agree to give you £10,000, as you mention, for your moiety of all your partnership premises, stock, business, and concern,'—

Lord Eldon held that the purchaser had no right, according to his contract, to claim any good-will in the trade, in addition to the partnership property which was the subject of it, except what was the necessary effect of his acquiring the sole ownership in the property; certainly not such as to preclude the seller from carrying on the same trade where and when and with whom he pleased." In section 99, Story, Partn., the generally employed definition of this term is given, after which occurs the following language: "But the term 'good-will' is sometimes applied to another case, where a retiring partner contracts not to carry on the same trade or business at all within a given distance. This is an interest which may be valued between the parties, and may therefore be assigned, with the premises and the rest of the effects, to the remaining partner, as an accompaniment of the ordinary good-will of the establishment. Good-will, in the former sense, is, therefore, an advantage arising from the mere fact of sole ownership of the premises, stock, or establishment, without reference to other persons as rivals; and, in the latter sense, as an advantage arising from the fact of excluding the retiring partner from the same trade or business as a rival."

In the discussion of adjudicated cases, there has not always been kept in view, much less stated, what particular form of good-will was under consideration. For instance, where it is the right to use the trademark adopted and made valuable by a firm or an individual, it is readily seen that it has something of the nature of tangible personal property, and, as such, independently might properly be subject to sale. This form of property is frequently protected by injunction, and in various ways is treated as one form of good-will, having no analogy to that form under consideration in the case at bar. Again, the term is sometimes applied to the contract obligation to refrain from competition by a retiring partner as against the other members of the firm, either as measured by the extent of territory or duration of time. Such an advantage as this affords may be of great value, and, having its origin in contract, and being founded upon sufficient consideration, the courts recognize, protect, and enforce it. Of these forms of good-will which imply a monopoly such as the courts will protect, it has been said that good-will may, independently, be transferred. This distinction as to the use of the term "good-will" is recognized in the above text, quoted from Story and from Collyer on Partnership. Speaking generally, it is believed it will be found, that whatever confusion has arisen as to the right to transfer good will specifically and independently is referable simply to a failure to distinguish these different forms of good-will. As to that form which must alone be considered in determining this case there is no confusion of interpretation nor conflict of authorities. Treating of it is the following language, quoted from Collyer on Partnership (sec. 162): "The former species of good-will is clearly not founded in special contract, but in a combination of accidental circumstances, as the existence and celebrity of the house, the skill and affluence of the trader, or the prejudices or necessities of the customers. This, therefore, is not a tangible interest. It is not a commodity on which a specific value can be placed, or for which a definite allowance can be made. Therefore, upon the death of one partner, it is not stock of which the executor of a deceased partner can compel a division, unless he can also compel a sale of the whole premises and stock, as in the case of a partnership at will. Under these latter circumstances, however, the good-will would accompany the rest of the stock, and might create some additional speculative value in the mind of a purchaser. Accordingly, a court of equity, in this and similar cases, would so treat it that its value should be felt and appreciated by all parties interested in the concern; and therefore, in decreeing a sale of the entire partnership, would order the sale to be so adjusted as to give full effect to the value of the good-will."

In the case of Austen v. Boys, 4 Jur. N. S. 719, where plaintiff sought to recover the value of his alleged good-will in the firm of solicitors, the following language was used by Lord Chancellor Chelmsford: "Where a trade is established in a particular place, the good-will of that trade means nothing more than the sum of money which any person would be willing to give for the chance of being able to keep the trade connected with the place where it has been carried on. It was truly said in argument that 'good-will' is something distinct from the profits of the business, although in determining its value the profits are necessarily taken into account, and it is usually estimated at so many years purchased upon the amount of those profits. But the term 'good-will' seems wholly inapplicable to the business of a solicitor, which has no local existence, but is entirely personal, dependent upon the trust and confidence which persons may rest in his integrity and ability to conduct their legal affairs."

But this term, however, as used in the agreement of 1846, appears to me to be capable of a definite meaning, and, if confined within the limits of the agreement, as between the parties themselves, it becomes perfectly intelligible. It seems to have been intended to describe that interest which the retiring partner would have had if he had remained in the partnership, and which, by his retirement before its termination, he was willing to relinquish to the continuing partner. . . . But it is said that the stipulation as to not practicing within one hundred miles of the postoffice, being indefinite, and therefore extending to the whole period of the life of the retiring partner, is inconsistent with the notion of the term 'good-will' having such a narrow and contracted meaning as would thus be assigned to it. But this argument is founded upon the entire disregard of the different offices of the two stipulations. The one is intended to provide for the sale of the interest in the partnership whenever either partner chooses to retire; the other is a general engagement, the consideration for which is not merely the benefit obtained on retirement, but the whole of the partnership agreement. . . . I am satisfied that the term 'good-will,' associated as it is with the words 'shares and interest,' and being a matter of valuation between the partners themselves, must be confined within the limits of the partnership, and that Mr. Austen is not entitled to any supposed value for his shares beyond it."

In Musselman's App., 62 Pa. 81, 1 Am. Rep. 392, was considered the term "good-will" as applicable under the following condition of facts: A banking firm had dissolved, and appointed a partner to liquidate, who, immediately following the dissolution, commenced banking in the firm house on his own account, under the firm name, at the same time settling the firm business there. Thompson, Ch. J., for the court, said that there was no doubt that if, under these circumstances, this partner had sold the "good-will," he would have been obliged to have accounted for the value received. This opinion discussed the liability of this partner in the following language: "Nor, at law, was there any obligation on him to pay for the good-will. He did not agree to pay for it, and he did not sell it as such. Nor can I comprehend how it existed independently of the property. There was no relinquishment of business by the partners. Their business expired by its own limitation. They had no exclusive right in the business that existed for a moment after the firm dissolved, or any sole ownership of it as against any others; and these are the criteria of property in good-will, according to the English rule. Kennedy v. Lee, 8 Meriv. 441; Collyer, Partn. 156; Story, Partn. 369. But, supposing the rule to be more extensive by usage with us (and I think it is), how can there be a good-will in favor of the members of a firm where the firm has ceased by its own limitation, and no exclusive right to follow the business in that place belongs to them? In that case, as a distinct property, it is good. It then attaches to and enhances the realty, and the value of it is realized in selling or renting that."

On marginal page 263 of Parsons on Partnership occurs the following language: "The executor of a deceased partner can realize the share of the deceased in the good-will only when he can compel a sale of the stock and premises, and then the good-will goes with them; for, as a general rule, by the conveyance of a shop or store, the good-will of the business carried on in it passes, although nothing is said about the good-will. And if an executor cannot compel a sale of the premises, or, as it seems, if the premises are not in fact sold, the executor gets no advantage from the good-will, for that remains entirely with the surviving partners who carry on the same business in the same place."

To a proper understanding of the language used by Sir John Romilly, M. R., in Robertson v. Quiddington, 28 Beav. 529, a brief statement of the facts of the case may not be unprofitable. John Morgan and N. A. Quiddington, in 1836, commenced carrying on a business as tailors, under the firm name of Morgan & Co. In this business Morgan had a two-thirds interest, and at his death, which occurred on the 8th day of January, 1860, John Robertson, by the terms of Morgan's will, became entitled to two thirds of the interest held by the testator in the good-will of the above-mentioned business. On the 23d day of June, 1860, Robertson filed a bill praying that said good-will might be sold, and that plaintiff might be declared entitled to four ninth parts of the proceeds of such sale, and for an accounting by Quiddington of all profits made or received by him from the good-will of the business of Morgan & Co. since the decease of Morgan. A demurrer to the bill was sustained on the ground of want of equity. In the consideration of this demurrer the following language was employed: "I fully concur in the observations on both sides, not only that the good-will is a valuable and tangible thing in many cases, but it is never a tangible thing unless it is connected with the business itself, from which it cannot be separated, and I never knew a case in which it has been so treated. I am of opinion that, even if the executors have assented to this bequest (which I must assume on demurrer, because it is so stated upon the bill), it is not competent for a legatee of two thirds of a good-will of a deceased partner to file a bill against the legatee of the remaining one third and the surviving partner, who is entitled to all the rest of the good-will, to have that bequest specifically made good."

From the above consideration of principles and citations from approved text-writers, as well as adjudicated cases, it seems inevitably to result that the surviving partners of the firm of Lee, Fried & Co., in the absence of a restrictive agreement on their part, were entitled to carry on the same line of business as had been transacted by said firm, and at the same place, without accounting for the value of such of the good-will of said firm as thereby accrued to them. It also seems equally clear that, by the purchase of the stock and fixtures of the firm of Lee, Fried & Co., the defendants, in the absence of an express reservation to the contrary, became entitled to whatever good-will attached to the former business of said firm.

It results, therefore, that the judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

The other Commissioners concur.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

S. C. WILSON, Appt.,

v.

H. Clay KING.

(.....Ark.....)

1. One convicted of a capital offense and sentenced to death in one state is not thereby prevented from maintaining a civil action in another state.
2. One becoming surety on a supersedeas bond which is substituted for a prior similar bond assumes, under the Arkansas statutes, liability for all damages accruing during the pendency of the appeal, and not for those only which accrue after his bond is filed.

(April 7, 1894.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for St. Francis County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought upon a supersedeas bond. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. George Sibley, for appellant:

The plea in abatement was good.

Mansf. Dig. 586; 1 Bl. Com. 132; 2 Bl. Com. 121; 4 Bl. Com. 380.

Const. 1874, art. 2, § 17, relieves against corruption of blood or forfeiture of estate only.

If the conditions upon which the defendant signed the paper that was to become bond before it should be his bond, were certain and well known and communicated to the officer whose duty it was to accept it had not been complied with, it was not his bond. The bond became valid and binding only upon the conditions stipulated; the clerk with whom it was to be filed having notice of the conditions.

Seymour v. Van Slyck, 8 Wend. 414, cited in 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, note 4, p. 458; State v. Churchill, 48 Ark. 426.

Mr. W. G. Weatherford, for appellee:

Upon the execution and delivery of the bond being shown the maker's liability is prima facie established, the onus of avoidance is then upon the defendant.

State v. Churchill, 48 Ark. 446.

Wilson is really liable for the whole. His right, if any he has, is in equity to enforce contribution by his predecessor in a similar obligation.

Dugger v. Wright, 51 Ark. 232.

Any act of the principal which estops him from setting up a defense personal to himself, operates equally upon his surety.

2 Jarman, Estoppel, § 992.

The act of Mrs. Pillow in filing and obtaining the benefit of the supersedeas bond, estopped her, and her act estopped her surety Wilson.

The recitals in this bond bound both principal and surety, and they are estopped from denying their truth, nor will they be allowed to deny the jurisdiction under which the supersedeas was issued.

Norton v. Miller, 25 Ark. 108; State v. Hill, 50 Ark. 458; State v. Churchill, 48 Ark. 426; Searcy v. Yarnell, 47 Ark. 289; Dismukes v. Halpern, 47 Ark. 817; State v. Turner, 49 Ark. 317; Harmon v. Kline, 52 Ark. 251.

Battle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In Pillow v. King, lately pending in this court, John Farmer executed a bond to stay proceedings on the decree appealed from in that case. He was afterwards released, on his application, from further liability, and S. C. Wilson executed another bond, in the sum of $3,500, for the same purpose, which was filed with, and approved by, the clerk of this court. The condition and effect of the bond were as provided by section 1295 of Mansfield's Digest.

The decree which was appealed from in Pillow v. King was affirmed by this court (35 Ark. 638), and King brought this action on the bond of Wilson, to recover the damages he suffered during the pendency of the appeal by reason of being deprived of the use of the lands and other property, to the possession of which he was entitled under the decree affirmed, which he alleges exceeded the amount of the bond sued on. The defendant answered, and alleged as follows:

First. That King was incompetent to sue, "because he was civilly dead, having been found guilty . . . of murder in the first degree, and been sentenced to death, in Shelby county, Tenn."

Second. That, at the time he signed the bond, it was agreed with Mrs. Pillow (the appellant in Pillow v. King), that certain notes should be delivered to him (the defendant), for indemnity, before the bond was filed, of which he informed the clerk of this court, and that the notes had never been delivered.

Third. That, if liable at all, he was only liable for such damages or rents as accrued subsequently to the 6th of April, 1891,—the day on which his bond was filed,—Farmer being liable for the damages and rents which accrued while his bond was in force.

The uncontroverted allegations of the pleadings and the evidence adduced at the trial of this action tended to prove that the rents which accrued during the pendency of the appeal in Pillow v. King exceeded $3,500. There is no contention that King ever received them from any source. No evidence was adduced or offered to show that the clerk of this court ever received notice of the agreement mentioned in the second ground of defense before the filing and approval of the bond sued on.

The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $3,500, and judgment was rendered accordingly.

1. The conviction and sentence of King in the state of Tennessee did and does not affect his right to sue and recover in this state. Story, Conf. L. 8th ed. §§ 619-625.

2. The second defense was wholly unsu-

NOTE.—The above decision as to the extraterritorial effect of a sentence to death although made without discussion and in accordance with the doctrine of text-writers seems to be so far as actual decisions go a novel one.

As to civil death in the United States in general, see Davis v. Laning (Tex.) 18 L. R. A. 22, and note, 23 L. R. A.

tained by the evidence; there being no evidence that the clerk of this court had notice, before the bond was filed, of the agreement of Wilson and Mrs. Pillow as to the conditions upon which it was to take effect. The bond showed the purposes for which it was executed, and impliedly authorized the filing of the same. For the purpose of securing its approval and acceptance by the clerk, there was indorsed upon or appended to it an affidavit of Wilson to the effect that he was worth, over and above all his liabilities and exemptions from executions, the sum of $3,500,—the amount of the bond.

8. In order to stay the proceedings on a judgment or decree during an appeal therefrom to this court, the statute requires the appellant to file a bond, executed by one or more sufficient sureties, to the effect, among other things, that the appellant shall pay "all rents or damages to property during the pendency of the appeal, of which the appellee is kept out of possession by reason of the appeal." The effect of the bond is to secure the payment of the value of the use of the property for the time the appellee was deprived of the possession, and the damages to it during the same time, in the event the judgment or decree is affirmed. The object is to protect the appellee. The statute provides that if a supersedeas bond is filed, and the court "shall consider the sureties insufficient, or the bond substantially defective, in securing the rights of the appellee, the court or judge," on motion and notice, "shall issue an order discharging the supersedeas, unless a good bond, with sufficient sureties, be forthwith executed." The object of this proceeding is to supply the deficiency of the bond on file, and, to do so, the new bond is required to bind the sureties thereon for the payment of "all rents or damages to property during the pendency of the appeal." When filed, it relates back, and covers all rents and damages which accrued before and after it was filed, and during the pendency of the appeal. Dugger v. Wright, 51 Ark. 232; Bentley v. Harris, 2 Gratt. 357.

The defendant was liable for all the rents of, and damages to, the property recovered by the plaintiff in Pillow v. King, which accrued during the entire time of the pendency of the appeal therein.

Judgment affirmed.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

SUCCESSION OF Harriet R. HOOKE, Deceased Wife of Joseph Ashbey.

(46 La. Ann. —.)

*Where a matrimonial community of acquets and gains exists, and the wife dies, and her succession is opened by the qualification of the father as natural tutor of his minor children, issue of his marriage with the decedent, a creditor who has obtained a judgment on a community debt cannot compel an administration of the wife's succession. His remedy is to proceed against the surviving husband and the community property.

(January 15, 1894.)

APPEAL by opponents from a judgment of the Civil District Court for the Parish of Orleans granting the petition of James H. Ashbey for the appointment of an administrator for the estate of Harriet R. Hooke, deceased. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. Zach. Spearing, for appellants:

The holder of a judgment or claim against the husband cannot claim the amount of the same from, and is not by virtue thereof a creditor of, the succession of the deceased wife.

Rev. Civ. Code, 2898; Clark's Succession, 27 La. Ann. 269; Reihl v. Martin, 29 La. Ann. 16; Bofenschen's Succession, 29 La. Ann. 714.

A person who is not a creditor of a succession and has no interest therein, cannot cause the appointment of an administrator to the same.

*Headnote by PARLANGE, J.

NOTE.—As to liability of community for debts, see note to Oregon Imp. Co. v. Sagmelter (Wash.) 19 L. R. A. 288.
23 L. R. A.

Poret's Succession, 26 La. Ann. 158; Story's Succession, 8 La. Ann. 502; Walker's Succession, 32 La. Ann. 321; Hebert's Succession, 33 La. Ann. 1099; Sarrazin's Succession, 34 La. Ann. 1168; Soye v. Price, 30 La. Ann. 98.

The beneficiary heir, present and of age, is preferred in the appointment as administrator, where one is necessary; on his default, the natural tutor of the minor heir will be preferred.

Rev. Civ. Code, 1042, 1044, 1046, 1121; Romero's Succession, 42 La. Ann. 896; Sloane's Succession, 12 La. Ann. 610; Sutton's Succession, 20 La. Ann. 150; Daigle's Succession, 27 La. Ann. 524.

Messrs. Ernest T. Florence and J. S. Whitaker, for appellees:

Where the succession of a wife owns community property and has been accepted under benefit of inventory but no administrator has been appointed thereto, a creditor of said community can compel the appointment of an administrator.

Civ. Code, art. 1041.

The succession of a wife owns her share of the community property, incumbered with the community debts.

Dickson v. Dickson, 36 La. Ann. 454; Tugwell v. Tugwell, 32 La. Ann. 852.

A judgment rendered on a community debt against the surviving husband interrupts prescription against the heir of the deceased wife.

Regan's Succession, 12 La. Ann. 116; Civ. Code, art. 3552.

The husband and the community are different legal entities and are solidarily liable for community debts.

Childers v. Johnson, 6 La. Ann. 641.

Petition for rehearing.

Are we to seize all the property of the succession on the chances of its being community?

Are we to disregard all claims between the community and the separate estate; are we to bear the expense of contesting claims of privilege; are we to compel the former tutor to account for the revenues of the community, all by a writ of fi. facias?

We suggest to the court that it is a legal impossibility to get at these questions, to say settle them by means of a fi. fa.

In not one case has this court held that a succession creditor must proceed by fi. fa. against whatever the beneficiary heirs choose to have recognized as community property, and if the judgment be not satisfied be helpless as to the balance because he cannot compel them to account for their disposition of other community property.

This suggestion was accepted "under benefit of inventory."

Civ. Code, art. 1401.

As soon as the inventories are finished the judge shall name an administrator to manage the property.

Code Pr. art. 976.

During the time, etc., the judge shall appoint an administrator to retain the property, if any of the creditors require it, of course, this being a succession where the heirs were minors, they have until their majority to accept—some of them are still minors.

We are admittedly creditors, we require that an administrator be appointed—the codes say that in such case the judge shall appoint him.

In Self v. Morris, 7 Rob. (La.) 27, this court said: "From all these provisions it clearly appears, that whenever a succession is accepted with benefit of inventory (and minors cannot accept otherwise) it is to be administered as a vacant estate, under the authority of the court of probates; and that persons holding claims against such an estate must provoke the appointment of an administrator."

See also Dees v. Tildon, 2 La. Ann. 414; Stote v. Leckie, 14 La. Ann. 646; Clark's Succession, 30 La. Ann. 807.

Parlange, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Harriet R. Hooke, wife of Joseph H. Ashbey, died in 1884. A matrimonial community of acquets and gains had existed between her and her husband, who is still surviving. Shortly after her death, her husband, alleging that his wife had died intestate, leaving both separate and community property, obtained from the civil district court for the parish of Orleans an order for the taking of an inventory of the property left by the decedent. He was appointed, and he qualified, as the natural tutor of his three minor children, issue of his marriage with the decedent. An under-tutor was also appointed and qualified. The inventory amounted to $12,456.15½, the interest of the decedent in the community property being valued at $1,869.87½, and her separate property at $10,586.78. In 1885, Mary Y. Ashbey, as natural tutrix of her minor children, obtained a judgment in said civil district court against Joseph H. Ashbey, on a balance of account for $5,437.92 and interest, which account Joseph H. Ashbey had rendered Mary Y. Ashbey prior to the death of the wife of Joseph H. Ashbey, and which account constituted a community debt. In 1893, James H. Ashbey filed a petition in the succession of Harriet R. Hooke, wife of Joseph H. Ashbey, alleging that Joseph H. Ashbey, since his appointment as natural tutor of his children, and since the taking of the inventory, has taken no action whatever in said succession; that the same remains unsettled; that Joseph H. Ashbey refuses to either settle or acknowledge claims against said succession; that he refuses to represent the same; that the petitioner is a creditor of the same, and prays to be appointed administrator. The application is opposed by Mary Ashbey, one of the heirs, now of age, of the deceased wife of Joseph H. Ashbey, and by the latter as natural tutor of one of his children, for the reasons that the application is not properly made or filed according to law; that James H. Ashbey is not a creditor of the succession, and has no right, and is not a proper person, to be appointed administrator; and that the succession owes no debts, and the appointment of an administrator is unnecessary. The opponent Joseph H. Ashbey prayed in the alternative to be appointed administrator in case petitioner's application should not be rejected. On the trial of the matter James H. Ashbey offered in evidence the judgment rendered against Joseph H. Ashbey in 1885, and also the account upon which that judgment was based. James H. Ashbey also offered a judgment of said civil district court, rendered in 1893 in the succession of one James H. Ashbey, recognizing and putting in possession his sole heirs, among whom is James H. Ashbey, the party to the instant case. We understand that the claim of the latter to be a creditor of the present succession is founded on the fact that the judgment against Joseph H. Ashbey belonged to the succession of one James H. Ashbey, of whom the James H. Ashbey, party to the instant case, is one of the heirs. The lower judge rendered judgment ordering an administration, and he appointed Joseph H. Ashbey the administrator. The opponents have appealed. In our opinion, the judge a quo erred. Under the circumstances of this case he should not have ordered an administration. It is settled that, notwithstanding the actual dissolution of a matrimonial community of acquets and gains by the demise of one of the spouses, it has a fictitious existence subsequently for the purposes of liquidation and payment of community debts. Dumestre's Succession, 42 La. Ann. 411; Factors & Traders Ins. Co. v. Levi, 42 La. Ann. 484; Landreaux v. Louque, 43 La. Ann. 284, and cases therein cited; Cason's Succession, 33 La. Ann. 792. The judgment being a conceded community debt, we see nothing to prevent its owner or owners from proceeding against Joseph H. Ashbey, who was the head of the community, and against the community property, for the satisfaction of the judgment.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment appealed from be annulled, reversed, and set aside, and that the application of James H. Ashbey for an administration of the succession of Harriet R. Hooke, deceased wife of Joseph H. Ashbey, be, and the same is hereby, rejected and dismissed, at the cost of James H. Ashbey in both courts.

Rehearing denied March 12, 1894.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

W. H. HOPSON and Wife, Appts.,
v.

H. L. FOWLKES et al.

(22 Tenn. 697.)

Possession under an execution sale against the husband of land formerly held by entireties by a couple who were divorced prior to the sale is sufficient if properly maintained to bar all rights of the wife thereto, even before the husband's death.

(June 12, 1893.)

APPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Chancery Court for Dyer County in favor of defendants in an action brought to recover possession of certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. T. Woodson and Draper & Parks for appellants.

Messrs. Richardson & Coover for appellees.

Mc Alister, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an ejectment bill. Complainants seek to recover a tract of land consisting of 800 acres, situated in Dyer county. Complainant Mary E. Hopson was formerly the wife of one James Wilson, to whom she was married in 1854, and during said marriage, to wit, on September 8, 1856, one William M. Shipp, the father of Mary E., conveyed to her and her then husband, James Wilson, jointly, the tract of land in controversy. The said James Wilson died in November, 1886, and complainants claim that the legal title to said land is vested in the said Mary E. by right of survivorship, the land having been owned by her and her then husband, James Wilson, by entireties. It should be stated in this connection that said Mary E. was divorced from the said James Wilson on the 30th of October, 1860, and on the 18th of March, 1861, she intermarried with W. H. Hopson, her present husband. It further appears that on January 4, 1860, the land in controversy was attached by creditors of the said James Wilson, and, under proper decrees of the chancery court of Dyer county, it was sold to the defendants, Fowlkes and Ledsinger. The defendants therefore claim title to said land as purchasers at that judicial sale, under the decrees of the chancery court vesting title in them, and by continuous adverse possession. Respondents say they are, and all the time have been, since the date of the confirmation of sale, the owners in fee of said tract of land, holding and claiming the same openly against all persons. Respondents plead the statute of limitations of seven years, and they rely on said adverse claim of title and possession of more than seven years, as a complete defense to said action. The chancellor pronounced a decree in favor of defendants, and complainants have appealed.

It appears from the record that the defendant H. L. Fowlkes and P. O. Ledsinger, the ancestor of defendant Gilbert Ledsinger, purchased this land at the sale in the case of Ingram and Allen Walker against James Wilson, and that on the 24th of January, 1861, a decree was rendered confirming the sale, divesting title, and vesting the same in the purchasers.

It further appears that said purchasers went into immediate possession of the land, inclosed it with fences, erected improvements thereon, and have remained in continuous and adverse possession of the same up to the institution of the present suit, which was commenced on the 12th of November, 1888,—about twenty-six years after the defendants purchased and took possession of said land. Under the operation of the first section of the Act of 1819, chap. 28 (Mill. & V. Code, § 8459), an adverse possession of seven years under a deed, grant, or other title purporting to convey the fee, not only bars the remedy of the party out of possession, but vests the purchaser with a good and indefeasible title in fee to the land described in his assurance of title. Under the second clause of the first section of said Act (Mill. & V. Code, § 8460) it is provided, viz.: "And, on the other hand, any person, and those claiming under him, neglecting for the said term of seven years to avail themselves of the benefit of any title, legal or equitable, by action at law or in equity effectually prosecuted against the person in possession, as in the foregoing section, are forever barred." The second section of said Act of 1819 (Mill. & V. Code, § 8461) provides, viz.: "No person, or any one claiming under him, shall have any action, either at law or in equity, for any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, but within seven years after the right of action has accrued."

Under the proof in this case the defendants are protected by each and all of the provisions of the statute, unless it appears that the complainant was laboring under some disability that exempted her from its operation.

It is insisted on behalf of complainant Mary E. that the defendants, by virtue of their purchase, only acquired such interest as her former husband, James Wilson, had in this land, and that, the said James Wilson having died on the 8th of November, 1886, the said Mary E. then became entitled to the whole estate by right of survivorship. It has already been mentioned that the said Mary E. was divorced from her former husband, the said James Wilson, on the 30th of October, 1860, but her counsel insist that this divorce did not change the nature of her estate in this land, which she still continued to hold by the entirety with the said James Wilson, with the contingent right to the whole estate in the event she survived him. It is insisted that her right of possession and the devolution of the title did not accrue until the death of the said James Wilson, and that she is not affected by the lapse of time, and the statute of limitations. It will be remembered that the decree of divorce was pronounced on the 30th of October, 1860, which was prior to the purchase by the defendants at the chancery sale, which occurred on the 24th of January, 1861. What, then, was the effect of the divorce upon the tenure of complainants' title to this land. In the case of Harro v. Walker, 80 Ill. 197, the supreme court of Illinois had occasion to consider the question now before us. Judge Walker, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Now this estate by the entirety is peculiar. The possession of one is the possession of both. The estate is joint for life, and descends to or vests in the survivor absolutely and in fee, and, by the destruction of the estate of one, it inures to the other. Neither can have partition, nor can either sell the estate so as to affect the rights of the other; and, when their rights to the property are invaded, a suit for a recovery for the injury, or for the property, must be joint, because the property and the right to its enjoyment are joint during coverture. Then appellee could not sue for and recover any interest in the land without joining her husband in the action until the coverture ceased. It is unlike tenants in common, where either may sue and recover for an injury to the property, and may use the names of his cotenants. What effect, then, did the granting of the divorce have on this estate, or the rights of the parties therein? The relation of husband and wife was thereby terminated, and with it all marital duties. Their interest and duties from thenceforth, as related to each other, were as though they never existed. The estate by the entirety is essentially a joint estate, although it differs in one or two particulars therefrom. The power to hold jointly arose from the fact that they were married when the conveyance was made. Had the marriage not existed, the parties would have taken as tenants in common. It was that circumstance, and that alone, which gave to them the joint life estate and the right to joint possession. When the very thing which by operation of law gave them a joint estate was destroyed by operation of the same law, the joint estate ceased, and they then became vested with an estate per my as tenants in common. They by that act, and operation of law flowing from it, are not jointly entitled to possession, but, the unity of title and the unity of estate no longer existing with the incidental right of joint possession, it inevitably follows that they then become tenants in common. The termination of the marriage relation having wrought a change in the rights of the parties in the estate, the court should rather hold that the change is broad enough to convert it into an estate in common, than to hold that whatever change was made it left the right of survivorship. But, on principle, we are satisfied the decree of divorce had the effect to make them tenants in common, and that appellees thereby became entitled to partition." See also, Bishop, Mar. & Div. § 716; Freeman, Coten. § 76. We are not without authority on the question in this state. In the case of Ames v. Norman, 4 Sneed, 683, 70 Am. Dec. 269, it appeared that Ames and wife were seised of an estate in the land by entireties. Said land was sold at execution sale in satisfaction of judgment against the husband, and the defendant Norman, as a creditor of Mrs. Ames, afterwards redeemed the land from the purchaser at said sale. After Norman's rights had become vested, the wife of Ames, the original judgment debtor, procured a divorce, and the question was whether the interest or title of the purchaser at execution sale was subject to be divested or in any way affected by a subsequent divorce a vinculo matrimonii to the wife. It was held that the subsequent divorce had no effect whatever upon the rights of such purchaser. It was held that the defendant, by his purchase, became invested with the right of the husband as it existed at the time of the sale; that is, a right to occupy and enjoy the profits of the land as owner during the joint lives of the husband and wife, subject to the contingency that if the complainant survives her former husband his estate will then terminate, but if the husband survives he will become absolute owner of the whole estate.

NOTE.—As to adverse possession against remaindermen and owners of future estates, see note to Gindrat v. Western Ry. of Alabama (Ala.) 19 L. R. A. 830.

The case at bar is to be differentiated from the case of Ames v. Norman in this important particular: that in the present case it appears that the wife was divorced prior to the date of defendant's purchase and possession. At that date the wife's status was that of feme sole and her estate in this land had, by operation of law, been changed from one by the entirety to a tenant in common. That Judge McKinney, who delivered the opinion of the court in Ames v. Norman, recognized this distinction is apparent from the following language. We quote from his opinion, viz.: "As one of the necessary results of the unity of person in husband and wife, it has always been held that where an estate is conveyed or devised to them jointly they do not take in joint tenancy. Constituting one legal person, they cannot be vested with separate or separable interests. They are said, therefore, to take by entireties that is, each of them is seised of the whole estate, and neither of a part. If the rights of husband and wife in relation to an estate held by entireties are not altered by the decree declaring the divorce, what becomes of the joint estate? What are their respective rights in the future in regard to it? They are no longer one legal person; the law itself has made them twain

They are no longer capable of holding by entireties. The relation upon which that tenancy depends has been destroyed. The one legal person has been resolved by judgment of law into two distinct individual persons, having in the future no relation to each other; and with this change of their relation must necessarily follow a corresponding change of the tenancy dependent upon the previous relation. As they cannot longer hold by a joint seisure, they must hold by moieties. The law, in destroying the unity of person between them, has, by necessary consequence, destroyed the unity of seisin in respect to their joint estate, for, independent of the matrimonial union, this tenancy cannot exist."

We think these principles are conclusive of this case. The decree of divorce, while it severed the unity of person of James and Mary E. Wilson, also severed their unity of estate in this land, making them tenants in common. That decree also removed the disability of Mary E. as a married woman, and left her free to institute proceedings for a partition of this land, or otherwise to assert her rights therein. She neglected to take any steps, and the bar of the statute was complete when the present suit was instituted. It may be remarked, in conclusion, that the whole groundwork of complainants' bill is based upon the assumption that complainant Mary E. was not a party to the original attachment suit, and had no notice of those proceedings. This assumption is earnestly controverted by the defendants. We do not, however, decide that question, as it is wholly immaterial.

The title of Mrs. Hopson having been extinguished, and her remedy barred by operation of the statute, the decree of the Chancellor is affirmed.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

City of MT. VERNON, Appt.,

v.

PEOPLE of the State of Illinois.

(147 Ill. 339.)

Land owned by the state and used by a court for judicial purposes, though not exempt from special assessment, under Const., art. 9, § 8, providing that the property of the state may be exempted from taxation by general law, and the General Revenue Law, § 2, exempting from taxation all property of every kind belonging to the state cannot be assessed for such improvements, since Const., art. 4, § 20, provides that the state shall never be made defendant in any court of law or equity, and the NOTE.—Municipal assessment of state property.

This note is confined exclusively to cases of municipal assessment of state property.

General doctrine.

Taxation is in its essence an exercise of sovereign power over the inferior; an exaction, payment of which by the inferior is compelled by the superior. Trustees of Pub. Schools v. Taylor, 30 N. J. Eq. 618.

State property is by implication excluded from the operation of laws imposing taxation, unless there is a clearly expressed intention to include it. Trustees for Support of Pub. Schools v. Trenton, 30 N. J. Eq. 667.

The immunity of property of the state and of its local divisions from taxation, does not result from a want of power in the legislature to subject such property to taxation, the state having power to render its property and that of its municipal divisions liable to taxation. Ibid.

Yet property cannot be taxed until authority therefor be conferred by the legislature, and the manner of imposing taxes prescribed by law must be followed; no other way of taxation can be lawfully pursued. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Davenport, 61 Iowa, 451.

All property within the state is held subject to the power of constitutional taxation by the legislature, for general purposes, and all property within the several local divisions of the state is held subject to such taxation for local purposes as may be lawfully imposed upon the local property by the local authorities. Cheaney v. Hooser, 9 R. Mon. 330, 339.

But it has been stated that it is impossible for the legislature to clothe the municipality with the power of taxing state property. Trustees of Pub. Schools v. Taylor, supra.

The municipality, a mere creature, cannot be vested with any compulsory powers over its creator. Ibid.

28 L. R. A.

If the state permits any part of its property to be taken for municipal purposes, such permission is a voluntary appropriation made by the state, and not taxation by the municipality. Ibid.

In Higgins v. Chicago, 18 Ill. 278, it was stated that the assessment of public improvements upon the public property of the state, county, or municipal corporations was a mere question of policy, and that the power existed to make it bear its share of the one or the other, that it might be exempted from the one and subjected to the other.

It has been held that it is only property which the state owns that is exempt from taxation, not that in the avails of which she may or may not ultimately be entitled to share. Ryan v. Gallatin County, 14 Ill. 78.

A distinction has been drawn between property held by corporations, such as school districts and devoted to a public use, and property which is devoted to a governmental use, the former being subject to special assessments made for the purposes of improvement. Polk County Sav. Bank v. Iowa, 69 Iowa, 24.

In People v. Western Seaman's Friend Soc. 37 Ill. 246, where it was sought to recover a judgment for taxes upon the property of the defendant, which, it was contended, was an institution of purely public charity, under the clause of the revenue laws, it was stated that it might be well doubted whether that clause was intended by the legislature to embrace more than institutions of public charity, such as have been founded and are maintained solely by the state, as contradistinguished from institutions founded by private enterprise, for the dispensation of private charity.

Distinction between assessment and taxation.

A manifold distinction exists between taxes and assessments which is distinctly recognized in the decisions. An assessment is not a tax. Hassan v. Rochester, 67 N. Y. 523; Roosevelt Hospital v. New York, 84 N. Y. 112.

calling of the state into court to defend a proceeding against its property is making it a defendant within the constitutional prohibition, and any judgment would be merely advisory without power to enforce it.

(October 27, 1893.)

APPEAL by complainant from a judgment of the Jefferson County Court in favor of defendant in a proceeding brought to confirm a special tax for street improvements against property owned by the state. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Robert M. Farthing and C. H. Patton, for appellants:

The state, within the true sense of the provision of the constitution, is not a party defendant, because this is a proceeding in rem, an application to confirm a special tax directly upon or against real estate.

People v. Draystean, 100 Ill. 286.

The inhibition has no application here, but applies to personal actions wherein the state in its own name alone and in its corporate personality might but for the above constitutional provision be made a party "defendant" and a personal judgment rendered.

Both the constitution and statutes expressly permit the city to institute this very proceeding.

The property of the state, counties, and properly used for school and religious purposes may be exempted from taxation; but such exemptions shall only be by general law.

Const. art. 9, § 3.

And article 9, section 9, reads thus: "The general assembly may vest the corporate authorities of cities, towns, and villages with power to make local improvements by special assessments, or by special taxation of contiguous property, or otherwise. For all other corporate purposes all municipal corporations may be vested with authority to assess and collect taxes; but such taxes shall be uniform in respect to persons and property within the jurisdiction of the body imposing the same."

The legislature has vested its unlimited power in the cities of the state in the matters aforesaid.

1 Starr & C. Stat. 261, § 116, art. 9, § 1.

The legislature has never enacted any statute having for its object the unjust policy of compelling those in the immediate vicinity of its property to pay for its improvement, by which all the people of the state are equally benefited.

Taxes are regarded as burdens or charges imposed upon persons or property to raise money for public purposes, and assessments are regarded not as burdens, but as an equivalent or compensation for the enhanced value which the property of the person assessed has derived from the improvements. Sharpe v. Speir, 4 Hill, 76; Re New York, 11 Johns. 77; Bleecker v. Ballou, 8 Wend. 263.

Assessments for city improvements contemplate a local benefit and increase of value and are made under the power to tax and in exercise of that power. Harris County v. Boyd, 70 Tex. 237.

Exemption from taxation does not exempt from special assessments. McLean County v. Bloomington, 106 Ill. 209; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Decatur, 1 L. R. A. 618, 126 Ill. 92; Adams County v. Quincy, 6 L. R. A. 155, 130 Ill. 566.

Assessments for city purposes do not come within the meaning of the term "taxation" as usually employed in the constitution and statutes. Harris County v. Boyd, supra.

In McLean County v. Bloomington, supra, the distinction between taxation and special assessment was said to be clearly made in the constitution, and while providing that the general assembly might exempt the property of the state, counties, and other municipal corporations from the former, it made no such provision with regard to the latter, section 9 authorizing the general assembly to vest such corporate authorities with power to make local improvements by special assessment, without any restriction as to the property to be assessed. Adams County v. Quincy, supra.

The general limitations contained in article 8 of the Texas Constitution are held not to apply to the exaction by city authorities under their charter giving power to construct and repair sidewalks, etc., as against abutting owners. Harris County v. Boyd, supra.

Liability to assessment.

In People v. Austin, 47 Cal. 353, land was taken and dedicated for a public street under an Act of 1871 and 1872, which provide that the value of the land taken and the damages to the improvements thereon, or adjacent thereto, injured thereby, and 23 L. R. A.

all other expenses, should be held and considered to be the costs of opening the street, and be assessed on the lands mentioned in the act which described the district, and provided that all lands belonging to the United States or to the state of California should be exempt from assessment. The act was assailed on the grounds of its unconstitutionality, and it was held that the power of assessment was but a portion of the power of taxation, and that if the sovereign could not tax its own property for general revenue purposes, it could not be doubted that it might exempt it from assessment or taxation in any form.

In Richmond County Academy Trustees v. Augusta, 20 L. R. A. 151, 90 Ga. 634, where lands were held in trust under the Virginia Act of July 31, 1783, and later acts vesting in trustee's funds arising from the sale and lease of certain state lands for the erection and maintenance of a public academy in the county of Richmond, the lands were held exempt from municipal taxation, even though separate from the tract on which the academy was situated, and used only as the means of income for the institution, the court considering the same as public property of the state and exempt under article 7, section 2, paragraph 2, of the Constitution.

The municipality has no power to levy a tax upon state bonds, even though within the corporate limits. Augusta v. Dunbar, 50 Ga. 387.

Section 5 of article 2 of the Illinois Constitution of 1848 provides that the corporate authorities of counties, townships, school districts, cities, towns, and villages may be vested with power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes, such taxes to be uniform in respect to persons and property within the jurisdiction of the party imposing the same.

Under this section it was held that a tax for the opening and improvement of a public street, or other local improvement, might be said to be a tax for corporate purposes, and that while the clause authorized the legislature to invest municipal corporate authorities with power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes, yet the power was limited and restricted to uniformity in respect to persons and property. Adams County v. Quincy, 6 L. R. A. 155, 130 Ill. 566. See this case infra, "Government property."

The only exemption from taxation of state property is given by the 5th clause of section 2 of the Revenue Law (2 Starr & O. Stat. 2027, section 2), which is: "All property described in this section to the extent herein limited shall be exempt from taxation, that is to say: . . . Fifth, All property of every kind belonging to the state of Illinois."

This does not mean nor include "special taxes," nor "special assessments," for local improvements.

McLean County v. Bloomington, 106 Ill. 218; Illinois & M. Canal Trustees v. Chicago, 12 Ill. 408; Higgins v. Chicago, 18 Ill. 276; Chicago v. Colby, 20 Ill. 614; Peoria v. Kidder, 26 Ill. 352; Wright v. Chicago, 46 Ill. 44; Miz v. Ross, 57 Ill. 121.

"Special taxation of contiguous property" is equally with "special assessment" not included within the meaning of the word "taxation," and therefore that exemption from taxation does not exempt public property from "special taxes."

Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Decatur, 1 L. R. A. 618, 126 Ill. 95; Adams County v. Quincy, 6 L. R. A. 155, 180 Ill. 577.

So firmly does this court hold to the requirement of such uniformity in "special assessment" cases that it actually held a statute of the state to be unconstitutional because it violated this principle of uniformity in University of Chicago v. People, 118 Ill. 565; Chicago v. Baptist Theological Union, 115 Ill. 245; Scammon v. Chicago, 42 Ill. 196; Chicago v. Larned, 34 Ill. 280.

If the state, owning the supreme court-house square, abutting upon said improvement, must escape its just proportion of the assessments it throws the entire cost upon the owners of the opposite side of the street. This very sort of injustice was severely condemned in Scammon v. Chicago, supra.

See also Higgins v. Chicago, 18 Ill. 281; Hassan v. Rochester, 67 N. Y. 528.

It would be absurd to presume that the state would repudiate the moral obligation of this just and meritorious claim, and it is necessary to have the assessment confirmed, since it should be judicially ascertained how much is due before the state could be asked to make its appropriation to pay it.

People v. Managers of Buffalo State Asylum for Insane, 28 N. Y. S. R. 886.

Mr. George Hunt, Atty-Gen., for the People.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding by the city of Mt. Vernon, in the county court of Jefferson Section 9 of article 9 of the Illinois Constitution of 1870 provides that the general assembly may vest the corporate authorities of cities, towns, and villages with power to make local improvements by special assessments, or by special taxation of contiguous property or otherwise, for all corporate purposes; all municipal corporations may be vested with authority to assess and collect taxes, but such taxes shall be uniform in respect to persons and property within the jurisdiction of the body imposing the same.

Under this section it was held that taxation for general corporate purposes must be uniform, while for local improvements it might be by special tax, or by way of assessment upon the contiguous property, special assessments being clearly recognized as a mode of municipal taxation. Chicago v. Larned, 34 Ill. 280.

The power of cities and villages to make local improvements by special assessments, referring such power to the exercise of the right of eminent domain, was sustained in Chicago v. Larned, supra.

In McLean County v. Bloomington, 106 Ill. 209, the court construed the sections of the constitution as giving the power to make special assessments or local improvements, without any restriction as to the property to be assessed.

The corporation of a city or county may, if not specially exempted, justly pay a part of the assessments proportionate to the benefits conferred by improvements. Scammon v. Chicago, 42 Ill. 192.

The same conclusion was reached by the court in the prior case of Higgins v. Chicago, 18 Ill. 276.

In Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Davenport, 51 Iowa, 451, it was sought to restrain the collection of a tax upon the company's interest in the government bridge crossing the Mississippi river, of which the company had paid half the costs of construction and had the use. It was held not subject to taxation, the bridge being built and owned by the United States.

The property of the United States of the city and county of Baltimore is all exempt from taxation, and yet it has never been held or contended that 28 L. R. A.

it was not liable for the paving done in front of such property. Baltimore v. Green Mount Cemetery Proprs. 7 Md. 517.

Upon a petition for a writ of certiorari to quash the proceedings in allowing an assessment under the Massachusetts Statutes of 1867, chap. 106, upon the property of the inhabitants of the county of Worcester, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of constructing sewers, it was held that such property, although held by the county, was so held for the purposes and uses of the commonwealth as essential to the administration of the executive and judicial duties of the government, and not subject to taxation in any form, unless the intention of the legislature to render them so clearly appeared. Worcester County v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 193, 17 Am. Rep. 159.

In the case of a mortgage given to secure state funds, set apart for the support of public schools, it was held in Trustees for Support of Public Schools v. Trenton, 30 N. J. Eq. 667, that the city had no power to tax such mortgages, although mortgages were embraced in the classification of property subject to taxation.

Where the state goes into the market for the investment of money, it makes its securities subject to the vested rights of property of private individuals, and therefore a mortgage given to the state or to its representatives for public money invested is subject to all prior estates in the mortgaged premises. Ibid.

Where a mortgage was executed to trustees for the support of free schools, to secure a loan with interest of moneys belonging to the state school fund, another mortgage being executed upon the same premises to the chancellor of the state, upon which the city claimed an assessment of taxes under the provisions of the city charter and a sale of the premises for a payment of the same, it was held that a lien upon municipal taxes did not exist upon such mortgaged premises, even though the city charter made the taxes paramount to all other liens and incumbrances. Trustees of Public Schools v. Taylor, 30 N. J. Eq. 618.

In Hassan v. Rochester, 67 N. Y. 528, an injunccounty, to confirm a special tax assessed—for the purpose of paving certain streets of the city—against the lots and blocks contiguous to or abutting upon the improvement. Among the blocks so abutting upon the improvement is the block, owned by the state, upon which the supreme court building is located. This property was assessed a proportionate share of the cost of the improvement. The question presented by the objections to the confirmation of the assessment is whether land owned by the state, and used by its supreme court for judicial purposes, is subject to special taxation for a local improvement by one of the cities of the state. The county court sustained the objection that it had no jurisdiction, so far as the property of the state was concerned, holding that said property was exempt from special taxation for the local improvement in question, and refusing to confirm the assessment as to said property, or to enter judgment against the same. From such judgment of the county court the present appeal is prosecuted.

tion was sought to restrain the collection of an assessment imposed upon the plaintiff's land for city improvements, upon the ground that lands belonging to the state were not included in such assessment, and the court held that while it was conceded that property belonging to the state was not the subject of taxation in the absence of an exception by statute, it by no means followed that it was not liable to assessments for local improvements; that the exemption in the fourth section of the Revised Statutes of New York, chap. 13, part 1, of "all lands belonging to the state or the United States" related to general county and state taxes, and had no reference to assessments for improvements, made under special laws, and of a local character.

In Piper v. Singer, 4 Serg. & R. 354, where a suit was brought to recover taxes assessed on the public buildings belonging to the county, situated within the borough and assessed under the Act of February 9, 1790, for the improvement and keeping in order of the streets and alleys, removing nuisances or obstructions therefrom, it was held that the property of counties was not taxable for city or borough purposes.

In the above case it appeared that the inhabitants of the borough required a number of streets and alleys for their own particular accommodation, in which the inhabitants of the county in general had no concern, and therefore ought not to be taxed for keeping them in repair. Piper v. Singer, supra.

In Nashville v. Bank of Tennessee, 1 Swan, 202, suit was brought to recover city taxes from the bank, and it was held exempt, even though its charter contained no expressed exemption, it being public property and as such exempt without any positive law.

Article 2, section 9, of the Texas Constitution relates to all taxation both general and special in its exemption of county, city, and town property used for public purposes, as public buildings. Harris County v. Boyd, 70 Tex. 237.

In Black v. Sherwood, 84 Va. 906, it was sought to tax county property as a landing place for a ferry, but the same was held exempt under chapter 61 of the Acts of 1881, 1882, page 383, which exempted all real estate belonging to any county, city, or town.

The rule that public property cannot be seized for debts due from the public corporation, applies as forcibly to seizures for street improvements as to seizures under any other legal process. So held in Lowe v. Howard County Comrs. 94 Ind. 553, 23 L. R. A.

Section 3 of article 9 of the Constitution provides, that "the property of the state, counties, and other municipal corporations, both real and personal, . . . may be exempted from taxation; but such exemption shall be only by general law." In pursuance of this constitutional enactment, the legislature has provided, in section 2 of the General Revenue Law, that "all property described in this section, to the extent herein limited shall be exempt from taxation, that is to say . . .

Fifth. All property of every kind belonging to the state of Illinois." 2 Starr & C. Ann. Stat. p. 2027. We have held that exemption from taxation does not exempt from special assessment or special taxation of contiguous property. McLean County v. Bloomington, 106 Ill. 209; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Decatur, 126 Ill. 93, 1 L. R. A. 613; Adams County v. Quincy, 130 Ill. 566, 6 L. R. A. 155.

It is therefore argued that, inasmuch as the general assembly, under the authority conferred upon it by section 9 of article 9 of the where it was sought to sell a public square of a county for the payment of an assessment for street improvements.

Government property.

In Fagan v. Chicago, 84 Ill. 227, where property belonging to the United States was omitted from an assessment for benefits of a public nature, whereby such property was benefited, it was held that such omission was right, the states having no power to tax the organs of the general government. The assessment imposed in the above case was for street paving, and was levied by the city upon government property.

In Adams County v. Quincy, 6 L. R. A. 155, 130 Ill. 566, the city applied for an order confirming the report of commissioners appointed to levy a special tax upon lots contiguous to, and touching upon the line of certain streets proposed to be paved, in accordance with the city ordinance. A block owned by the county and used as a court-house, being a portion of such property and assessed for its proportion of the costs, it was contended that such property being used solely for public purposes was exempt from taxation. The court held that although all public buildings belonging to any company were exempt from taxation under section 2 of chapter 120 of the Revised Statutes of Illinois, yet that special assessments for local improvements were not taxes in the strict sense of that term, and that property held for a public use is not exempt from such assessment, although exempt from taxation for general purposes.

In Polk County Sav. Bank v. Iowa, 69 Iowa, 24, the question arose whether the city council had the power to make assessments against the property of the state under chapter 123 of Laws of 1873 for the purposes of the sewer tax, and it was held that such act did not confer the right upon cities to assess state property used for government purposes.

In the above case it was stated that the ruling of the court in Hassan v. Rochester, 67 N. Y. 523, did not apply, as there was no statute in Iowa expressly or impliedly subjecting the property of the state to assessment. Polk County Sav. Bank v. Iowa, supra.

Where lands are held for public use as a court-house, the increased value supposed to follow street improvements could not apply as compensation for the levy, as in property held by individuals. Harris County v. Boyd, 7 Tex. 237. R. W.

Constitution, has, in article 9 of the City and Village Act, vested the corporate authorities of cities and villages with power to make local improvements by special assessment or special taxation of contiguous property, the property of the state may be assessed for paving a street under a city ordinance which directs that the cost of such paving be paid by special taxation of contiguous property according to frontage. What force there might be in this argument, if there were no other constitutional provision applicable to this subject than those above referred to, it is needless to discuss. But there is another provision of the constitution, which, as it seems to us, is conclusive of the matter. Section 26 of article 4 of that instrument is as follows: "The state of Illinois shall never be made defendant in any court of law or equity." It is claimed by the appellant that the state is not a party defendant, within the true meaning of section 26 upon the alleged ground that this is a proceeding in rem,—an application to confirm a special tax directly upon or against real estate. It cannot be denied that county courts are included in the expression, "any court of law or equity." The statute requires that notice of the assessment shall be sent by mail to the owner of the property, and that notices shall be posted and published. Proof must be made of the mailing, posting, and publication of such notices. The owner has a right to appear in response to the notice, and file objections to the report of the commissioners. A hearing is had, and evidence is introduced. Rev. Stat. chapter 24, art. 9, §§ 18-51. Although no judgment in personam is rendered against the owner, yet it cannot be said that he is not a defendant, in view of the provisions made for his notification, appearance, and contest against the confirmation of the assessment. We think that, when the state is thus called into the county court to defend a proceeding against its property, it is made a defendant, in the sense contemplated by the constitutional prohibition.

In support of the contention that the property of the state can be thus specially assessed, reference is made to cases where it has been held that real estate owned by a city or county may be subjected to its proper share of the burden of constructing public improvements. Scammon v. Chicago, 42 Ill. 192; McLean County v. Bloomington, and Adams County v. Quincy, supra.

But it is to be observed, in regard to cities, villages, and counties, that they are mere agencies of the state, through which local government is conveniently administered, and that the general assembly may authorize property held by one of its agencies to be burdened with a charge for the benefit of another of its agencies, to the extent of benefits received, "in regard to a matter in which the citizens and property owners within the territorial limits of such last-named agency have no exclusive interest, but only an interest in common with the entire public." McLean County v. Bloomington, supra. Although the property of the city or county cannot be sold so as to pass the title thereto to private parties, yet mandamus will lie to compel the payment of the amount assessed out of the city or county treasury. Taylor v. People, 66 Ill. 322; Olney v. Harney, 50 Ill. 453, 99 Am. Dec. 590; People v. Clark County Supra, 50 Ill. 213; McLean County v. Bloomington, supra.

Here, however, it is conceded that the amount assessed can neither be recovered by a sale of the property of the state, nor by mandamus. The judgment in the assessment proceeding, if there was jurisdiction to render it, would be merely advisory. The tribunal pronouncing it would have no power to enforce it. Courts are not organized, under our judicial system, for the purpose of determining the moral obligations of the parties, but for the purpose of making such determinations as they have the authority to carry into execution. "The state is a sovereign, and cannot be sued by her citizens in her own courts without her permission." State v. Jewel, 30 La. Ann. 861. "It is an established principle of jurisprudence in all civilized nations that the sovereign cannot be sued in its own courts, or in any other, without its consent and permission." Hane v. Louisiana, 134 U. S. 17, 33 L. ed. 848. "The obligations of a state rest for their performance upon its honor and good faith, and cannot be made the subjects of judicial cognizance, unless the state consents to be sued, or comes itself into court." Pennoyer v. McConnaughy, 140 U. S. 1, 35 L. ed. 363. In Moore v. School Trustees of Town Three, 19 Ill. 83, we said: "The state could not be made a party defendant, nor compelled to sue. Her sovereignty would protect her from being coerced to prosecute or defend." Osborn v. Bank of the United States, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 738, 6 L. ed. 204; Webster v. French, 11 Ill. 254." In Fagan v. Chicago, 84 Ill. 227, it was held that the city of Chicago had no power to levy a special assessment for paving a street upon the block of ground owned by the United States government, and used, with the building thereon, for the purpose of a post-office, custom-house, courts, etc. In that case we said: "A municipal corporation has no power to assess or exact from the state or the general government any sum for benefits conferred."

In view of the consideration here presented, we think that the county court properly refused to confirm the assessment as to the property in question. Accordingly, the judgment of that court is affirmed.

COLORADO SUPREME COURT.

Fred. M. WADSWORTH, Ptff. in Err.,
v.
UNION PACIFIC R. CO.

(18 Colo. 800.)

*1. Where the court announced that a new trial should be allowed, and plaintiff then declared that he elected to stand by his case as made, and thereupon the court dismissed the action.—Held, that the circumstances showed that all parties intended to treat the case as though the court had dismissed the action or granted a nonsuit on the ground that plaintiff had failed to "prove a sufficient case for the jury."

2. The Code of Civil Procedure contemplates that the substance, and not the mere form, of judicial proceedings shall be regarded in determining the rights of parties.

3. Where the evidence is conflicting, or of such a character that different conclusions may be reasonably drawn therefrom, the case presents a question of fact for the jury under proper instructions.

4. Though the dismissal of an action may not be warranted, on the ground stated in the judgment order, yet, if the record discloses other grounds which, as a matter of law, show the plaintiff was not entitled in any event to recover in the action, a judgment of dismissal may be upheld.

5. Under the stock-killing act, as amended in 1885, before a person could claim that a railway company owed him any duty in respect to fencing its railway, it was necessary for him to allege that he was the owner or holder of land adjacent to such railway; that he had requested the railway company to fence its line, put in cattle-guards and gateways; and, moreover, according to said act, the railway company could not, by complying with such request, exempt itself from the unconditional liability otherwise imposed, except as against the party making the request.

6. It is not every remark in a judicial opinion that amounts to a judicial decision. General expressions in every opinion are to be taken in connection with the case in which those expressions are used. If they go beyond the case, they may be respected, but ought not to control the judgment in a subsequent suit when the very point is presented for decision.

7. A legislative act, within the sphere of legislative power, and not an encroachment upon the province of some other department of the government, will be upheld, unless clearly in conflict with some provision of the constitution of the state or nation, or in violation of some private right thereby secured.

8. By the stock-killing statute of 1885 (secs. 13, 14) a railway company might be denied

*Headnotes by ELLIOTT, J.

"the equal protection of the laws," and deprived of its property "without due process of law." Such a statute is unconstitutional.

9. Where the sections of a statute must be construed together as dependent, and not as independent, provisions, the invalidity of one part invalidates other parts.

(May 22, 1893.)

ERROR to the District Court for Park County to review a judgment in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for the killing of a horse. Affirmed.

Statement by ELLIOTT, J.:

This action is founded upon chapter 93, Gen. Stat. 1888, as amended by the Act of 1885. Section 18 and amended sections 14 and 15 are as follows:

"Sec. 18. That every railroad or railway corporation or company operating any line of railroad or railway or any branch thereof within the limits of this state, which shall damage or kill any horse, mare, gelding, filly, jack, jenny, or mule, or any cow, heifer, bull, ox, steer, or calf, or any other domestic animal, by running any engine or engines, car or cars, over or against any such animal, shall be liable to the owner of such animal for the damages sustained by such owner by reason thereof.

"Sec. 14. If the owner of any animal or animals so killed, or his or her authorized agent, shall make affidavit before some officer authorized to administer oaths that he or she was the owner or authorized agent of the owner, of the recorded brand found upon the animal or animals so killed or damaged at the time of such killing or damaging, and such person shall, within six months after such killing or damaging, deliver such affidavit to the agent or any officer of such company or corporation, together with a certificate of his or her mark or brand, under official seal of any officer authorized by law to record such mark or brands, or shall make affidavit that the animal killed or damaged, as aforesaid, had no recorded mark or brand, and that he or she is the owner of such animal, describing it, the corporation or company shall pay to such person delivering such affidavit and certificate, or such affidavit last aforesaid, as follows: Schedule. For American sheep, each, two dollars and fifty cents ($2.50); for Mexican sheep and goats, one dollar and fifty cents ($1.50); for Texas cattle, yearlings, twelve dollars ($12.00); for Texas cattle, two years old, seventeen dollars ($17.00); for Texas cattle, three years old, steers and cows, twenty dollars ($20.00); for Texas cattle, four years old steers or over, twenty-five dollars ($25.00); for American yearlings, fifteen dollars ($15.00); for Ameri-

NOTE.—To the effect that a railroad company may by statute be made constitutionally liable absolutely without regard to negligence for all damages resulting from fires set by its engines or originating on its right of way, see Union Pac. R. Co. v. De Busk (Colo.) 8 L. R. A. 880; McCandless v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (S. C.) 18 L. R. A. 440, 28 L. R. A.

While as to the unconstitutionality of a statute attempting to create such liability for stock killed by its trains, see Belenberg v. Montana Union R. Co. (Mont.) 5 L. R. A. 812; Jensen v. Union Pac. R. Co. (Utah) 4 L. R. A. 134.

can, two years old, twenty dollars ($20.00); for American, three years old, steers and cows of all ages, twenty-eight dollars ($28); for American, four years old steers and over, thirty-four dollars ($34); for calves, ten dollars ($10). The above price, when paid, shall be payment in full. All Texas and Mexican cattle shall be considered as Texas cattle, and half-bloods shall be classed as American cattle. Thoroughbred cattle, milch cows, high-grade American cattle and grade bulls shall be paid for at their cash value. Thoroughbred sheep shall be paid for at their cash value; horses, mules, and asses shall be paid for at their cash value: provided, that no railroad company shall at any time be required to pay more than the market value of any animal killed or damaged, except as hereinafter provided. In all cases where such railroad company or corporation shall kill any of the stock mentioned in this act, and for which no price or sum is fixed, the owner or agent of such stock shall, after the filing, as aforesaid, of an affidavit and certificate of brand or affidavit of ownership, which affidavit shall contain a statement of class, grade, and value of such animal or animals, select some disinterested freeholder of the county where such killing took place, and shall notify such company or corporation of said selection, and such company or corporation shall, within three days thereafter, select some suitable person to act with person so selected, and the two so selected shall select a third, and the three so selected shall, without delay, proceed to appraise the value of the stock so killed or damaged, a majority of which three appraisers shall be sufficient to determine the same; and shall certify, under oath, such appraisement to an agent or superintendent of such company or corporation. In case such railroad or corporation shall refuse or neglect to appoint such appraiser, it shall be the duty of the justice of the peace nearest to the place where such stock was so killed or damaged to select three disinterested persons as appraisers, and administer to them an oath to honestly appraise the value of such stock, which appraisers shall, without delay, appraise and forward to such justice the result of such appraisement, which justice shall, within ten days thereafter, forward to an agent or superintendent of such railroad or corporation, a certificate of the result of such appraisement and the costs thereof; and such railroad or corporation shall, within thirty days after the receipt of such certificate, pay to the owner of the stock so killed or damaged, or to his or her authorized agent, the amount of such appraisement, together with all the costs, as aforesaid; and in all cases where the value of such stock is established by this act such company or corporation shall pay for such stock within thirty days after the delivery of the affidavit and certificate of ownership of brand, or affidavits of ownership of said stock, and, if any such company shall so fail to pay for such stock within thirty days after the delivery of such affidavit and certificate, such company shall be liable for double the value the appraised or schedule value of any such animal or animals, together with reasonable attorneys' fees, to be allowed by the court; and all persons selected or appointed under this section shall receive the sum of one dollar, to be paid by said railroad company or corporation, as hereinbefore provided: provided, that any railroad company having fenced its line of road, or any part thereof, or who may hereafter fence its road, or any part thereof, with a good and lawful fence, and put in good and sufficient cattle-guards, and have put in gateways upon and across their said railroad, at the request of persons holding or owning land adjacent to said railroad, for the private use and accommodation of said adjacent owners or holders of land, said railroad company shall not be held liable for the killing or injury of any stock getting through said gateways, belonging to said party at whose request and for whose accommodation said gateway was made, unless such killing or injury was occasioned by the fault or negligence of said railroad company or its employes.

"Sec. 15. Every railroad company shall keep a book at the county seat of each county through which their road runs: provided, that said road runs or passes through the county seat. If such railroad does not pass through the county seat, then such book shall be kept at the principal town in the county through which it passes; and it is hereby made the duty of the said company to cause to be entered in said book, within fifteen days after the killing of any animal, a description, as nearly as may be, of such animal, its color, age, marks, and brands, and shall keep said book subject to the inspection of persons claiming to have had animals killed. Should any company fail to keep said book, or to file such notice, in the manner herein provided, or to enter therein such description of any animal killed, for a period of fifteen days thereafter, such company shall be liable to the owner of such animal to an amount twice the full value thereof." Gen. Stat. 1888, p. 814; Sess. Laws 1885, pp. 804, 838.

Wadsworth was plaintiff below. The Union Pacific Railway Company was defendant. At the October term, 1887, the cause was tried by a jury, and verdict rendered in plaintiff's favor. A motion for a new trial was interposed by defendant, and at a subsequent term the following proceedings were had and entered of record: "And afterwards, and on the 25th day of April, 1888, the same being one of the regular juridical days of the April, 1888, term of the said court, the motion for new trial aforesaid having been continued for further hearing to said last-named term, and having been argued in chambers meanwhile in vacation, and now coming on for final hearing and determination, and the court, being of the opinion that said motion should be allowed, but plaintiff electing to stand by his case as made, doth order and adjudge that, there being no evidence that defendant's engine or cars ran over or against the horse of plaintiff herein in question, said animal, upon the contrary, appearing to have run into or against the moving train of defendant's cars, this action of plaintiff, under the statutes counted upon therein, does not lie, and the same, the evidence, and the verdict herein notwithstanding, is dismissed at the costs of the plaintiff." The plaintiff seeks a reversal of this judgment by writ of error.

Messrs. Bailey & Wilkin, for plaintiff in error:

The so-called stock-killing statute under which plaintiff brought his action below, since its enactment in 1872, has been before this court in the cases following:

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Lujan, 6 Colo. 838; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Henderson, 10 Colo. 1; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Zastrow, 10 Colo. 4; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Betts, 10 Colo. 481.

And in each case, expressly or by implication, has been pronounced valid and constitutional as against the objection that it imposes on the railroad company an absolute liability to the owner of stock killed or injured for his damage thus sustained entirely independent of the question of negligence.

The statute twin to this, imposing a like absolute and unconditional liability upon railroad companies for damages from fires set out by them, was recently before this court in Union Pac. R. Co. v. De Busk, 8 L. R. A. 850, 12 Colo. 291; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Moffatt, 12 Col. 310, and upon the like objection made was pronounced valid and constitutional.

Every act which has received the sanction of the general assembly is to be considered constitutional unless the contrary appears beyond a reasonable doubt.

People v. Lake County Comrs. 12 Colo. 89.

The terms of the act state no exception to the absolute and unconditional liability of that railroad company which shall damage or kill any such domestic animal as this of plaintiff's by running any engine or engines, car or cars, over or against the same, save when it does this non-negligently at fence protected points upon its line.

It seems to be the policy of the act to devolve the burden of casualties of this sort upon that one of the two parties to it (both claiming non-imputability) which, declining to exempt itself under the fence provision, chooses to engage for its own profit in a business in which the dangerous agency which causes the injury is necessarily to be employed.

Hart v. Western R. Corp. 13 Met. 99; Union Pac. R. Co. v. De Busk, 18 L. R. A. 850, 12 Colo. 294.

The statute (Gen. Stat. 1883, § 2804, originally promulgated Sess. Laws 1872, p. 185) is constitutional in declaring a railroad company's liability for single damages for stock killed or injured without reference to company's non-negligence and without reference to fencing proviso which was added by more recent legislation.

Union Pac. R. Co. v. De Busk, and Union Pac. R. Co. v. Moffatt, supra; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Arthur, 2 Colo. App. 159; Denver, T. & G. R. Co. v. De Graff, Id. 42; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Sternberg, 18 Colo. 141; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Chandler, 8 Colo. 871; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Stewart, 1 Colo. App. 227; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Lujan, 6 Colo. 838; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Henderson, 10 Colo. 1; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Zastrow, Id. 4; Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Betts, Id. 481.

23 L. R. A.

This statute is constitutional as establishing, at the least, a presumptive but disputable presumption of liability, reserving to the railway company the right to defend by showing contributory negligence or other affirmative defensive matter to exempt it from its presumptive statutory liability imported by the fact of killing or injuring stock in operating its trains.

1 Thomp. Neg. § 15, p. 512, and cases cited; Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Geiger, 21 Fla. 669, 58 Am. Rep. 703, notes, and cases cited; Bradley v. People, 8 Colo. 599; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Payne, 83 Ark. 816, 84 Am. Rep. 55.

The fencing proviso of the Statute of 1885, counted on in the complaint, relieves the statute of the constitutional question. It exempts from liability for non-negligent injury in cases of this sort at properly fence-protected points; this being equivalent to requiring the fencing and declaring a liability for damages in the absence of fencing.

Wilder v. Maine Cent. R. Co. 65 Me. 332, 20 Am. Rep. 698; Rodemacher v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 41 Iowa, 297, 20 Am. Rep. 592; Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Peoples, 93 Ill. 97, 34 Am. Rep. 112; Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Warrington, 92 Ill. 157, 34 Am. Rep. 115, note; Antisdel v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 26 Wis. 145, 7 Am. Rep. 44, note; Barnett v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 68 Mo. 56, 80 Am. Rep. 773; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Payne, supra.

The allowance of attorney's fees and doubling the damage on failure of company to pay single damage within thirty days after receiving certificate from justice of the peace of the amount is a valid statutory penalty for failure to comply with the fencing provision above mentioned.

Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Payne, Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Warrington, and Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Peoples, supra; 1 Thomp. Neg. 539; Tredway v. S. C. & St. P. R. Co. 43 Iowa, 527, 29 Am. Rep. 862, note; Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. v. Duggan, 109 Ill. 537, 50 Am. Rep. 619.

The double damage for failure to keep stock record at company's station at Fairplay is a valid exercise of police power.

Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Payne, supra. Messrs. C. M. Kendall and Teller & Oranhood, for defendant in error:

The statute on which this case is founded is unconstitutional, as depriving a person of its property without due process of law.

Zeigler v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 58 Ala. 594; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Payne, 83 Ark. 816, 84 Am. Rep. 55; Bielenberg v. Montana Union R. Co. 2 L. R. A. 818, 8 Mont. 271; Thompson v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 8 Mont. 279; Cateril v. Union Pac. R. Co. 2 Idaho, 540; Jensen v. Union Pac. R. Co. 4 L. R. A. 724, 6 Utah, 252; Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Geiger, 21 Fla. 669, 58 Am. Rep. 703. See also Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Lackey, 78 Ill. 55, 20 Am. Rep. 259; Wright v. Cradelbauch, 8 Nev. 349; Hutton v. Camden, 89 N. J. L. 122, 23 Am. Rep. 203; Corbin v. Hill, 21 Iowa, 72; Adams v. Beale, 19 Iowa, 66; McCready v. Sexton, 29 Iowa, 891, 4 Am. Rep. 214; Allen v. Armstrong, 16 Iowa, 518; Bannon v. Burnes, 39 Fed. Rep. 892; Abbott v. Lindenboer, 42 Mo. 163; Coolley, Const. Lim. 453, *368, note, 454, *361, 481, 432; State v. Doherty, 60 Me. 509; Greene v. Briggs, 1 Curt. C. C. 325; Windsor v. McVeigh, 98 U. S. 277, 23 L. ed. 916; 5 Webster's Works, p. 487.

The law in force at the time of the killing of the animal, to wit, Law 1885, p. 335, was repealed by the Law of 1887, p. 420, enacted as a substitute therefor.

Keesee v. Denver, 10 Colo. 112.

And the liability, if any existed, being a penal one, it was destroyed by the repeal of the statute inflicting the penalty.

Gregory v. German Bank of Denver, 8 Colo. 332, 25 Am. Rep. 760; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Crawford, 11 Colo. 598; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Proctor, 12 Colo. 194.

If the statute is construed to give double damages and attorney's fees, as a penalty for not paying within the time required by statute, it is unconstitutional, being in violation (sec. 6, art. 2) of the Constitution of Colorado, as well as other provisions of both the state and United States constitutions.

The defendant had the right to have the question of its liability determined in court, and it cannot be punished for so doing.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 445, *362; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Williams, 49 Ark. 493; Laferty v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 71 Mich. 351; Wilder v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 70 Mich. 382; Schut v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. Id. 433; Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Moss, 60 Miss. 641; Durkee v. Jonesville, 28 Wis. 464, 9 Am. Rep. 500; Davis v. Perse, 7 Minn. 1, 32 Am. Dec. 65.

It is not the due process of law provided for in the state and United States constitutions.

Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Baty, 6 Neb. 37, 29 Am. Rep. 356.

Elliott, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The dismissal of the action, as shown by the record, is assigned for error.

1. The dismissal was somewhat irregular, but it is not difficult to understand its meaning. The cause had been tried by jury, resulting in a verdict in plaintiff's favor, finding that the value of the horse killed was $200, and assessing plaintiff's damages at $400 on each of the two causes of action. Upon consideration of defendant's motion for a new trial, the court was of opinion that it should be allowed, and so announced its conclusion. Thereupon plaintiff declared that he elected to stand by his case as already made, and the district court then and there dismissed the action at plaintiff's costs. The declaration of plaintiff was equivalent to saying that he could not prove any better case, and that he desired to obviate the necessity for another trial. The bringing of the whole record to this court for review, including the bill of exceptions, containing "all the testimony offered, given, or received on the trial," clearly indicates that the intention of the parties was to treat the action of the court as though the court had dismissed the action or granted a nonsuit on the ground that plaintiff had failed to "prove a sufficient case for the jury." That such was the understanding and intention of plaintiff as well as the defendant is confirmed by the 23 L. R. A.

fact that the assignments of error and argument of counsel in this court extend to the conclusions of the trial court upon the evidence, the pleadings, and the statutes upon which the action is founded.

2. The Code of Civil Procedure contemplates that the substance, and not the mere form, of judicial proceedings shall be regarded in determining the rights of parties; hence we shall review this cause according to the intention of the parties, as above stated, since it is obvious that the ends of justice will be thereby accomplished. Code, § 73, also section 443; Denier & R. G. R. Co. v. Chandler, 8 Colo. 376; Idaho Springs v. Filleau, 10 Colo. 105.

3. Upon a careful examination of the evidence we are of the opinion that the court would not have been justified at the close of the evidence in dismissing the action or in granting a nonsuit on the ground that there was no evidence tending to prove that defendant's engine or cars ran over or against the plaintiff's horse, as stated in the finding of the court. The evidence on that phase of the case was somewhat conflicting, or of such a character that different conclusions might have been reasonably drawn therefrom; and so the evidence did not present a question of law for the court, but one of fact for the jury under proper instructions. 2 Thomp. Trials, § 2242 et seq.; Lord v. Pueblo Smelting & Ref. Co. 12 Colo. 394; Denny v. Williams, 5 Allen, 1-5.

4. But it is contended that, though the grounds for dismissing the action, as stated in the court's finding, are not sufficient in law, yet the judgment of dismissal should be upheld, since the record discloses other facts which, as a matter of law, show that plaintiff was not entitled, in any event, to recover in the action.

5. The complaint contains two causes of action. Each count is founded upon certain provisions of the statute relating to stock killed by the operation of railroads. The killing occurred in June, 1886; hence we must consider the law as it existed at that time. See Gen. Stat. 1883, chap. 93, § 2804 et seq. Also acts amendatory thereof,—Sess. Laws 1885, pp. 304, 338. Neither count of the complaint alleges any negligence on the part of the defendant company in respect to the killing of plaintiff's horse. Prior to the Act of 1885, above cited, it was provided by statute that any railroad company operating its road within this state which should damage or kill any domestic animal by running any of its engines or cars over or against such animal should be liable to the owner of such animal for the damages thereby occasioned. The statute contained a fixed schedule of prices to be paid for certain kinds of animals so killed. It also provided for an appraisalment of the value of the animals for which no schedule price was fixed, but the appraisalment was required to be made without any trial in court, and no proof of negligence on the part of the railway company was required in order to establish its liability. By the Act of 1885 an amendment to section 14 was added, relating to fences, cattle-guards, and gateways, by which it was provided that under certain circumstances a railroad company should not be held liable for the killing or injury of any stock, unless such killing or injury was occasioned by the fault or negligence of the company or its employés. This peculiar proviso was again amended in 1891 (Sess. Laws, p. 281), but the amendment was too late to affect this case. The first count of the complaint contains an averment to the effect that defendant's railway line, at the place where plaintiff's horse was killed, was not then and there fenced with a good and lawful fence, or with any fence whatever; also a further averment that "said railway line, at the point thereon of said killing, was not fenced as by said statute advised." These averments were not sufficient, under the Act of 1885. According to the terms of that act, before plaintiff could claim that the defendant company owed him any duty in respect to fencing its railway, it was necessary for him to allege that he was the owner or holder of land adjacent to such railway; that he had requested defendant to fence its railroad, put in cattle-guards and gateways; and that his horse was killed by reason of defendant's neglect to comply with such request. The complaint does not contain such allegations. Moreover, according to the strict terms of the proviso, the company could not, even by fencing, putting in cattle-guards and gateways, exempt itself from the unconditional liability otherwise imposed by the statute, except as against the party requesting the gateway to be made. From the foregoing it follows that, in order to warrant a recovery for plaintiff under the first count of his complaint, as the statute existed when the first alleged cause of action arose, it must be held, unconditionally, that if any railroad company operating its road in this state should damage or kill a domestic animal by running its engines or cars over or against such animal, the railroad company would be liable therefor, irrespective of any act of negligence on the part of such company. If such statute were valid, then, according to its literal terms, plaintiff's right to recover must be upheld.

6. Counsel for plaintiff rely upon the case of Union Pac. R. Co. v. De Busk, 12 Colo. 294, 8 L. R. A. 850, as sustaining the stock-killing statute as it existed under the Act of 1885. In that case a statute declaring that every railroad company shall be liable for all damages by fire that is set out or caused by operating its road, in this state, was upheld as constitutional, the court holding that "such statutes are not penal, but purely remedial in their nature," and that the liability thus declared "was but the re-enactment, pro tanto, of the ancient common law, for the better protection of property exposed to such unusual dangers." The conclusion in the De Busk Case was sustained by numerous decisions by courts of last resort in other states having fire statutes similar to our own. As early as 1847 Chief Justice Shaw declared that the design as well as the legal effect of such a statute was to afford indemnity to those suffering damage from fire caused by the use of a dangerous apparatus. This same view was again expressed in 1863 by Chief Justice Bigelow, as follows. "It is not a penal statute, but purely remedial in its nature; and it is to be interpreted fairly and liberally, so as to secure to parties injured an indemnity from those who reap the advantages and profits arising from the use of a dangerous mode of locomotion, by means of which buildings and other property are destroyed." Hart v. Western R. Corp. 13 Met. 99; Lyman v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Cush. 288; Pratt v. Atlantic & St. L. R. Co. 42 Me. 579; Smith v. Boston & M. Railroad, 63 N. H. 25; Ross v. Boston & W. R. Co. 6 Allen, 90; Rodemacher v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 41 Iowa, 297, 20 Am. Rep. 592.

It is true that in the De Busk Case various decisions relating to stock-killing statutes were referred to and commented upon by way of analogy or illustration. Such references and comments are not to be taken as sustaining the validity of the stock-killing statute. The question of the validity of such statute was not then before the court. As was said in Johnson v. Bailey, 17 Colo. 69: "It is not every remark in a judicial opinion that amounts to a judicial decision." In Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 5 L. ed. 257, Chief Justice Marshall said: "It is a maxim not to be disregarded that general expressions in every opinion are to be taken in connection with the case in which those expressions are used. If they go beyond the case they may be respected, but ought not to control the judgment in a subsequent suit when the very point is presented for decision. The reason of this maxim is obvious. The question actually before the court is investigated with care, and considered in its full extent. Other principles, which may serve to illustrate it, are considered in their relation to the case decided, but their possible bearing on all other cases is seldom completely investigated." The decision in Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Henderson, 10 Colo. 1, cannot be considered as upholding the constitutionality of the stock-killing statute. True, it was remarked in the opinion in that case that the statute was a cumulative remedy; but the real question decided was that the statute did not repeal or suspend the common-law action for damages occasioned by negligence, and the judgment of the lower court was affirmed upon the ground that the evidence fairly tended to establish negligence. The first point of the syllabus in the Henderson Case was, therefore, unwarranted by the decision. In Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Lujan, 6 Colo. 338, the decision turned upon a question of pleading. It does not appear that the constitutionality of the stock-killing statute was challenged, either in the Lujan Case or the Henderson Case. The maxim "stare decisis," therefore, cannot be fairly invoked as sustaining the constitutionality of such statute.

The statute making every railroad company unconditionally liable in case it shall kill or damage a domestic animal by running its trains over or against such animal stands on a footing quite different from the fire statute. Fire is a dangerous element, and according to the ancient common-law rule was, as stated in the De Busk Case, that "a person who makes a fire must see that it does no harm, and must answer for the damage, if it does any." In the case of domestic animals, the general rule at common law was that, if such animals trespassed upon the lands of others, the owner was liable in damages, unless he could show that the lands should have been fenced. Besides, the rule at common law was that a party running coaches or other vehicles could be held liable for damages caused by such vehicles on the ground of negligence or willful misconduct, but not when the damage was the result of pure accident. Since by the progress of invention vehicles propelled by steam and electricity have come into use as a means of transporting persons and property, the common-law rule of liability on the ground of negligence has been applied to the operation of such vehicles, though a higher degree of diligence has been required on account of the greater liability to injury arising from the use of a more dangerous motive power. But we are not aware that it has ever been held as a common-law rule that steam or electric railway companies, lawfully operating their trains, are liable for damages thereby occasioned in the absence of negligence. By virtue of statutes, however, railway companies have frequently been required to provide additional safe-guards against accidents and injuries to persons and property from the operation of their trains. These requirements have been upheld as valid police regulations, and omissions to comply therewith have been held to constitute sufficient ground of liability. For example: It has been held that a statute requiring a railroad company to fence its line of railway is a valid police regulation, and in states where such statutes have been adopted railway companies have been held liable for injuries done to domestic animals where the injury is shown to have been occasioned by the neglect of the company to fence its railway. The element of neglect is the basis of liability in such cases. Perhaps the same rule may apply where the statute gives railway companies the option of fencing their roads on pain of being held liable for injuries caused to animals through neglect to avail themselves of the opportunity of fencing. Hayes v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 111 U. S. 228, 28 L. ed. 410; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Humes, 115 U. S. 512, 29 L. ed. 463; Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Peoples, 92 Ill. 97, 34 Am. Rep. 112; Wilder v. Maine Cent. R. Co. 65 Me. 332, 20 Am. Rep. 698; Barnett v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 68 Mo. 56, 30 Am. Rep. 773; Thorpe v. Rutland & B. R. Co. 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625; Dacres v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 1 Wash. St. 525.

7. It is earnestly contended that the stock-killing statute as it existed under the Act of 1885 was unconstitutional. The power of the courts to declare legislative acts unconstitutional should be exercised with that delicacy and consideration which are always due to a co-ordinate department of the government. So long as a legislative act is within the sphere of legislative power—that is, so long as it is not an encroachment upon the province of some other department of the government—it will be upheld, unless clearly in conflict with some provision of the constitution of the state or nation, or in violation of some private right thereby secured. The conflict between the legislative act and some specific provision of the fundamental law must, in general, be clearly apparent, or the act will not be deemed unconstitutional. That a statute may, in the opinion of the court, be against the spirit of the constitution, or against the policy of the government, is not sufficient to warrant the court in declaring it unconstitutional. The courts cannot arrest unwise or oppressive acts of legislation so long as such acts are within constitutional bounds. Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. chap. 7.

8. Stock-killing statutes similar to our own have been considered and held unconstitutional in several states. The court of appeals of this state has also expressed a like opinion. These decisions have been placed upon various grounds. The statute in question was obviously intended to be remedial as well as penal. Sutherland, Stat. Constr. §§ 208, 359. The statute cannot be sustained upon the ground that it is penal. It lacks an essential element of a penal statute, in that it permits the penalty to be visited upon a party not guilty of doing anything prohibited, or of violating any duty imposed by law. Potter's Dwar. Stat. 74. The statute cannot be classed as merely remedial, nor as a statute of indemnity, in that it fixes the amount to be paid for certain kinds of animals by an arbitrary schedule of prices without allowing proof of their actual value. As to other kinds of animals, also, it provides for fixing their value by appraisers, without allowing proof of their real value, and in a certain contingency the value may be fixed by a proceeding wholly ex parte. It is no answer to these objections that the schedule of prices may be reasonable, or that railroad companies may join in the appraisal proceedings. A statute cannot be considered merely remedial or compensatory which compels a party to pay for property destroyed without allowing him to produce evidence of its value. It is true the statute says that "no railroad company shall at any time be required to pay more than the market value of any animal killed or damaged;" but nowhere in the statute is there any provision or an ascertainment of such value by evidence or by the usual mode of hearing and trial, or by any mode of actual trial. The statute not only makes a railroad company unconditionally liable for any domestic animal it may kill or damage, but it deprives the company of the mode of trial afforded to other litigants in like cases. By the terms of the statute, when the value of an animal is fixed by the schedule, neither party can vary the same; in the appraisalment of other animals neither party can be heard by witnesses or counsel. This would seem to bear equally against both parties, but it does not. The remedy of the statute being cumulative, the owner of animals killed or damaged may resort to the statute, or he may rely upon his common-law action, as was held in the Henderson Case. Sutherland Stat. Constr. § 899.

But when the owner resorts to the statute, there is no alternative for the railroad company, if the statute be upheld. In these respects the statute denies to railroad companies "the equal protection of the laws." It provides that they may be subjected to liability and to a judgment without opportunity for hearing or trial according to "the law of the land," and thus they may be deprived of their property "without due process of law." Such a statute cannot be upheld as constitutional. In this connection the language of Mr. Webster is most appropriate: "By the law of the land is most clearly intended the general law; a law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial." U. S. Const. art. 14; Colo. Const. art. 2, § 25; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 431; East Kingdon v. Towle, 48 N. H. 65, 97 Am. Dec. 575, 2 Am. Rep. 174; San Mateo County v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 13 Fed. Rep. 145; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Outcalt, 2 Colo. App. 395; Graves v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 5 Mont. 556, 51 Am. Rep. 81; Dacres v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 1 Wash. St. 525.

9. We do not decide that the legislature has not the power to enact a valid statute making railroad companies liable for domestic animals killed or damaged by the operation of their trains, irrespective of the question of negligence. What we decide is that, as the statute did not require the fencing of railways, either imperatively or optionally, under such circumstances as are disclosed in this record, there was no basis for a penalty and that the mode prescribed by the statute for enforcing liability as a matter of indemnity is in violation of constitutional rights.

10. By the second count of the complaint plaintiff seeks to recover twice the full value of the animal killed. This recovery is claimed on account of the alleged failure of the defendant company to keep the book and to file notice therein of the killing of said animal, as required by amended section 15 of the statute. If we were at liberty to ignore amended section 14, the question of the sufficiency of the second count might be somewhat difficult of determination. But we are of the opinion that section 15 must stand or fall with the other sections of the statute considered in this opinion. It evidently was not designed that there should be a trial, as in other civil actions to ascertain the actual value of the animal killed under section 15, while the schedule price or statutory mode of appraisement as provided by section 14 should be resorted to for other purposes; nor was it, in our opinion, the design of section 15 to give the owner of an animal killed twice the full value thereof in addition to the schedule price or appraised value, or double that sum, as provided by section 14. The sections of the statute considered in this opinion must be construed together as dependent, and not as independent, provisions.

Our conclusion is that, while the reason given for the dismissal of the action by the district court was not warranted, nevertheless, under the law as it then existed, no valid judgment could have been rendered upon the pleadings, and therefore the judgment of dismissal must be affirmed.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

Elizabeth DAVIS, Resp't.,
v.
Frank STEEPS et al., Appls.

(.....Wis.....)

The docket entry of a judgment against Edward Davis is not constructive notice that there is an incumbrance against either E. A. Davis or Edward A. Davis and does not affect the rights of a person who has no notice of the actual identity of Edward Davis and the judgment debtor.

(April 10, 1894.)

APPPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Winnebago County Court in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enjoin the enforcement of a judgment against Edward Davis against real estate which plaintiff had procured from one E. A. Davis. Affirmed.

Statement by Pinney, J.:

This action was brought to obtain a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant Frank Steeps, who had recovered a judgment against one Edward Davis for $61.04, docketed in the office of the clerk of the circuit court of Winnebago county January 4, 1889, and the defendant Kloeckner, as sheriff of Winnebago county, from selling the premises described in the complaint on execution issued out of said court upon said judgment. One E. A. Davis, of Oshkosh, Wis., acquired the legal title to the lot in question November 21, 1887, by a warranty deed thereof to him by that name, and January 22, 1892, sold and conveyed it, by the same name, by warranty deed, to the plaintiff, for a valuable consideration then paid; and she had no knowledge or information at the time of the completion of her purchase that there was any judgment that was a lien against the lot, or that there was any judgment against her grantor, E. A. Davis, by any name whatever, though, as a matter of fact, the said Edward Davis, against whom the judgment had been rendered, was the E. A.

NOTE.—The general rule by which an initial of a middle name is regarded as no part of the name is denied application to the case of docketing a judgment for constructive notice. As to effect of errors in name in index of judgment, see note to Dewey v. Sugg (N. C.) 14 L. R. A. 393, in which it 23 L. R. A.

appears that the decisions are not entirely uniform on this subject.

As to acquisition and use of name generally, see note to Laffin & Rand Powder Co. v. Stayler (Pa.) 14 L. R. A. 690.

Davis, owner of the premises which were so sold and conveyed to the plaintiff. He was, and had been, a resident of Missouri ever since December, 1888, and there was no judgment docketed or filed in the office of the clerk of the circuit court of the county against the name of E. A. Davis. There was nothing in the transcript of the judgment so filed and docketed against the name of Edward Davis giving any information as to the description or residence of the plaintiff or defendant. That there are, and have been for a long time, other persons by the name of Edward Davis living in said county, who had no middle name or initial. The Christian name of the said E. A. Davis is Edward; and at the time of the plaintiff's purchase, and for a long time prior thereto, said E. A. Davis was generally known as "Edward Davis," and by some as "Edward Davis the Second" to distinguish him from the plaintiff's husband, who was known as "Edward the First," of which the plaintiff then had notice. That the defendant Steeps prior to the time of taking his judgment, knew that said E. A. Davis' name was Edward A. Davis. There was evidence that the plaintiff's husband acted as her agent in making the purchase, and made it from one C. D. Church, the agent of said E. A. Davis, and that said Church furnished an abstract of the title, procured from the Winnebago Abstract Company. And Mr. Powers, who made it, testified that he examined the records to see if there were any judgments against E. A. Davis, but found none; that he found one against Edward Davis, and one against E. H. Davis, but he did not put them on the abstract; did not think they ought to go on. The court held that the judgment in favor of the defendant Frank Steeps was not a lien on the premises in question, as against the plaintiff, or any one claiming under or through her, and gave judgment granting the perpetual injunction prayed for, from which the defendants appealed.

Messrs. Thompson, Harshaw & Davidson, with Mr. J. W. Crozier, for appellants:

Steeps, who was the plaintiff in the original action, sued the defendant by his Christian name. The defendant in that action is the grantor of the plaintiff in this, and for all legal purposes the full name of that defendant, and of this plaintiff's grantor, was Edward Davis.

Johnson v. Hess, 9 L. R. A. 471, 126 Ind. 298, and cases cited.

The law knows but one Christian name.

8 Washb. Real. Prop. 4th ed. p. 265; Games v. Stiles, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 322, 10 L. ed. 476; Franklin v. Talmadge, 5 Johns. 84; Keene v. Meade, 23 U. S. 3 Pet. 1, 7 L. ed. 581; Kellam v. Toms, 38 Wis. 601.

The omission of the middle initial, or a mistake in such initial, is entirely immaterial in legal proceedings, whether civil or criminal. The law recognizes but one Christian name.

Johnson v. Day, 2 N. Dak. 295, 16 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 114.

The middle letter is no part of the name 23 L. R. A.

and may be omitted or rejected as surplusage.

Thompson v. Lee, 21 Ill. 242; People v. Cook, 14 Barb. 259; Milk v. Christie, 1 Hill, 102; Roosevelt v. Gardinier, 2 Cow. 463; Rooks v. State, 83 Ala. 79.

It is no part of the surname for it is supposed to be the exponent of an appellation received in baptism; and it is no part of the Christian name, for no person can have more than one Christian name.

Bratton v. Seymour, 4 Watts, 329; People v. Cook, 14 Barb. 259.

An initial letter expresses no word and is not a name. It can only be an abbreviation for a name.

People v. Ferguson, 8 Cow. 106; Bratton v. Seymour, supra; People v. Cook, 14 Barb. 307; Seely v. Schenck, 2 N. J. L. 71.

A full name consists of one Christian or given name, and one surname or patronymic. The two constitute the legal name of the person. Any one may have as many middle names or initials as he chooses, they do not affect his legal name; and they may be inserted or not in a deed or contract without affecting its legal validity.

Schofield v. Jennings, 68 Ind. 232, and cases cited; Enewold v. Olsen (Neb.) 23 L. R. A. 578.

Is a deed, mortgage, judgment or other lien inoperative if it runs to John Smith, because there are three or four persons of that name residing in the same city?

Coit v. Starkweather, 8 Conn. 289.

The middle initial is unimportant and suggests nothing.

Johnson v. Hess, 9 L. R. A. 471, 126 Ind. 312, and cases cited.

It is competent to show that a person is known as well without as with a middle name.

Games v. Stiles, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 322, 10 L. ed. 476.

To purchase in good faith is to purchase without knowledge of the outstanding incumbrance or any information sufficient to put the purchaser upon inquiry.

Rovell v. Williams, 54 Wis. 636; Mueller v. Brigham, 53 Wis. 178; Cutler v. James, 64 Wis. 173, 54 Am. Rep. 603; Fallass v. Pierce, 30 Wis. 443.

Failure to make inquiry in addition to examination of records is evidence of bad faith.

Wade, Notice, § 270; Brinkman v. Jones, 44 Wis. 498; Shotwell v. Harrison, 30 Mich. 179.

What is sufficient to put a purchaser upon an inquiry is good notice, that is, where a man has sufficient information to lead him to a fact, he shall be deemed conscious of it.

Green v. Slayter, 4 Johns. Ch. 38, 1 L. ed. 756; Coy v. Coy, 15 Minn. 119; Parker v. Kane, 4 Wis. 1, 35 Am. Dec. 283; Pringle v. Dunn, 37 Wis. 449, 19 Am. Rep. 772; Hall v. Delaplaine, 5 Wis. 206, 68 Am. Dec. 57; Deuster v. McCamus, 14 Wis. 307.

Where a purchaser has knowledge of any fact sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry, which if prosecuted with ordinary diligence would lead to actual notice of some right or title in conflict with that he is about to purchase, it is his duty to make the inquity, and if he does not make it, it is evidence of bad faith or neglect to such an extent that the law will presume that he made it and will charge him with the actual notice he would have received if he had made it.

Cambridge Valley Bank v. Delano, 48 N. Y. 326; Williamson v. Brown, 15 N. Y. 354; Baker v. Bliss, 89 N. Y. 70; Lamont v. Stimson, 5 Wis. 443; Brinkman v. Jones, 44 Wis. 498; Wade, Notice, § 11, and cases cited in the note thereto.

A purchaser is chargeable with notice of what appears in his chain of title.

Pringle v. Dunn, 87 Wis. 466, 19 Am. Rep. 772.

When a purchaser cannot make out a title but by a deed which leads him to another fact, he will be presumed to have knowledge of that fact.

Ibid.; Fitzhugh v. Barnard, 12 Mich. 105; Case v. Erwin, 18 Mich. 434; Baker v. Mather, 25 Mich. 51; Prost v. Beekman, 1 Johns. Ch. 288, 1 L. ed. 143; Gibert v. Peteler, 38 N. Y. 165; 1 Story, Eq. 400.

A person who purchases property, knowing of a prior incumbrance is not a purchaser in good faith without notice actual or constructive.

Gilbert v. Jess, 81 Wis. 110; Acer v. Westcott, 46 N. Y. 384, 7 Am. Rep. 355.

Mr. B. E. Van Keuren, for respondent:

The middle name or initial is an essential part of the name.

Terry v. Sisson, 125 Mass. 560; Parker v. Parker, 146 Mass. 821; Wood v. Reynolds, 1 Watts & S. 406; Hutchinson's App. 92 Pa. 876; Dutton v. Simmons, 65 Me. 533, 20 Am. Rep. 729; Com. v. Hall, 8 Pick. 262; Com. v. Shearman, 11 Cush. 546; Com. v. McAvoy, 16 Gray, 235; State v. Homer, 40 Me. 438; State v. Dresser, 54 Me. 569; McKay v. Speak, 8 Tex. 876.

A party is not bound to notice or investigate mere neighborhood rumor, whether true or not.

Larzelere v. Starkweather, 38 Mich. 107; Lamont v. Stimson, 5 Wis. 443; Pringle v. Dunn, 87 Wis. 449, 19 Am. Rep. 772; Butler v. Stevens, 26 Me. 484.

If plaintiff was bound to know of the existence of this judgment, it certainly was no notice to plaintiff of any fact which it did not contain, and as other evidence was necessary to prove that this Edward Davis and E. A. Davis were the same person, it follows logically that there was nothing in the records or upon the docket that could be even constructive notice to plaintiff that this judgment was a lien upon the property purchased from E. A. Davis.

Hesse v. Mann, 40 Wis. 589; Pringle v. Dunn, 87 Wis. 462, 19 Am. Rep. 772; Hiles v. Atlee, 80 Wis. 221.

Pinney, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There is no ground for claiming that the plaintiff had actual notice of the existence of any judgment lien against the property of her grantor, or of any facts and circumstances sufficient to put her on inquiry in that behalf. The abstract of title was furnished by and on behalf of her vendor; and 23 L. R. A.

Mr. Powers, who prepared it, and in so doing discovered that there was a judgment docketed against Edward Davis, was not the agent of the plaintiff for any purpose connected with the sale and conveyance of the lot. Hence, there can be but one ground for affecting the plaintiff with notice of the existence of a judgment lien against the lot, namely, by constructive notice, by matter of record appearing upon the docket of judgments in the office of the clerk of the circuit court of the county. The docket of a judgment, in order to operate as constructive notice, must contain all the essential matters required by law. The statute in relation to the docketing of judgments requires the clerk of the circuit court to "enter in a judgment docket, either arranged alphabetically or accompanied by an alphabetical index, in books to be provided by the county and kept by him, a docket of such judgment [among other things] containing: (1) The name at length of each judgment debtor, with his place of abode, title and trade or profession, if any such be stated in the record. (2) The name of the judgment creditor, in like manner." It is only through the medium of a sufficient and legal docketing of the judgment that it can become a lien on the real estate of the judgment debtor; and it is the duty of the judgment creditor to see to it, if he would secure such lien, that his judgment is properly docketed, for, as against a bona fide purchaser for value, any material defect or omission in that respect is the fault of the judgment creditor, and the loss, if any, occasioned thereby, will be regarded as his own. Wood v. Reynolds, 7 Watts & S. 406; Hutchinson's App. 92 Pa. 186; Johnson v. Hess, 126 Ind. 298, 9 L. R. A. 471.

Was the name of the judgment debtor, whose true name is Edward A. Davis, so designated upon the judgment docket by the name of Edward Davis as to make the judgment in question a lien on his real estate, and constructive notice to subsequent purchasers? It is true that the common law, as a general rule, recognizes but one Christian name; and hence, for most purposes, the middle name or names, or the middle initial letter or letters, of a person's name, are not material, either in civil or criminal proceedings, and a variance in this respect is generally held to be immaterial. The omission or insertion of, or even a mistake in, a person's middle name or initial in a conveyance, is, as between the parties thereto, unimportant; and there can be no doubt but the judgment in this case, as between the parties, is a valid judgment against E. A. Davis or Edward A. Davis, by whichever name he may be known or called. The authorities collected in 16 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law. 114 et seq., contain numerous citations to the foregoing effect. But the question, we think, is materially different in the case of a docket entry of a judgment, in order to make it a lien, and effective as constructive notice thereof to subsequent purchasers, where the statute for that purpose requires the entry upon the book of "the name at length of each judgment debtor." In Terry v. Sisson, 125

Mass. 560, which was a trustee process, it was held, in accordance with numerous decisions in that state, that the middle name or initial is an essential part of the name, and that Sarah Sisson and Sarah F. Sisson were different names, and that the service upon the bank of process, as trustee of Sarah Sisson, was not sufficient notice of itself to bind the funds of Sarah F. Sisson in the hands of the bank, and that, it having paid over the funds to the latter, it could not be made liable to pay the same again to the plaintiff in the suit. Parker v. Parker, 146 Mass. 320. In Dutton v. Simmons, 65 Me. 583, 20 Am. Rep. 729, the cases are considered at length, in this aspect of the question, in a learned opinion; and it was held that a certificate of attachment of the real estate of Henry M. Hawkins, when the name of the defendant in the writ was Henry F. Hawkins, was such a misdescription of the person sued as rendered the attachment of the real estate of the latter void. In Wood v. Reynolds, 7 Watts & S. 406, it was held that the omission of an initial letter in the defendant's name in the docket of judgment, which distinguishes him from others of the same name, whereby a purchaser of the defendant's real estate is deceived, although the judgment would be binding as to the original parties to it, would be of no effect as against a purchaser; and there are many other cases in the Pennsylvania Reports to the same effect. In Hutchinson's App., 92 Pa. 186, it was held that the omission of a middle letter in a name in the judgment index was fatal to a lien, and that the rule which requires the judgment index to give accurate information cannot be departed from; and very recently, in Crouse v. Murphy, 140 Pa. 835, 12 L. R. A. 58, the same ruling was repeated. The object of the statute is that the judgment docket shall, of itself, furnish reasonably satisfactory evidence whether an incumbrance by judgment exists against the party from whom one is about to make a purchase of real estate. Here the title was in E. A. Davis, and he conveyed the lot by the same name. The docket entry of a judgment against Edward Davis was not, we think, constructive notice that there was an incumbrance against either E. A. Davis or Edward A. Davis. As already observed, the plaintiff had no notice of the actual identity of Edward Davis and E. A. Davis. We think the cases referred to establish a safe, as well as a reasonable rule. It follows that the judgment of the county court is correct.

The judgment of the County Court for Winnebago County is affirmed.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Isadore COHN, Piff. in Err.,

PEOPLE of the State of Illinois,

(.....Ill.....)

1. The punishment of imitators or counterfeiters of trade-marks may be provided for under the title of an Act "to Protect Associations, Unions of Workmen, and Persons in Their Labels, Trade-marks, and Forms of Advertising."
2. A statute giving the right to a trade-mark in a label adopted by "any person, association, or union of workmen" is not a local or special law granting special privileges, immunities, or franchises, since it is not limited to associations of any particular class of persons.
3. A label on cigars, stating that they are made by a first-class workman, a member of a certain union, "an organization opposed to inferior, rat-shop, coolie, prison, or filthy tenement-house workmanship," is neither immoral nor against public policy, since it attacks no other manufacturer of cigars, and cannot be denied protection as a trade-mark on that ground.

(March 31, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Cook County to review a judgment convicting defendant of violating the trade-mark law. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Reed, Brown & Allen, for plaintiff in error:

A man can use trade-marks, labels, and advertisements to announce, establish, identify, and protect his own trade and his own goods; but when he goes further, and through the medium of a pretended label, trade-mark, or advertisement assails in direct and unequivocal terms the qualities of others' productions, he cannot ask the court to sustain, either by way of injunction or criminal or civil prosecution, this alleged right of injuring his neighbor. A trade-mark is a protection, and not a weapon for offensive warfare.

Browne, Trade marks, § 602; McVey v. Brendel, 13 L. R. A. 377, 144 Pa. 285.

That part of the statute, making the certificate of the public officer, who is authorized only to certify as to the record of a document, and who has no power except to record when presented, evidence of the right of the applicant to use a trade-mark and of his having adopted the same, is a plain infraction of the constitutional rights of the people of this state.

United States v. Braun, 89 Fed. Rep. 775.

All that portion of the act which relates to criminal prosecution, the imposition of penalties, fines, and imprisonment for counterfeit-

NOTE.—The statute of Illinois which governs the above case is clearly intended to change the law as established by decisions in the absence of statute in the cases of Cigar makers' Prot. Union, No. 98 v. Conham (Minn.) 8 L. R. A. 125; Weener v. Brayton (Mass.) 8 L. R. A. 640; McVey v. Brendel (Pa.) 13 L. R. A. 377.

The charge that the trade-mark in question was immoral and against public policy raises a question somewhat like that in respect to the invalidity of a deceptive trade-mark, which is presented in the note to Joseph v. Macowaky (Cal.) 19 L. R. A. 58.

23 L. R. A.

ing or imitating trade-marks, labels, and forms of advertisement, is designed not to protect the owners of labels or trade-marks, but to punish imitators and counterfeiters, and therefore the title is inadequate.

It is not civil legislation to protect civil rights but it is criminal legislation, creating and defining crimes and providing for their punishment. Article 5, section 19, of the Constitution provides that no act hereafter passed shall embrace more than one subject and that shall be expressed in the title.

Leach v. People, 122 Ill. 420; People v. Melten, 32 Ill. 181; People v. Institute of Protestant Deaconesses, 71 Ill. 229; Middleport v. Aetna L. Ins. Co. 82 Ill. 562; Welch v. Post, 99 Ill. 471; Larned v. Tiernan, 110 Ill. 173; Fuller v. People, 92 Ill. 182; Honek v. People, 8 L. R. A. 887, 184 Ill. 139; McDuffie v. State, 87 Ga. 687; Snell v. Chicago, 8 L. R. A. 858, 183 Ill. 418; State v. Pierson, 44 La. Ann. 90; Darice v. Saginaw County Supra, 89 Mich. 295; Case v. Loftus, 48 Fed. Rep. 889; Johnson v. Jones, 87 Ga. 85; Ellicott Mach. Co. v. Search, 72 Md. 22; People v. Congdon, 77 Mich. 351; Re Breene, 14 Colo. 401; Brooks v. People, Id. 418.

While persons are protected in their labels, without regard to their avocation, associations or unions, in order to avail themselves of the act, must be associations or unions of workmen. Capitalists, property owners, or manufacturers who associate themselves together either as unions or associations, cannot avail themselves of the privileges of this act.

The act is part and parcel of a series of acts passed by the General Assembly of 1891, and designed to favor workmen as a class. The court has already held two of these acts unconstitutional and void and is not called upon to decide the constitutionality about the last portion of this class legislation.

Wilder v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 70 Mich. 382; Calder v. Bull, 8 U. S. 8 Dall. 387, 1 L. ed. 648; Durkee v. Janesville, 28 Wis. 464, 9 Am. Rep. 500; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Williams, 49 Ark. 492; Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 168, 59 Am. Dec. 759; Ramsey v. People, 17 L. R. A. 858, 142 Ill. 380; Kroger v. People, 16 L. R. A. 492, 141 Ill. 171.

The cigar maker's international union is organized and has adopted this label and procured the passage of this act of the general assembly for the purpose of coercing workmen into its ranks and compelling manufacturers to employ union men at the price dictated by them.

Such illegal use and purpose once demonstrated no protection can be accorded either this association or its label.

Old Dominion SS. Co. v. McKenna, 30 Fed. Rep. 48; Emack v. Kane, 34 Fed. Rep. 46; Casey v. Cincinnati Typographical Union, No. 3, 12 L. R. A. 193, 45 Fed. Rep. 135; United States v. Kane, 23 Fed. Rep. 748; Sherry v. Perkins, 147 Mass. 212; Coeur D'Alene Consol. Min. Co. v. Miners Union of Wardner, 19 L. R. A. 882, 61 Fed. Rep. 260.

Messrs. Clifford & More, for defendant in error:

The punishment of piracy of labels is a means naturally and "reasonably adapted to secure the object indicated by the title."
23 L. R. A.

Larned v. Tiernan, 110 Ill. 173; McGurn v. Chicago Board of Education, 183 Ill. 123; People v. Hazelwood, 116 Ill. 819.

A law is general, not because it embraces all the governed, but that it may, from its terms, when many are embraced in its provisions, and all others may be when they occupy the position of those who are embraced.

Hawthorn v. People, 109 Ill. 302, 50 Am. Rep. 610.

Shope, J. delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a prosecution of the plaintiff in error for the violation of section 2 of an Act entitled "An Act to Protect Associations, Unions of Workmen, and Persons in Their Labels, Trade-Marks, and Forms of Advertising," in force July 1, 1891. Before a justice of the peace he was found guilty, and a fine imposed. On appeal to the circuit court by the defendant, a trial was had by jury, resulting in a verdict of guilty, and a judgment for $100 fine and costs rendered.

Section one of the Act under consideration provides: "Whenever any person, association or union of workmen, have adopted, or shall hereafter adopt for their protection, any label, trade-mark, or form of advertisement announcing that goods to which such label, trade-mark, or form of advertisement shall be attached, were manufactured by such person or by a member or members of such association or union, it shall be unlawful for any person or corporation to counterfeit or imitate such label, trade-mark or form of advertisement. Every person violating this section shall upon conviction be punished by imprisonment in the county jail for not less than three months nor more than one year, or by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than two hundred dollars, or both." Section 2 is as follows: "Every person who shall use any counterfeit or imitation of any label, trade-mark, or form of advertisement of any such person, union or association, knowing the same to be counterfeit or imitation, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail for a term of not less than three months nor more than one year, or by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars, nor more than two hundred dollars, or both." Laws 1891, p. 202.

The plaintiff in error was a dealer in cigars, and it is shown that certain witnesses, produced, applied to him for the purchase of cigars by the box; that they objected to purchasing unless there was upon the boxes what was known as the "Union Label;" that there were no such labels upon the boxes produced by the plaintiff in error, and offered to be sold. The plaintiff in error thereupon took these boxes of cigars, went into the back part of his store, and returned with boxes having labels on them. The witnesses then paid for them, and took them away. The boxes were produced and identified as being those sold to the witnesses by plaintiff in error, and upon each of which was a label purporting to be the label of the Cigarmakers' International Union of America. This label is a small blue poster, on which is printed the following: "This certifies that the cigars contained in this box have been made by a first-class workman, a member of the Cigarmakers' International Union of America, an organization opposed to inferior, rat-shop, coolie, prison, or filthy tenement house workmanship. Therefore we recommend these cigars to all smokers throughout the world. All infringements upon this label will be punished according to law. A. Strasser, President C. M. I. U. of America." It is shown that the labels are issued by the association to its members, bearing the local stamp and factory number of the particular factory to which they are issued. It was shown that the labels upon the boxes purchased by the witnesses from Cohn were counterfeit imitations of the labels issued by the Cigarmakers' International Union of America. To prove the adoption of this trade-mark by the Cigarmakers' International Union of America, the people introduced in evidence a certificate of the secretary of state, under his hand and seal, issued in conformity with the provisions of section 8 of the Act under consideration. That section provides that every person, association, or union of workmen that has heretofore adopted, or shall hereafter adopt, a label, trade-mark, or form of advertisement, as aforesaid, may file the same for record in the office of the secretary of state, by leaving two copies, counterparts, or facsimiles thereof with the secretary of state; and the secretary shall deliver to such person, association, or union so filing the same a duly attested certificate of the record of the same. It is then provided that "such certificate of record shall, in all suits and prosecutions under this act, be sufficient proof of the adoption of such label, trade-mark, or form of advertisement, and of the right of said person, association, or union to adopt the same." It was proved that the Cigarmakers' International Union of America was an association of workmen,—of cigarmakers; that the cigars sold by Cohn were manufactured by Gustave Eddelstone; that at the time he sold the cigars to Cohn Bros., of which firm plaintiff in error was a member, there were no blue labels on the boxes, and none were delivered with the cigars; that they were not made by a union factory. It is objected that the evidence was insufficient to warrant the verdict. It need only be said that there was evidence sufficient to justify the jury in finding the defendant guilty of using a counterfeit or imitation label, within the meaning of section 2 of the Act before quoted.

It is next insisted that the statute is in violation of section 18 of article 4 of the Constitution, providing that "no act hereafter passed shall embrace more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title." The title of the act is, "An act to protect associations, unions of workmen and persons in their labels, trade-marks and forms of advertising." It is said by counsel that, while there are provisions of the act designed to protect trade-marks, the provisions of sections 1, 2, 4, 6, and 7 relate to the punishment of imitators or counterfeiters, and those using such imitations or counterfeits, and are enacted for the protection of the owners of the labels, trade-marks, or forms of advertising, and therefore are not within the title of the Act. As said in Larned v. Tiernan, 110 Ill. 177: "The decisions concur in laying down substantially the rule that in consistency with that provision there may be included in an act means which are reasonably adapted to secure the objects indicated by the title." See cases there cited. When the general purpose is declared in the title, the means for its accomplishment, provided by the act, will be presumed to be intended as a necessary incident. O'Leary v. Cook County, 28 Ill. 534; People v. Hazelwood, 116 Ill. 819; McGurn v. Chicago Board of Education, 133 Ill. 123. The penalties for counterfeiting and use of imitations and counterfeits, while intended as punishment for the violation of public law, are imposed to protect, in the language of the title, associations and others entitled to use labels, trademarks, and forms of advertisement, in the use thereof. The objection is not well taken.

It is next said by counsel that "the statute is wholly void, because it is obnoxious to the constitutional inhibition (art. 4, § 22) which provides that the general assembly shall not pass local or special laws granting any incorporation, association, or individual any special privileges, immunity, or franchise whatever." It is urged that, while "persons" are protected in their labels, etc., without regard to their avocations, "associations or unions, to avail of the act, must be associations or unions of workmen." This contention arises from a misapprehension of the statute. It seems clear that the legislature intended that any person, or any association, of whomsoever formed, or any union of workmen, might adopt such labels, etc. If it be permissible to refer to the title of this act, this at once becomes apparent. By reference to section 1, before quoted, it will be seen it is there provided that "whenever any person, association or union of workmen have adopted a label," etc. The language of section 2 is "person, union or association," while sections 3 and 4 are the same as in section 1. Now, referring to the title, it is seen that it is "an act to protect associations, unions of workmen and persons in their labels," etc. Formerly, when the title of acts was no necessary part of legislation, the title was not to be considered in construing the statute. Plummer v. People, 74 Ill. 861; Mills v. Wilkins, 6 Mod. 62; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 58, and note. It is, however, otherwise where, by virtue of constitutional provision, the legislature must prepare and adopt the title, to the end that it shall express the general purposes of the Act. It cannot be resorted to to extend or restrain any positive provision in the body of the law itself. Hadden v. Barney, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 107, 18 L. ed. 518; Williams v. Williams, 8 N. Y. 535; Meyer v. Western Car Co. 102 U. S. 1, 26 L. ed. 59; Eby's App. 70 Pa. 811; Halderman's App. 104 Pa. 251.

It is one of the cardinal principles of construction that the intention of the lawmakers is to be found and given effect; and where there is otherwise doubt or obscurity in the act, or its meaning is doubtful, resort may be had to the title of the act, to enable the court to discover the intent, and remove what otherwise might be uncertain or ambiguous. United States v. Palmer, 16 U. S. 8 Wheat. 631, 4 L. ed. 477, cases supra. The term "unions," as thus applied, has come to have a definite and well understood meaning, and it is to be presumed that the legislature, in using the broader and more comprehensive term "associations," and at the same time making the law applicable to all persons, intended the use of the words in their ordinary sense and signification. There is, indeed, no more reason for saying that by "associations" is meant associations of workmen, thereby limiting the usual and ordinary meaning of the term, than there is to say that the word "persons," as used in the act, should be construed as applying to workmen only. The word "persons" would have the effect of extending the act to, and including, artificial, as well as natural, persons. Rev. Stat. chap. 181, § 1. The objection is not tenable. Hawthorn v. People, 109 Ill. 302, 50 Am. Rep. 610.

It is next objected that the label, an imitation and counterfeit of which is alleged to have been unlawfully used by plaintiff in error, could not have been rightfully adopted either as a label, trade-mark, or form of advertisement. It is said that it transgresses the rules of morality and public policy. We are referred to the rule in respect of trade-marks that, "to be a lawful trade-mark, the emblem must avoid transgressing the rules of morality and public policy" (Browne, Trade-Marks, § 602), and also to the case of McVey v. Brendel, 144 Pa. 235, 18 L. R. A. 877, decided by the supreme court of Pennsylvania, which was a proceeding in equity to restrain the use of imitations of the label adopted by the Cigarmakers' International Union of America. It is conceded there is no statute in that state protecting labels adopted by dealers, etc. The case is cited mainly for the purpose of showing the construction placed upon the blue label by that court, the case having been decided upon other grounds. With all due deference, we are unable to concur in the views of the learned judge who delivered the opinion of the court. By reference to the label, heretofore set out, it will be seen that it is a certificate, signed by the president of the Cigarmakers' International Union of America, certifying that the cigars contained in the box upon which it was placed were "made by a first-class workman, a member of the Cigarmakers' International Union of America, an organization opposed to inferior, rat-shop, coolie, prison, or filthy tenement house workmanship." And it concludes: "Therefore we recommend these cigars to all smokers throughout the world." The purpose, as derived from the label itself, is to send the cigars out to the public, with the assurance that they are made by a first-class workman, who belongs to an order opposed to the inferior workmanship designated. It will be observed that the label attacks no other manufacturer of cigars. It says simply, in effect, these cigars are not the product of inferior, rat-shop, coolie, prison, or filthy tenement house workmanship. Can it be said that one may not, without condemning or aspersing the product of other manufacturers, commend the article he has for sale? If he may do so himself, may he not procure the certificate of others as to the quality of the article he puts upon the market? If one is engaged in the manufacture of wine, is it an aspersion upon the product of other manufacturers that a wine-growers' association certifies that his wine is the pure juice of the grape, free from adulteration? Certainly not. This label does not say or purport to say that cigars made by nonunion men are of the inferior class mentioned, or that cigars made by nonunion men are not free from the impurity or taint to which they might be subjected by such workmanship. It does, in effect, say that cigars are upon the market which are the product of rat-shops, filthy basements, of Chinese establishments, of prisons and tenement houses, and proposes to assure customers that cigars sold under this label are not the product of such establishments. This, and nothing more. And can it be doubted that public policy would be best served, if all manufacturers of cigars would truthfully make the like assurance to the public? We need not extend this discussion. We are of opinion that the label adopted by the Cigarmakers' International Union of America is neither immoral nor against public policy, and might lawfully be adopted by that body.

Other errors are assigned which have been carefully considered, but are not deemed of sufficient importance to merit discussion.

The judgment of the Criminal Court of Cook County will be affirmed.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

William Wood LAMBERTON, Resp.

James M. PERELES et al., Trustees under the Will of William E. Lamberton, Deceased, Appts.

(....Wis....)

1. The circuit court in Wisconsin having general jurisdiction is not precluded from taking jurisdiction of a suit against trustees under a will by the fact that the will has been proved in the county court and the estate finally settled in that court, except the execution of the trusts, although the county court is expressly given jurisdiction of such suits.

2. An assignment may be made of the NOTE.—The assignability of income of a trust for support of the beneficiary when not affected by statute does not appear to have been much touched 23 L. R. A.

upon hitherto, if indeed there are any decisions upon the subject except the one here reported.

income arising out of personal property held in trust for the support of a person during life, where there is no statute restricting it and no restriction on the assignment in the will creating the trust, especially where the assignment is to the wife of the assignor, on her agreement to maintain and educate their children.

(April 10, 1894.)

A PPEAL by defendants from an order of the Circuit Court for Milwaukee County overruling a demurrer to the complaint in a proceeding to set aside an assignment by plaintiff of his interest in a trust estate and to enjoin the payment of the income to any one pending the litigation. Reversed.

Statement by Cassoday, J.:

This action was commenced August 26, 1893. The complaint alleges, in effect: That December 12, 1884, one William E. Lamberton, the father of this plaintiff, made his last will and testament, wherein and whereby he nominated one Jeremiah Quinn as the executor thereof, and did give, devise, and bequeath unto said Quinn and his successors all of his real and personal property, in trust, however, to certain uses and purposes therein named, and particularly upon the trust to divide the said personal property into four equal shares, and one of which to hold during the lifetime of this plaintiff, and to invest the same, and the income thereof to pay to this plaintiff, during his life, for his support and maintenance. That said trustees therein named, in his discretion, at certain times named, might pay over to this plaintiff certain sums of money out of the principal sum of said one-fourth part of the personal estate so devised; not exceeding, in all, however, one half of the one-fourth portion so directed to be held in trust for this plaintiff. That the remainder of said portion should be held and invested by said trustee, and the income arising therefrom should be paid semiannually to this plaintiff, during his lifetime, for his support and maintenance; and on his death the said trustee should hold the said remainder of said portion in trust for the lawful issue of the body of this plaintiff, and the same to invest, and the income thereof to pay to said issue for their support and education during minority, and upon reaching majority to pay to such issue as might then be living the principal sum so directed, and, failing such issue, then to certain other parties. That July 14, 1886, the said William E. Lamberton, being then a resident of Milwaukee, died, leaving said will as his last will and testament. That July 16, 1886, said will was duly presented to the county court for probate. That September 7, 1886, said will was duly admitted to probate. That said Quinn duly qualified as such executor, and entered upon the discharge of his duties, both as executor and trustee, and took possession of the said personal property, and divided and invested the same as provided in said will, and continued to hold the same until the time of his resignation, hereinafter mentioned. That October 4, 1887, by the final decree of said county court then entered, the said estate was adjudged and declared to be finally settled. That the said Quinn, as executor, was discharged from his duties as such executor, and the said personal estate of said deceased was assigned as provided in and by said will. That October 14, 1887, said Quinn tendered his resignation as trustee under said will, and the same was duly accepted by the county court; and the defendants James M. and Thomas J. Pereles were duly appointed trustees in the matter of said trust, in the place and stead of said Quinn, and duly qualified as such, and entered upon the execution thereof, and ever since have continued to be and are such trustees, and have possession of said personal property devised and invested as aforesaid, and all the income and increase thereof. That there has been paid to this plaintiff, out of the principal of the one-fourth portion directed to be held in trust as aforesaid, a sum of money which is equal to one half of said portion, and that there is now held in the hands of the defendants, as trustees, the balance of said portion upon the trust set forth, and in which said balance this plaintiff, under said will, has no title or interest, save only to receive the income thereof from said trustees during his life. That the whole of said income is no more than sufficient for the necessary support and maintenance of this plaintiff. That the income of the said trust fund invested and held for this plaintiff, and payable semiannually, as aforesaid, is due and payable on or about the 1st days of May and November in each year. That the same has heretofore, and until November 1, 1892, been paid to this plaintiff by said trustees, but that since said last date the said defendants, as such trustees, have neglected and refused, and still neglect and refuse, to account to this plaintiff for any of such income, and have neglected and refused, and still do neglect and refuse, to pay to this plaintiff any portion of said income. That the principal fund now held by the defendants as such trustees amounts to about the sum of $10,000 and over, and that the net income therefrom, to which this plaintiff is entitled during his lifetime, amounts to about the sum of $600 per annum, after discharging the expenses of the trustees, and that after such discharge said trustees have received, as the income of such funds, divers sums of money, now long since due and payable to this plaintiff, the exact amount of which this plaintiff is unable to state. That the sole and only ground upon which such trustees refuse to account to this plaintiff for said income, and to pay over the same, is that this plaintiff has assigned, transferred, and parted with the same by an instrument in writing executed by him, and delivered to Gladys L. Lamberton, on or about November 1, 1892, wherein and whereby it is recited that, for sundry considerations thereunto moving, the said William E. Lamberton "hereby transfers and conveys to his wife, the said Gladys L. Lamberton, both of Los Angeles, California, as her separate property, all the income, interest, and profits derived, or to be derived, or accruing from the said estate under said will, to which he was or may be entitled under said will, and which has not heretofore become payable, and been paid to him, with the right in her to collect and receive all such income, interest, and profits directly from the executor, trustee, or other persons or parties, by, from, or through whom the same is or may be payable; that the right and title of the said Gladys L. Lamberton, as above stated, are to continue during her natural life, unless she should outlive said William E. Lamberton, in which event the same shall go to the children of said William E. Lamberton, as provided by said will, always excepting therefrom the farm and real estate, and the rents, issues, and profits thereof; that it is, however, expressly understood and agreed that said Gladys L. Lamberton, so long as she is in the receipt of said income, shall properly care for, educate, and maintain each and both of the children of the said William E. and Gladys L. Lamberton, namely, William Wood Lamberton and Ariel Rennie Lamberton; that in the event of the decease of Mrs. Lucy R. Lamberton, the mother of the said William E. Lamberton, prior to his own, all income from the funds and property which he is or may be entitled to, as resulting therefrom under the will, shall be and become the separate property of the said Gladys L. Lamberton for and during her natural life, but said last-mentioned funds and property shall be and become the property of the children of the said William E. and Gladys L. Lamberton, their heirs and assigns, subject only to the said Gladys L. Lamberton during her life, as aforesaid; that in case, however, either or both of said children shall die before becoming of age, the share or right of such child or children, as the case may be, shall thereupon cease, and be and become the property of the said William E. Lamberton, his heirs and assigns, subject to the right of income, as aforesaid, in said Gladys L. Lamberton during her natural life; that said income, funds, and property are hereby transferred and conveyed, respectively, to the said Gladys L. Lamberton and children, accordingly with the limitations above set forth; that the above includes the Clark manufacturing stock to the said Gladys L. Lamberton." That the defendant Gladys L. Lamberton claims and asserts that by virtue of said assignment she is now, and ever since the execution of said assignment has been, entitled to the said whole of the income of said trust fund. That the said Gladys L. Lamberton parted with no valuable consideration for such instrument. That the stock mentioned was certain stock in which said trust funds were invested, and out of which the aforesaid income was in part derived. That said stock has since been sold, and its proceeds otherwise invested by said trustees, as a part of the funds mentioned. That said Gladys L. Lamberton, at the time of the execution and delivery of said assignment, was, and still is, the lawful wife of this plaintiff. That he has no adequate remedy at law, and prays judgment that said pretended assignment be adjudged and declared to be of no force or effect, and that said trustees may be required to account to this plaintiff for, and pay over to him the income of said trust fund; and that, until the final determination of this action, said trustees may be restrained and prohibited from paying any of said income to said Gladys L. Lamberton, or to any other person for her. To that complaint the trustees, James M. and Thomas J. Pereles, demurred on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action and that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against them. From the order overruling that demurrer the defendants James M. and Thomas J. Pereles, as such trustees, bring this appeal.

38 L. R. A.

Mr. James G. Flanders, with Messrs. Nath, Pereles & Sons, for appellants:

In this state, a conveyance by the husband to the wife conveys an equitable title, and if free from fraud is good as against creditors, and the wife is not bound to show that she paid a valuable consideration, even as against contesting creditors.

Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Monahan, 63 Wis. 198, and cases therein cited.

It was competent for the respondent, William W. Lamberton, to assign and transfer his interest in the income arising from the quarter of the personal property set apart for his use.

In most of the cases which hold that the plaintiff cannot alienate the whole or any portion of the income set apart for his support, it appears either that the amount to be paid the beneficiary was left wholly to the discretion of the trustees, or that by the terms of the trust said income was not to be paid to him, but for his support, or else that the will in express terms, provided that it should be held by the trustees in such manner that the beneficiary could not alienate the income. In cases where the trust required the exercise of discretion of the trustee, it has been held that until such discretion was exercised, there was nothing which could be alienated.

See Leavitt v. Beirne, 21 Conn. 1; Watson v. Cleveland, Id. 537; Wetmore v. Trustlow, 51 N. Y. 343; Williams v. Thorn, 70 N. Y. 270.

In the will the income is to be paid to the beneficiary during his life for his support and maintenance. The words "support and maintenance" are not words creating a trust. The whole amount of the income is to be paid to William W. Lamberton, whether he applies the same to his support or not. No discretion is given to the executor or trustees, either as to the amount to be paid to or how it shall be used by him.

Paisley's App. 70 Pa. 153; Rife v. Geyer, 59 Pa. 396, 98 Am. Dec. 351.

The income provided to be paid to the respondent Lamberton is subject to alienation by him before the same has actually accumulated in the hands of the trustees.

Williams v. Thorn, 70 N. Y. 278.

The trustees in this will have no power to direct or control the respondent, Lamberton, in his expenditures of the income bequeathed to him, and no discretion has been conferred upon the trustees as to such income.

Watson v. Cleveland, 21 Conn. 541; Sparhawk v. Cloon, 125 Mass. 266.

Messrs. Ogden, Hunter & Bottum, for respondent:

A trust for the receipt of the income of personality is analogous to a trust for the receipt of the rents and profits of land, and is not assignable by the person beneficially interested.

That this is a valid trust admits of no doubt. Weber v. Morris, 66 Wis. 886, 57 Am. Rep. 278.

The early trust in personal property, as known to the common law, was not alienable and followed the nature of trusts in realty.

Lewin, Tr. pp. 4, 18; Witham's Case, 4 Inst. 87; Johnson's Case, Popham, 106.

Originally a trust was a mere confidence reposed in the trustee and the only security for the execution of the trust was the honor of the trustee. As this confidence was held to be personal between the trustee and the cestui que trust the beneficial interest was naturally not assignable.

Lewin, Tr. pp. 3, 4.

But the doctrine above noticed was gradually modified and the interest of the cestui que trust became assignable and the older cases were disapproved.

Lewin, Tr. pp. 10, 692, and cases cited.

By the later common law, a trust could not be created with a proviso that the interest of the cestui que trust should not be alienated or be made subject to the claims of creditors; but in case of the creation of a trust, such as the one before us, the right of the beneficiary would pass, for instance, to an assignee in bankruptcy.

Snoudon v. Dales, 6 Sim. 524; Lewin, Tr. pp. 98, 99; Gray, Restraints on Alienation, §§ 175-277.

The law with reference to trusts of realty and of personality was administered upon the same principles.

Hallett v. Thompson, 5 Paige, 588, 3 L. ed. 888.

The ruling in Hallett v. Thompson, that the income of a trust of personality was not assignable in analogy to the rule as to rents and profits was again stated by the chancellor in Gott v. Cook, 7 Paige, 521, 584, 585, 4 L. ed. 256, 264, but on appeal to the court of errors, Cowen, J., criticised the ruling.

Kane v. Gott, 24 Wend. 641, 35 Am. Dec. 641.

Hone v. Van Schaick, 7 Paige, 221, 233, 4 L. ed. 182, 186, held that because section 2 of title 4 of chap. 4, part 2, Rev. Stat. 1829, provided that limitations of future or contingent interests in personal property should be subject to the rules prescribed for real estate that on that account the interest of a cestui que trust in the income from personality was not assignable.

This position that section 63 of the New York Statute, which makes the beneficial interest in a trust for rents and profits inalienable, refers to the income of personality by virtue of the above quoted section 2, title 4, chap. 4, part 2, was taken by the courts in the following cases:

Clute v. Bool, 8 Paige, 83, 85, 4 L. ed. 353, 355; Degraw v. Mason, 11 Paige, 136, 5 L. ed. 84; Sillick v. Mason, 2 Barb. Ch. 79, 5 L. ed. 564. See Craig v. Hone, 2 Edw. Ch. 554, 6 L. ed. 501; Rider v. Mason, 4 Sandf. Ch. 351, 7 L. ed. 1180; Roosevelt v. Roosevelt, 6 Hun, 81; Scott v. Nevins, 6 Duer, 672.

23 L. R. A.

In Kane v. Gott, supra, Justice Cowen, while denying the extension of the principle by analogy, maintained that the rules of real property were not impressed on personal property except as to future contingent limitations.

This position of Justice Cowen was followed in—Grout v. Van Schoonhoven, 1 Sandf. Ch. 836, 7 L. ed. 350; Arnold v. Gilbert, 5 Barb. 190; Cruger v. Cruger, Id. 225; Vail v. Vail, 7 Barb. 226; Brown v. Harris, 25 Barb. 134; Titus v. Weeks, 37 Barb. 186; Perry v. Foster, 62 How. Pr. 228.

Much of this inconsistency disappears when we come to the decisions of the court of appeals and the decisions show a steady approach to the position contended for by the respondent and an ever present readiness to discard the theory of the chancellors that by the act concerning personality and not otherwise, there was extended to that species of property the rule as to the inalienability of rents and profits of land.

Graff v. Bonnett, 31 N. Y. 9, 88 Am. Dec. 236; Campbell v. Foster, 35 N. Y. 361.

Clearly in the nature of things there is no reason why a gift or bequest of personal property, with a power of disposition, should not be measured by the same rule as a grant or devise of real estate with the same power.

Cutting v. Cutting, 86 N. Y. 522; Hutton v. Benkard, 92 N. Y. 295. See Cook v. Lowry, 95 N. Y. 103.

Unless the proposition contended for is correct, a peculiar state of affairs results from the effect of section 3029, Rev. Stat. of Wisconsin (N. Y. Rev. Stat. § 88, art. 2, part 3, chap. 1).

By this section a debtor's property held in trust, may be reached in equity by a judgment creditor, except in the instance of the trust having been created by or the fund having proceeded from some person other than the debtor. Now, it has always been the rule in New York that the statutes in force there, similar to sections 2083 and 2089 of the Wisconsin Statute, enable a creditor to reach that portion of rents and profits of real estate held upon a trust which is not necessary for the debtor's support. See Williams v. Thorn, 70 N. Y. 270. And, in accordance with the law as laid down in the cases cited, a like interest could be reached in the income of personal property held in trust.

But if it be denied that section 2039 relates to personal property, then it follows that section 2083 refers exclusively to real estate. And since section 3029 is only modified, if at all, by section 2083, it follows that creditors cannot reach personal property held in trust, while they can reach the rents and profits of real estate so held. So that section 2083 would be nullified by any conversion of realty into personality.

That this result can follow does not seem reasonable.

See Arzbacher v. Mayer, 53 Wis. 330; Sumner v. Newton, 64 Wis. 210.

Cassoday, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The will in question was admitted to probate by the county court for Milwaukee county. The estate has been fully and finally settled in that court. Nothing remains but for the trustees to execute the trust as directed by the will. The jurisdiction of that court, however, is expressly extended by statute "to all cases of trusts created by will admitted to probate in such court." Section 2448. But such jurisdiction of the county court is not made exclusive. It is to be remembered that the circuit courts have original jurisdiction in all matters, civil and criminal, within this state, not excepted in the constitution, nor prohibited by law. Const. art. 7, § 8. Such judicial power is vested in such courts, "both as to matters of law and equity." Id. § 2. The trustees in charge of the estate were within the jurisdiction of the circuit court for Milwaukee county. The contention that that court did not have jurisdiction to prevent the diversion or dissipation of the income of the trust fund, or control the direction of its payment, is clearly untenable. There is no longer any particular reason in this case why such jurisdiction should be confined to the county court. The facts stated are sufficient to justify the circuit court in taking jurisdiction. Willis v. Fox, 25 Wis. 646; Cullin v. Wheeler, 49 Wis. 507; Hawley v. Tesch, 72 Wis. 299. The question presented is peculiarly one of general equitable cognizance. Thus, in Ewing v. Ewing, L. R. 9 App. Cas. 40, 41, the testator was domiciled in Scotland, where the will was probated, and afterwards confirmed in England; and it was held that the court of chancery in England had jurisdiction to administer the trusts of the will. The Earl of Selborne, L. C., after declaring, in effect, that courts of equity, in England, are, and always have been, courts of conscience, operating in personam, and accustomed to compel the performance of contracts and trusts as to subjects not within their jurisdiction, and, in speaking for the court, said: "A jurisdiction against trustees, which is not excluded, ratione legis rei sitæ, as to land, cannot be excluded, as to movables, because the author of the trust may have a foreign domicile; and for this purpose it makes no difference whether the trust is constituted inter vivos, or by a will or mortis causa deed. Accordingly, it has always been the practice of the English courts of chancery to administer, as against executors and trustees personally subject to its jurisdiction, the whole personal estate of testators or intestates who have died domiciled abroad, by decrees like that now in question." See 1 Perry, Tr. §§ 70, 71. We must hold that the circuit court had jurisdiction.

The principal controversy is as to whether the written instrument executed by the plaintiff, and delivered to his wife, Gladys L. Lamberton, on or about November 1, 1892, whereby he assigned and transferred to her the income of the trust fund in question, as mentioned, is valid. The validity of the trust is expressly conceded. The contention on the part of the plaintiff is, and it is said that the trial court held, that our statutes applicable were borrowed from New York, and that under these statutes, as construed in that state, the assignment is void. The sections particularly relied upon are 2068, 2089. One of these declares that: "No person beneficially interested in a trust for the receipt of the rents and profits of lands, can assign or in any manner dispose of such interest: but the rights and interests of every person for whose benefit a trust for the payment of a sum in gross is created, are assignable." Section 2089. The other declares that: "When a trust is created to receive the rents and profits of lands, and no valid direction for accumulation is given, the surplus of such rents and profits, beyond the sum that may be necessary for the education and support of the person for whose benefit the trust is created, shall be liable in equity, to the claims of the creditors of such person, in the same manner as other personal property which cannot be reached by an execution." These sections are contained in the chapter of "Uses and Trusts," found under the title "Of Real Property and the Nature and Qualities of Estates therein." They were taken almost literally from sections 57 and 68 of the article on "Uses and Trusts" in New York. 4 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 8th ed. 2488, 2489. Until the recent amendments the same was true respecting sections 2087-2089, Rev. Stat., relating to "vested and contingent estates," the "suspension of power of alienation," and the "limitation on power of suspending alienation." 4 N. Y. Rev. Stat. p. 2432, §§ 13-15. These statutes relate expressly to real estate. They may possibly become applicable to the rents and profits of the farm mentioned upon the death of the plaintiff's mother. The assignability of such rents and profits of lands is not involved in this controversy. The controversy here is confined to the assignability of the income arising, and to arise, out of personal property held in trust, as stated. The New York statutes, unlike ours, in addition to the sections cited, also place an express limit on the power of the suspension of the ownership of personal property longer than two lives in being. Id. p. 2516, § 1. This difference in the statutes of the two states has been repeatedly recognized by this court. De Wolf v. Lawson, 61 Wis. 474, 50 Am. Rep. 148; Scott v. West, 63 Wis. 581, 582, and Webster v. Morris, 66 Wis. 382, 57 Am. Rep. 278. The same distinction has been observed by the supreme court of Minnesota, citing numerous New York cases. Re Tower's Estate, 49 Minn. 871. In addition to the statute so limiting the power of the suspension of the ownership of personal property, the New York statutes expressly declare that: "In all other respects limitations of future or contingent interests in personal property shall be subject to the rules prescribed in the first chapter of this act, in relation to future estates in lands." 4 N. Y. Rev. Stat. p. 2516, § 2. That includes, not only uses and trusts, but the whole field of real property, and the nature, qualities, and alienation of estates therein. The section last quoted is followed by others prescribing the manner in which "an accumulation of the interest of money, the produce of stock or other income or profits arising from personal property, may and may not be secured." Id. §§ 3-5. The question presented has elicited much discussion in New York. In speaking of these statutes in Graff v. Bonnett, 81 N. Y. 18, 88 Am. Dec. 286, Hogeboom, J., said, in behalf of the court, that: "It is undeniable that if this were an interest in a trust, for the receipt of the rents and profits of lands, it would not be assignable; and it has been held in several cases that the statute which provides that limitations of future or contingent interests in personal property shall be subject to the statutory rules prescribed in relation to future estates in lands was, in effect, a legislative application of the same principles and policy to both classes of property, and that, even if the provisions of the statute were not sufficiently comprehensive absolutely to require, as a peremptory injunction of statute law, their application in all their length and breadth, and in the same degree, to both classes of property, the argument to be derived from the general similarity of the legislative enactments in regard to both classes of property, from the similar, if not equal, mischiefs to be remedied, and from the general policy of the law, would authorize a court of equity, in the exercise of its acknowledged powers, to apply the same rule of construction to both." The same is expressly sanctioned by Judge Wright, speaking for the whole court, in Campbell v. Foster, 85 N. Y. 371, 372. To a similar effect is Cook v. Lowry, 95 N. Y. 108. In Graff v. Bonnett, Denio, Ch. J., dissented, and, after reviewing the prior decisions in that state, said: "Hence, I conclude that there is nothing in our statute law which restrains the alienability of the interest of the beneficiary in a trust to receive and pay over the interest of money or of personal property." 81 N. Y. 19. Thus it appears that notwithstanding the statutes of New York, so making the statutes respecting real estate also applicable to personal property, yet the highest court of that state very reluctantly reached the conclusions mentioned, and then only by a divided court. In this state we have no statute making the chapter on uses and trusts, or any part of it, applicable to personal property. This distinction was not observed by our late Brother Taylor in Arzbacher v. Mayer, 53 Wis. 880; and the question here considered was not there involved. It would seem that the founder of a trust fund may secure the benefits of the same to the object of his bounty by providing that the income thereof shall not be alienable by anticipation, nor subject to be taken for his debts. Holdship v. Patterson, 7 Watts, 547; Rife v. Geyer, 59 Pa. 893, 98 Am. Dec. 351; White v. White, 30 Vt. 838; Pope v. Elliott, 8 B. Mon. 60; Nichols v. Eaton, 91 U. S. 716, 28 L. ed. 254; Broadway Nat. Bank v. Adams, 133 Mass. 170, 43 Am. Rep. 504. This seems to be more unfavorable to the free assignability of such income than the English cases. Brandon v. Robinson, 18 Ves. Jr. 429; Rochford v. Hackman, 9 Hare, 475; Re Dugdale (Dugdale v. Dugdale), L. R. 38 Ch. Div. 176.

These cases make a distinction between a gift void on condition and an absolute gift coupled with a limitation upon the ordinary incidents of the property or income so given. But in the case at bar the founder of the trust has imposed no such condition, and made no such restriction. On the contrary, he has left the plaintiff free to receive the entire income during his life. Upon the death of the testator, and the admission of the will to probate, the equitable right to the income in question at once became vested in the plaintiff. Scott v. West, 63 Wis. 571-573. The trust in question is an active trust. Until the plaintiff parted with his right to the income, or the same became otherwise divested, he could enforce payment thereof as it became due. "The right to control the disposition of property is fundamental." Dodson v. Ball, 60 Pa. 495, 100 Am. Dec. 586; Sparhawk v. Cloon, 125 Mass. 266. Of course, such right may be regulated by law. But, as indicated, there are here no restraints upon such alienation, statutory or otherwise. When, as here, it is established that an interest in, or right to, the income of a trust fund is vested in the cestui que trust, the mode in which, or the time when, he is to reap the benefit, is immaterial. 1 Perry, Tr. § 886. The distinguished author there says: "The law does not allow property, whether legal or equitable, to be fettered by restraints upon alienation. Therefore, when an equitable interest is once vested in the cestui que trust, he may dispose of it, or it may pass to his assignees by operation of law, if he becomes a bankrupt." To the same effect, Sparhawk v. Cloon, supra; Forbes v. Lothrop, 187 Mass. 525; Sears v. Choate, 146 Mass. 895; Maynard v. Cleaves, 149 Mass. 307.

In speaking of the English cases, Gray, Ch. J., in the first of these cases, said: "Where the income of a trust estate is given to any person (other than a married woman) for life, the equitable estate for life is alienable by, and liable in equity to, the debts of the cestui que trust, and this quality is so inseparable from the estate that no provision, however express, which does not operate as a cesser or limitation of the estate itself, can protect it from his debts." We must hold that the income arising from the personal property so held in trust was assignable. Under our statutes, we are satisfied that it was competent for the wife to take title or acquire the equitable right to such income from her husband, especially as it is in the line of the bequest in the testator's will, and made upon the agreement of the wife to properly care for, educate, and maintain each and both of the infant children of her and the plaintiff. Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Monahan, 68 Wis. 198; Gottelmann v. Gitt, 78 Wis. 489; State v. Wallace, 67 Iowa, 77.

We must hold that the written instrument in question was a valid assignment of the income of the personal property held in trust, which has accrued or may accrue during the life of the plaintiff.

The order of the Circuit Court is reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings according to law.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

PEOPLE of the State of New York, Resp't.,William D. HAYES, Appt.

(140 N. Y. 484.)

1. The trial of an indictment for perjury in a civil action is not outside the jurisdiction of the court because the civil action is not yet determined.
2. A change in a statute by leaving out the minimum limitation of the term of imprisonment for a crime, so that the punishment may be for a less but cannot be for a greater term than before, cannot be regarded as an ex post facto law.
3. Under a stipulation that the evidence of a witness taken upon a former trial on the part of defendant might be read subject to all legal objections, the defendant, who offers a portion of the direct examination in evidence, may be compelled to read it all, as the legal objections intended by the stipulation those to be made by the party against whom the evidence, either direct or on cross-examination, was offered.
4. Letters contradicting a witness for defendant on trial for perjury in respect to her belief as to the paternity of a child alleged to be that of defendant are not inadmissible on the ground that the contradiction is on an immaterial matter.
5. The privilege as to confidential communications from a wife to her husband in letters is lost when he, after they have been received, gives them to a third person.
6. There is no covert insinuation against the accused in a charge to the jury that he is not bound to go on the stand, but can say: "Prove your case against me, it is my judgment that the situation is such that I am not bound to take the witness stand; and the law gives me that right and the law gives me that privilege," where the judge also charges that no presumption can be taken against defendant for failure to take the witness stand.
7. Committing to jail one of the witnesses for defendant in the presence of the jury on account of alleged false evidence is within the discretion of the judge, for which no legal error can be assigned.

(January 16, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment of the general Sessions of the Peace for the City and County of New York convicting him of perjury. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. David B. Hill, with Mr. George M. Curtis, for appellant:

It was error to proceed to a conviction of the defendant prior to a determination of the civil suit.

Where the alleged perjury is the very question involved in a civil suit between the prosecutor and the defendant, a conviction will not be tolerated until after the trial of the civil suit. 2 Wharton, Crim. L. § 2280; 2 Russell, Crimes, 6th Am. ed. 654; Com. v. Dickinson, 3 Pa. L. J. 164.

The alleged perjury was committed, if at all, prior to the passage of chapter 662 of the Laws of 1892, amending section 106 of the Penal Code.

This amendment changed the penalty previously prescribed for this offense by abolishing the minimum limitation.

The right to punish in accordance with the statute, as it existed before amendment, offenses previously committed, was nowhere reserved.

The amendment, as applicable to perjury committed prior to its passage, was ex post facto.

Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. ed. 163; Shepherd v. People, 25 N. Y. 415; Hartung v. People, 22 N. Y. 95; State v. Daley, 29 Conn. 272; Com. v. Wyman, 12 Cush. 237.

Neither the prosecuting officer nor the judge has the right even to allude to the fact that the defendant has not availed himself of the statute which permits him to be sworn in his own behalf.

Ruloff v. People, 45 N. Y. 222.

To direct a witness's apprehension in the midst of the trial, while he was in the presence of the jury, declaring him to be a felon, was to inflict an incurable wound upon defendant's case, and tended to deprive him of the fair and impartial trial contemplated by the law and constitution of his country. In order to insure conviction, an intent to defraud must be established; that is overwhelmingly settled in this and other states of the Union.

See People v. DeKroyft, 49 Hun, 71; Kerrains v. People, 60 N. Y. 222, 14 Am. Rep. 153; People v. Stearns, 21 Wend. 409; Parmedes v. People, 8 Hun, 623; Montgomery v. State, 13 Tex. App. 823.

The purpose in the arrest of Noah was to convince the jury that upon a vital point in the evidence of the case, the principal witness for the defendant was a felon, and unworthy to be believed. This impression was enhanced by the spectacular features of his arrest.

Mr. Henry B. E. Stapler, with Mr. De Lancey Nicoll, Dist. Atty., for the People:

The effect of an amendment of a statute made by subsequent statute declaring that such statute should be amended so as to read as follows, retaining part of the statute amended and incorporating therein new provisions, was not to repeal the part retained and re-enact the same, but that such part of the statute continued in force from the first enactment, and that the new provisions incorporated became operative from the time the amendatory statute took effect.

NOTE.—For a review of the authorities as to the loss of privilege in respect to confidential communications in writings when their possession is lost, see note to State v. Mathers (Vt.) 15 L. R. A. 268.

In respect to ex post facto laws, see the prior cases in this series on the subject, viz.: Com. v. Graves 23 L. R. A.

(Mass.) 16 L. R. A. 256; Re Wright (Wyo.) 13 L. R. A. 748; Ex parte Larkins (Okla. Terr.) 11 L. R. A. 418; Re Tyson (Colo.) 6 L. R. A. 472; State v. Cooler (S. C.) 8 L. R. A. 181; Anderson v. O'Donnell (S. C.) 1 L. R. A. 632.

Moore v. Mausert, 49 N. Y. 832, citing Ely v. Holton, 15 N. Y. 595; People v. Wilmerding, 186 N. Y. 888.

The doctrine of repeal by implication is not favored by policy of the law.

Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. 2d ed. p. 98; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 138, and cases cited; Monjeon v. People, 55 N. Y. 618.

Under the old statute a person convicted of perjury could not be sentenced to imprisonment for a less term than two years, while under the present statute there is no such minimum limitation and the maximum limitation is the same in both statutes, i. e., ten years.

This does not make the statute ex post facto.

Com. v. Wyman, 12 Cush. 237; Com. v. McKenney, 14 Gray, 8; Miles v. State, 40 Ala. 89; Walker v. State, 7 Tex. App. 245. 32 Am. Rep. 595; State v. Miller, 58 Ind. 399; Sifred v. Com. 104 Pa. 181; Shepherd v. People, 25 N. Y. 415; Hartung v. People, 22 N. Y. 105; Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. ed. 162.

There is no merit in the contention of the appellant that the judgment of conviction should be reversed on account of the fact that the civil action in which the crime of perjury was committed is still pending.

It is believed that there is no case in the books in which a conviction of perjury had been reversed on account of the fact that the indictment was found and the case tried before the civil action.

Penal Code, § 98; Chamberlain v. People, 23 N. Y. 85, 80 Am. Dec. 255; People v. Bowe, 3 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 151.

If a witness swears falsely in respect to any material fact, he is guilty of perjury, though the civil action fails from defect of proof of any other essential fact.

Wood v. People, 59 N. Y. 117; People v. Grimshaw, 33 Hun, 507; People v. Courtney, 1 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 557; Reg. v. Meek, 9 Car. & P. 513; 2 Bishop, Crim. L. § 1028, subd. 5.

There was no error in the action of the learned trial judge in committing the witness Noah.

A letter written confidentially from husband to wife is admissible against the husband, when brought into court by a third party.

Wharton, Crim. Ev. § 398; Com. v. Griffin, 110 Mass. 181; Com. v. Capont, 155 Mass. 584; Mercer v. Patterson, 41 Ind. 440; State v. Buffington, 20 Kan. 591, 27 Am. Rep. 198; State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 36 Am. Rep. 89.

There is no ground for the contention of the appellant, that the learned trial justice erred in alluding to the failure of the defendant to take the stand as a witness on his own behalf.

The learned trial justice did not comment unfavorably upon the failure of the defendant to take the stand. He merely stated to the jury that it was the law that the failure of the defendant to testify did not raise any presumption against him.

In Indiana, Louisiana, Nevada, Oregon, Vermont, and Washington it is by statute made the duty of the court to instruct the jury as in the case at bar.

Ind. Rev. Stat. § 1798; La. Laws 1886, p. 39, 23 L. R. A.

§ 1; Nev. Gen. Stat. § 4563; Or. Crim. Code, § 1865; Vt. Rev. Laws, § 1655; Wash. Code, § 1067.

Peckham, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In January, 1891, there was pending in the supreme court of this state an action brought by one Annie M. Keating against the above defendant. The action was brought to recover on a promissory note alleged to have been made by defendant, dated New York, October 27, 1887, and payable to the order of Annie M. Keating two years after the date thereof, for some $2,000, with interest at 6 per cent. Judgment by default was entered January 31, 1891, against the defendant, in Monroe county, for the full amount of the note. A motion was subsequently, and in April, 1891, made, on the part of the defendant, to open that default, and for the purpose of that motion the defendant, in New York county, swore to an affidavit that he never owed Annie M. Keating a dollar in his life; that he had never given to her a promissory note, and that he had never seen the note upon which the action was brought, and knew nothing whatever about it; that at the time the note bore date the defendant was in Florida, and remained there the whole winter; and that he went there the 1st of September, 1887, and did not return until May, 1888. The default was opened, and an answer was thereupon interposed, setting up substantially the facts as contained in the affidavit. The action is still pending, never having been brought to trial. In January, 1892, the defendant was indicted by the grand jury of the county of New York for perjury in swearing to the affidavit; the indictment averring that the allegations of fact set forth in the affidavit, and above mentioned, were false, to the knowledge of the defendant, and that in swearing to them the defendant had committed willful and corrupt perjury. In February, 1893, the defendant was placed on trial for the offense in the court of general sessions of New York. He had previously been tried at the same term upon the same indictment, and the jury had disagreed. Upon the second trial the defendant was convicted, and sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for eight years; and he is now undergoing such imprisonment, a stay of proceedings after the conviction having been refused. From an affirmance of the judgment by the general term the defendant has appealed here. The counsel for the defendant has argued several grounds for a new trial, some of which will be now referred to:

1. It is claimed on behalf of the defendant that when it appeared, as it did in the course of the trial, that the civil suit brought by Annie M. Keating against him had not yet been tried and determined upon its merits, the court should have deferred the trial, upon its own motion, until the determination of that action. It is conceded that no motion was made to postpone the trial of the indictment until after the determination of the civil action. The record does show that the counsel for the defendant, in the course of the trial of the indictment, and after a large amount of evidence had been given, made the objection that no indictment for perjury could stand while the so-tion in which it is alleged it was committed is still undetermined, and that the court had no jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of the indictment. This objection was overruled. Again, the counsel asked the court to charge the jury that the court had no jurisdiction to try the indictment until the determination of the civil action. This was refused, and an exception taken. The court committed no error in refusing to hold as requested by the counsel. It is not a question of jurisdiction, at all. The court had jurisdiction over the offense, and over the person of the defendant, and whether the civil suit had or had not been determined was a matter of not the slightest importance upon that question. The English authorities cited in the brief of counsel only show what is said to have been the practice in the English courts, which was to postpone the trial of the indictment until after the disposition of the civil action, not because the court had no jurisdiction to try the indictment before that event, but because, as matter of judgment, it was thought better to take such a course. Rea v. Simmons, 8 Car. & P. 50, note a. The rule in Pennsylvania does not show that the court has held that there was a lack of jurisdiction. Com. v. Dickinson, 3 Pa. L. J. 104. The rule is one of convenience and propriety, addressed to the sound discretion of the court; and the attention of the court should be called to the matter before entering upon the trial, and an application made to postpone on that ground. Upon this subject, we cannot add to what has already been said at the general term.

2. It is also urged that the court had no power to sentence the defendant, because the law which was in force at the time of the sentence was, as to the defendant, an ex post facto law. The perjury is alleged in the indictment to have been committed in 1891, at which time the statute provided that any one convicted of perjury, in any case other than upon the trial of an indictment for a felony, should be punished for not less than two nor more than ten years. Before the trial the statute was amended (Laws 1892, chap. 682) by leaving out the minimum limitation of the term of imprisonment, so that the punishment might be imprisonment for a less, but could not be for a greater, term than under the statute thus amended. A statute which permits the infliction of a lesser degree of the same kind of punishment than was permissible when the offense was committed cannot be termed or regarded as an ex post facto law. The leading object in prohibiting the enactment of such a law in this country was to create another barrier between the citizen and the exercise of arbitrary power by a legislative assembly. It was well understood by the framers of our federal constitution that the executive was not the only power, in a government such as they were about to establish, which would require constitutional limitations. The possible tyranny by a majority of a representative assemblage was well understood and appreciated, and there were for that reason many provisions inserted in the constitution limiting the exercise of legislative power by the federal and also by state legislatures. Bills of attainder and ex post facto laws had at that time a quite well understood meaning. The former was a legislative judgment of conviction; an exercise of judicial power by parliament without a hearing, and in disregard of the first principles of natural justice. Such bills had been passed in England, and the parties thereby condemned had been put to death. The ex post facto law was regarded as a law which provided for the infliction of punishment upon a person for an act done, which, when it was committed, was innocent. 1 Bl. Com. *46.

Enlarging upon this definition as being of the same species, and coming within the same principle, a law which aggravated a crime, or made it greater than it was when committed, or one which changed the punishment, or inflicted a greater punishment than the law annexed to the crime when committed, or a law which changed the rules of evidence, and received less or different testimony than was required at the time of the commission of the crime, in order to convict the offender, was included in the definition of an "ex post facto law." Caldier v. Bull, 3 U. S. 3 Dall. 386, 1 L. ed. 648, Chase, J., at 390. In the case just cited Mr. Justice Chase said that the restriction not to pass any ex post facto law was to secure the person of the subject from injury or punishment in consequence of such law; that it was an additional bulwark in favor of the personal security of the subject,—to protect his person from punishment by legislative acts having a retrospective operation. No act that mollified the rigor of the criminal law was regarded as an ex post facto law, but only a law that created or aggravated the crime, increased the punishment, or changed the rules of evidence in order to secure conviction. The same view of the subject was taken by Denio, J., in Hartung v. People, 23 N. Y. 95, at 105. See also Shepherd v. People, 25 N. Y. 406. Nowhere is it suggested that legislative interference by way of mitigating the punishment of an offense could be regarded as an ex post facto law, if applicable to offenses committed before its passage. There is no reason for any such holding. It was never supposed that constitutional obstacles would be necessary in order to prevent the improper exercise of legislative clemency. There was little to fear from that quarter upon such a subject. Those who framed the constitution were not engaged in creating obstacles to be placed in the path of those legislators who desired, by legislative enactment, to exercise clemency towards offenders, nor were they anxious lest those who were intrusted with power should be disinclined to exercise it with sufficient sternness. Human experience had furnished them with no examples of danger from that direction, and their anxiety on that account cannot be discerned from a perusal of the federal constitution. In many, if not in most cases, the reasons for mitigating the severity of the punishment for any particular kind of crime would apply with equal force to those cases in which the crime had been committed before, as well as to those in which the crime might be committed subsequent to, the enactment of the law; and we are aware of no policy which prevents such a construction of the constitutional provision as would permit that kind of a retrospective act. That it materially affects the punishment prescribed for a crime is not the true test of an ex post facto law. In regard to punishment, it must affect the offender unfavorably before it can be thus determined. It seems to us plain that there can be no reason for any other view. I do not think that the mere fact of an alteration in the manner of punishment, without reference to the question of mitigation, necessarily renders an act obnoxious to the constitutional provision. I know it is alluded to in the two cases in this state above cited,—that of Hartung and Shepherd. In those cases the alteration was not merely in the manner. It was an alteration from capital punishment, to be inflicted in a certain manner, and within a certain time after sentence was pronounced, to a punishment of a year's hard labor in state prison, and then a possibility of capital punishment thereafter, at any time during the life of the criminal, at the pleasure of the governor for the time being, with imprisonment in the mean time at hard labor. As Judge Denio said, "The sword is indefinitely suspended over his head, ready to fall at any time." It was said also by the same learned judge that it was not enough to say that most persons would probably prefer such a fate to the former capital sentence, because there were no means of knowing whether the one or the other punishment would be the most severe, in a given case, as that would depend upon the disposition and temperament of the convict. I think that where a change is made in the manner of the punishment, if the change be of that nature which no sane man could by any possibility regard in any other light than that of a mitigation of punishment, the act would not be ex post facto where made applicable to the offenses committed before its passage. The present case does not involve the question, and it is only mentioned for the purpose of calling attention to it as one which has not yet been squarely decided in this court. We have been referred to the case of State v. Daley, 29 Conn. 272, as holding the principle urged upon us by counsel for the defendant. A reference to the case shows that the court held that on account of the repeal of the statute before his trial, which was in existence when the crime was committed, the offender could not be punished, because the statute which was passed to take its place applied only to cases which occurred subsequent to its passage. The decision was made with reference to the language used in the amending act, which the court held was clearly prospective, while the absolute repeal, in so many words, of the former act, took away all right to use it for any purpose whatever. No fault can be found with the principle decided by the Connecticut court, but it has no application to this case. Precisely the same principle was decided in Com. v. Marshall, 11 Pick. 350, 23 Am. Dec. 377. In Com. v. Wyman, 12 Cush. 237, the Massachusetts court held that the alteration of the punishment from that of death to imprisonment for life was not ex post facto, when applied to offenses committed prior to the passage of the act. We have seen that in our own state such an alteration, under the peculiarities of the statute then under discussion, was held to be an ex post facto law. I have seen no such case where such an alteration as is disclosed by the act under discussion has been held to be an ex post facto law. In the Hartung Case the power of the legislature to remit any separable portion of the prescribed penalty was declared, and the very case of the reduction in the term of imprisonment was cited as an instance of legislative power. We are clear there is no constitutional objection to the statute.

3. There were certain letters written to the defendant by his wife. These letters were offered by the people, and received in evidence, under the objection of the defendant; and it is now urged that their admission was error, for which a new trial should be granted. The counsel for the defendant, upon this trial, had called the wife of defendant as a witness; and she had broken down in health before the examination was concluded, and became so ill that it was impossible to take her examination at the house. In order to obtain the benefit of her evidence in the case, the defendant had to come to some understanding with the district attorney, or the testimony already given would have to go out, and nothing further could be admitted. Hence, the stipulation as to the reading of all the evidence of the witness taken upon the former trial, subject to all legal objections. That meant the legal objections of the party against whom the testimony was given. When the defendant read the direct examination, it was subject to the legal objections, which the district attorney might make, and when the latter read the cross-examination it was subject to the legal objections thereto made by the counsel for the defendant; but each side was, by the very terms of the stipulation, to read the whole of the direct cross examination, as the case might be. The objection on this occasion was first made by the defendant's counsel, who refused to read the particular portion of the direct examination, which, as the district attorney claimed, rendered some portions of the subsequent cross examination (these particular letters included) admissible in evidence. The court, because of the stipulation, committed no error in compelling the reading of the evidence, and the defendant's exception to that ruling is not good. Subsequently, when the district attorney offered the letters in evidence, the defendant's counsel objected to their introduction upon the ground that they were confidential communications from a wife to her husband, and hence were inadmissible. Some expressions in one or two of the letters were undoubtedly contradictory of a portion of the testimony given by the witness upon the first trial. That particular portion of the wife's evidence the defendant had been compelled by the court to read. The people were entitled to the benefit of whatever contradiction there was. If some of the letters contained nothing by the way of contradiction, and hence might have been claimed to be inadmissible for that reason, it is seen that there was no separate and distinct objection made to a particular letter, that it contained no contradictory matter. The objection of immateriality, made by the defendant, was upon the ground that the letters only contradicted the witness upon an immaterial matter, viz., her belief as to the paternity of the child of the prosecutrix, Miss Keating,—whether it was the child of the witness' husband, or his brother's. We think the letters which contradicted the witness upon that question were properly received in evidence, and there was no separate objection taken to the others. Those which contradicted the witness might, as evidence, have some weight upon the question of her credibility, and the contradiction cannot be said to have been so plainly upon an immaterial matter as to have rendered the admission of the letters error on that ground. The further ground of objection to their admission was that they were confidential communications from a wife to her husband. The answer to this objection is that the letters, after they had been received by the defendant, were given by him to his mistress, the prosecutrix, Annie M. Keating, and she subsequently delivered them to the district attorney, by whom they were offered in evidence. Comment upon the baseness of this act of the defendant is unnecessary. It speaks for itself. The result, however, is to release the letters from the operation of the rules as to confidential communications between husband and wife, and to leave them open to use as evidence to the same extent as if no such rule had ever guarded them. The rule which protects confidential communications of this nature was founded upon a wise public policy, adopted and pursued for the purpose of encouraging to the utmost that mutual confidence between husband and wife, which is the strongest guaranty of a happy marriage. To this end the common law provided that all communications between husband and wife, which were of a confidential nature should be kept inviolate, and should not be drawn from either party by any process of law. 1 Stark. Ev. *39; Greenl. Ev. 14th ed. § 254. The law appreciated the fact that even truth itself might be pursued too keenly, and might cost too much. The general evil of infusing reserve and dissimulation between parties occupying such relations to each other would be too great a price to pay for the chance of obtaining and establishing the truth in regard to some matter under legal investigation. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 240, note a, citing Minei v. Morgan, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 361. The case just cited related to confidential communications between attorney and client, but the principles are also applicable and with added force, to communications between husband and wife. If, however, the privilege has been once waived by the parties, it cannot be again invoked. It is personal; so that if one overhear such a communication he may testify to it, if it be otherwise admissible in evidence. Com. v. Griffin, 110 Mass. 181; State v. Center, 35 Vt. 378, 386; Rez v. Simons, 6 Car. & P. 540. And when the husband or wife, to whom a written confidential communication is addressed, makes it public by giving it to another, the confidential character of the communication has departed; and it may be treated like any other communication, and put in evidence if otherwise admissible. State v.

23 L. R. A.

Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 540, 36 Am. Rep. 89; State v. Buffington, 20 Kan. 599, 613, 27 Am. Rep. 198. In this case every reason upon which the rule rejecting a confidential communication was originally founded is absent. The letters were addressed by the wife to her husband, and he, deliberately violating every principle of honor and decency, gives the letters to his mistress, by whom they were delivered to the district attorney. A rule which would still preserve the confidential character of these letters, as against her husband, would be founded upon more sentiment than sense.

4. The charge of the learned judge in regard to the defendant not going on the stand as a witness was not subject to legal objection. The court told the jury that the defendant was not bound to go on the stand, and that he could say to the prosecution: "Prove your case against me. It is my judgment that the situation is such that I am not bound to take the witness stand, and the law gives me that right, and the law gives me that privilege." I charge you that the law says there is no presumption to be taken against a defendant, by reason of the fact that he does not take the witness stand." The charge is criticized on the ground, as alleged, that the language which the judge put in the mouth of the defendant amounted to a covert insinuation that the situation was such that it would be disastrous to the defendant if he took the stand. I think the criticism ill-founded. The jury were plainly instructed as to the law, and the rights of the defendant. The insinuation suggested would be unwarranted from the language used. On the contrary, the natural interpretation would be that the defendant regarded the situation as one wholly lacking in proof of guilt, and he was under no obligation to go on the stand and explain what as yet required no explanation. The case of Ruloff v. People, 45 N. Y. 213, 222, is authority for the correctness of the course pursued by the learned judge.

5. The defendant's counsel complains, also, that one of the witnesses for defendant was committed to jail by the court in the presence of the jury, because of the character of his evidence given while on the stand as a witness. This is not a question of legal error. The action of the court was within its power, and to be exercised within the sound discretion of the judge. That it might have a bad effect upon the jury, and thereby prejudice the defendant's case, was one of the matters to be considered by the judge before making the order; but we do not think it was legal error to make the order, under the circumstances.

We have carefully looked at and considered each and all the other grounds for a new trial which are set forth and discussed in the brief of the counsel for defendant, and we are quite clear that they do not show any errors committed to the prejudice of the defendant.

The judgment should be affirmed.

All concur, except Bartlett, J., not sitting.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS FOR THE CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK, (Special Term).

RE Application of Ann McCARRAN et al., to Vacate an Order Admitting Patrick McKenna to be a Citizen of the United States.

(S Misc. 423.)

- 1. Neglect for more than twenty-five years to make an application for the setting aside of an order of naturalization is fatal to the application.
- 2. A private individual has no standing in court to institute a proceeding to set aside an order admitting an alien to citizenship.

(May —, 1894.)

MOTION to set aside an order admitting Patrick McKenna to citizenship of the United States. Denied.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion. Mr. George Bliss in support of the motion.

Mr. Charles W. Dayton for the heirs of Patrick McKenna.

Mr. C. C. Clarke for Caroline Hermann in opposition to the motion.

Giegerich, J., filed the following opinion:

This is a motion to set aside an order made by this court, of date of 25th of October, 1866, whereby one Patrick McKenna was admitted to citizenship of the United States. The application is based upon allegations that misrepresentations were made by the appellant, in the course of the proceeding wherein such order was granted, relating to the period of his residence in this country prior to the date when his majority was attained. The motion is made by Ann McCarran, a sister, and joined in by Francis McKenna, a nephew of said Patrick McKenna, and appears to be made in support of ejectment suits brought in the Supreme Court by the said Ann McCarran against certain parties claiming through said Patrick McKenna, who died on April 22, 1891, intestate; the order in question, unless vacated, being expected to materially affect the successful prosecution of such suits. As to limitations, this motion does not fall within the provisions of sections 1282 et seq. of the Code, relative to the setting aside of a judgment for irregularity, in view of the nature of the proceeding attacked (Re Buffalo, 78 N. Y. 863); but apart from the provisions of the code of civil procedure, the application, if based upon an alleged irregularity merely, would come too late at this time. Jackson v. Robins, 16 Johns. 571; Thompson v. Skinner, 7 Johns. 556; Soulden v. Cook, 4 Wend. 217.

It is contended, however, that the motion, being based upon alleged fraud in obtaining

NOTE.—The above case from New York court of common pleas is reported here as an important contribution to the law on the subject of naturalization and one which no decision from a court of last resort might present within a long period.

23 L. R. A.

the order which is sought to be set aside, is barred by no limitation; but this contention is founded solely upon certain authorities holding that such a proceeding does not fall within the limitation prescribed in the case where irregularity or error of fact is assigned. These authorities do not warrant the assumption that no limitation (running from the date when the facts were discovered) may operate upon a motion of this character, especially in view of section 838 of the Code, which applies as a rule to equitable actions (Butler v. Johnson, 111 N. Y. 904), a motion being governed by the rules of limitation applicable to actions. Depew v. Dewey, 2 Thomp. & C. 515, affirmed, 56 N. Y. 657.

Whatever express statutory limitation may here apply, however, it is not necessary to determine, for the neglect of the parties to make this motion during the great period which has elapsed is fatal to the application. Corwille v. Griffing, 21 Barb. 9-14; Strong v. Strong, 8 Redf. 477, 485, 486, and citations; Re Salisbury's Estate, 6 N. Y. Supp. 932, 934.

No explanation is here offered for the negligence of the moving parties in this regard, the affidavits submitted tending to show that the facts constituting the alleged fraud were known to the affiants from the commencement of the period in question.

It is well settled that an order admitting an alien to citizenship, which contains the necessary recitals, is conclusive as to the existence of facts upon which it depends for validity when attacked collaterally (Spratt v. Spratt, 26 U. S. 4 Pet. 350, 7 L. ed. 174; McCarthy v. Marsh, 5 N. Y. 263; Ritchie v. Putnam, 13 Wend. 524); but authorities dealing with such a case in the aspect of a direct attack are not abundant. The cases of Com. v. Paper, 1 Brewst. (Pa.) 263, and Re Shaw, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 250, however, are in point, and I am well content to follow them, in the absence of any contrary ruling by the courts of this state so far as research discloses. These cases hold that the civil authorities, and not a private individual, should institute a proceeding of this character, and, to my mind, the reasoning is founded upon sound principles.

Moreover in view of the grave importance which attaches to the question now considered, by reason of the property rights involved, the parties to be affected should certainly have recourse to the protection afforded by the settled rules of evidence when litigating this matter, and I am by no means satisfied that the provisions of section 829 of the Code of Civil Procedure would not oppose the successful prosecution of an action to set aside the order here attacked. This section is not in terms applicable to matter contained in affidavits submitted upon a motion, and, in my opinion, justice would require that the parties be relegated to a proper action where the question can be determined upon whatever competent evidence may be adduced.

Motion denied, with $10 costs.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, WESTERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

P. FLANNAGAN et al.

v.

CALIFORNIA NATIONAL BANK et al.

(56 Fed. Rep. 958.)

A national bank is not bound by the promise without consideration of its cashier, to pay a draft drawn, or to be drawn, upon a depositor; since the power so to contract is not embraced within those given by U. S. Rev. Stat., § 5136, subd. 7, to exercise all incidental powers necessary to carry on the business of banking, by discounting and negotiating notes, drafts, bills, and other evidences of debt, receiving deposits, buying and selling exchange, coin and bullion, loaning money on personal security, and issuing and circulating notes.

(June 19, 1893.)

ACTION on an alleged contract by which defendants agreed to pay a draft drawn upon them by a third person in favor of plaintiffs. Judgment for defendants.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Burnett & Gibbon for plaintiffs.

Mr. M. T. Allen, for defendants:

The authority of a national bank to guarantee commercial paper is restricted to the cases

NOTE.—Liability of bank as accommodation indorser.

The cashier of a bank has no authority to indorse accommodation paper so as to bind his bank. Blair v. First Nat. Bank of Mansfield, 2 Flipp. 111; West St. Louis Sav. Bank v. Parmelee, 95 U. S. 557, 24 L. ed. 493, affirming 8 Dill. 403.

And a national bank cannot become an accommodation indorser. National Bank of Commerce of Kansas City v. Atkinson, 55 Fed. Rep. 465.

In National Bank of Gloversville v. Wells, 79 N. Y. 498 (1880), it was stated that a national bank cannot loan its credits or become an accommodation indorser on a promissory note, but this question was not involved in this case.

The cashier of a bank has no power to accept bills of exchange for the accommodation, merely of the drawers, and no recovery can be had against the bank, by the holder of such bill, having knowledge. Farmers & M. Bank v. Troy City Bank, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 457.

A bank is not liable on an accommodation indorsement made by the president of the bank on his own paper, under New York Laws 1840, chap. 663, prohibiting a bank association from issuing a bill or note of the association unless payable on demand and without interest. Morford v. Farmers Bank of Saratoga County, 26 Barb. 568.

In Pendleton v. Bank of Kentucky, 1 T. B. Mon. 179, which was a suit on a cashier's bond by the bank, it was said that the drawing and acceptance of a draft by him without authority would not render the bank liable.

In Bridgeport City Bank v. Empire Stone Dressing Co., 30 Barb. 421, it was said that a bank is not authorized to make accommodation indorsements, but the question involved in that case was the liability of a corporation.

But an indorsement by the cashier in proper form, done on behalf of the bank, negotiated to a bona fide holder, concludes the bank in favor of such holder, although the indorsement was for the accommodation of another party. Bank of Genesee v. Patchin Bank, 19 N. Y. 312.

On the former trial of the same case, the court of appeals held that a bank was not authorized to make an accommodation indorsement, but if it had been proved that advances were made upon this paper in good faith on the representation that the paper belonged to the bank, it would be liable. Bank of Genesee v. Patchin Bank, 18 N. Y. 309.

In Robb v. Ross County Bank, 41 Barb. 585, where the cashier of that bank had indorsed a bill of exchange, it is said that even if Ross County Bank had never owned the bill or had no interest in it, that fact, if proved and found, would not have affected the right of purchasers for value before maturity, to recover.

In Houghton v. First Nat. Bank of Elkhorn, 25 28 L. R. A.

Wis. 663, 7 Am. Rep. 107, it was held that an indorsement on the note by the cashier merely for the accommodation of the payee and prior indorser, where the note did not belong to the bank, will bind the bank as against the purchaser in good faith for value before maturity.

An indorsement by a cashier of a draft, payable to his order as cashier, renders the bank liable to a bona fide holder, where the note has been fraudulently circulated by an agent of the bank, without authority. Bank of the State of New York v. Muskingum Branch of the Bank of State of Ohio, 23 N. Y. 619.

A banker was held liable for sending out a telegram, "Will pay A. H. draft $200.00, for stock," in answer to a telegram "Will you honor a draft drawn by A. H. for $200.00," and is an absolute acceptance that he will pay the draft, and the words "for stock" do not mean that stock was to be consigned to the acceptor of the draft. Coffman v. Campbell, 37 Ill. 93.

Where a telegram came to a bank, asking if they would pay J. T. check for $22,000, and the answer was, "J. T. is good, send on your paper," and was signed by the bank, and the vendor parted with his cattle and accepted the check as payment on the faith of the telegram, the bank was liable. Garretson v. North Atchison Bank, 47 Fed. Rep. 867.

The former decision in this case in 39 Fed. Rep. 163, was based on the ground that it was the same as a certified check, and on the further ground that under the Missouri statute, it was an acceptance of bill of exchange in writing.

A telegram offering to pay a draft for a certain sum will not bind the bank to pay a draft for any larger sum. Brinkman v. Hunter, 73 Mo. 172, 39 Am. Rep. 492; Lindley v. First National Bank of Waterloo, 2 L. R. A. 709, 76 Iowa, 629.

Where the cashier of a bank wrote to the secretary of the treasury, saying that the bearer was authorized to make a contract for transferring money from New York to Louisiana, and such transaction was not within the power of the cashier, the bank is not liable for the money which the secretary advanced to this agent. United States v. City Bank of Columbus, 63 U. S. 21 How. 354, 16 L. ed. 180.

In the main case where in answer to a telegram sent to the bank, "Will you pay B's draft on G. by the 16th of next month for $6,000?" the answer was "Yes" it was held that this was a promise to answer for the obligation of G. which the cashier had no power to make. The court says, however, that if the bank had promised to pay a draft on it, and the plaintiff had parted with money on the strength of that promise, the ruling would be different, and this is sustained by the cases supra.

In this note cases on certified checks and certificates of deposit are not included. L. T.

of re-discounting or transferring of the paper of the bank, and a consideration moves to the bank on account of such transfer or re-discount.

Rev. Stat. § 5136.

No authority is given a bank to guarantee payment of the paper of its customers.

Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 232; Seligman v. Charlottesville Nat. Bank, 3 Hughes, C. C. 647; Johnston v. Charlottesville Nat. Bank, Id. 657; Lafayette Sav. Bank v. St. Louis Stoneware Co. 2 Mo. App. 299; Bank of Genesee v. Patchin Bank, 18 N. Y. 809; Morford v. Farmers Bank of Saratoga County, 26 Barb. 568; Savage Mfg. Co. v. Worthington, 1 Gill, 284.

The cashier and president have only power to bind the bank in the discharge of their ordinary duties.

Bank of United States v. Dunn, 81 U. S. 6 Pet. 51, 8 L. ed. 316; United States v. City Bank of Columbus, 62 U. S. 21 How. 356, 16 L. ed. 130; West St. Louis Sav. Bank v. Parmelee, 95 U. S. 557, 24 L. ed. 490.

Ross, District Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiffs, who are citizens of Oregon, and bankers doing business at the city of Marshfield, in that state, bring this suit to recover the amount of a certain draft drawn by one Baines on the defendant Graham. By their complaint the plaintiffs seek to charge the defendant, the California National Bank of San Diego, now in the hands of the defendant receiver, with the payment of the draft; and a demurrer filed by the receiver, on behalf of the bank, raises the question of the latter's liability.

The complaint alleges that on the 15th of September, 1891, Graham, through his agent, Baines, applied to the plaintiffs, at their bank in Marshfield, for a loan of $6,000, "to be paid by draft upon said California National Bank of San Diego." This allegation in respect to the proposed drawee was probably a mistake of the pleader, for that allegation is immediately followed by this:

"At the same time, plaintiffs received a telegram, sent by said California National Bank to plaintiffs, in which it stated that Baines' draft on Graham for $6,000 was [would be] good on the 16th of the next month."

To which telegram plaintiffs replied by a telegram as follows:

"Marshfield, Coos Co., Or., Sept. 16, 1891.

"To California National Bank, San Diego, California. Will you pay Baines' draft on Graham for $6,000 on October 15, next?"

"Flannagan & Bennett."

In reply to this telegram, plaintiffs received, on September 18, 1891, the following, by telegraph, from the defendant bank:

"San Diego, Cal., Sept. 18, 1891.

"To Flannagan & Bennett, Marshfield, Or.: See our telegram of 15th. Should Graham money arrive earlier, we will pay when it comes, possibly tenth.

"California National Bank."

To which plaintiffs, on the 19th of September, replied by telegraph as follows:

"Marshfield, Coos Co., Or., Sept. 19, 1891.

"To California National Bank, San Diego, 23 L. R. A.

Cal.: Are we to understand that you will pay Baines' draft on Graham for $6,000.00 not later than 16th of next month?

"Flannagan & Bennett."

Receiving in reply the following:

"San Diego, Cal., Sept. 21, 1891.

"To Flannagan & Bennett: Yes.

"G. N. O'Brien, Cashier."

O'Brien was at the time the cashier of the California National Bank. Upon the receipt of the last-mentioned telegram the plaintiffs paid to Baines, for the use of Graham, $6,000, and received from Baines a draft, signed by him, in words and figures as follows:

"$6,000.00. Marshfield, Sept. 23rd, 1891.

"On October 16th, 1891, pay to the order of Flannagan & Bennett six thousand dollars, value received, and charge the same to account of W. E. Baines."

"To R. A. Graham, California National Bank, San Diego."

On the 16th of October, 1891, the draft was duly presented to the defendant bank, and payment demanded, which was refused, and subsequently payment was demanded of defendant Graham, who likewise failed to pay the same.

It is apparent from the averments of the complaint that at no time did the defendant bank, or its cashier, promise to pay any draft drawn on the defendant bank. Had such promise been made, and plaintiffs had parted with their money on the strength of it, the case would be like that of Garrettsen v. North Atchison Bank, 47 Fed. Rep. 867, and a like ruling would be made here, for I have no doubt of the correctness of that decision. But the present case is altogether unlike that. The promise here counted on was the promise of the cashier of the defendant bank to pay Baines' draft on Graham, who, it would seem from the telegrams, was a customer of the defendant bank, and an anticipated depositor; and the question for decision is, whether such a promise of the cashier of a national bank is binding upon the bank. A national bank is empowered, by the seventh subdivision of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes, "to exercise, by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents, subject to law, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of banking; by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt; by receiving deposits; by buying and selling exchange, coin, and bullion; by loaning money on personal security; and by obtaining, issuing, and circulating notes according to the provisions of" the title providing for the organization of such banks. Every one dealing with such a bank does so with notice of, and subject to, the powers conferred, and limitations imposed, by the law of its creation. The provision of the statute quoted, under which the defendant bank was organized, did not authorize its board of directors, or any of its officers or agents, to bind it to pay a draft of one of its customers or depositors. The telegraphic correspondence in the case at bar shows that the defendant bank was anticipating that it would have funds of Graham not later than the 16th of October, 1891, out of which it proposed to pay the draft to be drawn by Baines on Graham; and the definite promise made by the cashier of the bank, by his telegram of September 21, 1891, in answer to that of the plaintiff's, asking, "Are we to understand that you will pay Baines' draft on Graham, for $6,000, not later than 16th of next [October] month?" was, in effect, a promise to answer for the obligation of Graham. Such a promise was beyond the power of the cashier to make, and the defendant bank was unaffected by it. It was organized to carry on the business of banking "by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt; by receiving deposits; by buying and selling exchange, coin, and bullion; by loaning money on personal security; and by obtaining, issuing, and circulating notes, according to the provisions of" the statute under which it was organized. None of these things embrace, directly or incidentally, a promise to pay, without consideration moving to it, a draft drawn by a third party on one of its customers or depositors. In Bank of the United States v. Dunn, 81 U. S. 6 Pet. 51, 8 L. ed. 316, the court would not permit the president and cashier of the bank to bind it by their agreement with the indorser of a promissory note that he should not be liable on his indorsement. It said it is not the duty of the cashier and president to make such contracts, nor have they power to bind the bank, except in the discharge of their ordinary duties.

In the case of United States v. City Bank of Columbus, 62 U. S. 21 How. 356, 16 L. ed. 180, the cashier of the defendant bank wrote to the secretary of the treasury, saying that the bearer of the letter, one Miner, who was one of the directors of the bank, was authorized to contract for the transfer of money from New York to New Orleans. Upon that representation the secretary turned over to Miner $100,000 of the government money for transfer from New York to New Orleans, and, Miner having failed to deliver or account for it, the government sought to recover the amount from the bank. But, it appearing that the action of the cashier was without the authority or knowledge of the president or board of directors, the supreme court held that it was outside of his duties and powers, and that the bank was not liable. In West St. Louis Sav. Bank v. Parmelee, 95 U. S. 557, 24 L. ed. 490, where it was attempted, but unsuccessfully, to bind a bank as an accommodation indorser on the individual note of its cashier, the court said:

"Ordinarily, the cashier, being the ostensible executive officer of a bank, is presumed to have, in the absence of positive restrictions, all the powers necessary for such an officer in the transaction of the legitimate business of banking. Thus, he is generally understood to have authority to indorse the commercial paper of his bank, and bind the bank by the indorsement. So, too, in the absence of restrictions, if he has procured bona fide rediscount of the paper of the bank, his acts will be binding, because of his implied power to transact such business; but certainly he is not presumed to have power, by reason of his official position, to bind his bank as an accommodation indorser of his own promissory note. Such a transaction would not be within the scope of his general powers; and one who accepts an indorsement of that character, if a contest arises, must prove actual authority before he can recover. There are no presumptions in favor of such a delegation of power. The very form of the paper itself carried notice to a purchaser of a possible want of power to make the indorsement, and is sufficient to put him on his guard. If he fails to avail himself of the notice, and obtains the information which is thus suggested to him, it is his own fault, and, as against an innocent party, he must bear the loss."

The principle controlling the decisions cited is equally applicable to the case at bar.

Demurrer sustained.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT (Department 1).

PEOPLE of the State of California, ex rel.
Isaac W. WELLS, Respt.,

v.

Town of BERKELEY, Appt.

(.....Cal.....)

1. Signatures to a petition which are cut off and attached to another petition, which is identical with the former, cannot be counted in making the required number of signatures to the petition.

2. The annual election for municipal officers is a general election within the meaning of a constitutional and statutory pro-

NOTE.—The telescoping of duplicate petitions by cutting off the signatures from all but one and attaching them all to that one raises a question of considerable importance and one on which there is little authority.

The briefs in the present case show that there is some conflict among the few decisions that have touched the question.

23 L. R. A.

vision authorizing the submission of the question of reorganization, where the elections are classed only as general and special.

3. A constitutional requirement of a majority of the electors voting at a general election on the question of the reorganization of a municipality is not satisfied by a majority of those who vote on that question, if they are less than a majority of all who vote at the election.

(April 23, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Alameda County in favor of relator in quo warranto proceedings to test the legality of an attempt to organize the defendant into a municipal corporation of the fifth class. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. William Lair Hill and Edward A. Holman, with Mr. Edward C. Robinson, for appellant:

The statute has been complied with if a pe-tion, whether made up of several petitions attached together, identical in language and form, or whether made up of such several petitions with the headings of all but one cut off and detached therefrom by a stranger, having no authority so to do, and the whole then consolidated, presented and received in that form as and for one petition so appearing on its face.

Campbell v. Park, 82 Ohio St. 544; Corry v. Gayner, 23 Ohio St. 584; Douglass v. Baker, Bradford County Comrs. 28 Fla. 419; McKinney v. Bradford County Comrs. 26 Fla. 267.

The election under sections 4 and 5 of the town charter was a "general election" such as is meant by section 6, article 11, of the Constitution.

People v. Brenham, 8 Cal. 478; Foots v. Cincinnati, 11 Ohio, 408, 88 Am. Dec. 787; Rugles v. Woodland Trustees, 88 Cal. 430; Ottawa v. La Salle County, 11 Ill. 654.

A majority of all the electors voting at the election upon the proposition is sufficient and a majority of all the electors voting at the election upon other propositions receiving a higher number of votes is not necessary.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 747, note 1.

Those of the electors of the county or town who could have voted upon the proposition and did not, being present, are deemed to assent, consent, concur, or determine with the will of the majority voting upon the proposition.

"A majority of the voters of the county" means a majority of those who actually vote.

Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Davidson County Ct. 1 Sneed, 687, 62 Am. Dec. 424; People v. Warfield, 20 Ill. 159; Walker v. Oswald, 68 Md. 146; Oldknow v. Wainwright, 2 Burr. 1017; Gillespie v. Palmer, 20 Wis. 544; State v. Barnes (N. Dak.) May 9, 1893; State v. Grace, 20 Or. 154; State v. Echols, 41 Kan. 1; Marion County Comrs. v. Winkley, 29 Kan. 86; Melcalfe v. Seattle, 1 Wash. 297; Yesler v. Seattle, Id. 308; McCrary, Elections, 8d ed. § 175; Paine, Elections, § 575, and authorities cited; People v. Rider, 16 Barb. 370.

After an election has been properly proposed, whoever has a majority of those who vote, the assembly being sufficient, is elected although the majority of the entire assembly wholly abstain from voting.

Boone, Corp. § 67; Oldknow v. Wainwright, supra; Everett v. Smith, 22 Minn. 53; King v. Miller, 6 T. R. 263; Buell v. Buckingham, 16 Iowa, 284, 85 Am. Dec. 516; Dill, Mun. Corp. 4th ed. § 44; Smith v. Proctor, 14 L. R. A. 403, 180 N. Y. 319.

A minority of the whole body of qualified electors may elect to an office when a majority of that body refuse or decline to vote for any one for that office.

People v. Clute, 50 N. Y. 451, 10 Am. Rep. 508; St. Joseph Twp. v. Rogers, 88 U. S. 16 Wall. 644, 21 L. ed. 828; State v. Echols, supra; Cass County v. Johnston, 95 U. S. 860, 24 L. ed. 416; Marion County Comrs. v. Winkley, supra.

Whenever electors are present and do not vote at all they virtually acquiesce in the election of those who do

28 L. R. A.

Oldknow v. Wainwright, People v. Clute, and Walker v. Oswald, supra.

Messrs. C. L. Colvin, T. F. Graber, and W. H. H. Hart, Atty-Gen., for respondents:

The petition was not sufficient because it did not have the requisite number of signers.

Fox v. San Mateo County Suprs. 49 Cal. 568.

The question was not submitted at a general election, as provided in the municipal corporation act.

A general election is one at which the officers to be elected are such as belong to the general government—that is, the general and central political organization of the whole state as distinguished from an election of officers for a particular locality only.

Black, Law Dict. p. 585; Desmond v. Dunn, 55 Cal. 242; Re Stuart, 53 Cal. 745; Barton v. Kalloch, 56 Cal. 95; People v. Ransom, 58 Cal. 558; Wood v. Election Comrs. Id. 561; Stayds v. San Francisco City and County Election Comrs. 61 Cal. 318.

The proposition to reorganize did not receive a sufficient number of votes.

The constitution of Nebraska provides as follows: "The legislature shall provide by general laws for township organization under which any county may organize whenever a majority of the legal voters of the county voting at any general election shall so determine.

Neb. Const. art. 10, § 5.

The court said: "This provision is mandatory; therefore to adopt a township organization it requires a majority of all the legal voters of the county, voting at the general election at which the question is submitted," and held that a majority of those voting on the proposition was not sufficient.

State v. Lancaster County Comrs. 6 Neb. 474. See also State v. Babcock, 17 Neb. 188; State v. Anderson, 26 Neb. 517; Inarale Twp. v. Bailey, 35 Neb. 458; People v. Brown, 11 Ill. 478; People v. Wiant, 48 Ill. 263; Chestnutwood v. Hood, 68 Ill. 183; Taylor v. Taylor, 10 Minn. 107; Bayard v. Klinge, 16 Minn. 249; Everett v. Smith, 22 Minn. 53; State v. Winkelmeier, 85 Mo. 103; State v. Sutterfield, 54 Mo. 392; State v. Brassfield, 67 Mo. 331; State v. St. Louis, 73 Mo. 435; State v. Francis, 95 Mo. 44; Re County Seat of Linn County, 15 Kan. 500; State v. Swift, 69 Ind. 505; Hawkins v. Carroll County Suprs. 50 Miss. 785.

The cases in Tennessee are strongly in favor of the same construction.

Cocke v. Gooch, 5 Heisk. 294; Bouldin v. Lockhardt, 3 Baxt. 262; Braden v. Stumph, 16 Lea, 582.

In New York the same law prevails.

People v. Fort Edward Trustees, 70 N. Y. 28.

In North Carolina it has been held that to justify the issuance of municipal bonds, under the constitution of that state, it must be authorized by a majority vote of the whole number of qualified voters of the municipality whether they attend the election or not.

Duke v. Brown, 96 N. C. 129; Southerland v. Goldsboro Aldermen, Id. 49. See also Armour Bros. Bkg. Co. v. Finney County Comrs. 41 Fed. Rep. 321.

This construction has been placed upon similar language in Ohio.

Enyart v. Hanover Twp. 25 Ohio St. 618;
State v. Foraker, 6 L. R. A. 422, 46 Ohio St. 677.

Belcher, C., filed the following opinion: This is an appeal from a judgment on the judgment roll, and the only contention of appellant is that the judgment is not supported by the findings. The action was instituted by the attorney-general upon the relation of one Wells, challenging the legality of the proceedings taken for the reorganization of appellant, as a municipal corporation of the fifth class, under the general laws of the state. The court found the facts to be, in substance, as follows: The town of Berkeley was organized as a municipal corporation in 1878 under an Act of the legislature approved April 1, 1878, and entitled "An Act to Incorporate the Town of Berkeley, in Alameda County;" and thereafter it continued to exercise its corporate franchise, under and by virtue of said Act, until June 28, 1893. On April 8, 1893, at a regular meeting of the board of trustees of the town, there was presented to said board, read, and placed on file, a petition asking that the question of the reorganization of the town as a city of the fifth class, under the general laws relating to municipal corporations, should be submitted to the electors thereof at the next general election to be held therein. This petition was signed by only 47 qualified electors of the town, but attached to it were seven other sheets of paper, signed by qualified electors of the town, numbering in the aggregate 165. The signatures were obtained as follows: Prior to April 3, 1893, eight separate petitions, identical in form and language, were circulated by different persons, and signatures were obtained to each of them. After these petitions had all been signed, the signatures on seven of them were cut off and detached by a person having no authority to do so, and were then attached to the other one so that they appeared to constitute a part of it. The petition to which the seven detached sheets were thus attached was then, by the same person, presented and filed, as aforesaid, and for a genuine petition containing 212 signatures. The whole number of votes cast at the last prior municipal election held in the town was 1,055. On the day the said petition was presented, April 8, the board of trustees, acting upon the same, passed an ordinance submitting to the electors of the town at the next general election to be held therein, to wit, on the 8th day of May, 1893, the question of the reorganization of the town as a city of the fifth class. The election on May 8th was the annual election provided for by the charter of 1878 for the election of municipal officers; and at that election 1,287 electors voted for town officers, and 533 in favor of reorganization, and 517 against reorganization. In due time the board of trustees canvassed the vote, and declared the proposition to reorganize carried, and thereupon caused their clerk to make, and transmit to the secretary of state, a certified abstract of such vote. Thereafter, the said board called a special election for the election of the officers required by law to be elected in cities of the fifth class, and the election was held on June 26th. On June 28th the board canvassed the vote, and declared the result; and from and since the said last-named date the defendant has been, and still is, holding and exercising the franchise of a municipal corporation of the fifth class, under and by virtue of the proceedings hereinbefore set forth, and not otherwise. And, as conclusions of law, the court found "that said defendant has never been legally organized as a city of the fifth class, and that all the steps, proceedings, and elections held in that behalf, as in the findings of fact herein are stated, were and are void; that defendant has usurped, intruded into, and unlawfully held and exercised, the franchise of a municipal corporation of the fifth class, and is now usurping, intruding into, and unlawfully holding and exercising such franchise." Three questions are presented, and counsel on both sides earnestly ask that each of them be considered and decided. They are: First. Was the petition presented to the board of trustees sufficient to give it jurisdiction to submit the proposition of reorganization to a vote of the electors? Second. Was the election at which the proposition was submitted a general election, within the meaning of the statute? Third. To carry the proposition, was a majority of all the electors voting upon it sufficient, or was a majority of all those voting at the election necessary?

1. The constitution provides: "Corporations for municipal purposes shall not be created by special laws; but the legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns, which laws may be altered, amended, or repealed. Cities and towns heretofore organized or incorporated may become organized under such general laws whenever a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall so determine, and shall organize in conformity therewith." Section 6, art. 11. In obedience to this mandate of the constitution, an Act was passed by the legislature, and approved March 13, 1893, entitled "An Act to Provide for the Organization, Incorporation, and Government of Municipal Corporations." Stat. 1893, p. 93. Section 4 of this Act provides: "The common council, board of trustees, or other legislative body of any city and county, city or town, organized or incorporated prior to the first day of January, eighteen hundred and eighty, at twelve o'clock meridian, shall, upon receiving a petition therefor, signed by not less than one fifth of the qualified electors of such city and county, city, or town, as shown by the vote cast at the last municipal election held therein, submit to the electors of such city and county, city, or town, at the next general election to be held therein, the question whether such city and county, city, or town, shall become organized under the general laws of the state relating to municipal corporations of the class to which such city and county, city, or town may belong." It is clear that under these provisions a municipality could only be reorganized in the manner and after a compliance with all the conditions prescribed. It follows, therefore, in this case, that a petition was necessary, and that, unless one signed by the requisite number of electors was presented to the board, it had no jurisdiction to submit the question of reorganization to the electors, and they had no right to vote upon it. As before stated, the number of votes cast at the last municipal election held in the town was 1,055. It was necessary, therefore, that the petition be signed by at least 211 electors. The petition presented was signed by only 47; and, unless the signature on the attached sheets could be counted, it was clearly insufficient. Probably, if the several petitions, as signed, had been presented, they might and should be regarded and treated as "a petition," within the meaning of the statute; and in a similar case it was so held by the supreme court of Florida. McKinney v. Bradford County Comrs. 26 Fla. 267. In Fox v. San Mateo County Suprs. 49 Cal. 563, the same question now in hand arose; and it was held that "if two petitions identical in language are circulated and signed, and, to make the required number of names, the signatures on one petition are cut off and pasted onto the other, which is presented, the board have no authority to order the election." The court, by Wallace, Ch. J., said: "The petition presented to the board must be that petition which was signed by the petitioners. Both signature and presentation are necessary. In this view, the identity of the instrument presented as being that which came from the hands of the petitioners is indispensable. To say that, though the signers did not affix their names to the petition presented, they did affix them to another and similar petition, not presented to the board, is no answer. Nor does it satisfy either the terms of the statute, or its obvious policy, which was to shut the door against frauds which would inevitably occur if the practice of detaching signatures from one petition, and attaching them to another, were permitted." And Crockett, J., in a concurring opinion, also said: "If numerous petitions with similar headings be circulated for signatures, and if the headings from all the petitions, except one, be cut off, and all the names, without the knowledge or consent of the signers, be pasted to the one heading, and in that form presented to the board, it is clear that the paper thus presented was not 'signed' by those whose signatures were affixed to it by pasting. Whether they signed another paper with a similar heading will rest entirely in parol, and can only be ascertained by oral proofs. If such proof will suffice as to a portion of the petitioners, it will be equally effective as to all. We might then have the case of a petition never in fact signed by any one, and the omission could be supplied only by oral proof that the petitioners had signed other similar petitions. If a practice of this kind was tolerated, it would open the door to numerous frauds, and would result in substituting oral proof for that which the statute requires to be in writing." There are some conflicting authorities in other states, and counsel for appellant insist that the decision in the Fox Case should be overruled. It has, however, so far as we know, remained unquestioned in this state for nearly twenty years, and seems to be based on sound and convincing reasoning. It should, therefore, in our opinion, be upheld and followed.

2. The election held on May 8, 1893, was the annual election provided for by law for the election of municipal officers, and in our 28 L. R. A.

opinion it was a general election, at which the question of reorganization might properly be submitted. It is true that the words "general election" are ordinarily used to designate one at which state and county officers are elected, but we know of no provisions in the constitution or statutes limiting them to such an election. Two classes of elections, only, are spoken of—general and special; and a regular annual municipal election cannot be included in the latter class, but must be treated as a general election. In Ruggles v. Woodland Trustees, 88 Cal. 490, application was made for a writ of mandate to compel the trustees to call and provide for the holding of an election of city officers. The court said: "Prior to May 6, 1890, the city of Woodland, in Yolo county, was a municipal corporation under a special charter. On that date a proposition to reorganize as a city of the fifth class, under the general incorporation act approved March 13, 1883, was duly submitted to the electors of said city and approved by a majority vote." And it was held that a peremptory writ should issue. No general state or county election took place on May 6, but the court must have considered the election held on that day a general election, or it could not have said that the proposition to reorganize "was duly submitted to the electors."

3. At the election held on May 8th, a majority of all the electors who voted upon the proposition to reorganize were in favor of it, but not a majority of all who voted at the election. The provision of the constitution in regard to elections like that under consideration has been quoted, and it will be observed that the words used are, "whenever a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall so determine." These words clearly do not indicate that only a majority of the electors voting upon the proposition is necessary, but would seem to imply that a majority of all those voting at the election is required. And such was evidently the interpretation placed upon this provision by the legislature when it passed the general Municipal Incorporation Act of 1883. Section 4 of that Act, after providing for the presentation of a petition, the submission of the question at the next general election, etc., proceeds as follows: "The votes so cast shall be canvassed at the time and in the manner in which the other votes cast at such election are canvassed. If upon such canvass a majority of all the electors voting at such election shall be found to have voted for such reorganization, the said council, board, or other legislative body shall, by an order entered upon their minutes, cause their clerk or other officer performing the duties of clerk, to make and transmit to the secretary of state a certified abstract of such vote, which abstract shall show the whole number of electors voting at such election, the number of votes cast for reorganization and the number of votes cast against reorganization." This language plainly implies, we think, that a majority of all the electors voting at the election is necessary to carry the proposition to reorganize. Counsel on both sides have argued the proposition at great length, and have cited numerous authorities, but we do not deem it necessary to follow their arguments further, or to review the cases referred to.

It follows that the court below drew correct conclusions from the facts and that the judgment should be affirmed.

We concur: Searls, C.; VanCleaf, O

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

James M. KERR et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

Charles LYDECKER, Admr., etc., of Ellis
H. Elias, Deceased.

(11 Ohio St. —)

A mortgage is a specialty, and an action for its foreclosure and sale of the premises, comes within the provisions of section 4980, Rev. Stat., and the period of limitation is fifteen years, unless extended by virtue of section 4902, Rev. Stat.

(April 24, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Gallia County to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of defendants in an action brought to enforce a mortgage on certain real estate. Reversed.

Statement by Burket, J.:

This action was originally commenced on the 28th day of February, 1889, by Richard J. Morrison, then the administrator of the estate of Ellis H. Elias, deceased, and afterward Charles E. Lydecker became the administrator, and was substituted in the place of Mr. Morrison.

The petition in the court of common pleas is as follows:

"The plaintiff says that on the 28th day of January, A. D. 1885, he was, by the Surrogate Court of New York City, County of New York, and State of New York, duly appointed administrator of the estate of Ellis H. Elias, deceased, that he gave bond as such administrator and was duly qualified and entered upon the discharge of the duties of his said office, and is now the duly acting and sole administrator of said estate. That Ellis H. Elias died intestate, and was at the time of his death a resident of the city of New York, county of New York, and State of New York, and that said surrogate court of New York City, at the time of the appointment of said administrator, had jurisdiction both of the subject-matter and the person. The plaintiff says further, that on or about the 2d day of March, A. D. 1868, in the county of Gallia, Ohio, one Thomas Hill then in full life but since deceased, was then and there the owner in fee simple and in possession of certain real estate in the said Gallia county, Ohio, to wit: The southeast half of city lot in the city of Gallipolis, Gallia county, Ohio, numbered fifty-four (54) on the original plat of said town of Gallipolis; that the said Thomas Hill did on the 2d day of March, A. D. 1868, by his deed of that date, duly executed and delivered, convey in fee simple to the said Ellis H. Elias, plaintiff's intestate, then in full life, but since deceased, his heirs and assigns forever the lands and tenements aforesaid, to wit: The southeast half of city lot numbered fifty-four (54) in the city of Gallipolis, Gallia county, Ohio, on the original plat thereof, which said deed of mortgage was on the 18th day of February, A. D. 1869, at the hour of 10 o'clock A. M. duly left for record in the recorder's office of said county of Gallia, Ohio, and was duly recorded in book 5, at page 509 and 510, record of mortgages of said county of Gallia. The plaintiff further says that the said deed of mortgage had a condition thereunder written providing that if the said Thomas Hill should pay or cause to be paid his certain promissory note of said date, to wit: March 2, 1868, for the sum of $1,000 (one thousand dollars), due one year after date, to wit: March 2, 1869, then that the said deed of conveyance should be of no effect, but otherwise it was to be and continue in full force and virtue in law; and the said plaintiff further says that the said Thomas Hill did not pay the said sum of $1,000 nor any part thereof at the time it became due nor at any time, nor has he or any one else since or at any time paid said sum or any part thereof to plaintiff's intestate, the said Ellis H. Elias, nor to the plaintiff, nor to any one for him or said intestate; wherefore said deed has become absolute. The plaintiff further says that the said Thomas Hill departed this life on or about the — day of —, 1875; that prior to his death he conveyed said real estate, and that the defendant, Mary J. Martin is now in possession of said real estate claiming title under the said Thomas Hill, deceased, but that said claim is subsequent to and inferior to the claim of this plaintiff. That the defendants James M. Kerr and August Ufferman have some claim or interest in said premises by virtue of certain mortgage deeds from the defendant Mary J. Martin, but this plaintiff says that all of said claims of said defendants are subsequent to and inferior to the claim of this plaintiff.

"Wherefore plaintiff prays that an accounting may be had of the amount due him, to wit: $1,000 with interest from the 2d day of March, A. D. 1869, that the court find and decree that plaintiff's claim is prior to and su-

*Headnote by the COURT.

NOTE.—The above decision is in accordance with the tendency of modern decisions to regard a real estate mortgage as personality rather than as an interest in land, as it holds that the limitation applicable is that as to "specialties" rather than that as to "recovery of the title or possession of real property," there being no express provision of statute in relation to mortgages.

As to the effect of a statutory bar of the principal debt on the right to foreclose a mortgage or deed of trust securing it, see note to Kulp v. Kulp (Kan.) 21 L. R. A. 530.

prior to that of all of said defendants, and that in default of payment of the amount so found due within a short time to be named by the court that the said real estate herein described may be adjudged to the appraised, advertised and sold, and the money arising therefrom be first applied to the payment of said sum of $1,000, with interest as found due this plaintiff."

To this petition defendants below filed the following demurrer, omitting the caption here:

"Defendants demur to the petition of plaintiff for the following reasons:

"First—That the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue.

"Second—That there is a defect of parties defendant.

"Third—That the petition does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action."

This demurrer was overruled and an answer filed pleading the statute of limitations, and averring that the action was not brought within fifteen years after the cause of action accrued.

A demurrer to this answer was filed by plaintiff below, and in the circuit court the demurrer to the petition was overruled, and the demurrer to the answer was sustained, to all of which proper exceptions were taken.

The case was tried in the circuit court upon the issues tendered by other parts of the answer, and a finding of facts made separate from the conclusions of law, which finding of facts and conclusions of law are as follows:

"First, that on March 2, 1868, Thomas Hill, then in full life, but since deceased, was the owner of the premises described in the petition in fee simple; that on said date, the said Thomas Hill executed and delivered to Ellis H. Elias, plaintiff's intestate, the mortgage deed referred to in the petition, whereby he conveyed to Ellis H. Elias, his heirs and assigns forever, the premises so in the petition described; that said mortgage had a condition thereunder written, that said mortgage was executed and delivered to secure the payment of a certain promissory note made by said mortgagor at the date of said mortgage, payable to the order of said plaintiff's intestate for the sum of $1,000, due and payable one year after date, to wit, on the 5th day of March, 1869; that said mortgage was duly recorded in the records of mortgages of said Galia county, where said premises were situate, on the 18th day of February, 1869, and became a lien on the said premises described therein and in said petition; that said note and mortgage were made and executed for the full and bona fide indebtedness of $1,000, payable by said Thomas Hill to plaintiff's intestate, according to the tenor and effect of said promissory note referred to in the condition of said mortgage; that the said indebtedness so referred to in the condition of said mortgage has never been paid or discharged, and said mortgage has never been released, but still stands as an existing and unsatisfied mortgage deed, and that the defendants now own and hold title fee to said premises from said Thomas Hill, the mortgagor, subject to whatever rights the plaintiff, as the representative of the deceased mortgagee has therein by reason of said unsatisfied mortgage; that the said Charles E. Lydecker is the duly appointed and acting administrator de bonis non of said estate, and has been duly made party plaintiff herein in place and stead of Richard J. Morrison. That the amount named in the condition of said mortgage as the sum to be secured thereby, including interest, the court finds to be on the first day of this term of this court, to wit, February 25, 1891, the sum of $2,819.

"The court upon the facts so as aforesaid found, finds as matters of law, that the plaintiff has the right to maintain his said action, and is entitled to the relief prayed for, and in his petition demanded, to wit, to a judgment ordering the sale of said premises in the petition described for the payment of the amount so found due on the sum named in the condition of said mortgage deed.

"It is, therefore, ordered and adjudged that unless the said defendants pay the sum to be paid in ten days, an order of sale issue to the sheriff of this county commanding him to cause the land and tenements in the petition described to be appraised, advertised, and sold according to law, and that he bring the proceeds of such sale into court at the term next of this court to which time this case is continued, to which finding and conclusions of law as herein found and set forth, and to the judgment and order of the court in ordering a sale of said premises, the said defendants then and there excepted, and said exceptions were made a part of the record."

Judgment having been rendered in favor of the plaintiff below, the case is brought here by plaintiffs in error, defendants below, to reverse the judgment of the circuit court.

Mr. A. J. Greene, for plaintiffs in error:

In all cases to recover the debt secured by mortgage a sale of the mortgaged premises shall be ordered.

3 Curwen, Stat. at L. § 1996.

A mortgage is a mere security for the payment of and a mere incident to the debt.

Swartz v. Leist, 18 Ohio St. 419; Neslin v. Wells, Fargo & Co. 104 U. S. 440, 26 L. ed. 807; Terrell v. Allison, 87 U. S. 21 Wall. 298, 22 L. ed. 635.

Therefore if the mortgagor remains in possession of the mortgaged premises or not, he holds the legal title and not the mortgagee.

Martin v. Alter, 42 Ohio St. 94.

This action is the same in object as the action on the judgment of a lien holder, to sell the premises on which the lien rests to pay the judgment.

Peck v. Jenness, 48 U. S. 7 How. 620, 12 L. ed. 844.

The term "foreclosure" is still applied to the process but it is evidently a misnomer when used to describe the effect produced on the mortgagor's interest. No equity of redemption is foreclosed or cut off but a legal estate is taken from the mortgagor and transferred to the purchaser. The mortgagee is permitted to buy the land at the sale, and may thus acquire it not as mortgagee (as object of his action) but as purchaser at the sale.

3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1190.

Can there be any doubt which period of limitation can apply, or under which section this class of actions come. Id. § 4980.

When in possession the mortgagor has twenty-one years to redeem. The suit to recover on the mortgage must be brought in fifteen years, that is to recover the debt and secure sale of the security to satisfy it, if not paid in a short day to be fixed by the court, if not done in fifteen years, his right to put the property to sale is lost by limitation. Ibid.

A contract in writing under seal is called a specialty or deed.

1 Bouvier, Inst. pl. 874; Bishop, Cont. § 105; Fisher v. Mossman, 11 Ohio St. 42; 1 Nash, Pl. & Pr. 4th ed. 724; Newman v. DeLorimer, 19 Iowa, 244; Lord v. Morris, 18 Cal. 482; Day v. Baldwin, 84 Iowa, 880; Morrison v. Martin, 23 Ohio L. J. 246; Martin v. Alter, supra; Horkrader v. Leiby, 4 Ohio St. 612; Moore v. Burnet, 11 Ohio, 838; Morris v. Way, 16 Ohio, 469; Baird v. Kirtland, 8 Ohio, 21; Hill v. West, Id. 222, 81 Am. Dec. 442.

Mr. A. L. Roadarmour for defendant in error.

Burket, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The principal error relied upon is, that the circuit court erred in sustaining the demurrer to so much of the answer as pleads the fifteen years statute of limitations, and in overruling the demurrer to the petition.

The first and second causes of demurrer were not well taken, and were properly overruled. A court in this state cannot take judicial notice of the laws or courts of another state. If there is no such court as the surrogate court of New York city, having jurisdiction of probate matters, such fact should be made to appear by answer. Upon demurrer, the facts in that behalf set up in the petition, must be taken as true.

The demurrer as to the statute of limitations raises a more difficult question. Section 4977 provides that: "An action for the recovery of the title or possession of real property can only be brought within twenty-one years after the cause of such action accrues."

Section 4980 provides that an action upon a specialty, or an agreement, contract, or promise in writing, may be brought within fifteen years after the cause of action accrues.

Defendant in error contends that the case comes within section 4977, while the plaintiff in error contends that it comes within section 4980.

As to which is right, can only be determined by ascertaining the character of the action, as made by the petition. If it is an action for the recovery of the title or possession of real estate, it falls within the provisions of section 4977; but if it is an action on a specialty, or on agreement, contract, or promise in writing, it falls within section 4980.

That the petition is, both in form and substance, a petition for the foreclosure of a mortgage and sale of mortgaged premises, cannot be questioned; and both the finding of facts and judgment of the court are in line with the petition.

But it is urged that such a proceeding is an action for the recovery of the title or possession of real estate, as in the end the result of the proceeding is to deprive the mortgagor of the lands.

This leads us to an inquiry as to the legal effect of a mortgage, and of a proceeding to enforce the same by action in court.
23 L. R. A.

A mortgage of real estate is regarded, in equity, as a mere security for the performance of its conditions of defeasance, and where that condition is the payment of a debt, the security is regarded as an incident of the debt. Swartz v. Leist, 13 Ohio St. 419.

The mortgage being, in equity, regarded as a mere security for the debt, the legal title to the mortgaged premises remains in the mortgagor, as against all the world, except the mortgagee, and also as against him until condition broken, but after condition broken the legal title, as between mortgagor and mortgagee, is vested in the mortgagee. Allen v. Everly, 24 Ohio St. 97; Ely v. McGuire, 3 Ohio, 223; Hibbs v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 40 Ohio St. 648, 559; Martin v. Alter, 42 Ohio St. 94.

A mortgage in its origin was in reality what it still purports to be, an absolute sale of the lands by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, subject to be determined by performance of the conditions contained in the mortgage within the time therein specified, and upon failure to perform by the day named, the title to the lands became absolute in the mortgagee. On condition broken, the only remedy of the mortgagee was to take the lands for the debt, peaceably if possible, otherwise, by ejectment.

Later on courts of chancery began to regard the mortgage as a mere security for the debt, and to grant relief to the mortgagor by allowing him a certain time, to be fixed by the chancellor, usually six months, in which to pay the debt and redeem the land; the decree in such cases provided that in case the mortgagor should fail to pay the debt within the time so fixed, that his right to redeem should be forever cut off and barred, or as it was usually expressed, foreclosed. Ohio Forms and Practice, by Wilcox, 2d ed. 794.

Upon his failure to pay the debt within the time so fixed, the mortgagee became the absolute owner of the lands in fee, and thereby the debt was discharged.

Still later on, and about the beginning of the present century, courts of chancery, by degrees, adopted a further rule of practice, whereby the mortgagee was allowed, at his election, to either foreclose his mortgage and take the land for the debt, or to have the mortgage foreclosed, the equity of redemption cut off, and then have a master sell the land by order of the court, and apply the proceeds to the payment of the debt, rendering any surplus to the mortgagor, and in case of a deficiency have execution awarded in his favor therefor.

This rule of practice of the courts of chancery ordering a sale of the mortgaged premises, met with so much favor that in many of the states it was enacted into statute.

In England, by Statutes 15 and 16 Vict. chap. 86, § 48, the court, at the request of either party to a foreclosure suit, may direct a sale of the mortgaged property instead of decreeing a strict foreclosure.

In our own state, the right to foreclose a mortgage after condition broken, either by a strict foreclosure, or by a foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged property, continued down to the adoption of the Code of Civil Procedure in 1858. By section 874 of the Code, now section 5816, Revised Statutes, it is provided that: "When a mortgage is foreclosed, a sale of the premises shall be ordered." This prohibits a strict foreclosure in this state, and now, after condition broken, if the mortgagee appeals to the courts to enforce his mortgage, he must elect between two remedies. He may sue for the recovery of the possession of the land in a real action in the nature of ejectment, using this mortgage to prove his title; or, he may sue for a foreclosure of his mortgage, and a sale of the mortgaged premises.

After condition broken, the title is vested in the mortgagee, as between him and the mortgagor, and as the right of the mortgagee to recover the possession of the land by ejectment always existed at common law, and has not been taken away by statute, it still exists in this state. Highway v. Pendleton, 15 Ohio, 735; Allen v. Everty, 24 Ohio St. 97; Hilde v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 40 Ohio St. 548-559.

If such right does not exist, then it must be clear that an action on a mortgage is not a direct proceeding for the recovery of title or possession of real estate. In title or possession recovered in such an action indirectly, or at all? Conceding such right of ejectment to exist, as we do, what is the result?

In case of a strict foreclosure in chancery, if the mortgagee was out of possession, his foreclosure had no further effect than to cut off the right to redeem, and after foreclosure he was still compelled to bring ejectment to obtain possession. Sutton v. Stone, 2 Atk. 101; Ohio Forms and Practice, by Wilcox, 2d ed. 795, note a.

A strict foreclosure was, therefore, in no sense a recovery of either title or possession, because he already had the title vested in him, and the strict foreclosure did not give him possession.

The same is true of a foreclosure and sale under the code. The right to redeem is cut off by the foreclosure, but no title is thereby recovered by the mortgagee, because the title, as between him and the mortgagor, is already in the mortgagee. No possession is thereby recovered, because a strict foreclosure did not award possession. Some attorneys improperly incorporated into the decree for foreclosure an order for a writ of possession. An instance of the kind is mentioned in the case of Allen v. Everty, 24 Ohio St. 109. The authorities are, however, against such practice. Lansing v. Goelt, 9 Cow. 846; Sutton v. Stone, 2 Atk. 101.

The sale ordered and made by virtue of the code, is only an additional step added to a strict foreclosure (and not a change of the nature of the action), and thereby a transfer is made of the title and possession of both mortgagor and mortgagee to a purchaser for value. The deed of the sheriff as completely transfers to the purchaser the title and right of possession as would a joint deed made by both mortgagor and mortgagee. In such case, instead of a recovery of title or possession by the mortgagee, all title and possession already in him, under the mortgage, is transferred to the purchaser.

True, in case the mortgagee buys in the land at the sale made by the sheriff, the land is transferred to him by the sheriff's deed, but such transfer is to him as a purchaser and not as a mortgagee. In such case the mortgagee no more recovers the title or possession, than would a purchaser who is a stranger to the suit.

A sale on foreclosure is no more a recovery of title or possession than a sale made by order of court to satisfy mechanic's liens, or judgment liens.

It is therefore clear that an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage and sale of mortgaged premises is not an action for the recovery of the title or possession of real property, and the limitation provided for in section 4977 does not apply thereto.

Does the limitation provided for in section 4980 apply to such action?

Blackstone in his Commentaries, vol. 2, page 465, says: "Debts by specialty, or special contract, are such whereby a sum of money becomes, or is acknowledged to be, due by deed or instrument under seal." See also Tyler v. Winslow, 15 Ohio St. 864.

Again a specialty is defined to be, "An obligation or contract under seal; an instrument sealed and delivered." 22 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 905.

In the case of Stockwell v. Coleman, 10 Ohio St., the court says on page 40, that "the term 'specialty,' in the strict and early use of the word, was regarded as only applicable to bonds, deeds, or other instruments under seal."

In the case of Marriott v. Thompson, Willes Report, the court says on page 189: "Whenever a man by deed obliges himself to pay money to another, it is a debt by specialty."

A mortgage is an instrument whereby a debt or duty is acknowledged to be due or owing to another, and very often an agreement, contract, or promise in writing, is also contained therein. In 1868, when the mortgage in question was executed, the law required a mortgage to be under seal, that is, sealed and delivered.

It is, therefore, clear that a mortgage is a specialty, and that an action for the foreclosure thereof, and sale of the premises, comes within the provisions of section 4980, and is barred in fifteen years after the cause of action accrued, unless extended by virtue of the provisions of section 4993. No such extension of time appears in this case, and it therefore follows that the circuit court erred in overruling the third cause of demurrer to the petition and in sustaining the demurrer to so much of the answer as pleads the statute of limitations, and in the judgment rendered against the defendants below.

The case of Longworth v. Taylor, 2 Cin. Sup. Ct. Rep. 89, which seems to regard the limitation in such cases to be twenty-one years, is very meagerly reported, and there is some error or mistake, either in the report of the case or in the decision thereof. The syllabus is certainly not now law in this state.

The case of Fisher v. Mossman, 11 Ohio St. 42, correctly holds that the bar of the note, or other instruments secured by mortgage, does not necessarily bar an action on the mortgage. The case did not show that the action was commenced more than fifteen years after it accrued, and also fails to show that the fifteen years' statute was pleaded against the action on the mortgage. The only statute which the opinion of the court mentions, is the four years' statute in favor of administrators.

The case does not decide that the statute of twenty-one years applies to an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage.

Neither does the case of Bailey v. Smith, 14 Ohio St. 396, 411, 84 Am. Dec. 885, so decide. Both of these cases have often been cited as holding that an action for the foreclosure of a mortgage and sale of mortgaged premises, is not barred short of twenty-one years; but a careful examination of these cases will show that no such question is decided in either of them.

A mortgage may be made to secure an account, and an action on an account may be barred in six years, while the action on the mortgage would not be barred short of fifteen years.

The payment of the account would extinguish the right of action on the mortgage, and in an action for the foreclosure of the mortgage after action on the account is barred, the presumption of payment of the account arising from the lapse of time, might be used as an item of evidence to prove payment, but such presumption would not be conclusive and might be overcome by satisfactory proof showing that in fact such account remains unpaid. In such case the lapse of six years is not the equivalent of payment. The condition of the mortgage is for payment of the account, and not for its bar by the statute of limitations. Allen v. Everly, 24 Ohio St. 97; Bisell v. Jaudon, 16 Ohio St. 498.

But when a note is secured by the mortgage, the statute of limitations as to both is the same; and therefore the mortgage will be available as a security to the note in an action for foreclosure and sale until the note shall be either paid or barred by the statute; but in such case an action for foreclosure and sale cannot be maintained on the mortgage after an action on the note shall be barred by the statute of limitations.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is reversed, and judgment rendered on the findings of facts in favor of defendants below.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

C. E. BUSWELL et al.

v.

SUPREME SITTING OF ORDER OF IRON HALL.

(.....Mass.....)

1. A receiver of a foreign corporation appointed at its domicil, to whom all the assets of the corporation have been assigned as fully as can be done in accordance with a decree of the court, may be allowed to intervene in Massachusetts and be heard in a proceeding for the appointment of a receiver of the property of the corporation found within the latter state.
2. The legal title to the 20 per cent of assessment received by local branches of the order of iron hall, which they are allowed to retain as a reserve fund, which by the law of the order is declared to be the property of the supreme sitting and subject to its control at all times, and which is to be called for in its annual installments after the period of six years and six months, is like the other 80 per cent which is paid over immediately in the supreme sitting, although the possession is for the time retained by the branches.
3. A receiver of the property in Massachusetts of a benefit society incorporated in Indiana may, by the exercise of comity, be ordered, after paying his charges and expenses and the expenses of the suit, to pay over the balance to a receiver in Indiana, where the courts of both states have adopted the same principles governing the distribution of the fund, and it appears by the decree of the Indiana court that it will admit the proof of claims against the funds made in the Massachusetts court, when it regularly certifies them, subject to such revision in Indiana as justice may seem to the court to require, and will distribute the fund so that benefit certificate members in Massachusetts will receive the same proportionate dividend as members in Indiana and other states.

(April 16, 1894.)

APPEALS by petitioners from orders of the Superior Court for Worcester County, made pending proceedings for the settlement of the affairs of the subordinate lodges of the Order of Iron Hall situated in Massachusetts by means of a Massachusetts receiver refusing to permit petitioners, who were the Indiana receiver, and alleged creditors living in Massachusetts, to intervene and be heard in the proceedings. Reversed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Messrs. George Fred. Williams and G. W. Anderson, for appellants;

The appointment of a receiver under the general equity powers of the court determines no right, changes no lien, dissolves no attachment.

Hubbard v. Hamilton Bank, 7 Met. 840.

The effect of the appointment of a receiver is not to oust any party of his right to the property, but merely to retain it for the benefit of the party who may appear to be entitled to it; and when the party entitled to the estate has been ascertained, the receiver will be considered as his receiver.

Quincy, M. & P. R. Co. v. Humphreys, 145

NOTE.—The exercise of comity toward a receiver appointed in another state while guarding the rights of local creditors, is well illustrated in the above case by the direction to a local receiver to turn over assets for distribution to the receiver in another state. The case shows the modern liberal tendency toward recognition of foreign receivers.

28 L. R. A.

so far as it can be done without prejudice to the rights of local creditors.

For a review of the authorities as to the rights of a receiver as to property outside of the jurisdiction in which he is appointed including his right to bring suit, see note to Gilman v. Hudson River Boot & Shoe Mfg. Co. (Wis.) ante, 83.

U. S. 82, 97, 86 L. ed. 632, 637; Union Bank of Chicago v. Bank of Kansas City, 186 U. S. 223, 226, 84 L. ed. 341, 346; Dan. Ch. Pr. 5th ed. *1742; Kerr, Receivers, 158, 159; State v. Railroad Comrs. 41 N. J. L. 235; Willink v. Morris Canal & Bkg. Co. 4 N. J. Eq. 377; Kincaid v. Dwinelle, 59 N. Y. 548; First National Bank of Bethel v. National Pahquioque Bank, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 383, 20 L. ed. 340.

Doubtless a receiver for a foreign corporation may be appointed on application of proper parties in interest, for the purpose of preserving property in danger of waste or dissipation, although even in these cases the courts move with exceeding caution.

See Redmond v. Hoge, 8 Hun, 171; High, Receivers, § 305; Hamilton v. Accessory Transit Co. 26 Barb. 46; Murray v. Vanderbilt, 89 Barb. 141; DeBemer v. Drew, 57 Barb. 488.

A court of equity acts in personam only, and has no power to act in rem, except under special statutory authority.

See Spurr v. Scoville, 8 Cush. 578; Felch v. Hooper, 119 Mass. 53; McCann v. Randall, 147 Mass. 81, and cases cited; Wilson v. Martin, Wilson Automatic Fire Alarm Co. 149 Mass. 24, 8 L. R. A. 309, 151 Mass. 515; Atlas Bank v. Nahant Bank, 23 Pick. 488; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1317; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 134, 135, 170; Booth v. Clark, 58 U. S. 17 How. 322, 15 L. ed. 164.

We can find no case of a receivership for distribution in accordance with insolvency principles, except under statutory authority.

Quincy, M. & P. R. Co. v. Humphreys, supra; Gaither v. Stockbridge, 67 Md. 222; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1317; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 134, 135, 170.

The appointment of a receiver to collect the fund in this commonwealth may be sustained as an equitable proceeding to facilitate the settlement of the affairs of an insolvent corporation in the state under whose laws that corporation was created.

Life Assn. of America v. Rundle, 103 U. S. 222, 26 L. ed. 337; Parsons v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 81 Fed. Rep. 305; Fry v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. Id. 197; Weingartner v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 314; Williams v. Hintermeister, 26 Fed. Rep. 889; National Trust Co. of New York v. Miller, 33 N. J. Eq. 155; Hurd v. Elizabeth, 41 N. J. L. 1.

Those who deal with a foreign corporation subject themselves to the laws of the government which creates that corporation.

Canada Southern R. Co. v. Gebhard, 109 U. S. 527, 27 L. ed. 1020.

Failey should have been admitted as a party and a receiver appointed here for the purpose of administering all the assets of the Indiana corporation according to the law of Indiana. The existing receivership can be supported on no other principle of equitable jurisprudence.

Chafes v. Fourth Nat. Bank of New York, 71 Me. 514, 36 Am. Rep. 345; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 38 U. S. 13 Pet. 519, 10 L. ed. 274; Runyan v. Coster, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 122, 10 L. ed. 332; Tombigbee R. Co. v. Kneeland, 45 U. S. 4 How. 16, 11 L. ed. 855.

Mr. Failey is a statutory receiver, and not a mere officer of a court of equity pendente lite. Ind. Rev. Stat. 1898, § 1223, chap. 5; Quincy, M. & P. R. Co. v. Humphreys, and Union Bank 28 L. R. A.

of Chicago v. Bank of Kansas City, supra; Gluck & B. Receivers of Corporations, §§ 2, 7, 11, p. 35, note; High, Receivers, § 244.

A receiver who is also an assignee under an instrument executed by the owner of the property has always been held to have title in foreign jurisdictions.

Graydon v. Church, 7 Mich. 36; Hazard v. Durant, 19 Fed. Rep. 471; Failey v. Talbee, 55 Fed. Rep. 892.

There is no doubt that the great weight of American authority permits the attachment of the assets of a foreign debtor to hold as against the officer of a foreign court who would otherwise take them for pro rata distribution.

Taylor v. Columbian Ins. Co. 14 Allen, 353. The rule in England is otherwise.

See 5 Harvard L. Rev. p. 221; Foote, Private International Law, 2d ed. pp. 202-308; Moore v. Bonnell, 31 N. J. L. 90; Varnum v. Camp, 18 N. J. L. 326, 25 Am. Dec. 476; Wharton, Conf. Laws, §§ 390, 799; Cramton v. Valido Marble Co. 1 L. R. A. 120, 60 Vt. 291; Ogden v. Saunders, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 213, 6 L. ed. 606; Cook v. Moffat, 46 U. S. 5 How. 295, 12 L. ed. 159.

The American courts, after a good deal of discussion, rejected the English rule.

Blake v. Williams, 6 Pick. 286, 17 Am. Dec. 372; Daves v. Head, 3 Pick. 123; Holmes v. Remsen, 4 Johns. Ch. 460, 1 L. ed. 902, 3 Am. Dec. 581; Burk v. McClain, 1 Hard. & McH. 336; Taylor v. Geary, Kirby, 313; Harrison v. Sterry, 9 U. S. 5 Cranch, 289, 3 L. ed. 104; Taylor v. Columbian Ins. Co. supra; May v. Wannemacher, 111 Mass. 202; Faulkner v. Hyman, 142 Mass. 58.

No one ever heard of a creditor's bill for the benefit of the citizens of a single state.

Ex parte Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 367, 25 L. ed. 676; McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 89, 36 L. ed. 873; United States v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542, 28 L. ed. 593.

A careful examination of the authorities discloses no case disallowing the title of a foreign assignee in insolvency, or a foreign receiver for the purpose of equitable distribution, except to respect the lien of an attaching creditor.

All that has been settled by the decisions, to which we have been referred on this subject, is, that our courts will not sustain the lien of foreign assignees or receivers in opposition to a lien created by attachment under our own laws.

Runk v. St. John, 29 Barb. 587.

These plaintiffs by the very act of coming into a court of equity are estopped from asking any inequitable preference; or, what is the same thing, objecting to an equal, pro rata distribution of the funds of the defendant corporation.

Foster, Fed. Pr. § 248, and cases cited; Burnham v. Bowen, 111 U. S. 776, 28 L. ed. 596.

If Mr. Failey's claim rested merely on comity—if he had no assignment—it is good, for Indiana recognizes the right of a foreign receiver to sue in that state, if authorized by the decree of the court appointing him.

Metzner v. Bauer, 98 Ind. 425.

Foreign creditors are treated as well as domestic creditors in our insolvency courts.

Scribner v. Fisher, 2 Gray, 43; Baldwin v.

Ilale, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 223, 17 L. ed. 531; Kelley v. Drury, 9 Allen, 27; Dehon v. Foster, 4 Allen, 545, 7 Allen, 57.

The tendency of modern adjudications is in favor of a liberal extension of interstate comity, and against a narrow and provincial policy, which would deny proper effect to judicial proceedings of sister states under their statutes and rights claimed under them, simply because technically, they are foreign, and not domestic.

The principle is universal that the assets of insolvent corporations are to be regarded as a trust fund for the benefit of all the creditors, and "that kind of diligence by which one creditor of an insolvent corporation secures to himself a prior right to its property, and an unequal advantage over other creditors, is without merit, and more selfish than just."

Gilman v. Hudson River Boot & Shoe Mfg. Co. ante, 56, 84 Wis. 60; Booth v. Clark, 58 U. S. 17 How. 322, 15 L. ed. 164, as explained by Mr. Justice Shiras in Parsons v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 31 Fed. Rep. 305; Gluck & Becker, Receivers of Corporations, §§ 2, 7, 11, and cases cited; Bockover v. Life Asso. of America, 77 Va. 85; Boulware v. Davis, 9 L. R. A. 601, 90 Ala. 207; Merchants Nat. Bank v. McLeod, 88 Ohio St. 184; Lycoming F. Ins. Co. v. Wright, 55 Vt. 526; Runk v. St. John, 29 Barb. 585.

When a railroad corporation becomes insolvent, the application for receivership is based mainly on the danger of attachment at law.

Foster, Fed. Pr. § 240, p. 397, § 246.

These receiverships extend through several states, and the property is under the jurisdiction of various courts. Technically, no receivership is ancillary.

Mercantile Trust Co. v. Kanawha & O. R. Co. 39 Fed. Rep. 337; Re U. S. Rolling Stock Co. 57 How. Pr. 16.

But by comity, questions of accounting, etc., are ordinarily contested in only one court, generally the court first taking jurisdiction and appointing a receiver, and after the decree of that court, similar decrees are entered, practically by consent, in the other courts.

Foster, Fed. Pr. § 242; Jennings v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 569; Central Trust Co. of New York v. Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. 29 Fed. Rep. 618; Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 272, 55 L. ed. 464, 470; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 88 U. S. 13 Pet. 590, 10 L. ed. 308.

Mr. Louis C. Southard, for Hiram Williams et al., appellees:

It is the duty of the courts of this commonwealth to so administer the trust in its charge, to wit, the funds belonging to the order of the iron hall within the state of Massachusetts and such other funds as may hereafter come to the possession of the receiver appointed by the courts of this commonwealth, as shall best serve the interests of the Massachusetts certificate holders as a whole; and that the rights of these certificate holders are paramount to those of the receiver for Indiana or the receiver for Massachusetts.

Fawcett v. Supreme Sitting, Order of the Iron Hall, Sup. Jud. Court Ct., opinion unpublished.

23 L. R. A.

Messrs. W. S. B. Hopkins, H. L. Parker and A. S. Pinkerton for appellee Buswell. Mr. C. U. Bell for David Beattie et al., appellees.

Mr. George L. Magberry for Libby, Higginbotham & Dow.

Messrs. Lowell, Stimson & Lowell for Suffolk Savings Bank.

Messrs. Joseph Bennett and Freeman Hunt for William E. Barnes et al.

Mr. Prescott Keyes for Joshua B. Stearns.

Field, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On October 26, 1892, James F. Failey the receiver of the defendant corporation, appointed by the superior court of Marion county, in the state of Indiana, presented his petition to the superior court of this commonwealth to be admitted as a party respondent in the present suit; and he prayed that some person might be appointed as receiver ancillary to the proceedings in Indiana, with the usual authority to take possession of all the property of the corporation in this commonwealth, to collect all debts due to said corporation here, and that after deducting the proper charges and expenses, to be determined by the superior court here, said ancillary receiver should be ordered to "pay over to said Failey, receiver, for distribution to the membership of the said order, including the citizens of this state, said funds: provided, that before such remittance be made this court reserves the right to require assurances from the Marion superior court, aforesaid, that upon the receipt of said funds, and in making the distribution, all citizens of this state, members of said order, or creditors thereof, shall be entitled to receive as much, ratably, in proportion to their several claims, as the citizens of Indiana, or any other state." This petition was denied by the superior court here, and Mr. Failey appealed to this court. On December 21, 1893, Joshua B. Stearns filed in the superior court his petition, averring that he was a member of local branch No. 84 of the order, existing at Cambridgeport, in the county of Middlesex, and was the owner of the certificate No. 35,953, for the sum of $1,000, issued by the defendant order under date of January 30, 1835; and he recited various orders and decrees made by the court in Indiana, and made, in substance, the same prayer as Mr. Failey. George W. Whitney was also admitted as a copetitioner with Mr. Stearns. Both Stearns and Whitney were admitted as parties defendant, and at the hearing on the petition they offered competent evidence to prove the allegations of the petition, to which the plaintiff objected, upon the following grounds: "First, that the petitioners, being defendants, had no standing in court for the relief sought for in the petition; second, that the allegations of the petition were insufficient to warrant the relief sought for." The presiding justice sustained the objections and dismissed the petition, and the petitioners appealed. The report of the justice of the superior court before whom the hearing was had then proceeds as follows: "It was then stipulated by the parties, in open court, that if the decree dismissing the petition was erroneous, upon the ground that the petitioners had a right to be heard upon their petition, although defendants in the case, the said decree should be annulled, and the petition should be sent back for a hearing thereon, provided that the allegations of the petition were sufficient to authorize a decree, in the discretion of the court, for the petitioners. It was further stipulated that the twelfth edition of the constitution and by-laws of the defendant corporation should be considered a part of the record, and that any part thereof may be referred to at the argument, but without prejudice to the right of any party to question the accuracy of such constitution and by-laws in any future proceedings; also, that the reports of the receiver on file in this case may be referred to, and arguments may be based upon facts therein stated." Thereupon, the justice, being of opinion that his decree so affected the merits of the controversy that the matter ought to be determined by this court before further proceedings were had, reported the questions to this court.

The bill in the present suit was filed on August 25, 1892, in the superior court for the county of Worcester, by C. E. Buswell, against the supreme sitting of the order of the iron hall, described as "a foreign corporation organized under the laws of the state of Indiana, and having its legal location in the city of Indianapolis and state of Indiana, and doing business in this commonwealth," and "against the local branch No. 36 of the order of the iron hall, located at Worcester, in the county of Worcester, and commonwealth of Massachusetts,—a voluntary association holding a charter from, and working under the jurisdiction of, the supreme sitting of the order of the iron hall," etc.,—and against certain savings banks with which said local branch had deposited the 20 per cent of the amount received from the assessments collected from its members, "which amount constitutes a reserve fund, and is claimed to be the property of, and under the control of, said supreme sitting." The plaintiff, Buswell, was a member of said local branch, and the holder of a benefit certificate for $1,000. He prayed for a receiver of said local branch, for an injunction, and for a pro rata distribution of said reserve fund among the certificate holders of said local branch. This bill was afterwards amended by the plaintiff so that it should stand as brought "in behalf of himself, and any and all other certificate holders of the order of the iron hall hereinafter mentioned who may hereafter be joined as parties herein;" and the prayer of the bill was amended so that it should read as follows: "That a receiver may be appointed to take charge of all the business, property, goods, effects, and assets of said defendant, the supreme sitting of the order of the iron hall, within this commonwealth, and distribute the same among certificate holders of the local and sisterhood branches organized in, and creditors residing in, this commonwealth, according to law and the order of the court." And an order was obtained that all such local and sisterhood branches pay over and deliver to the receivers appointed by the court all property of the principal defendant, and all moneys and property deposited by the officers of the local branches in this commonwealth, and by a subsequent order the receiver was empowered "to receive any and all property out of this commonwealth belonging to said defendant corporation, the supreme sitting of the order of the iron hall, and deposited in any banking institution, or with any corporation, association, or individual, by officers or trustees of local branches in this commonwealth, and all moneys, funds, and property, wherever situated and being, which, in law or equity, belong to certificate holders, members of subordinate branches, or lodges, within this commonwealth." The receiver appointed here holds a large sum of money which he has collected from these local branches, or from their officers or depositaries. A decree has been entered in the superior court to the effect that the reserve fund be distributed "among the members of local and sisterhood branches organized within this commonwealth, the funds of which branches have been transferred to the receiver here appointed," etc. The decree also declares that what is called the "general fund," as well as the paraphernalia, etc., is to be deemed to be the property of the local and sisterhood branch, the members of which contributed to the same, and that this property is to be charged with the debts of such branch, and directs that it shall be repaid or redelivered to such branch, provided that the branch "has so far maintained its organization as to empower some person to receive the same;" otherwise, it is to be applied to the payment of the debts of the branch, in full or pro rata, as the case may be, the surplus, if any, to be distributed among the members of the branch to which the property belongs.

Although the facts averred in the petition of Mr. Failey and the petition of Mr. Stearns have not been found to be true, yet, for the purpose of determining the questions of law before this court, the averment of facts in their petitions must be taken to be true. The principal facts are that Mr. Failey was appointed receiver on August 23, 1892, by the court in Indiana, under the laws of which state the corporation was organized. It is not contended that the court in Indiana did not have jurisdiction over the defendant, or that the appointment of a receiver was not within the power of that court. The receiver appointed by that court was empowered to sue—in his own name, as receiver—all persons within or without the state of Indiana, and to receive and collect all the property of the defendant within or without that state, and all persons within or without that state were ordered to deliver said property to said receiver. The defendant, its officers and agents, were ordered to assign and deliver to said receiver all its property and effects; and it appears that the defendant has assigned and transferred to said James F. Failey, as such receiver, "all the moneys and securities of every kind belonging to the reserve fund of said supreme sitting, and held by each of the branches thereof, and the officers of such having the same in possession and control." Mr. Failey, then, on the facts averred, is not merely a receiver, but he is an assignee of the reserve fund of the order held by the several branches, as fully as the court in Indiana, and the assignment of the supreme sitting of the order, in accordance with the decree of that court, can make him an assignee.

Without considering the right of a receiver appointed by a court of equity in a foreign jurisdiction, under general equity powers, to sue or intervene in his own name in this commonwealth, we think it clear that Mr. Failey, on the allegations of his petition, must be taken to be, in effect, an assignee of a foreign insolvent corporation, acting under a court of competent jurisdiction of the state by which the corporation was created, and in which its principal offices were situated, and its principal business was carried on. We think such an assignee has a standing to intervene in and be heard on a proceeding in this commonwealth for the appointment of a receiver of the property of the corporation found here. We assume that the proceedings in this commonwealth, whether they be regarded as ancillary to the proceedings in Indiana, or as independent proceedings, are within the jurisdiction of the superior court here, and as no creditor of the defendant has appealed from the decrees entered by the superior court here, that the creditors are satisfied therewith. See Stat. 1892, chap. 435. The receiver reports that he holds only $697.85 money belonging to the general fund, with a small amount of other property, against which there are outstanding claims far exceeding the amount of the money and property belonging to this fund in his hands. The amount of the claims of creditors upon this fund is not stated in the papers before us. The only dispute between the parties is with regard to the benefit and reserve funds, and the rights of benefit certificate holders thereto. This renders it necessary to examine the constitution and laws of the order. Law 1, section 1, is as follows: "There shall be attached to this order a benefit fund, in which members may participate (except social members), as they may severally elect, either in the sum of one thousand dollars, eight hundred dollars, six hundred dollars, four hundred dollars, or two hundred dollars, on which they shall pay the rates, and be entitled to the benefits, prescribed in the following table," etc. One of the objects of the organization, as stated in article 2, section 3, of the Constitution, is as follows: "To establish a benefit fund from which those who have held membership in the order for thirty days or more may, should they so desire, on proper application, and complying with all the rules and regulations governing said benefit fund, become participants therein, and may receive the benefit of a sum not exceeding twenty-five dollars per week, nor more than one half the amount of the benefit certificate held by each member, when, by reason of disease or accident, they become totally disabled from following any avocation, or, in case of death, if a member for more than two years, one half of the amount of the benefit certificate will be paid, less benefit received, or an amount of not more than one thousand dollars when they have held a continuous membership in the order for seven years: provided, however, that the sum total drawn from this order by any of its members shall never exceed, in sick, disability, death, and final benefits, the sum named in the benefit certificate." This benefit fund is derived from assessments upon the holders of benefit certificates, which assessments are made by the supreme sitting of the order from time to time, and out of which benefits are paid in case of the sickness, disability, or death of a member. The assessments are made through the local branches, and 80 per cent thereof are sent to the supreme cashier of the supreme sitting. Law 2, section 1, is as follows: "Twenty per cent of the amount received by each branch on each assessment shall be set aside and retained as a reserve fund, which fund is the property of the supreme sitting, and shall be subject to its control at all times, as hereinafter provided. At the expiration of the first term of six years and six months from the date of the organization of the order, one seventh of the reserve fund then on hand shall be called for by the supreme accountant, and used by the supreme cashier in the payment of benefits, and annually thereafter one seventh of the reserve fund on hand shall be called for, and used in like manner, unless otherwise ordered by the supreme sitting." The greater part of the property in the hands of the receiver appointed by the superior court here is derived from this reserve fund held by the local branches organized within this commonwealth.

An examination of the various provisions of the constitution and laws of the order convinces us that the legal title to this reserve fund is in the supreme sitting of the order, and not in the different local branches; that the 20 per cent of the assessment retained by each local branch differs from the 80 per cent transmitted to the supreme sitting mainly in this: that the possession and supervision, subject to the constitution and laws, remain with the local branches. The whole fund is for the protection of, and payment of benefits to, holders of benefit certificates; and the reserve fund seems to us essentially a part of the benefit fund, although it may be in the nature of a safety fund to insure the payment of maturing certificates. See Burdon v. Massachusetts Safety Fund Ass., 147 Mass. 360, 1 L. R. A. 146. We infer that the superior court here has not regarded the reserve fund held by each branch as the special property of that branch. It has ordered all the reserve funds received from all the branches in this commonwealth to be distributed as one fund among the certificate holders of all said branches. It appears, indeed, from the receiver's second report, that there are some branches in this commonwealth which have transferred the reserve fund in their possession to Mr. Failey, as receiver; and we infer that the decree of the superior court here does not admit certificate holders of these branches as claimants to the fund in the possession of the receiver here. It appears by the petition of Mr. Failey that the court in Indiana has authorized him to collect all the moneys belonging to the order in the possession of all the branches, wherever organized, for the purpose of equally and ratably distributing them among the creditors and certificate holders of the corporation, whether residing in Indiana or elsewhere, and the purpose of Mr. Failey, in filing his petition here, was to obtain the funds in the hands of the receiver here for such distribution. Mr. Failey represents that in the states and territories of the United States there are about 69,190 members, of whom about 10,002 are Massachusetts members, and that he has in his possession, as receiver, more than $700,000 in money. The second report of the receiver appointed here shows that he has in his hands about $280,000, which, with the exception of the amount hereinbefore stated-as received from the general fund, has been received from the reserve fund or the benefit fund, nearly all being received from the reserve fund found in the possession of the branches in this commonwealth. Under the constitution and laws of the order, we regard the whole benefit fund, including the reserve fund, as held in trust for the holders of all the benefit certificates of the order. Coe v. Washington Mills, 149 Mass. 548. Although the possession of the fund reserved out of the assessments upon the members of each branch may be in that branch, the legal title is in the supreme sitting. This reserve fund, as held by each branch under the constitution and laws, was not intended to be used exclusively in paying benefits to the members of that particular branch, but was ultimately to be transmitted to the supreme cashier of the supreme sitting, to be used for the payment of benefits generally. Having been kept apart from the general benefit fund, the reserve fund in the possession of each branch is shown to have been derived exclusively from assessments upon the past or present certificate members of that branch; and in that respect it may differ from the benefit fund generally, although, in the accounts of property kept by the supreme sitting, it should appear what proportion of the general benefit fund in its possession has been derived from each branch.

It is impracticable to lay down a general rule which must govern all receivers, appointed here, of the property of foreign corporations in this commonwealth. If any person has obtained, by attachment or otherwise, any valid lien on the property of the corporation in this commonwealth, such lien is not dissolved by the filing of the bill, and the appointment of a receiver, but must be enforced. Hubbard v. Hamilton Bank, 7 Met. 840; Taylor v. Columbian Ins. Co. 14 Allen, 358; Folger v. Columbian Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 267. When there is no such lien, the general principle is that the property should be so administered that all claimants should receive their equal ratable shares of the whole property of the corporation; and the court here will, if necessary, protect claimants who are citizens of Massachusetts in their right to receive such shares. This is the principle adopted by Stat. 1890, chap. 321, relating to the insolvency of foreign corporations in this commonwealth. It is there provided that it shall be the duty of the assignees appointed here "so far as practicable to distribute such assets in such manner that all creditors of the insolvent corporation whether within this state or elsewhere shall receive proportionate dividends out of the assets of said corporation whether the same are within the control of the assignees or not." The same principle was adopted in the settlement of the insolvent probate estates of deceased persons not resident within this commonwealth, before there was any statute on the subject. Davis v. Estey, 8 Pick. 475; Daves v. Head, 3 Pick. 128. The subject is now regulated by statute (Pub. Stat. chap. 138), and the same principle is adopted. The fourth section of this chapter is as follows: "To this end his estate shall not be transmitted to the foreign executor or administrator until all the creditors who are citizens of this commonwealth have received the just proportion that would be due to them if the whole estate of the deceased, wherever found, that is applicable to the payment of common creditors, were divided among all the creditors in proportion to their respective debts, without preferring any one species of debt to another; and no creditor who is not a citizen of this commonwealth shall be paid out of the assets found here, until all those who are citizens have received their just proportion as provided in the preceding section."

In the present case, the holders of benefit certificates do not seem to us to be common creditors of the defendant corporation, and the bill, in the present case, was not brought by a single creditor to collect a debt. It was brought by a holder of a certificate for the common benefit of himself and other holders of certificates who, in a sense, are the beneficiaries of the benefit and reserve funds. The holders of certificates have been contributors to these funds which were intended to be used for the payment of benefits to all such holders. It has become impracticable for the corporation to carry out the purposes for which it was organized. The claims of the certificate holders have, in general, not matured; but, as an equitable method of determining the amount due them from these funds, the claims have been made up, both in Indiana and here, by taking the sum of all the assessments paid by each certificate holder in good standing in the order, and deducting from it all amounts received by him for sick or disability benefits. As these funds were intended to constitute a general fund for the benefit of all holders of benefit certificates who were members of the order, we think it equitable that, so far as practicable, they should be administered as a general fund for the benefit of all certificate holders. It becomes then a question of the best practicable means of doing this. It would be extremely difficult to apply the rule established by Pub. Stat., chap. 138, § 4, to the present case, if there are funds and local branches in all, or nearly all, the states of the United States. Some branches in one or more of the states, under the laws of the order, may have sent their reserve funds to the supreme sitting before the institution of any proceedings in court, and the proportion between the amount of the funds and the amount of the claims of the certificate holders in any one state must differ from that in every other. It might be almost impossible to determine, in any state, what would be the ratio between the aggregate of the funds, wherever found, and the aggregate of all the claims of all the certificate holders, wherever they reside. If the courts of each state should distribute all the funds found within the state exclusively among the certificate holders resident in that state, there, necessarily, must be great inequality in the distribution. There is no statute which compels the court to proceed in any particular manner, in the case at bar. It has been said, in argument, by the counsel for Mr. Failey, that by granting his petition the certificate holders resident in Massachusetts will probably receive more than under the decree made by the superior court. If this were certain, then, if that decree were carried into effect, it might be equitable that the certificate holders who have shared in the benefits of that decree should also be permitted to prove their claims before the court in Indiana, in order to obtain another dividend, so that they may receive, in the whole, the same proportionate dividend as other members. But this is not certain, and if it were, it ought not to affect the general principles governing the distribution, although, under some circumstances, it might affect the mode of distribution; and, if the larger part of the funds is in the hands of the receiver in Indiana, that fact deserves to be considered. If all members who are holders of benefit certificates ought to share proportionately in the whole fund, there ought not to be a decree that the fund here should be distributed among the members of the local branches existing here, if thereby such members would obtain more than their just proportion of the whole sum. If the money being transmitted to the receiver in Indiana were in danger of being misappropriated or misapplied, or if the difficulties attending the transmission of the money and the proof of claims there by the certificate holders who are members of the local branches in this commonwealth were so great as to make such proceedings impracticable, we have no doubt of the power of the court here to order a distribution of their proportionate shares among the certificate holders who are inhabitants of Massachusetts, or among those certificate holders who are shown to have contributed to the funds in the hands of the receiver here, whether inhabitants or not. From the necessity of the case, the court here must have some discretion, and must reasonably protect the rights of the citizens of the commonwealth in the administration of the trust. But in the administration of such a trust, when the property of the trust is found in many different states, comity requires that we should do all that safely can be done to insure, as far as practicable, a speedy, equitable distribution of the whole property among those entitled to it. One difficulty in this case, as we infer from papers submitted to us, which are not strictly a part of the record before us, may be that by the decree of the court here the general creditors of the local branches are not permitted to prove their claims against the benefit or reserve fund, but only against the general fund, which has been found to be the property, severally, of the different local branches; and this general fund has been ordered to be repaid to the branches, severally, from which it has been received, provided they have so far maintained their organization as to empower some person to receive the same. We infer that such general creditors are permitted, in Indiana, to prove their debts against the whole fund in the hands of the receiver appointed there, pari passu with the holders of certificates. We are not informed whether such debts are large, nor what is the amount of the general fund in the hands of the receiver there. If this difference in the administration is not such as considerably to affect the debts of the certificate holders, we do not think it is sufficient to affect our decision. We infer that the court in Indiana and the court here have adopted the same principles in determining what holders of certificates are entitled to prove claims, and in what manner the amount of the claims is to be made out. If the court in Indiana will substantially administer the whole benefit and reserve funds equally and ratably among all the benefit certificate holders who are members of the order,—as, if the allegations of the petitioners are true, it has undertaken to do,—we think, on the facts stated in the petitions, that it should receive the aid of the courts here in doing this. The receiver here should be allowed his charges and expenses, and all expenses of the suit here should be paid, and he should be protected against all suits and claims; but the balance of the reserve and benefit funds should, if the allegations of the petitions be found to be true, be transmitted to the receiver in Indiana provided it appears by the decree of that court that it will admit the proof of claims against the reserve and benefit funds made in the court here, when regularly certified by the court here, subject to such revision by the court in Indiana as justice may seem to the court to require, and will distribute the whole fund in its control so that the benefit certificate members of the branches in Massachusetts shall receive the same proportionate dividend as the benefit certificate members or branches in Indiana and in other states who are admitted to share in the fund. If the time is not extended so as to admit such an allowance of the proof of these claims in the Indiana court on an equality with others when the money is in fact ready to be transmitted, then the petitions should be dismissed. See National Trust Co. of New York v. Miller, 33 N. J. Eq. 158; Parsons v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 31 Fed. Rep. 905; Fry v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. Id. 197; Jennings v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 569.

23 L. R. A.

The petitioners, including Mr. Failey, have a right to be heard, on their petitions, and are not strictly to be regarded as either plaintiffs or defendants, but as persons alleging an interest in the property in the custody of the court, and intervening in the cause. The case is remanded to the superior court, with instructions to hear the petitions, and to proceed therein in accordance with this opinion.

So ordered

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

J. D. VAN WINKLE, Appt.,

v.

W. T. SATTERFIELD.

(....Ark.....)

1. A clerk or salesman employed by the year in a retail store, without any agreement for Sunday labor, cannot be discharged for refusal to attend the store during certain hours on Sunday to protect the goods while people are passing through it to a post-office in the rear, although he had, before making the present contract, been in the habit of giving such Sunday services while employed in the store.

2. An employer has the burden of proof to show that a servant wrongfully discharged might have obtained similar employment to reduce damages for breach of the contract.

(March 31, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Washington County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for an alleged breach of contract of employment. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. B. R. Davidson and W. S. Pol-lard, for appellant:

Satterfield, according to his testimony, after his discharge made little effort to obtain employment.

Idleness is in itself a breach of social duty and of moral obligation. But if he continue idle, for the purpose of charging another, he superadds a fraud which the law would rather punish than countenance.

Walworth v. Pool, 9 Ark. 394.

It is well settled that where a servant is employed for a particular term, at stipulated wages, and his employer discharges him without cause, before the expiration of the term, he may elect to treat the contract as continuing, keep himself in readiness to perform it on his part, and after the expiration of the term, sue his employer on the contract for the whole of the wages due him by its terms. This is only on the principle that readiness to perform, and tender of performance, is equivalent to performance of the contract on his part.

Gardenhire v. Smith, 39 Ark. 280.

If Satterfield had been wrongfully discharged, he had two remedies: First, he had a NOTE.—The present case is somewhat unusual in respect to the right to discharge an employé for refusing to work on Sunday, although the law on that point could hardly be doubtful where the labor was itself unlawful.

As to what constitutes Sunday labor, see note to Quarles v. State (Ark.) 14 L. R. A. 193.

As to rescission of Sunday contract, see note to Kelley v. Coagrove (Iowa) 17 L. R. A. 779.

And as to constitutionality of Sunday laws, see note to Judeand v. State (Md.) 22 L. R. A. 721.

23 L. R. A.

right to hold himself in readiness to perform the obligations on his part; wait until the end of the term and sue for the amount due. If he had elected to do this, then his time was his employer's and it was his duty to reduce the amount of damages as much as possible by engaging in similar business at the best wages he could obtain.

Id. 287; Walworth v. Pool, supra. See also Wood, Mast. & S. pp. 239, 340, and notes.

In no case could he cease to try to engage in similar employment, go and engage in an independent business as he did when he became proprietor of a butcher shop, and charge his time up against his former employer, converting to his own use the time that he had sold to his employer.

Polk v. Daly, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. 156.

If he had so desired to treat the contract as rescinded and at an end, his remedy was to sue on quantum meruit for the time he had served.

Gardenhire v. Smith, 39 Ark. 288.

It is either rescinded or subsisting. If subsisting, his time belongs to his employer, and he has no right to put himself in a position where he cannot give it to his employer by engaging in similar employment, if it is his purpose to charge his employer for such time.

Wood, Mast. & S. p. 240, and notes.

The absolute refusal of Satterfield to perform the duties required of him, and which he had been discharging for over a year, certainly afforded good grounds for his discharge.

Spain v. Arnott, 2 Stark. 256.

This duty had to be performed by some one under the postal regulations of the United States, and plaintiff was only required to keep open just such hours as the postal regulations required. If this was unlawful then it was unlawful on account of a violation of the criminal statutes of the state, and we have the regulations of the general government requiring of its citizens that which the state declares a crime. Such is not the law.

Nelson v. State, 25 Tex. App. 599.

It cannot be contended that the act of opening the store was lawful, while the act of retaining an oversight over the property while the door was open was unlawful.

If Satterfield had knowledge of the services that were to be required, and these services rendered the contract void, he would be a participator. He could not take advantage and contract in this way and refuse to perform that which he well knew was contemplated by both parties.

Waters v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 110 N. C. 338; Handy v. St. Paul Globe Pub. Co. 4 L. R. A. 466, 41 Minn. 188.

Battle, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is based upon a written contract in the following words and figures:

"This contract, made and entered into, this first day of January, 1890, by and between J. D. Van Winkle, party of the first part, and W. T. Satterfield, party of the second part—

"Witnesseth: That, whereas, the said J. D. Van Winkle has this day employed the said W. T. Satterfield to work as salesman, and do all other duties connected with the said J. D. Van Winkle's book and stationery store, now situated in the postoffice building on the south side of the public square in the city of Fayetteville, Ark., for a special period of time, beginning with January 1st, 1890, and extending one year from that date, at a salary of $60 per month, payable at the end of each month. And I, the said J. D. Van Winkle, do hereby grant the said W. T. Satterfield the privilege of continuing to work in the same capacity above stated, and for the same salary above stated, until January 1st, 1893, if he so desires. And I, the said W. T. Satterfield, do agree that, for the above considerations, I will well and truly perform all duties connected with the book and stationery store to the best of my ability, all things being subject to the direction or management of the said J. D. Van Winkle.

"J. D. Van Winkle.
"W. T. Satterfield."

Satterfield worked for Van Winkle, as a clerk and salesman in a book and stationery store, in the performance of his part of this contract, until the 10th of November, 1890, when Van Winkle discharged him. The following facts show how the discharge occurred: A postoffice was in the rear end of the store. The entrance to it was the front door of the store, which was kept open on Sundays from 8 to 9 A. M., from 12 to 1 P. M., and from 4 to 5 P. M., to enable citizens to get their mails. Satterfield was in the employ of Van Winkle before the written contract was entered into, and had been in the habit of remaining in the store, and watching the goods, while it was open on Sundays. Van Winkle undertook to make railings to protect the goods so that it would not be necessary for Satterfield to remain on Sundays. They were to be made so that they could be put up and taken down at will. In the event they had been made and used, it would have been necessary to put them up on Saturday nights, and carry them to the cellar on Monday mornings. Upon his undertaking to make them, Satterfield proposed to remain in the store while it was open on Sundays; saying that he preferred doing so to putting them up, and carrying them in and out of the store. They were not made, and Satterfield continued to watch the goods on Sundays, with few exceptions, until he was discharged on his refusal to do so any longer. At the time of his discharge he offered to perform his contract,—insisting, however, that it was no part of his duty to remain in the store on Sundays,—and notified Van Winkle, in writing, that he elected to work for him under his contract until the 1st of January, 1893, and thereby offered to do so. But Van Winkle refused to allow him to remain in his employment unless he would stay in the store on the Sabbath, and take care of the goods, as he had been doing, which Satterfield declined to do, and he was thereupon discharged.

23 L. R. A.

On the 7th of January, 1891, Satterfield commenced this action against Van Winkle, on their contract, to recover the damages caused by its breach. Van Winkle admitted the discharge, but denied that it was wrongful.

In April, 1891, the issues in the cause were tried by a jury. The foregoing facts were proved, and evidence tending to prove that Satterfield was out of employment, after he was discharged and before the trial, for fifty-two days, and that he was in business on his own account for the remainder of the time, was adduced. What the value of his labors in his own business—which were performed after his discharge—was, does not appear.

The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $104. The court rendered judgment accordingly, and the defendant appealed.

Two questions are presented for our consideration: (1) Was the discharge wrongful? And (2) if so, what damages were recoverable?

1. Was Satterfield wrongfully discharged?

In general a contract to labor by the month or year does not bind the laborer to work on Sunday. The presumption is, men do not intend to violate the law, until the contrary appears. Johnston v. Com. 22 Pa. 109. Where an instrument of writing is susceptible of two conflicting constructions, one of which would render the contract unlawful, and the other lawful,—to carry this presumption into effect,—the latter should be adopted. Gauss v. Orr, 46 Ark. 129.

Necessity, which can be avoided by the exercise of reasonable precaution, cannot excuse or justify labors on the Sabbath which are forbidden by the statutes. State v. Goff, 20 Ark. 289.

The contract sued on did not require the parties to labor on Sunday. Satterfield only bound himself, by it, to discharge the duties of a salesman or clerk. The violation of the Sabbath was not among those duties. The work which the appellant demanded of him could not be lawfully done on the Sabbath. The evidence does not show that there was any necessity for it, or that it could not be avoided by means which would have subserved the purpose for which it was required. On the contrary, it does show that railings would have served the same purpose. Satterfield was, consequently, wrongfully discharged.

2. What damages are recoverable?

A servant who has been wrongfully discharged by his employer before the time for which he was hired has expired has these remedies: "First, he may consider the contract as rescinded, and recover on a quantum meruit what his services were worth, deducting what he had received for the time during which he had worked; second, he may wait until the end of the term, and then sue for the whole amount, less any sum which the defendant may have a right to recoup; third, he may sue at once for breach of the contract of employment." He, however, can adopt only one. Colburn v. Woodworth, 81 Barb. 381; 2 Sedgw. Damages, 8th ed. § 665, and cases cited.

If he adopts the third remedy, he can recover the damages which he has sustained down to the day of the trial which is limited to a compensation for the injury suffered by the breach of the contract. The loss of the wages which his employer agreed to pay him constitutes the injury. What, therefore, he has suffered by reason of the loss of the wages, as a rule, is the amount of the damages he is entitled to recover. 2 Sedgw. Damages, 8th ed. § 666, and cases cited; 2 Sutherland, Damages, 2d ed. §§ 692-695, and cases cited; Wood, Mast. & S. 2d ed. p. 246.

It is the breach, and not the time of the discharge, or when the action was brought, that gives the damage. If the consequence for which the law renders the employer responsible develops so as to create an absolute injury at the time of the trial, he is entitled to compensation for such injury. He cannot recover the damages he might suffer after the trial for the obvious reason, they cannot be assessed in advance; for he might, after the recovery of the judgment, obtain employment from other persons, and receive for the residue of the term for which he was hired in the first instance as much as, or more than, he would have been entitled to under the broken contract, and he served his time out, or he might die before his term of service expires, and, in either event, recover more than the law allows, which simply intends to save him from actual loss by the employer's breach of the contract. Gordon v. Brewster, 7 Wis. 355; Fowler v. Armour, 24 Ala. 194; Everson v. Powers, 89 N. Y. 527, 43 Am. Rep. 319; McDaniel v. Parks, 19 Ark. 671; Wood, Mast. & S. p. 260; 2 Sutherland, Damages, § 693; 1 Sedgw. Damages, § 85.

When a servant is wrongfully discharged by his employer, it is his duty to use "reasonable efforts to avoid loss by securing employment elsewhere." It is not, however, his duty, if he was employed in any special service, as in this case, to engage in a business different from that in which he was employed. In estimating his damages, therefore, such sums as he, by reasonable diligence, might have earned in a similar business, making allowance for the expense of obtaining employment, should be deducted from the wages he might have earned under the broken contract. Walworth v. Pool, 9 Ark. 394; Gillis v. Space, 63 Barb. 177; Costigan v. Mohawk & H. R. R. Co. 2 Denio, 609, 43 Am. Dec. 758; Wood, Mast. & S. p. 250; 2 Sutherland, Damages, § 693.

The burden of proof is on the employer to show that the servant might have obtained similar employment, for the failure of the servant to obtain other employment does not affect the right of action but only goes in reduction of damages, and if nothing else is shown "the servant is entitled to recover the contract price, upon proving the employer's violation of the contract, and his own willingness to perform." The fact that the servant might have obtained new employment does not constitute a defense. It is one of the facts to be considered in estimating the servant's loss. Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 362, 19 Am. Rep. 285; Gillis v. Space, supra; Costigan v. Mohawk & H. R. R. Co. 2 Denio, 609, 43 Am. Dec. 758; Sutherland v. Wyer, 67 Me. 64; 2 Sutherland, Damages, § 693; Wood, Mast. & S. p. 245.

To entitle the employer to reduce the damages recoverable by showing that the servant has performed work on his own account, he must prove that the work was incompatible with the performance of the service stipulated to be performed under the violated contract. Gates v. School Dist. of Fort Smith, 57 Ark. 370, 10 L. R. A. 186; 2 Sedgw. Damages, § 667.

In Gardenhire v. Smith, 39 Ark. 280, cited by appellant, the court held "that where a servant is employed for a particular term at stipulated wages, and his employer discharges him, without cause, before the expiration of the term, he may elect to treat the contract as continuing, keep himself in readiness to perform it on his part, and, after the expiration of the term," sue, and recover of "his employer, on the contract, . . . the whole of the wages due him by its terms," less what he had an opportunity to make by like service after his dismissal, or he may treat "his dismissal as a rescission of the contract," and sue immediately, and recover the value of his services to that time, as upon a quantum meruit. The court did not undertake to say, in that case, what relief he would be entitled to, in the event he elects to treat the contract as continuing, and sued upon it, for damages, before the expiration of his term of service. But it did in McDaniel v. Parks, 19 Ark. 671. In that case the servant was employed to oversee for the year 1854, was discharged without cause on the 22d of April, and sued on the 28th of August, in the same year, and recovered a reasonable sum for the whole of the term for which he was employed; there being no evidence as to the wages agreed to be paid, or that he received other employment during his term of service. In the report of the case it is not stated when the trial occurred, but it is manifest, from the instructions of the court to the jury, that it took place after the time for which he was hired had expired. The opinions in these two cases are in harmony with the views we have expressed.

Judgment affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

PEOPLE of the State of New York, ex rel.
George D. FORSYTH, Dist. Atty., Rept.,
v.

COURT OF SESSIONS OF MONROE COUNTY, Appt.

(141 N. Y. 238.)

1. The power to suspend sentence after conviction is at common law inherent in a court of record, possessing jurisdiction in criminal cases.
2. A statute authorizing a court to suspend sentence in a criminal case after conviction does not encroach upon the constitutional powers of the executive to grant reprieves and pardons.
3. A court cannot preclude itself or its successor from passing the proper sentence whenever such a course appears to be proper by an order suspending sentence during good behavior.

(February 27, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Fifth Department, affirming an order of the Special Term for Monroe County granting a mandamus directing defendant to pass sentence on John Attridge, who had pleaded guilty to larceny in the second degree. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. B. Hallock, for appellant:

The court of sessions had power to suspend sentence upon Attridge during his good behavior.

The court of sessions is a court of superior jurisdiction (People v. Bradner, 107 N. Y. 1; Re Jennings, 10 Hun, 810), possessing common-law powers.

People v. Willett, 102 N. Y. 251; People v. Bradner, supra.

The power to suspend sentence is a common-law power and is inherent in the court. It has been practiced from the earliest days of the history of jurisprudence in England down to the present time in all countries having the common law.

People v. Mueller (Ill.) 4 Crim. L. Mag. 780, citing Forsyth, Trial by Jury, 198; Washburn's Manual, 256; Hale, P. C. 19, § 2; 1 Chitty, Crim. L. 617, 1st ed. 758; Hawk. P. C. bk. 2, chap. 51, § 8.

The first constitution of the state of New York, adopted in 1777, made the common law of England the law of this state, so far as applicable.

1 N. Y. Const. art. 35; 1 Rev. Stat. 8th ed. 44; Fuller v. State, 1 Blackf. 66.

The great weight of authority in this and other states upholds the power of the court to suspend sentence.

People v. Mueller (Ill.) 4 Crim. L. Mag. 725; Miller's Case, 9 Cow. 780; People v. Graves, 81 Hun, 882; People v. Harrington, 15 Abb. N. C. 161; People v. Whipple, 9 Cow. 715; Abbott, Trial Briefs, § 861; Carnal v. People, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 262; 2 Hale, P. C. p. 412; 1 Chitty, Crim. L. 758; 1 Hale, P. C. pp. 368, 870; 4 Bl. Com. chap. 81; Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 1124. See also Com. v. Dondican, 115 Mass. 136; State v. Addy, 48 N. J. L. 114, 39 Am. Rep. 547; Weaver v. People, 83 Mich. 297; Com. v. Chase, Thatcher, Crim. Cas. 269; Fruits v. State, 2 Sneed, 232; Allen v. State, Mart. & Y. 294; People v. Reilly, 53 Mich. 260; Com. v. Malden, 145 Mass. 205; People v. Blackburn, 6 Utah, 847; Gibson v. State, 68 Miss. 241; State v. Hatley, 110 N. C. 522; Sylvester v. State, 65 N. H. 198.

The practice of suspending sentence has existed and been exercised in the courts of this state ever since the organization of the state government.

Reed's Case, 1 City Hall Rec. 4; Perkins' Case, Id. 7; Johnson's Case, Id. 21; Taylor's Case, Id. 28; Mitchell's Case, Id. 41; Rez v. Ryan, Cox, Crim. Cas. 109.

The claim that the suspension of sentence in criminal cases is unconstitutional because the pardoning power is vested in the governor is not tenable.

In England the power of pardoning offenses is lodged in the crown, and in general the pardoning power of the king extends to any offense against either the common law or the statute law. 17 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 318, 819, and cases there cited.

In this state the pardoning power was by the first constitution, Rev. Stat. 8th ed. art. 18, § 41, vested in the governor.

By the second constitution of the state, Rev. Stat. 8th ed. art. 3, § 5, this provision was retained with a single exception,—that the governor was authorized to grant reprieves or pardons in murder cases.

Mr. George D. Forsyth, Dist. Atty., with Mr. Fred C. Hanford, Asst. Dist. Atty., for the People:

The court of sessions has no power to suspend sentence and any attempt to exercise that power is a nullity.

People v. Brown, 54 Mich. 15.

The authorities also hold against this power.

People v. Reilly, 53 Mich. 262, dissenting opinion; People v. Morrisette, 20 How. Pr. 118; United States v. Wilson, 46 Fed. Rep. 748; People v. Blackburn, 6 Utah, 847.

See note discussing this power and concluding that it must be conceded, on a careful review of the authorities, that the right by any court, to make such a suspension of sentence,

NOTE.—The above case very greatly strengthens the authorities in favor of the inherent power of a court to suspend execution of sentence upon a convicted person. Nevertheless there are also strong authorities on the other side. See State v. Voss (Iowa) 8 L. R. A. 767 (a case of contempt), and authorities cited on both sides of the question 28 L. R. A.

tion in note to People v. Cummings (Mich.) 14 L. R. A. 235.

Somewhat akin to this subject is the question of staying execution in a capital case pending appeal, as to which see the Indiana case of Parker v. State, post, 359.

does not exist in the absence of statutory authority.

People v. Cummings (Mich.) 14 L. R. A. 285.

A suspension of sentence upon a convicted defendant is in fact a conditional pardon, which the constitution only gives the governor, and while it has been a custom for many years to suspend judgment indefinitely, there is not any well-settled law giving a court that power.

The pardoning power is vested solely in the governor.

A pardon is an act of grace proceeding from the powers entrusted with the execution of the law which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has committed.

United States v. Wilson, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 150, 8 L. ed. 640; Bouvier, Law Dict. 150.

A suspension of sentence is a quasi pardon.

People v. Brown, People v. Reilly, People v. Morrisette, supra; United States v. Wilson, 46 Fed. Rep. 748; People v. Blackburn, supra.

Article 4, section 5, of the State Constitution provides that the governor "shall have the power to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons after conviction."

Such powers as are especially conferred by the constitution on the governor, or any other specified officer the legislature cannot require or authorize to be performed by any other officer or authority.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 115, note 2. See also 4 Crim. L. Mag. 468; United States v. Klein, 80 U.S. 13 Wall. 128, 20 L. ed. 519; Haley v. Clark, 26 Ala. 442; State v. Sloss, 25 Mo. 292, 69 Am. Dec. 467; State v. Todd, 26 Mo. 175; State v. Nichols, 28 Ark. 74, 7 Am. Rep. 600.

O'Brien, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented by this appeal is novel and important. The supreme court has by mandamus commanded the court of sessions to proceed to judgment in a criminal case, and to pass sentence upon the defendant after conviction. The power of the court to grant the writ under the circumstances disclosed by the record is denied. On the 4th of March, 1892, John Attridge was convicted in the court of sessions of Monroe county, composed of the county judge and two justices of sessions, upon his own plea of guilty of the crime of grand larceny, in the second degree. The defendant was a clerk in a mercantile firm, and the offense consisted in the appropriation to his own use of a sum of money which belonged to his employers, and which came to his possession, or under his charge, by virtue of his employment. There were supposed to be certain mitigating circumstances connected with the transaction, growing out of his youth, previous good character, and otherwise, that were presented to the court through a petition signed by numerous respectable citizens, who prayed that his sentence be suspended. Three days after the conviction he was brought before the court, and the county judge presiding sentenced him to imprisonment. The two justices of sessions dissented, and announced, as the judgment of the court, that sentence be suspended. The defendant was remanded to the custody of the sheriff, but discharged soon after from the commitment upon habeas corpus granted by a justice of the supreme court holding a court of oyer and terminer, on the ground that the sentence pronounced by the county judge, not having been concurred in by a majority of the court, was illegal. He was, however, remanded to the custody of the sheriff, to the end that the court of sessions might pronounce a legal sentence in the case. He was again brought before that court on the 14th of March, and the judgment thereupon given that sentence be suspended during good behavior. The county judge dissented, and the defendant was thereupon discharged from custody. On the 27th of June following, the supreme court at special term, upon the application of the district attorney, granted a peremptory writ of mandamus commanding the court of sessions to proceed to judgment, and to sentence the defendant to the punishment prescribed by law. The order granting the writ has been affirmed at the general term.

The precise question involved, therefore, is the power of a court of record, possessing jurisdiction in criminal cases, to suspend judgment after conviction. The court of sessions is a court possessing superior criminal jurisdiction and common-law powers. People v. Bradner, 107 N. Y. 1. It possesses all the powers formerly exercised by superior courts of criminal jurisdiction in England, except so far as these powers have been changed or abrogated by statute. There can, I think, be no doubt that the power to suspend sentence after conviction was inherent to all such courts at common law. The practice had its origin in the hardships resulting from peculiar rules of criminal procedure, when the court had no power to grant a new trial, either upon the same or additional evidence, and the verdict was not reviewable upon the facts by any higher court. The power, as thus exercised, is described in this language by Lord Hale: "Sometimes the judge reprieves before judgment, as where he is not satisfied with the verdict, or the evidence is uncertain, or the indictment is insufficient, or doubtful whether within clergy; also, when favorable or extenuating circumstances appear, and when youths are convicted of their first offense. And these arbitrary reprieves may be granted or taken off by the justices of gaol delivery, although their sessions be adjourned or finished; and this, by reason of common usage." 2 Hale, P. C. chap. 58, p. 412. This power belonged, of common right, to every tribunal invested with authority to award execution in a criminal case. 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 1st ed. 617, 758.

Without attempting to collate all the authorities on the subject, it is sufficient to say that the power to suspend sentence at common law is asserted by writers of acknowledged authority on criminal jurisprudence, by the uniform practice of the courts, and numerous adjudged cases. 2 Hawk. P. C. chap. 51, § 8; 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. § 1124; 4 Bl. Com. chap. 31; People v. Graves, 81 Hun, 832; People v. Harrington, 15 Abb. N. C.

161; People v. Whipple, 9 Cow. 715; Carnal v. People, 1 Park. Crim. Rep. 262, 266; Com. v. Dowdican, 115 Mass. 186; State v. Addy, 43 N. J. L. 114, 89 Am. Rep. 547; Weaver v. People, 83 Mich. 297; People v. Reilly, 53 Mich. 260; Com. v. Maloney, 145 Mass. 205; Sylvester v. State, 65 N. H. 193.

The courts below were of the opinion that section 12 of the Penal Code deprives the court, in all cases, of any discretion with respect to the imposition of the punishment prescribed by law. The language of that section is as follows: "The several sections of this Code which declare certain crimes to be punishable as therein mentioned, devolve a duty upon the court authorized to pass sentence to impose the punishment prescribed." This provision was not intended to, and did not, abrogate any power over the judgment which the courts possessed before. The provision is declaratory of the law as it always existed, for it was always the duty of the court to impose the punishment upon conviction; but this duty was never supposed to be inconsistent with the power to suspend the judgment till the next term of the court or indefinitely. Since the granting of the writ in this case, the above section of the Penal Code has been amended by chapter 279 of the Laws of 1893 by adding to it these words: "But such court may, in its discretion, suspend sentence, during the good behavior of the person convicted, where the maximum term of imprisonment prescribed by law does not exceed ten years, and such person has never before been convicted of a felony." It is admitted by the learned district attorney that this amendment, though passed since the writ in this case was directed by the order, is applicable to this case, as the defendant in the indictment has not yet been sentenced, and, if brought before the court for that purpose, pursuant to the command of the writ, sentence may be suspended if the enactment is valid. He meets this difficulty, however, by strenuously insisting that the amendment encroaches upon the power of the governor to grant reprieves and pardons, which is exclusively vested in him under the state constitution. Const. art. 4, § 5. There can be no doubt that, if the amendment distributes any part of the pardoning power conferred upon the executive to some other department of the government, the legislation is in conflict with the constitution, and invalid. The power to suspend sentence and the power to grant reprieves and pardons, as understood when the constitution was adopted are totally distinct and different in their origin and nature. The former was always a part of the judicial power; the latter was always a part of the executive power. The suspension of the sentence simply postpones the judgment of the court temporarily or indefinitely, but the conviction and liability following it, and all civil disabilities, remain and become operative when judgment is rendered. A pardon reaches both the punishment prescribed for the offense and the guilt of the offender. It releases the punishment, and blots out of existence the guilt, so that in the eye of the law, the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense. It removes the penalties and disabilities, and restores him to all his civil rights. It makes him, as it were, a new man, and gives him a new credit and capacity. Ex parte Garland, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 333, 18 L. ed. 366; United States v. Klein, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 128, 20 L. ed. 519; Knote v. United States, 95 U. S. 149, 24 L. ed. 442.

The framers of the federal and state constitutions were perfectly familiar with the principles governing the power to grant pardons, and it was conferred by these instruments upon the executive with full knowledge of the law upon the subject, and the words of the constitution were used to express the authority formerly exercised by the English crown, or by its representatives in the colonies. Ex parte Wells, 59 U. S. 18 How. 307, 15 L. ed. 421. As this power was understood, it did not comprehend any part of the judicial functions to suspend sentence, and it was never intended that the authority to grant reprieves and pardons should abrogate, or in any degree restrict, the exercise of that power in regard to its own judgments, that criminal courts had so long maintained. The two powers, so distinct and different in their nature and character, were still left separate and distinct, the one to be exercised by the executive, and the other by the judicial, department. We therefore conclude that a statute which, in terms, authorizes courts of criminal jurisdiction to suspend sentence in certain cases after conviction,—a power inherent in such courts at common law, which was understood when the constitution was adopted to be an ordinary judicial function, and which, ever since its adoption, has been exercised by the courts,—is a valid exercise of legislative power under the constitution. It does not encroach, in any just sense, upon the powers of the executive, as they have been understood and practiced from the earliest times. The power to suspend the judgment during good behavior, if understood as expressing a condition, upon the compliance with which the offender would be absolutely relieved from all punishment, and freed from the power of the court to pass sentence, is open to more doubt. The legislature cannot authorize the courts to abdicate their own powers and duties, or to tie their own hands in such a way that, after sentence has been suspended, they cannot, when deemed proper and in the interest of justice, inflict the proper punishment in the exercise of a sound discretion. Nor can the free and untrammelled exercise of this power or the right to pass sentence according to the discretion of the court be made dependent upon compliance with some condition that would require the court to try a question of fact before it could render the judgment which the law prescribes. The statute must not be understood as conferring any new power. The court may suspend sentence as before, but it can do nothing to preclude itself or its successor from passing the proper sentence whenever such a course appears to be proper. This, we think, is all that the statute intends, and that was the only effect of the judgment. It is a power which the court should possess in furtherance of justice, to be used wisely and discreetly; and it is perhaps creditable to the administration of justice in such cases that, while the power has always existed, no complaint has been heard of its abuse.

The order of the General and Special Terms should be reversed, and the mandamus denied.
All concur.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

John PARKER et al., Appts.,
v.

STATE of Indiana.

(.....Ind.....)

Granting a stay of execution by an appellate court pending an appeal in a capital case is not a reprieve within the meaning of a constitutional provision giving to the governor the power to grant reprieves; and a statute authorizing such stay merely declares the inherent power of the court, independent of any statutory provision.

(November 9, 1893.)

APPPLICATION to set aside a stay of execution pending an appeal by defendants from a judgment of the Marion County Criminal Court convicting defendants of murder in the first degree and sentencing them to suffer the death penalty. Application overruled.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Kealing & Hugg and R. W. McBride for appellant.

Mr. A. G. Smith for appellee.

Coffey, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellants in this case were indicted, tried, and convicted in the Marion criminal court upon a charge of murder in the first degree, and were sentenced to suffer death on the 3d day of November, 1893. From this judgment they appealed to this court, and on the 28th day of September, applied for a stay of execution upon the ground that the time intervening between the date of filing the transcript in this court and the date fixed for the execution was not sufficient to enable their counsel to properly examine and argue the legal questions in the case, and was not sufficient to enable the court to properly consider and decide the legal questions arising upon the assignment of errors in the cause. After due consideration of the petition and the record in the case, the court found that it was impossible to properly consider and decide the errors assigned upon the record prior to the 3d day of November, 1893, and thereupon entered an order staying the execution of the sentence passed upon the appellants until the 5th day of January, 1894.

The attorney-general of the state files a petition to vacate that order upon the alleged ground that it is in violation of article 3, section 1, and article 5, section 17, of the Constitution of the state, and that this court in staying the execution of the sentence of the appellants, attempted to and did exercise the constitutional powers and duty of the governor of the state; that the power to grant reprieves and stay of execution in criminal cases is vested in the governor, and not in the courts.

Section 1883, Rev. Stat. 1881, provides: "An appeal to the supreme court from a judgment of conviction does not stay the execution of sentence, except where the punishment is to be death or the judgment is for a fine or a fine and costs only, in which cases the execution of sentence may be stayed by order of the supreme court, or a judge thereof."

Section 1874 provides: "When the execution of the sentence is respited to another day by the governor or where the same is suspended by order of the supreme court pending an appeal thereto, the sheriff must note the same on the warrant, and the defendant must be detained in custody until the day to which the respite is granted, or the execution suspended by the supreme court, at which time the sheriff, unless the judgment is reversed or the defendant pardoned, must execute the sentence between the hours specified in the judgment and return the warrant, with the respite or order of the supreme court."

It is not denied that this court had the power, under the statutes, to make the order in question, provided they are valid enactments, but it is said that they are in conflict with the sections of the constitution above referred to, and for this reason they are void.

Section 1, article 3, of the Constitution provides: "The powers of the government are divided into three separate departments: the legislative, the executive, including the administrative, and the judicial, and no person charged with official duties under one of these departments shall exercise any of the functions of another, except as in this constitution expressly provided."

Under this provision of our state constitution it has often been held by this court that the three departments of the state government are not merely equal, but they are exclusive in respect to the duties assigned to each. They are absolutely independent of each other. They are equal, co-ordinate and independent. This division of power was intended to prevent the concentration of power in one person or class of persons. Lafayette, M. & B. R. Co. v. Geiger, 34 Ind. 185; State v. Denny, 118 Ind. 382, 4 L. R. A. 79; Evansville v. State, 118 Ind. 426, 4 L. R. A. 98; State v. Denny, 118 Ind. 449, 4 L. R. A. 65; State v. Noble,

NOTE.—In connection with the above decision that a stay of execution pending appeal is not a reprieve, see the decision in People v. Court of 23 L. R. A.

Sessions of Monroe County (N. Y.), ante, 856, to the effect that a suspension of sentence by the court in which trial is had is not a reprieve.

118 Ind. 350, 4 L. R. A. 101; Hovey v. State, 127 Ind. 588, 11 L. R. A. 763.

Because these several departments of the government are separate and independent, and because the incumbent of each is prohibited from performing any of the functions belonging to another department, it has been held that a legislature cannot pass a valid act relieving persons from penalties incurred by violation of penal statutes, nor can it pass a valid act compelling the refunding of money collected on a judgment; in short, that it is not in the power of one department of the government to perform any of the functions belonging to another. State v. Sloss, 25 Mo. 291, 69 Am. Dec. 487; Hailey v. Clark, 26 Ala. 439.

Section 17, article 5, of the Constitution, provides that the governor of the state shall have power to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons, after conviction, for all offenses except treason and cases of impeachment, subject to such regulations as may be provided by law, so that if the granting of a stay of execution by the supreme court in a capital case pending before it on appeal is the granting of a reprieve, within the meaning of this provision of the constitution, it must follow that the statutes above set out are void as being in conflict with the constitution of the state.

In solving the question as to whether the granting of a stay of execution by this court in a capital case, pending before it on appeal, is a reprieve within the meaning of that word as it appears in the constitution, we must keep in mind the fact that the same constitution creates the three several departments of the state government and that it was the acknowledged purpose of the framers of that instrument to make these departments independent of each other. To hold that the stay of execution by the supreme court in a case like this is a reprieve within the meaning of section 17, article 5, of the Constitution, is to annihilate one section of that instrument with another, for if the court is compelled to appeal to the executive for a stay of execution in order to enable it to hear and determine a case, it is not independent. We are not at liberty to suppose that the convention which framed the constitution intended such a result as this. It intended that the constitution should constitute a harmonious whole, and it is our duty so to construe it if it is possible to do so. Under the construction contended for, if one convicted of murder and sentenced to suffer the death penalty should appeal to this court, and by the exercise of all the diligence possible should not be able to file his transcript earlier than the day before the time fixed for his execution, leaving no time to investigate his case, if the chief executive should not be accessible, or, if accessible, he should refuse to grant a reprieve, the result would be the execution of the appellant and an investigation of his case afterwards. If, upon investigation, we should reach the conclusion that he had been illegally convicted, the most that could be done would be to reverse the judgment and to that extent vindicate his memory. This is not the justice contemplated by the law. If we adopt this construction, in the case supposed, the power of this court to administer justice between the appellant and the state would not depend upon its own will, but upon the will of the governor, the incumbent of another independent department of the government. Without cogent reasons, such a construction should not be adopted.

In construing the constitution upon the subject now under immediate consideration, it is to be constantly borne in mind not only that the judiciary is an independent department of the state government, but also that it derives none of its judicial power from either of the other departments. It is true that the general assembly may create courts, under the constitution, but it cannot confer on them judicial power, for it possesses none to confer. When created, such power is conferred by the constitution, and not by the act creating the court. Elliott, Appellate Procedure, § 1; State v. Noble, 118 Ind. 350, 4 L. R. A. 101; Shugart v. Miles, 125 Ind. 445; Hawkins v. State, Id. 570; Missouri River Teleg. Co. v. First Nat. Bank of St. Louis, 74 Ill. 217.

The supreme court in this state is a court created by the constitution, and as such it possesses the inherent power to do all acts necessary to enable it to effectually exercise the jurisdiction conferred upon it. The authority to review and revise necessarily includes the power to enforce the law and administer justice. Independent of any statutory provision, it has the power to so frame its judgments and orders as to secure justice to litigants within its jurisdiction, since the right of appeal carries with it the right to a judgment awarding justice according to the law of the land. Elliott, Appellate Procedure, § 21; Piqua Bank v. Knoup, 6 Ohio St. 342; Buchanan v. Milligan, 108 Ind. 433; Shannon v. Hay, 106 Ind. 589; Cottrell v. Nixon, 109 Ind. 378; Roberts v. Lindley, 121 Ind. 56; Louisville, N. O. & C. R. Co. v. Etzler, 119 Ind. 89; Brown v. Jones, 118 Ind. 46.

We are of the opinion that this court possesses the power to stay proceedings in a case like this, when necessary to enable it to investigate and properly decide the questions presented by the record, independent of any statutory provision upon the subject. The statutes above set out are simply declaratory of a power which existed before their enactment. No more solemn duty can be imposed upon the courts than the duty of protecting and the duty of taking human life. When human life is to be taken under the judgment of a court, the act cannot be justified except by the strict observance of the forms of the law of the commonwealth. In a matter so grave, the court having the power should never refuse to stay proceedings when necessary to enable it to inquire whether the execution of a citizen was justified under the law, and as to whether the forms of the law had been observed, the proceeding resulting in his conviction.

In our opinion, the sections of the Statute of 1881, above set out, are not in conflict with the constitution of the state, and are valid enactments. We are aware that a different conclusion was reached by this court in the case of Butler v. State, 97 Ind. 373, but we cannot give our assent to the conclusion reached in that case. The error in that case consists in assuming that the granting of stay of execution by this court in case pending before it is a reprieve within the meaning of section 17, article 5, of the Constitution of the state. A conclusion based upon an erroneous premise is seldom, if ever, correct. In so far as that case conflicts with the conclusion reached here, it is modified.

From what we have said, it follows that application to set aside the order staying proceedings in this case should be overruled.

CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS & PITTSBURGH
R. CO., Appl.,

v.

Wright W. CHAMPION.

(.....Ind.....)

1. Judicial notice will not be taken of the effect which will be produced by releasing upon a grade the brake from a car propelled only by a previously acquired momentum.
2. Evidence of an experiment as to the action of a car propelled by previously acquired momentum when suddenly released from the brake on a descending grade is admissible in an action for the mashing of an employé's hand by the alleged sudden starting forward of a car under such circumstances, when the experiment was made at the same place that the accident occurred with a similar car at the same speed.

(McDride, J., dissent.)

(December 23, 1892.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Marion County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. S. O. Pickens and Charles W. Moores for appellant.

Messrs. George W. Cooper and McCullough & Harlan for appellee.

Miller, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complaint charges that the appellee was an employé of the appellant, and that on the 24th day of January, 1888, while in the discharge of his duties as such employé, in making a coupling between two cars in appellant's yard, he had his hand crushed. The right of recovery for this injury is based upon the alleged negligence of the appellant in employing and keeping in its employ, as a fellow servant with the appellee, one Theodore Leonard, a yard brakeman, who, it is alleged, was inexperienced, incompetent, unskillful, and negligent, and that the appellant, at the time of his employment and during the time he was in the service of appellant, had knowledge of such incompetence; that, while appellee was performing his work in appellant's yard, ap-pellee undertook to couple a car which Leonard was riding down upon a siding to a car which was standing upon the siding; and that when he was in the act of making the coupling, and when the moving car was within from six to eight inches of the other car, Leonard negligently loosed the brake on the moving car which caused it to spring or jump forward, and catch and mash the plaintiff's hand between the drawbars. The complaint was answered by a general denial. The questions discussed by counsel in their briefs arise upon the action of the court in overruling the motion for a new trial.

It is earnestly insisted that the verdict of the jury is not sustained by the evidence. Counsel for the appellant, in effect, admit that there was some evidence to sustain every material averment of the complaint, but say, with reference to the evidence of the plaintiff that upon the release of the brakes on the moving car it immediately sprang or jumped forward, that "this is a manifest absurdity." The evidence shows, without dispute, that the car which was "kicked" by the locomotive upon the siding was a loaded gondola coal car, weighing from sixty to sixty-five thousand pounds, and moving, with the brakes set, at a rate of three or four miles an hour. The grade upon which the car was moving was a descending grade of six inches to the hundred feet, without any perceptible break in the grade. At the time the brake was released the cars were from six to eight inches apart. The evidence being in conflict upon the question of whether or not a car would or could, under these circumstances, spring or jump forward, we could not disturb the judgment rendered upon the verdict of the jury unless we could know judicially that it stated that which was physically an impossibility. The natural laws of which courts take judicial notice are such as are of uniform occurrence, and invariable in their action. 12 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 196. Knowledge of facts is usually taken by courts for the purpose of dispensing with formal proof in matters collateral to the point in issue, and seldom, if ever, for the purpose of contradicting and controlling the effect of evidence given upon the trial of a cause. A matter which could legitimately be the subject of inquiry in a court could not well be said to be so well established, and to have acquired such notoriety, as to come within the judicial knowledge of the court. This power of judicial notice is to be exercised with caution. "Every reasonable doubt upon the subject should be resolved promptly in the negative." Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 87, 23 L. ed. 200. We might, and ordinarily would, take notice that a car moving upon a smooth and level track, propelled only by a previously acquired momentum, would not, upon the sudden removal of the friction caused by brakes, accelerate its motion; but, as against evidence introduced to the contrary, we should presume that some undisclosed and exceptional cause had intervened to prevent the application of the general rule. Also, while we might judicially know that the tendency of an inclined grade would be to accelerate the motion of a car moving down the incline, yet we must also know that the law of friction operates against the acceleration of its motion, and at some degree of inclination the friction would equal and neutralize the motion caused by the descending grade. To determine the effect of these causes upon the motion of a car in a given case, is not a matter of which a court can take judicial knowledge, but must be determined by the jury from the evidence introduced on the trial. We cannot, in this case, as a matter of judicial knowledge, determine that the evidence introduced upon the trial that in this particular instance the car did spring or jump forward was not true.

NOTE.—For experiments in the presence of the jury, see Leonard v. Southern Pac. Co. (Or.) 15 L. R. A. 221, and note.
23 L. R. A.

During the trial the appellant placed a witness upon the stand, and proposed to show that shortly before the trial a test was made upon the siding on which the accident took place, and at about the same place on the siding, by letting a gondola car of the same kind as the one in use at the time of the injury down upon the siding; that Mr. Leonard, the same brakeman who was on the car at the time of the accident, was on the car, which was running at the rate of about three miles an hour, with the brakes set, and that, when within 8 or 10 or 12 inches of the car to which it was to be coupled, the brake was let off by Mr. Leonard; that the experiment was made on a cold day, and the car was kicked back by an engine from about the same place where it was kicked at the time of the accident; that when the brake was so let off the car did not show an increase of speed. The court excluded this evidence, and this ruling was assigned as a cause for a new trial. In Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Mugg, 183 Ind. 168, we held that an experiment made by a witness would not be admissible unless it was shown to have been made under essentially the same conditions that existed in the case on trial. In that case, evidence that a boot froze to a rail was excluded because it did not appear that the conditions of the two boots were the same, as to warmth and moisture. In Smith v. State, 2 Ohio St. 511, the prosecuting witness testified as to the identity of the defendant. The witness was in a room in which a candle was burning, and looking through a window, outside of which he testified to having seen the defendant. Evidence of experiments made at the same window were introduced in support of his testimony. The defendant offered to show that experiments at other windows had been made, in looking from a room in which a candle was burning, through a window, at a person on the outside, under circumstances as near as possible to those narrated by the witness for the state. The court excluded the evidence, and on appeal the judgment of conviction was reversed. The court held that the evidence should have been received, and gone to the jury, for what it was worth, notwithstanding that the experiment was made at a different window. In many other cases, evidence of experiments have been received in evidence,—usually, however, in connection with the testimony of experts. Of this class, we cite Fidd v. Cutter, 127 Mass. 522; Com. v. Piper, 120 Mass. 185; Lincoln v. Taunton Copper Mfg. Co. 9 Allen, 181; Sullivan v. Com. 93 Pa. 285. Evidence of this kind should be received with caution, and only be admitted where it is obvious to the court, from the nature of the experiments, that the jury will be enlightened, rather than confused. In many instances, a slight change in the conditions under which the experiment is made will so distort the result as to wholly destroy its value as evidence, and make it harmful, rather than helpful. In other cases, a principle may be established, by experiments made under circumstances quite different from the one under investigation, that will have an important and beneficial bearing upon the investigation. In the offer to prove in this case, many circumstances were included that were wholly unimportant, such as the fact that the same brakeman was on the car, and handled the brakes, in both instances. The important fact sought to be established by the experiment was whether or not a car moving at a slow rate of speed down a slight incline, with the brakes set, would, when the brakes were suddenly loosed, jump or spring forward. If it would do so in one instance, it would, under ordinary conditions, repeat it every time the experiment was tried; for it would be the result of the operation of the laws of motion. The rate at which the car was moving, the suddenness with which the brakes were loosened, the degree of the inclination of the track, might affect the celerity of the movement, but would not affect the nature of the movement. If the question for investigation was the distance which it would jump, or the celerity of the movement, all these things might be important; but in determining whether it would or would not jump they are comparatively unimportant. In our opinion, the circumstances under which the experiment was made were sufficiently similar to the facts surrounding the happening of the accident to make it admissible in evidence, for what it was worth, and for this error the judgment must be reversed.

28 L. R. A.

Some other questions are discussed in the briefs of counsel, but we are satisfied that they are not such as are likely to arise upon a second trial of the cause, and we will not extend this opinion for their consideration.

Judgment reversed, with costs.

McBride, J., dissenting:

I doubt the soundness of a rule that will admit in evidence the details of an experiment, and its results, to overcome affirmative evidence that a certain thing did occur, in any case where, from the nature of things, it cannot be certain that the circumstances and conditions were in each instance precisely the same. Indeed, the principal opinion shows the danger of the rule it affirms. Apparently slight and unimportant differences in the conditions or changes in the method may cause radical and extreme changes in results. If there can be a case where all of the conditions can with certainty be exactly reproduced, such evidence might with safety be admitted. In all other cases, it would be attended with too much of doubt and uncertainty. I cannot concur in so much of the opinion as holds that evidence of the experiment and its results was admissible.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

John ROTHROCK

v.

DWELLING-HOUSE INSURANCE COMPANY.

(.....Mass.....)

Service on the auditor of state in Arkansas, in an action against a foreign insurance company which has not complied with the statute requiring as a condition of doing business that the auditor or some agent be appointed to receive service, is not authorized by the fact that certain persons have solicited insurance for the company within the state and forwarded applications to its office in another state, although they may be subject to penalties under the statute.

(May 18, 1894.)

REPORT by the Superior Court for Suffolk County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court of an action brought to enforce a judgment which had been recovered by plaintiff against defendant in the courts of the state of Arkansas. Judgment for defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William H. Preble for plaintiff.

Messrs. Hutchins & Wheeler for defendant.

Knowlton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It appears by the agreed statement of facts that the judgment on which this action is brought was rendered in Arkansas, without service of process on the defendant, and that the defendant had no notice or knowledge of the suit until long afterwards. The defendant was incorporated in Massachusetts, and had no place of business in Arkansas, except as certain persons solicited insurance for it there, and sent the applications to the office of the defendant in Chicago, Ill., where policies were issued. In an action upon a foreign judgment it is proper to inquire into the jurisdiction of the court in which the judgment was rendered to ascertain whether the defendant appeared, and, if not, whether legal service was made upon him. Gilman v. Gilman, 128 Mass. 28, 80 Am. Rep. 646; Wright v. Andrews, 130 Mass. 149.

In the present case service was made in the original action on the auditor of the state of Arkansas, and the only question is whether such service was authorized and was sufficient under the statute of that state. The language of the statute is as follows: "Sec. 3834. No insurance company not of this state, nor its agents, shall do business in this state until it has filed with the auditor of this state a written stipulation duly authenticated by the company, agreeing that any legal process affecting the company served on the auditor or the party designated by him, or the agent specified by said company to receive service of process for the company, shall have the same effect as if served personally on the company within this state. And if such company should cease to maintain such agent in this state so designated, such process may thereafter be served on the auditor; but so long as any liability of the stipulating company to any resident of this state continues, such stipulation cannot be revoked or modified, except that a new one may be substituted so as to require or dispense with service at the office of said company within this state, and that such service, according to this stipulation, shall be sufficient personal service on the company. The term "process" includes any writ, summons, subpoena, or order whereby any action, suit, or proceedings shall be commenced, or which shall issue in or upon any action, suit, or proceedings. § 3835. Any person or persons or corporation receiving premiums or forwarding applications or in any way transacting business for any insurance company or association not of this state without having received authority agreeably to the provisions of this act, shall forfeit and pay to the school fund of the state the sum of $500 for each month or fraction thereof during which such illegal business was transacted, and any company not of this state doing business without authority shall forfeit a like sum for every month thereof and be prohibited from doing business in this state until such fines are fully paid." Ark. Stat. 1884.

The defendant has filed no stipulation, as required by this statute. The persons forwarding applications, and the corporation itself, were therefore liable to fines, and the corporation was also prohibited from doing business until the fine should be paid. There is no provision for service on the auditor when no stipulation is filed, and in such cases the policy holders are left to pursue their remedies on their policies in jurisdictions, where they can get a valid service, while the corporation and its agents are punished for their violation of the law. In section 3835 business done without filing the stipulation is called illegal, and we see nothing to indicate that the object of the statute is to make the business regular, or to authorize a service upon the auditor when no stipulation is filed. We do not consider the decision of the county court in Arkansas in the original action an exposition of the statute which is authoritative and binding upon us, and we are not inclined to follow the case of Ehrman v. Teutonia Ins. Co., 1 Fed. Rep. 471, 1 McCrary, 128, in which it is held that the defendant was estopped to deny the jurisdiction. That case differed from this, inasmuch as the defendant there had notice of the suit, and appeared and sought to set up a want of jurisdiction, although perhaps this difference is not very material. We do not doubt the doctrine that a corporation doing business in a foreign state thereby subjects itself to the statutes of that state. Reyer v. Odd Fellows F. Arci. Asso., 157 Mass. 367; Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 59 U. S. 18 How. 408, 15 L. ed. 453; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Harris, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 81, 20 L. ed. 858.

But it seems to us that the question before us is not whether the defendant would be estopped from setting up its failure to comply with the law to relieve itself from liability under its contract, but whether the plaintiff presents a case which comes within the terms of the statute on which the jurisdiction of the court must be founded. Unless the statute applies to a case like this, the service was improperly made, and it is as if there had been no service. In our opinion, unless the stipulation is filed, a foreign insurance company has no right to do business in the state; and, if it violates the law in that respect, no service can be made upon the auditor, and no jurisdiction can be obtained on which to found a judgment against it. The remedy provided is by a punishment of the corporation and of such others as have disregarded the requirements of the statute. Suits may be brought upon the contracts in any state where jurisdiction can be obtained. Hartford Live Stock Ins. Co. v. Matthews, 102 Mass. 221; Lamb v. Bousser, 7 Biss. 815, 872, Fed. Cas. Nos. 8,008, 8,009; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. McMillen, 24 Ohio St. 67. Judgment for the defendant.

NOTE.—For the subject of service on representatives of foreign corporations including service on state officers appointed for that purpose, see note to Foster v. Charles Betcher Lumber Co. (S. Dak. 28 L. R. A. 490, 28 L. R. A.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

BOOTH & HANFORD ABSTRACT CO.,

Appt.

Byron PHELPS, County Treasurer, Respt.

(..... Wash.)

A set of abstract books is personal property for purpose of taxation, although the information therein contained is largely in the form of abbreviations and cipher peculiar to that set of books, which is understood by only five persons, especially where there are certain maps connected with the business which have some general value.

(March 30, 1894.)

A PPEAL by complainant from a judgment of the Superior Court for King County dismissing a proceeding brought to enjoin defendant from enforcing a tax which had been levied on plaintiff's abstract books. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Relfe & Brinker for appellant.

Messrs. John F. Miller, Pros. Atty., and A. G. McBride for respondent.

Scott, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit to enjoin the selling of a certain set of abstract books belonging to appellant, for state and county taxes. At the close of appellant's case the court granted a motion for nonsuit, from which judgment this appeal was taken.

The constitution provides that "the legislature shall provide by law a uniform and equal rate of assessment and taxation on all property in the state, according to its value in money." Article 7, § 2. An act of the legislature (Sess. Laws 1889-90, p. 580, § 1) provides that "all real and personal property in this state, and all personal property of persons residing therein, the property of corporations now existing, or hereafter created, except such as is hereinafter expressly excepted, is subject to taxation." And the only question involved in this case is whether a set of abstract books is included within the term "personal property," for the purposes of taxation. The proof shows that the information contained in the books is largely in the form of abbreviations and cipher peculiar to that particular set of books, and only five persons understood them, as far as was known to the manager and secretary of the company; that no information could be derived from the books, except by an expert in that line of business; and that it would be necessary for him to understand such abbreviations and cipher. It is contended that the books were of no value to the public, or to any one who did not understand them; that while the books, originally, in blank form, were of some value, the fact that they contained such writings had destroyed this value, even; and that they are not assessable for the purpose of taxation. There was some proof, however, to show that certain maps connected with the business had a general value, to the extent of, perhaps, a hundred dollars. We are of the opinion that the property was subject to taxation. The fact that it requires the services of an expert to obtain the necessary information from the books may detract from their value, in a general sense, but would not deprive them of all taxable value. If the property was assessed at too high a figure, it would be no ground for issuing a writ of injunction. Another remedy is provided therefor. There is a conflict in the authorities as to whether abstract books are subject to taxation. We think the better rule is that they are subject thereto (see Leon Loan & Abstract Co. v. Equalization Board of Leon (Iowa) 17 L. R. A. 199), and that the peculiar circumstances of this case do not except it from said rule.

Affirmed.

Dunbar, Ch. J., and Anders, Hoyt, and Stiles, JJ., concur.

NOTE.—For a case similar to that here reported and which is cited as a precedent, see Leon Loan & Abstract Co. v. Equalization Board of Leon (Iowa) 17 L. R. A. 199.

23 L. R. A.

END OF CASES IN BOOK 23.

RÉSUMÉ OF THE DECISIONS PUBLISHED IN THIS BOOK.

SHOWING the Changes, Progress, and Development of the Law during the Fourth Quarter of the Judicial Year Beginning with Oct. 1, 1898, Classified as Follows:

- I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.
- II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.
- III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.
- IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS; PERSONAL CAPACITY.
- V. FIDUCIARIES AND REPRESENTATIVES.
- VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES; NUISANCES.
- VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; LIENS; GIFTS.
- VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES; RULES AND PRINCIPLES.
- IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

I. PUBLIC, OFFICIAL, AND STATUTORY MATTERS.

An ex post facto law is not made by changing a statute so as merely to remove the minimum limit of punishment for a crime. (N. Y.) 830.

Unconstitutional discriminations.

A discriminating statute in respect to the licensing of racecourses between those towns and cities which already have racecourses and those which do not is held to be unconstitutional as denying equal privileges, immunities, and franchises, and as a special law concerning the internal affairs of towns and cities. (N. J.) 525.

The constitutionality of statutes imposing absolute liability irrespective of negligence is presented in respect to stock killed on railroads in a Colorado case, which holds the act unconstitutional as to penalties imposed which are not based on any prohibited act or violation of duty. (Colo.) 812.

It is presented also in an Iowa case which holds that the liability is not absolute under a statute creating liability for importation of cattle with Texas fever. (Iowa) 73.

Restricting contracts.

The constitutionality of statutes restricting contracts between master and servant is involved in another very important case in which the Arkansas court holds that the constitutional right of individuals to contract does not extend that limit to corporations, and that the right of the employes to contract does not enlarge the right of the corporation. (Ark.) 264.

Statutes.

The conclusiveness of an enrolled bill on file in the office of the secretary of state is declared, in a Washington case, reviewing the authorities at length. (Wash.) 840.

A question of profound importance in constitutional law is answered by a bare majority of the judges of the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts denying the constitutionality of a statute granting to women the right to vote in town and city elections, which should take effect on its acceptance by a majority vote of the people of the state; and denying its validity also as a local option act to take effect in each town or city when accepted by a majority of the voters therein. (Mass.) 118.

23 L. R. A.

Legislature.

A legislative controversy in New Jersey results in a decision that the holdover senators cannot be claimed to constitute the senate as a perpetual body to the exclusion of the newly elected members whose title they have not passed upon, and further that the judiciary can pass on the constitutionality of a body claimed to be the senate as against a rival body. (N. J.) 354.

Mandamus to governor.

Mandamus to compel official action by the governor is denied in all cases in a Missouri decision. (Mo.) 194.

National guard.

The power of the governor to disband a company of the national guard before their period of enlistment expires is affirmed in a Kansas case. (Kan.) 510.

Officers.

The common-law rule that resignation of an officer does not take effect until acceptance is held in Ohio to be changed, at least to the extent of making an unaccepted resignation sufficient to permit the appointment or election of a successor. (Ohio) 681.

Per diem fees of an officer are held not to be salary within a constitutional provision as to change of salary during term of office. (Ohio) 609.

Questions of conflict between the constitution of Michigan and that of the United States are raised in respect to a deprivation of office without due process of law, but the holding is that an office is not property, and that due process does not require a judicial proceeding. (Mich.) 699.

Voters.

Residence at a soldiers' home is held insufficient to change the legal residence of a voter, under the Michigan constitution. (Mich.) 215.

Naturalization.

The unusual case of an attempt to set aside an order of naturalization is presented in a case where the application was made by a private person and was denied. (N. Y.) 835.

State business.

The South Carolina Dispensary Act, giving the state the monopoly of the sale of intoxicating liquors, is held unconstitutional. (S. C.) 410.

Public charity.

The nature of a "purely public charity" is considered in a case which denies that a home open only to free masons is of that character. (Pa.) 545.

Public funds.

The deposit of the state educational fund in banks is held to be a loan prohibited by the Nebraska constitution. (Neb.) 67.

Municipal corporations.

The lease of a town hall to an opera company is held, in a somewhat peculiar case, not to make the town liable for the defective condition of the sidewalk in front of it, where the sidewalk was in a village which was responsible for the streets. (Vt.) 488.

The somewhat vexed question as to what constitutes a municipal indebtedness within the meaning of a constitutional limitation is discussed in a case which holds that a contract for annual rental creates such indebtedness although the rental could be paid from the lawful revenue of the city. (Ky.) 402.

The jurisdiction of municipalities over navigable rivers which bound them is a question presented in a North Carolina case, which holds that low-water mark is the boundary of the municipality. (N. C.) 520.

Trees in street.

An ordinance for the destruction of trees beside a street is held void where the trees are neither an obstruction nor a nuisance. (N. J.) 685.

Abatement of nuisance.

The power of a board of health to abate a nuisance is reviewed in a case which holds that a summary proceeding to abate a nuisance, without hearing the parties, is invalid, unless the nuisance in fact exists, and that fact can be contested in the courts. (N. Y.) 481.

Due process of law as to abatement of a nuisance does not require a hearing of the owner of the property, where the determination is subject to review in the courts. (N. Y.) 481.

Nuisances maintained by municipal corporations are held to be subject to injunction. (Ga.) 801.

Taxation.

The exemption of state property from taxation under the statutes of Illinois is held to exist in respect to land used by a court for judicial purposes. (Ill.) 807.

Abstract books kept in cipher and abbreviations are held personal property for the purpose of taxation. (Wash.) 864.

Deduction of debts from credits to be taxed is clearly distinguished in an Indiana case from an exemption from taxation and held to be constitutional. (Ind.) 278.

The taxation of nonresidents on funds invested in business under a New York statute is held to be without deduction for any debts and to apply to foreign corporations. (N. Y.) 95.

Personal property in the hands of an assignee for creditors is held not to be subject to taxation, because of the peculiar position of such property as really in the custody of a court, although the statute requires trust property to be taxed. (Ohio) 628.

The fact that the profits of a commercial business, such as a general bookstore, carried on by the American Sunday School Union, are devoted to its charitable purposes, is held not to exempt property embarked in such business from taxation. (Pa.) 693.

Eminent domain.

A statutory remedy for a constitutional right to damages in a condemnation case cannot be made exclusive, where the owner of the property is given no power to initiate such proceedings or to enforce payment after the damages are assessed. (Mo.) 638.

Vacating road.

The discontinuance of a road is held not to be a taking or damaging of the property of an abutting owner within the meaning of the constitutional provision as to compensation. (Cal.) 888.

The question of special damages as distinguished from the inconvenience of each member of the public is presented in a case which holds that discontinuing part of a street creates no legal damage to an abutting owner on another part of the street, whose route to and from his premises is made thereby less direct. (Mich.) 392.

II. CONTRACTUAL AND COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

Injunction against violation of an agreement to abstain from business was upheld in Rhode Island, where the agreement was made on sale of business. (R. I.) 689.

A contract for planting trees on another's ground, with a right to share in the crops for ten years, is upheld. (Mich.) 449.

Death of party.

The death of a party to a contract is held not to relieve from liability in a case where the contract was to take a quantity of water for a period of years. (Mass.) 707.

Employment.

Refusal to perform Sunday labor not called for by the contract is held no ground for discharge of an employé. (Ark.) 858.

23 L. R. A.

Implied contract.

A contract to leave property to an adopted child is implied in a case where the proceedings for adoption, though supposed valid during the lifetime of the adopting parent, were under a statute which was unconstitutional for defect of title. (Mich.) 196.

Water supply.

The doctrine that a water company cannot be held liable to an individual for damages resulting from failure to furnish a water supply, under a contract with a municipality, is again declared in a Missouri case. (Mo.) 146.

Mercantile agency.

The effect of the fraud of an agent of a mercantile agency in sending a false report is considered, where the agreement of the agency stipulates against responsibility for negligence of agents and against any guaranty of the correctness of the information. (C. C. App. 2d C.) 637.

Blank bond.

The signer of a blank bond is held not bound when the blank is filled up with terms which are not authorized unless the bond is in the hands of a holder as to whom the signer has become estopped to deny the authority to fill it up in that form. (N. Y.) 601.

Blanks in note.

Filling blanks in a promissory note was held to constitute a material alteration. (Mass.) 599.

Deed.

The implied undertaking of the grantee in a deed-poll to perform a condition therein expressed is upheld in an Ohio case, as to the condition that a grantee should maintain fences. (Ohio) 896.

Carrier's contract.

The effect of a notice on the back of a ticket referred to on the face is very carefully discussed in a federal case respecting a steamship ticket, and such notice is held sufficient to limit the amount of liability for baggage, but not to change the essential nature of the carrier's liability. (C. C. App. 2d C.) 746.

A person boarding a freight train with a ticket is held to be a passenger, although passengers are not allowed on that train; and the company is held liable for exposing him to danger by driving him off while the train is in motion. (W. Va.) 777.

As to negligence of carrier, see infra, VI.

Checks.

The effect of a check in a state where it constitutes an assignment of the fund is limited in this respect to a case in which it is presented before any other appropriation of the deposit. (Ill.) 611.

An absolute order by one bank on another is held to be a check as distinguished from an ordinary bill of exchange. (Md.) 178.

Banks.

See also infra, III.

A case in respect to banks holds a bank liable for acts of its cashier in drawing checks to fictitious payees or indorsing names of customers without authority. (N. Y.) 584.

The effect of an indorsement of a check "for deposit" is discussed in an important case which distinguishes other cases of a similar indorsement. (Md.) 164.

The effect of indorsement for collection is presented in other cases. (Md.) 161, 178.

The right of a bank to apply a partner's deposit to an overdraft of the firm is denied in a North Carolina case, although it is held that a counterclaim might be set up by the bank in such case. (N. C.) 111.

The liability of a banker who without compensation loans his customer's money on certificates of stock which by forgery have been raised in amount is presented in a New York case which holds that the banker was not negligent. (N. Y.) 90.

Forged paper.

See also last case, supra.

The effect of payment of forged paper is considered under the Pennsylvania statute providing for recovery of such payments, and the act held applicable only to cases of due care. (Pa.) 615.

Insurance.

A voluntary assumption of parental relations by educating a girl to whom one is under no legal obligations is held sufficient to give her an insurable interest in his life. (Pa.) 571.

Insurable interest in property is held to exist in the case of a contract creditor. (Ala.) 177.

A threshing machine is held not to be in use within the meaning of a policy thereon, when not in use where it is left standing near a house at which it is intended to be used, not having been in use for about two weeks. (Minn.) 576.

The construction of the words "vacant and unoccupied" in an insurance policy is held not to require both conditions to be met with reference to the use of the building; what constitutes occupancy is considered in several particulars. (Iowa) 99.

The severability of insurance is upheld under a clause making the "entire policy void" in case of any breach of condition. (Mo.) 719.

See also infra, V.

Assignment.

The rule against assignment of unearned fees or commissions of officers is applied to an executor. (N. Y.) 97.

The assignability of income, under a trust in personal property for support during life, is upheld in a Wisconsin case. (Wis.) 824.

Lease.

Leasing the lower story of a building is held not to create any implied covenant for necessary repairs to the upper portion, of which the lessor retains possession. (Miss.) 155.

The privilege of a lessee to purchase the premises is upheld, against various objections, in an Illinois case. (Ill.) 555.

III. CORPORATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS.

As to service of process against, see infra, VIII.

The increasing tendency to regard corporations the same as natural persons in respect to business transactions is illustrated in a decision by the New York court of appeals reversing that of the general term, that a corporation like a natural person may be prevented by absence or illness from making application to reduce a tax or assessment. (N. Y.) 785.

The right of a minority stockholder to obtain an injunction against the action of the majority is held to be beyond the jurisdiction of equity, unless the proposed action is illegal, fraudulent, or ultra vires, although the majority stockholders own a majority of the stock of another company with which the contract is proposed. (Md.) 294.

The right of corporations to prefer debts to officers is denied in Alabama. (Ala.) 618. (See 22 L. R. A. 802).

The gratuitous promise by a national bank to accept a draft to be drawn upon a depositor is held to be invalid and in excess of power. (C. C. W. D. Cal.) 836.

Successors.

A right of action against a railroad company for land taken under parol agreement to pay therefor continues as against a subsequent company formed by purchasers on foreclosure and a later corporation into which it is merged by consolidation. (Ind.) 231.

Labor union.

The right of a labor union to a trade-mark, which has been denied by the courts in several states, is provided for by statute in Illinois. (Ill.) 821.

Lloyds association.

The right of a guaranty and accident Lloyds association consisting of nonresidents to do business in Georgia is upheld as against statutes excluding corporations. (Ga.) 86.

Benefit society.

An important case decided by a bare majority of the Missouri court holds that members of a mutual benefit society are personally liable for assessments, notwithstanding an express condition for forfeiture in case of nonpayment. (Mo.) 435.

Masons.

An injunction to prevent the suspension of a worshipful master by the grand master of the state lodge of masons is denied in a Connecticut case, on the ground that no property interest was involved and also that the remedies furnished by the laws of the order must be first exhausted. (Conn.) 237.

Partnership.

The good-will of a partnership business after death of one of the partners is held, in a Nebraska case, to belong to the survivors. (Neb.) 795.

IV. DOMESTIC RELATIONS; PERSONAL CAPACITY.

The right to raise the question of the disability of coverture in respect to a deed by a married woman is denied to a creditor. (Pa.) 479.

Wife's liability.

A wife is held not liable for harboring a vicious dog on her own premises where her husband lives with her, under Alabama statutes. The decision is almost directly opposed to the New York case in 17 L. R. A. 521. (Ala.) 622.

Divorce.

The effect of appearance by a nonresident to give jurisdiction of divorce is held, in a Minnesota case, to make the divorce valid as between the parties on collateral attack. (Minn.) 287.

A cause of action for divorce in favor of the husband on the ground of the wife's adultery is held not to be barred by failure to set it up as a defense to her suit for separate maintenance. (Mass.) 187.

Adoption.

The law as to the adoption of children, which has considerably developed in recent years, is considered in an Illinois case, in which adoption in Pennsylvania is upheld, even as to the descent of real property in Illinois. (Ill.) 665.

Civil death.

The subject of civil death is touched in an Arkansas case which denies that sentence to death in another state will prevent the maintenance of a civil suit by the convict. (Ark.) 802.

Incompetent persons.

Notice to an incompetent person is held to be absolutely necessary in order to make the appointment of a committee lawful. (W. Va.) 737.

V. FIDUCIARIES AND REPRESENTATIVES.

The powers of an insurance adjuster to waive proofs of loss is upheld in an Iowa case. (Iowa.) 181.

A compromise by an assignee for creditors was upheld where it was made in good faith. (N. C.) 578.

VI. TORTS; NEGLIGENCE; INJURIES; NUISANCES.

The legality of a combination of dealers to prevent sales by wholesalers to persons who are not members of the combination is denied in an important Indiana case which disapproves of the Minnesota decision in 21 L. R. A. 337. (Ind.) 588.

For criminal conspiracies, see infra, IX.

Fire.

The test of liability for damage by the spread of fire is considered in a Minnesota case, which holds that it depends on negligence or misconduct, and that the degree of care is merely that which is reasonable or ordinary, although it must be proportionate to the danger. (Minn.) 518.

Respondent superior.

The doctrine of respondent superior is held 23 L. R. A.

inapplicable to a charitable institution such as a hospital maintained by a railroad company for its employes; and such company is held not liable for negligence of physicians or attendants in such hospital. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 581.

So a reform school which is a state charity is held not subject to an action for damages for negligent or malicious injuries to an inmate by servants or employes. (Ky.) 200.

Imputed negligence.

The imputing of the negligence of a driver to a person riding with him, although it has been rejected in respect to an infant by the Michigan courts, is upheld in respect to a person of the age of discretion who voluntarily rides with another in a private carriage. (Mich.) 693.

Innkeepers.

An unusual case as to the liability of an innkeeper for the death of a guest from exposure when driven out of the inn while sick holds the innkeeper liable if the death might have been reasonably anticipated from the exposure. (Pa.) 574.

Injury by railroad construction.

The right to recover damages for injuries to property in constructing a railroad on a right of way conveyed by private grant is discussed in respect to various particulars in a West Virginia case, regarding the question as unchanged by the fact that the land was conveyed without condemnation proceedings. (W. Va.) 674.

Negligence of railroad companies.

The distinction between willful negligence and ordinary negligence is discussed in a case of injury to a person in an archway on manufacturing premises when struck by a car. (Ind.) 552.

Blowing a whistle on a locomotive is held to be actionable, if done maliciously, negligently, or wantonly, although at a place where the signal is required by statute. (N. J.) 283.

The liability of a railroad company for the escape of steam from an engine which frightens a horse is held to depend on the necessity of the escape of the steam and of a failure to exercise the care of a prudent and reasonable man. (Neb.) 504.

The wrongful obstruction of a street by railroad trains is considered as affecting the liability of the company for injuries sustained by the shying of a horse driven past the rear of the train. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 654.

The claim of an implied license to walk over a railroad trestle where there was no room to pass a train is held contrary to public policy. (Wis.) 203.

No negligence is shown on the part of a railroad company by the mere fact that a child, trespassing on the track, was struck by a train, where the track was straight and clear. (Or.) 715.

Negligence of a railroad company in respect to cars standing at a crossing, with a slight opening, was held to exist in respect to a child attempting to pass through, following the example of adults. (Mo.) 250.

Injury to servant.

That a railroad company's failure to maintain a statutory fence renders it liable for resulting injuries to employes on a train is decided in a federal case arising in Missouri. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 768.

The rule as to inspection of cars received from another road is held inapplicable to a manufacturing company when cars are run upon its premises. (Pa.) 448.

Injury to passenger.

Negligence in leaving a train in motion is held not to apply to a woman with a child in her arms who is on the step of the car which starts before she has alighted. (La.) 152.

Another case presents the question of negligence and contributory negligence in the case of injury to a passenger struck by a trolley pole while riding on the foot-board of a street-car. (R. L.) 208.

A railroad company is held liable for the negligence of a mail agent in throwing a mail sack on the station platform to the injury of a passenger thereon, where the company knew of his negligent practice in thus throwing mail sacks. (Minn.) 442.

The liability of a railroad company for the rude act of a stranger in pushing a door against another person while hurrying to a train is denied. (Pa.) 606.

Insanity of a passenger resulting from a railroad accident, which caused no bodily injury, is held to be no ground of action against the carrier. (C. C. App. 5th C.) 774.

Injury to an intoxicated passenger who fell off from the steps of a car, down which he had gone after refusing to go in on the conductor's request, is held against dissent not to make the carrier liable. (W. Va.) 758.

Elevators.

The validity of a rule excluding newsboys from passenger elevators in a building is upheld in a case where a newsboy had notice of the rule, although newsboys were allowed to enter the building in the exercise of their business. (Md.) 244.

Nuisance.

The law of nuisance as applied to a dam in a city is clearly presented in a case which holds that when the dam is a nuisance to public health it must be abated, although it was built when the water was clean and pure. (N. Y.) 485.

For constitutional questions; see supra, L.

VII. PROPERTY RIGHTS; LIENS; GIFTS.

Waters.

A case as to surface waters decides that the owner of a swamp, which is the natural place of drainage both of surface waters and streams, cannot complain of a change in the manner of deposit by storm sewers constructed by a municipal corporation. (Minn.) 88.

Contingent interest in proceeds of future sale.

A somewhat peculiar case as to the nature of the property interest of a former landowner in West Virginia to the surplus proceeds on a future sale of the land is presented in which such contingent right is held to be property which his creditors can reach. (W. Va.) 82.

Descent.

A statute providing that bastards may transmit an inheritance "on the part of or to the mother," is held not to extend to her collateral kindred. (Ky.) 753.

Transfers of insolvent estates.

The rule of comity by which insolvency proceedings in another country are recognized is upheld in a Pennsylvania case against an attempt by a foreign creditor to obtain a preference by garnishment. (Pa.) 83.

The question of the effect of an assignment for creditors made in another state is very clearly defined in a New York case, which holds that an assignment, though voluntarily made, if under a statute which provides for a discharge of the debtor as to all creditors who participate in the dividends, is to be held an insolvency transfer in invitum which has no extra-territorial effect against subsequent attachment. (N. Y.) 47.

The effect of a receivership in another state to transfer title to property is considered in a Wisconsin case. (Wis.) 52.

Levy.

A contingent remainder depending on survivorship is held not to be attachable as an estate, but subject to transfer by deed of trust, where the statute allows "any interest or claim to real property" to be disposed of. (Va.) 642.

The liability of growing crops to levy is affirmed in respect to annual crops which are the product of industry and care. (Kan.) 258.

Administration.

Administration of the wife's succession in Louisiana is denied to a creditor having judgment on a community debt. (La.) 808.

Entireties.

The effect of a divorce on a tenancy by the entireties is held to make a sale of the land under execution against the husband valid as against the wife's rights. (Tenn.) 806.

Homestead.

The right to a family homestead on dissolution of the marriage is held to be in the owner of the legal title if the decree is silent on that question. (N. Dak.) 239.

VIII. CIVIL REMEDIES; RULES AND PRINCIPLES.

Privilege of legislators.

The privilege of members of the legislature, under the Minnesota constitution, from arrest except in cases of treason, felony, and breach of the peace, does not extend to the service of summons in a civil action. (Minn.) 682.

Voluntary payment for others.

Although a stranger who pays the debt of another has no right of action therefor at law, he is held entitled in equity to compel the debtor to ratify the payment or be allowed to enforce it as an equitable assignee. (W. Va.) 120.

Limitation of time for foreclosure.

The period of limitation for foreclosure of mortgages is governed in Ohio by the statute as to specialties and not that as to actions for real property. (Ohio) 842.

Damages.

An interesting case as to the amount of recovery for wrongful refusal of a bank to pay a check denies an allowance for arrest and imprisonment for giving an alleged fraudulent check and the publication of that fact. (Neb.) 190.

Evidence.

The sufficiency of evidence, and more particularly its effect on appeal, to show that a deed was meant for a mortgage, is discussed in a very valuable manner in a North Dakota case. (N. Dak.) 58.

Evidence of experiments is considered in a case which allowed proof of an experiment under similar conditions to show the action of a car. (Ind.) 861.

23 L. R. A.

Tenancy in crops.

The nature of tenancy in crops under a contract is considered in a Michigan case. (Mich.) 449.

Estoppel by deed; recording.

A case of unusual interest in respect to the passing of after-acquired title by estoppel and the effect of reliance on records of title limits the effect of the estoppel to the grantor, where he has conveyed after obtaining title to one who relies on the records. This involves also the decision that a deed by one who has no title is not within the chain of title, and that when searching the records one need not search, as against his grantor, back of the date of conveyance to the grantor. (Mo.) 561.

Docket of judgment.

Docketing a judgment against Edward Davis is held not to be constructive notice of a judgment against E. A. Davis or Edward A. Davis. (Wis.) 818.

Chattel mortgage.

The right to take possession and sell mortgaged chattels is held to be absolute under a mortgage authorizing this to be done whenever the mortgagee shall choose. (Iowa) 780.

Gift.

The constructive delivery of a gift cum mortis by the delivery of a key is denied, where the box to which the key belonged was not present but was in a locked closet to which a third person had the key. (N. J.) 184.

Process against corporations.

The question who is a managing agent of a foreign corporation for the purpose of serving process is discussed at length in a South Dakota case, which holds that an agent at a particular place may constitute a managing agent, although there are other similar agents in other places in the same state. (S. Dak.) 490.

Service on a state auditor of process against a foreign insurance company is denied effect under the circumstances of the case. (Mass.) 868.

Signatures to petition.

A transfer of signatures from one petition to another which is identical is held insufficient to allow them to be counted as part of the signatures to the latter. (Cal.) 838.

Res judicata.

The doctrine of res judicata has a somewhat unusual application in a Washington case in which the denial of an injunction against consummation of the sale of school lands, on the ground of a remedy at law, is held conclusive as to the right of a plaintiff to bring an action at law against the purchaser of the lands for the value of the improvements. (Wash.) 103.

A judgment of the state court against a receiver appointed by a federal court is held conclusive of the existence and amount of the claim, but its enforcement is controlled by the federal court. (C. C. App. 5th C.) 517.

See also infra, as to foreign garnishment.

Receiverships.

The right of an insolvent corporation to make application for the appointment of a receiver in the interest of its creditors in order to prevent injury to them by suits of small creditors is denied in a very important Missouri case, although trustees in mortgages on the corporation's property are made parties and appeared consenting to the appointment of the receiver. (Mo.) 534.

Another case of attempted appointment of a receiver on application of the directors of an insolvent corporation itself holds such appointment to be utterly void. (Miss.) 581.

Foreign receivers.

The doctrine of comity as applied to foreign receivers is shown in a Massachusetts case, which orders the payment to the receiver of the foreign corporation of all the assets collected by a local receiver after payment of expenses. (Mass.) 846.

See also under VI, as to transfer in other states.

Garnishment.

The situs of a credit for the purpose of garnishment is questioned in an Ohio case, in which a statute fixing the situs at the residence of the debtor is held valid as between citizens of the state, although the principal defendant is served only by publication, being a nonresident of the county, although it is intimated that this would not be true of a creditor who did not reside in the state. (Ohio) 445.

The question of the garnishment of a debt due to a nonresident is presented again in Nebraska cases with somewhat unusual incidents under a statute making it unlawful to defeat exempt wages by garnishment or otherwise, and a judgment in another state in garnishment is held invalid as against such exemption. (Neb.) 210, 650.

Set-off.

A very valuable collection of cases on set-off is included in this volume.

The question of the right of a creditor to set off against the assignee of a chose in action not due at the time of the assignment a claim which had previously matured is raised in a Michigan case which declares that such set-off cannot be made against the assignee of an executory contract. (Mich.) 806.

A note for the purchase price of chattels is held not a good set-off for creditors on his claim of damages for wrongful replevying of the chattels. (Md.) 652.

Set-off against negotiable paper held as collateral security is allowed in an Alabama case. (Ala.) 825.

The right of set-off by or against the receiver of an insolvent bank is held to extend to debts of sureties and to claims not matured at the time of the receiver's appointment. (N. C.) 322.

Set-off between immature notes and a deposit of the maker is allowed as against such a receiver. (C. C. D. Wash.) 834.

Set-off between dividends payable by a receiver and a claim against the stockholders is allowed in a Massachusetts case. (Mass.) 313.

Set-off against assigned judgments is allowed in an Iowa case. (Iowa) 835.

As to levy see under VI, supra.

IX. CRIMINAL LAW AND PRACTICE.

Contempt.

Contempt by newspaper publication charging corruption of the court is discussed at great length, in a Colorado case. (Colo.) 787.

Conspiracy against trade.

Among recent decisions as to unlawful trade conspiracies is the decision that a combination of coal dealers to fix prices is unlawful. (N. Y.) 221.

Unlawful combinations are discussed also in a Pennsylvania case which holds that a combination of employers is lawful to meet a combination of employes, which has been authorized by statute. (Pa.) 185.

Suspending sentence.

The power of a court to suspend sentence in a criminal case after conviction, as to which decisions are in conflict, is declared by the New York court of appeals to be inherent at common law, and a statute authorizing such suspension is held not to infringe on the executive power to grant reprieves and pardons. (N. Y.) 836.

Stay.

Akin to this is an Indiana decision that a stay of execution on appeal is not a "reprieve." (Ind.) 859.

Verdict.

The question of the effect of rejecting a verdict for manslaughter in the first degree, because there are no degrees of manslaughter, where the jury subsequently brings in a verdict of murder in the first degree, is the occasion of an interesting discussion as to the time when a verdict becomes complete. (Fla.) 723.

Reformatories.

Sentence of infants to a state reformatory for a term not fixed by the court is upheld under an Illinois statute, on the theory that the sentence is for the maximum term fixed by statute for that crime, subject only to deductions as provided in the act. (Ill.) 189.

It is held also that the constitutional provision for penalties proportioned to the offense is not violated by such a sentence in case of minors, instead of giving them, as in case of an adult, the right to have a jury fix the term of imprisonment within the statutory limits. (Ill.) 189.

Commitment to a reform school, under the Kansas statute, on a charge of burglary, is held to be in the nature of a conviction, when made without consent of the child and against his parents' objections. (Kan.) 603.

In Michigan a peculiar statute authorizing the discharge of a person convicted of drunkenness on a recognizance conditioned to take what is called the "Jag Cure" is held unconstitutional. (Mich.) 144.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The General Index follows this.)

- Accord and satisfaction; effect of payment of debt by volunteer or stranger to the original undertaking:—(I.) extinguishment; (II.) contrary doctrine; (III.) necessity of ratification; (IV.) question of intention; (V.) right of action; (VI.) as to bills and notes; (VII.) subrogation; (a) general doctrine; (b) payment for protection; (c) by special agreement; (d) fraud; (VIII.) as against executors, etc.; (IX.) judgment debt; (X.) purchase-money lien; (XI.) mortgage debt; (XII.) creditor of wife 180
- Apprentice; effect of death on contract of 707
- Assessment. See INSURANCE; PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.
- Assignment. See CONFLICT OF LAWS; INSOLVENCY; SET-OFF.
- Attorney; effect of death on contract with 707
- Bankruptcy. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.
- Banks; indorsement of check "for deposit" 164
Nature of drafts by one bank on another 173
Liability of bank as accommodation indorser 886
Application by bank of individual partner's deposit on firm debt 111
- Benefit societies. See INSURANCE.
- Bills and notes; set-off as to commercial paper in the hands of insolvent's assignee or receiver 819
Set-off against assignee of commercial paper 825
- Boundary; of municipality on navigable stream 520
- Carriers; notice to passenger of conditions on tickets—steamship tickets; railroad tickets 746
- Charities. See MASTER AND SERVANT.
- Checks. See BANKS.
- Compromise. See INSOLVENCY.
- Condition. See DEED.
- Conflict of laws. See also RECEIVER.
Transfer of property out of state by insolvency proceedings or assignment for creditors:—(I.) personal property; (a) voluntary assignments; (1) place of assignment; (2) extraterritorial effect generally; (3) as against attachments in general; (4) discrimination in favor of residents; (5) as to nonresident attachment creditors generally; (6) as to attachment creditors residing in the state where the assignment was made; (7) effect of assignee's possession; (b) assignments under insolvency statutes; (1) in general; (2) as to resident creditors; (3) as to residents of state where insolvency transfer was made; (4) as to other non-residents; (5) effect of assignee's possession; (6) right of assignee to sue in other state; (6) bankruptcy transfers; (1) English decisions; (2) American decisions; (II.) real property; (III.) ships on high seas 38
- Constitutional law; as to officers, see OFFICERS.
See also LEGISLATURE; TAXES.
Necessity of notice of lunacy proceedings to the alleged lunatic; waiver of notice; collateral attack; sufficiency of notice; notice to others; English cases. 737
- Contracts; statute of frauds as affecting sale or mortgage of crops, see EMBLEMENTS.
Effect on, of death of party thereto; generally; landlord and tenant; sale; guaranty; agency; attorney; notes, bills, and checks; personal services; apprentice 707
- Corporations; service on foreign corporations, see GARNISHMENT; WRIT AND PROCESS.
Liability of a consolidated railroad company for the debts of its predecessor; in general; assumption of liability by contract; statutory liability; liens and priorities; pleading and practice 221
- Courts; inquiry into conclusiveness of enrolled bill, see STATUTES.
- Criminal law; correction of verdict in criminal cases:—(I.) general rules; (II.) by the court; (a) general doctrine; (b) to assess punishment; (c) to find degree of offense; (III.) by the jury under the court's direction; (IV.) sealed verdicts; (V.) effect of discharge; (VI.) effect of recording; (VII.) special verdicts; (VIII.) English decisions 729
- Crops. See EMBLEMENTS; LEVY.
- Curtsey; levy on estate by, see LEVY.
- Deed; record of, see REAL PROPERTY.
Liability of grantee upon a condition of deed poll; doctrine against liability upon the covenant; contrary doctrine 896
- Deposit. See BANKS.
- Descent and distribution; inheritance by, through, or from illegitimate persons:—on the part of the mother; marriages null; legalizing illegitimates by statute and recognition; inheritance by illegitimate from his mother; inheritance by illegitimate under will; inheritance by illegitimates from brothers and sisters; inheritance by illegitimate through mother or father; inheritance by brothers or sisters of mother or father of illegitimate; inheritance by mother from illegitimate child; inheritance through illegitimate; inheritance by widow or husband of illegitimate; inheritance by legitimate from illegitimate child of the same mother 769
- Divorce. See HOMESTEAD; HUSBAND AND WIFE.
- Dower; levy on estate of, see LEVY.
- Drafts. See BANKS.
- Election. See VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

Emblements. See also LEVY.

Sale or mortgage of future crops:—(I.) how assignable; (a) sales; (b) statute of frauds; (c) mortgages; (d) upon sale of the land; (II.) general doctrine; (III.) necessity and effect of ratification; (IV.) necessity and effect of possession; (V.) potential interests; (VI.) equitable doctrine; (VII.) description; (a) general rules; (b) sufficient; (c) insufficient; (VIII.) parol evidence to identify; (IX.) notice; (a) general; (b) constructive; (X.) necessity and effect of recording; (XI.) to what crop or part of crop it extends; (XII.) title of a mortgagee; (XIII.) effect of; (a) against creditors; (b) as against purchasers; (c) as between husband and wife; (d) judgment against; (XIV.) severance of the property; (XV.) application of proceeds; (XVI.) to secure crop advances; (XVII.) crops raised upon shares; (XVIII.) upon whom binding; (XIX.) landlord and tenant; (XX.) conversion; (XXI.) special state doctrines and laws 449

Estoppel; doctrine of, as affecting notice by record of deed before grantor has title 561

Garnishment; service on foreign corporation in garnishment cases 500

Guaranty; effect of death of party on 707

Highways; damage to abutting owner by first grading and improvement of street; liable for neglect or illegal act; the effect of statutes; constitutional provision giving damages for property injured or damaged; establishing grade on paper; what is regarded as establishing a grade; change from natural surface; building after establishment of grade; the Ohio doctrine 658

Homestead; effect of divorce on homestead rights; husband's claim to homestead where decree of divorce is silent; wife's claim to homestead where decree of divorce is silent; decree awarding homestead 230

Husband and wife; effect of appearance by nonresident to give jurisdiction of divorce case; appearance generally; fraud and collusion 287

Responsibility of married woman for use and safety of premises owned by her:—(I.) illegal use of premises; (II.) safety of premises 623

Incompetent persons; constitutional right of notice of lunacy proceedings, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Indebtedness. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

Injunction; against a nuisance maintained by a municipal corporation; drainage generally; drainage into watercourse; docks and navigation; market-houses and buildings; railroads and other uses of streets; cemetery; public urinals 801

Insolvency. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS; SET-OFF.

Right of assignee of creditors to compromise claims; statutory provisions 573

Insurance; liability of member of benefit society to action for assessment 435

Judgment. See HUSBAND AND WIFE; SET-OFF.

23 L. R. A.

Landlord and tenant; as to sale or mortgage of crops by, see EMBLEMMENTS.

Effect of death on contract of 707

Liability of landlord as to condition of part of premises not controlled by tenant; elevators; common entrance, passway and yard, and access; halls and stairways; fire escapes; sidewalk; walls; falling articles; light and air; nuisances; roof used in common; water from roof; water pipes, and plumbing controlled by landlord; water, pipes, and plumbing used by other tenants; water supply 153

Legislative journals. See STATUTES.

Legislature; power of, to make a statute contingent on approval by vote of the people 113

Levy; what expectant and contingent interests in real property are subject to attachment or levy on execution; general rule; interest of an heir in his ancestor's lands; reversions, remainders, and executory devices; right of dower; tenancy by curtesy initiate 623

Crops as personal property for the purpose of levy and sale; general doctrine; sufficiency of sheriff's possession; possession of the purchaser; crops held upon shares; (a) tenants in common; (b) husband and wife; (c) cropper's share; (d) landlord and tenant; (e) state decisions 230

Lunatics; constitutional right to notice of lunacy proceedings, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Married woman. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Master and servant; liability of charitable institution for negligence 209

Mortgage; of future crops, see EMBLEMMENTS.

Effect of "danger," "safety," or "insecurity" clause in a chattel mortgage:—right to interfere with third persons; effect of taking possession; how far right is without control; effect of malice; facts which justify taking possession; selling; construction of different provisions and circumstances; other rights conferred 730

Municipal corporations; boundary of, on navigable waters, see BOUNDARY.

See also HIGHWAYS; INJUNCTIONS.

What constitutes an indebtedness within the meaning of constitutional and statutory restrictions of municipal indebtedness:—in general; must be voluntary; future indebtedness; future payments; current expenses and indebtedness payable out of current revenues; change of form of indebtedness; estimate of amount 409

Negligence. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

Nuisances. See INJUNCTION.

Office; necessity of an acceptance to complete resignation; distinction between public and private interests; where acceptance is unnecessary; effect of statute law; what a sufficient acceptance; incompatible offices 621

Officers; constitutional prohibition against change of salary during term as affecting fees 609

Payment. See ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

Principal and agent; effect of death on contract of 707

Public improvements; municipal assessment of state property:—general doctrine; distinction between assessment and taxation; liability to assessment; government property 807

Railroads. See CORPORATIONS.

Real property; effect of conveyance recorded before the grantor obtains title, as notice; the doctrine of estoppel; the doctrine of notice from registration; comparison and limitation of the opposing principles 861

Receiver. See also SET-OFF.
Rights of, as to property outside of the jurisdiction in which he is appointed; as to attachment; after receiver gets possession; right of foreign receiver to sue; title to land 88

Remainders. See LEVY.

Sale; of future crops, see EMBLEMENTS.

Set-off; against assigned claim, of debtor's demand against assignor:—kinds of choses in action to which set-offs are applicable; assignment will not defeat set-off; where rights become fixed; rights connected with assigned contract; effect of agreement to set off; assignee of bank; claims by and against corporation generally; what set-off proper; equitable causes for set-off; estoppel; counter set-off; what assignment may be sufficient; what notice of assignment sufficient; counterclaims 305

Right to set off insolvent's obligation upon a claim in the hands of his receiver or assignee, or trustee for creditors:—assignees for creditors; receiver; limitation upon the rule; claims not due; set-off between corporation and stockholder; the effect of the doctrine of mutual credits; the English rule; claims not owned; special circumstances which will defeat right; contingent claims; commercial paper; equities connected with the assigned contract; character of demands which may be set off; effect of agreement 813

Against assignee of commercial paper, of claim against assignor:—paper indorsed before maturity; transfer after maturity; paper negotiable in bank or payable without defalcation; what necessary to defeat right of set-off; paper not negotiable; paper irregularly transferred; fraudulent transfers or transfers without value; contingent liability and claims not owned; equities which will justify set-off; assignment will not defeat perfected right; claims not in the same right; effect of agreement; effect of new note; effect of assignment without recourse; counter set-off; attempt to compel set-off by statute; special contracts 823

Against judgment in the hands of an assignee:—assignment of verdict; how far subject to set-off of demand not in judgment; where cross-judgments are in same action; notice; set-off of claims against one who never had title, not available; assignees protected; fraudulent assignment or for the purpose of defeating set-off; insolvency as an equity; where assignee the real party; assignment without consideration; want of legal title; judgment on note; rights of holder of assigned judgment; waiver; set-off of contingent liability; assignment in accordance with prior agreement; set-off on motion; assignment to attorney may defeat his lien 388

State. See PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Statutes; conclusiveness of enrolled bill:—the English rule; the effect of constitutional provisions; provisions as to quorum and recording votes; requirements as to special legislation; general expressions as to compliance with constitution; as to fact of passage; to contradict enrolled bill; how far journals may establish a law for which no enrolled bill is found; New York decisions; special circumstances; what evidence may be considered; evidence; collateral decisions; vacillation of judicial opinion 349

Taxes; constitutionality of provision for deduction of debts from credits or other property 278

Trial; correction of verdict in criminal case, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Trover; for crops, see EMBLEMENTS.

Verdict; correction of, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Voters and elections; acquiring residence as a voter while attending school or public institution; inmates of soldiers' homes or occupants of government posts; inmates of almshouses and hospitals; students 218

Waters; boundary of municipal corporation on, see BOUNDARY.
Liability for loss by fire due to the lack of adequate water supply:—(I.) of city or municipality; (II.) of water company 148

Writ and process; who may be served with process in suit against a foreign corporation:—early doctrines; later doctrines; statutes authorizing service; where corporation is not engaged in business within the state; service on director; service on stockholder; effect of designating agent; failure to make designation; termination of agency; cashier; managing agent; other agents; service on state officer; admission of service; return of service; in garnishment cases; serving process of federal court; English cases 400

Privileges of members of congress and the legislature from suit; civil suits; arrest 688

GENERAL INDEX

TO

OPINIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

(Separate Index to Notes precedes this.)

ABANDONMENT. See HOMESTEAD, 1.

ABATEMENT. See ACTION OR SUIT, 7.

ABSTRACTS. See TAXES, 1.

ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Accord and satisfaction; effect of payment of debt by volunteer or stranger to the original undertaking:—(I.) extinguishment; (II.) contrary doctrine; (III.) necessity of ratification; (IV.) question of intention; (V.) right of action; (VI.) as to bills and notes; (VII.) subrogation; (a) general doctrine; (b) payment for protection; (c) by special agreement; (d) fraud; (VIII.) as against executors, etc.; (IX.) judgment debt; (X.) purchase money lien; (XI.) mortgage debt; (XII.) creditor of wife. 120

ACKNOWLEDGMENT. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

ACQUITTAL. See CRIMINAL LAW, 5.

ACTION OR SUIT. See also RECEIVERS, 5.

1. An action at law against the city is the proper form of remedy to determine the right of a city officer to increased pay. Gobrecht v. Cincinnati (Ohio) 609

2. A license and agreement under which land is taken for a railroad, with agreement to pay its value, dispense with the writ of ad quod damnum allowed by Ind. Rev. Stat. 1881, § 3953, even if this remedy would otherwise be exclusive. Chicago & I. Coal R. Co. v. Hall (Ind.) 281

3. A common-law remedy is not taken away by a statutory remedy for the same right, unless the statute expressly denies it, or is so clearly repugnant to the exercise of it as to imply a negative. Id.

4. A statutory remedy for a constitutional right to damages in a condemnation case cannot be made exclusive, where the owner of the property is given no power to initiate such proceeding or to enforce payment after the damages are assessed. Hickman v. Kansas City (Mo.) 658

5. A railroad company which unlawfully injures a mill by the construction of its road cannot set up in defense that the milldam is a 23 L. R. A.

public nuisance. Watts v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (W. Va.) 674

6. A person has no right to intervene as defendant in equity against the objection of the complainant. Whitney v. Hanover Nat. Bank (Miss.) 581

7. That a woman made sole defendant in an action for tort was living with her husband is no ground for abatement of the action, under a statute relieving the husband from liability for torts of his wife in which he does not participate, and making her suable therefor as if she was sole. Strouse v. Leinf (Ala.) 622

8. The provision in the Illinois Chancery Act, § 8, that bills for injunction to stay proceedings at law shall be brought in the county in which the proceedings at law are had, does not prevent a court in another county from staying such proceedings at law, as auxiliary or incidental relief in a suit to compel specific performance of a contract for the sale of land. Hayes v. O'Brien (Ill.) 555

ADOPTION. See CONTRACTS, 1, 5; DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, 3; JUDGMENT, 11-14; PARENT AND CHILD, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

AD QUOD DAMNUM. See ACTION OR SUIT, 2.

ADVERSE POSSESSION.

Possession under an execution sale against the husband, of land formerly held by entireties by a couple who were divorced prior to the sale, is sufficient, if properly maintained, to bar all rights of the wife thereto, even before the husband's death. Hopson v. Poulkes (Tenn.) 805

AGREED CASE.

No judgment can be rendered in a case submitted to the court for its opinion upon an agreed statement of facts, unless a request for judgment is distinctly made in the agreed case. Tyson v. Western Nat. Bank (Md.) 161

ALIENS.

A private individual has no standing in court to institute a proceeding to set aside an order admitting an alien to citizenship. Re McCarran (N. Y. O. P.) 885

877

ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Filling blanks in a promissory note by the insertion of the words "or bearer," and of the name of the bank after the word "at," constitutes a material alteration which will avoid the note in the hands of an innocent holder. Simmons v. Atkinson & L. Co. (Miss.) 599

ANIMALS.

1. Special negligence in permitting a vicious dog to escape from an enclosure is not necessary to create a liability for keeping such a dog with knowledge of its propensities, when he escapes and inflicts injuries. Strouse v. Leipf (Ala.) 622

2. A wife is not liable for harboring a vicious dog on her own premises where her husband lives with her, although the statutes secure to married women their separate estates and relieve the husband from liability for his wife's torts "in the commission of which he does not participate," since the dog cannot be kept without his consent and participation, and must be charged to his account as the head of the family. Id.

3. Absolute liability for damages caused by importation of cattle infected with Texas fever, without allowing it to be shown that defendant had no notice and could not have ascertained the condition of the cattle by the exercise of reasonable care, is not created under Iowa Acts 21st Gen. Assem. chap. 158, §§ 2, 8, substituted for Iowa Code, §§ 4058, 4059, prohibiting the importation of such cattle, and making a violation of the law a misdemeanor, with a right of action to persons injured for the damages sustained. Furley v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Iowa) 73

APPEAL AND ERROR.

1. A suit to set aside a deed and specifically enforce a contract for land involves a freehold, within the jurisdiction of the Illinois supreme court. Hoyes v. O'Brien (Ill.) 555

2. Granting a stay of execution by an appellate court pending an appeal in a capital case is not a reprieve within the meaning of a constitutional provision giving to the governor the power to grant reprieves; and a statute authorizing such stay merely declares the inherent power of the court, independent of any statutory provision. Parker v. State (Ind.) 859

3. In the absence of any objection in the lower court as to the amount of damages allowed by the jury, such question cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. Schmitz v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Mo.) 250

4. Slight differences between the phraseology of a motion for a new trial and that of a bill of exceptions, relating to testimony, will not prevent the consideration of a question as to the exclusion of the testimony, if the evidence be referred to with such certainty as to call the attention of the court to it and to the ruling in relation thereto, so that the judge cannot mistake the matter. Springer v. Byram (Ind.) 244

5. On appeal from a general term decision which held that the overruling of a motion for a new trial by the special term was erroneous, 23 L. R. A.

the court is not restricted to the particular points or reasons considered by the general term as the basis of its decision, but may uphold it on other grounds presented by an assignment of errors in the general term, if the conclusion was correct. Id.

6. Where all parties intended to treat the case as though the court had dismissed the action or granted a nonsuit on the ground that plaintiff had failed to "prove a sufficient case for the jury," it will be so treated by the supreme court under the Colorado practice. Wadsworth v. Union P. R. Co. (Colo.) 812

7. One becoming surety on a supersedeas bond which is substituted for a prior similar bond assumes, under the Arkansas statutes, liability for all damages accruing during the pendency of the appeal, and not for those only which accrue after his bond is filed. Wilson v. King (Ark.) 802

Errors.

8. A verdict will not be set aside because the jury disregarded an instruction which is erroneous in law. Watts v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (W. Va.) 674

9. The giving of an instruction assuming that it was a railway company's duty to keep a flagman at a street crossing, whereas the statute imposes no such duty, is not ground for reversal, where the company could not have been prejudiced thereby because the evidence clearly shows that it did have a flagman at such crossing. Schmitz v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Mo.) 250

10. Improper evidence introduced by evasion of an adverse ruling will be presumed prejudicial. Bank of Commerce v. Goos (Neb.) 190

11. Evidence in rebuttal, which further refers to repairs made by a railroad company to an alleged defective fence after an accident, will not require reversal, if the company first gave evidence of such repairs. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Reesman (C. C. App. 8th C.) 768

12. A party cannot on appeal complain of an error in giving an instruction at his own instance and request. Schmitz v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Mo.) 250

13. Error in sustaining a demurrer to a special plea is cured, if, under the general issue, proof is introduced and the jury passes upon the identical question sought to be raised by such plea. Strouse v. Leipf (Ala.) 622

14. Committing to jail one of the witnesses for defendant in the presence of the jury, on account of alleged false evidence, is within the discretion of the judge, for which no legal error can be assigned. People v. Hayes (N. Y.) 830

15. A verdict ignoring the instructions of the court to limit the recovery to the amount required to repair the building, and giving the whole amount of insurance thereof, will be set aside. Limburg v. German F. Ins. Co. (Iowa) 99

Review of facts.

16. The same strict rule must be applied by the appellate court as by the court below in respect to the sufficiency of parol evidence to show that a deed was intended for a mortgage. Jasper v. Hazen (N. D.) 58

17. Although the court is required upon appeal to review questions of fact under N. D. Laws 1891, chap. 120, § 25, in cases tried by the court or referee, when exceptions to the findings are duly taken and returned, it will not try the case de novo, but the findings below are presumed to be correct; and a finding based upon parol evidence will not be disturbed unless the error be made clearly to appear. Id.

18. A finding that the sanitary code of a board of health was subscribed by the secretary will not be disturbed on appeal, where there is no proof that the original, which has been destroyed, was not signed, and a copy of the code as published purports to be signed by the secretary, and is attested by his signature as published. Yonkers Bd. of Health v. Coppitt (N. Y.) 485

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Appeal; review of evidence to show that deed is a mortgage. 58

APPRENTICE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Apprentice; effect of death on contract of. 707

ASSESSMENT. See INSURANCE, 2, NOTES AND BRIEFS; PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

ASSIGNMENT. See also BANKS, 4; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 8; SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM, 1, 8-5, 9.

1. One who pays the debt of another on a promise by the creditor to assign it is the equitable assignee of the debt, although no assignment in writing is made. Crumlish v. Central Improv. Co. (W. Va.) 120

2. An assignment to a resident of another state, of a claim against a person whose wages are exempt, in order that the assignee may, by garnishment of the wages in another state, evade the statute of exemption at the residence of the employé, will render the assignor liable to him for the amount of wages thus appropriated without his consent by the garnishment in another state. O'Connor v. Walter (Neb.) 650

3. An assignment may be made of the income arising out of personal property held in trust for the support of a person during life, where there is no statute restricting it and no restriction on the assignment in the will creating the trust,—especially where the assignment is to the wife of the assignor, on her agreement to maintain and educate their children. Lamberton v. Peredes (Wis.) 824

4. An assignment by an executor before his accounting, of his commissions, is void as contrary to public policy, since when the hope of compensation is gone a strong incentive to diligence and zeal is wanting, and the temptation to be content with a lax or perfunctory administration of the trust becomes more persuasive. Re Worthington (N. Y.) 97

23 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CONFLICT OF LAWS; INSOLVENCY; SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

Assignment; of salary or fees. 97.

ASSOCIATIONS.

The remedies afforded by the constitution, laws, and regulations of the order must be exhausted before a worshipful master and presiding officer of a local lodge of ancient, free, and accepted masons, can invoke the aid of the courts against the grand master of the grand lodge of the state to prevent suspension. Mead v. Stirling (Conn.) 227

ASSUMPSIT. See also ASSIGNMENT, 1.

A stranger paying the debt of another without request cannot sustain an action at law against such other, unless he has in some way ratified such payment. Crumlish v. Central Improv. Co. (W. Va.) 120

ASYLUM. See DEFINITIONS, 1.

ATTACHMENT. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 3-5.

A mere possibility, such as the right to a fee in real property in case of surviving another person, is not attachable under a statute authorizing the attachment of "estate or debts." Young v. Young (Va.) 642

ATTORNEYS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Attorney; effect of death on contract with. 707

ATTORNEYS' FEES. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 20.

AUDITOR OF STATE. See WRIT AND PROCESS, 4.

BAGGAGE. See CARRIERS, 1.

BAILMENT. See also BANKS, 1.

1. A banker who loaned money for a customer without any compensation for the service is liable for failure to exercise the skill and knowledge of a banker engaged in that business,—especially where he had promised to give careful attention thereto. Isham v. Post (N. Y.) 90

2. Taking stock as collateral without verification of its validity at the company's office, especially if there is nothing in the appearance of the certificate to excite suspicion, is not negligence on the part of a banker in making a loan for a customer. Id.

3. A banker making a loan for a customer on collateral securities is not, for the purpose of avoiding loss on the collaterals, bound to make inquiry as to the solvency of the borrower, if he was reputed to be responsible when the loan was made, and nothing indicated the slightest reason for refusing the loan. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bailment; duty of bailee as to care. 90

BANKRUPTCY. See CONFLICT OF LAWS, 7, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

BANKS. See also BAILMENT, 2, 8; CHECKS; CONTRACTS, 1; DAMAGES, 2; ESTOPPEL, 4; PAYMENT, 20; PUBLIC MONIES.

1. A banker is not chargeable with negligence in loaning a customer's money on raised collateral, if the forgery was such as to deceive any reasonable scrutiny of a fairly prudent banker knowing the signatures, but not suspecting fraud in the body of the instrument. Isham v. Post (N. Y.) 90

2. Money deposited in a bank on open account subject to check, and not received as a special deposit, is in substance and legal effect a loan. State, O'ret First Nat. Bank, v. Bartley (Neb.) 67

3. The deposit of a partner cannot be applied to an overdraft of the firm, although the bank, in an action by the partner, might set up such overdraft as a counterclaim. Adams v. Winston First Nat. Bank (N. C.) 111

4. A check, although it constitutes an assignment of a fund on deposit, as between the drawer and drawee, does not charge the bank in favor of the payee, if the deposit is otherwise lawfully appropriated before the presentment of the check, or any good equivalent thereto. Bank of Antigo v. Union Trust Co. (Ill.) 611

5. Checks drawn by the cashier of a bank in its name upon another bank in which it has a deposit, for the purpose of speculating in stocks without the knowledge of the officers of the bank, the names of the payees being actual customers of the bank, but such customers having no knowledge of the checks or connection with the transaction, are subject to the same rule as if fictitious names were selected and used; and the payment by the drawee bank of such checks, upon indorsements made by such cashier, is good as against the bank of which he is an officer. Phillips v. Mercantile Nat. Bank (N. Y.) 584

6. A national bank is not bound by the promise, without consideration, of its cashier, to pay a draft drawn or to be drawn upon a depositor, since the power so to contract is not embraced within those given by U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5186, subd. 7, empowering it to exercise all incidental powers necessary to carry on the business of banking by discounting and negotiating notes, drafts, bills, and other evidences of debt, receiving deposits, buying and selling exchange, coin, and bullion, loaning money on personal security, and issuing and circulating notes. Flannagan v. California Nat. Bank (C. C. S. D. Cal.) 836

7. On indorsement "for deposit" of a check which is credited as cash by the bank which receives it, and thereafter by indorsement in the same form is transferred to another bank which in good faith credits it as cash and pays the proceeds to the former bank, which afterwards makes an assignment for creditors, the title to the check must be held to be in the bank which holds it and has paid for it. Ditch v. Western Nat. Bank (Md.) 164

8. An indorsement "for collection" will not pass the title to commercial paper to the bank.

in which it is deposited. Tyson v. Western Nat. Bank (Md.) 161

9. A third person can acquire from the bank no title to commercial paper deposited with an indorsement "for collection." Id.

10. The collection of paper deposited with a bank indorsed "for collection" after the bank has ceased to do business because of insolvency will not vest the title to the paper in the bank. Id.

11. Entering the amount of commercial paper deposited with a bank "for collection" as cash in the pass book of the depositor and to his credit on the books of the bank will not pass to the bank the title to the paper, if it was not to be an absolute credit, but was to be charged back if not collected. Id.

12. Failure of the bank on which a check is drawn and with which it is deposited "for collection and credit," to notify the drawer of its neglect to transfer the credit, will discharge him from further liability in case he is injured thereby. Exchange Bank v. Sutton Bank (Md.) 173

13. The completion of a transfer of credit to the payee of a check indorsed "for collection and credit" by the assignee for creditors of an insolvent bank, which just before assignment had charged the check to the maker, but had not given credit to the payee, will not constitute a payment of the demand for which the check was given. Id.

14. The fact that when a bank received a check upon itself "for collection and credit" to another account it was hopelessly insolvent, and the same day placed its assets in the hands of trustees for creditors, shows that its failure to notify the drawer of its neglect to transfer the credit worked no injury to him which would discharge him from liability for the debt for which the check was given. Id.

15. Recovery by the payor of a forged check will not be permitted under Pa. Act 1849, § 10, providing for recovery of money paid on forged signatures, if the check was paid and apparently dismissed from further attention until five days later, when the payee, after parting with the funds, started an investigation which disclosed the forgery. Iron City Nat. Bank v. Fort Pitt Nat. Bank (Pa.) 615

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Banks; indorsement of check "for deposit." 164

Nature of drafts by one bank on another. 173

Indorsement "for collection." 161

Liability of bank as accommodation indorser. 836

Application by bank of individual partner's deposit on firm debt. 111

Payment of forged paper. 616

Payment of forged check. 584

BASTARDY. See DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, 1.

BENEFIT SOCIETIES. See also INSURANCE, 2, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

The legal title to the 20 per cent of assessment received by local branches of the Order of Iron Hall, which they are allowed to retain as a reserve fund, which by the law of the order is declared to be the property of the Supreme Sitting and subject to its control at all times, and which is to be called for in annual installments after the period of six years and six months,—is, like the other 80 per cent, which is paid over immediately, in the Supreme Sitting, although the possession is for the time retained by the branches. Buswell v. Supreme Sitting of Order of Iron Hall (Mass.) 846

BILLS AND NOTES. See also ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS; BANKS, 6-11; MORTGAGE, 2; SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM, 2-4, 6.

1. A payor of forged paper is not exempted from the consequences of his act by Pa. Act 1849, § 10, providing for the recovery of money paid on forged signatures, if the result of a recovery would be that his own negligence would occasion loss to the payee. That Act only applies in case of due care on his part, and where his recovery will not cause loss to the payee. Iron City Nat. Bank v. Fort Pitt Nat. Bank (Pa.) 615

2. In the absence of notice of the assignment, payment to the payee of a note, assigned without indorsement, will be a complete protection against the assignee, although the note was not produced or delivered up at the time of the payment. Vann v. Marbury (Ala.) 825

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bills and notes; implied warranty of genuineness. 90

Set-off as to commercial paper in the hands of insolvent's assignee or receiver. 819

Set-off against assignee of commercial paper. 825

BLANKS. See also ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS; BONDS.NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Blanks; in notes; power to fill. 599

Unauthorized filling of blank bond. 602

BOARD OF HEALTH. See CERTIORARI; HEALTH; NUISANCES, 5.BONDS. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 7.

The signer of a blank bond which is filled up thereafter with terms different from those authorized by him is not bound thereby, unless he has become estopped as to the holder of the bond to deny that he authorized it to be filled up in that form. Richards v. Day (N. Y.) 601

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Bonds; liability of surety. 802

BOUNDARY.

The jurisdiction of a municipality bounded by a navigable river does not extend beyond 23 L. R. A.

low-water mark, in the absence of anything in the charter extending the limit of its jurisdiction expressly or by fair implication. State v. Eason (N. C.) 520

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Boundary; of municipality on navigable stream. 520

CARRIERS. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 1; EVIDENCE, 2.

1. A regulation limiting the amount of liability for injuries to baggage of a passenger may be made by notice on the back of a steamship contract ticket, where attention is directed thereto by the words "See back," conspicuously printed on the face of the ticket, since the carrier's liability as to baggage, not being exactly defined, may be made definite and certain by reasonable restrictions. Potter v. The Majestic (C. C. App. 2d C.) 746

2. A condition restricting the liability of a steamship company to a passenger by exempting it from liability for injuries to person or baggage for perils of the sea and negligence in navigation, among other things, is so material a restriction of a carrier's liability that it cannot be made by notice on the back of a steamship contract ticket, although the words "See back" are conspicuously placed on the face of the ticket. Id.

3. A person having a ticket for passage upon a railroad, who boards a freight train which does not carry passengers, believing the ticket good on that train, is to be treated as a passenger, and is not a trespasser. Boggers v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (W. Va.) 777

4. The unusual, rude, and hasty act of a stranger in rushing through a door while hurrying to take a train, thereby violently striking a person on the other side, does not render the carrier liable. Graeff v. Philadelphia & R. Co. (Pa.) 606

5. A door, such as is in common use, does not show negligence of a railroad company because it is not all made of glass above the middle, so persons on opposite sides can see each other, nor because a screw-eye 4 feet 10 inches from the bottom projects $\frac{1}{4}$ of an inch beyond the surface and causes injury to a person against whom it is violently pushed by another hurrying to a train. Id.

6. A railroad company is liable for the negligence of a mail agent in throwing a mail sack upon a station platform causing the injury of a person thereon, although the company has no right to interfere with the discharge of his duties, if it had notice of his practice to throw sacks in this way. Galloway v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.) 443

7. A woman with an infant in her arms on the steps of a car in the act of getting off is not guilty of contributory negligence in alighting after the car is in motion, where, by starting while she was on the steps, it compelled her to choose between the danger of stepping off and of being thrown off while trying to re-enter the car. Odum v. St. Louis & W. R. Co. (La.) 152

8. The carrier is not liable for injury to a passenger who had been drinking, and who, after refusing to go inside the car on the conductor's request, goes down without his knowledge on the steps of the car and falls overboard, where the conductor does not know that he is so much under the influence of liquor as to be incapable of taking care of himself. Fisher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. (W. Va.) 758

9. The conductor of a train, knowing that a passenger standing on the platform of a car is intoxicated, should call his attention to the rules of the company forbidding such exposure, and invite him to go inside of the car. Id.

10. A threat in violent and insulting language of the conductor, who has force at his command to execute such threat, to eject a person from the train by force if he does not jump off, is sufficient compulsion or show of force to excuse the person from the charge of contributory negligence in so jumping from the train. Bogges v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. (W. Va.) 777

11. A passenger is not bound to anticipate the danger and be on the lookout for trolley poles while riding with permission on the footboard of a street car, unless he has knowledge of the proximity of such poles to the track. Elliott v. Newport Street R. Co. (R. I.) 208

12. A trolley-railway company should foresee the possible danger to which passengers on the footboards of its cars may be exposed by a slight movement of the body, when trolley poles are placed from 10 to 12 inches from the edge of the footboard. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Carriers; notice to passenger of conditions on ticket:—steamship tickets; railroad tickets. 746

Failure to carry passengers, as a tort. 774

Expulsion of trespasser. 777

Exposure of person of passenger. 759

Negligence in riding on platform or footboard of street car. 208

Negligence in jumping from train. 152

CATTLE. See ANIMALS, 2.

CERTIORARI.

The decision of a board of health condemning an alleged nuisance is not reviewable by certiorari, where the board is not obliged to hear any party but may act upon its own inspection and knowledge. People, Coppett, v. Yonkers Bd. of Health (N. Y.) 481

CHARITIES. See also MASTER AND SERVANT, 4, 5; TAXES, 2.

A home open only to free masons is not public so as to come within a constitutional provision exempting from taxation institutions of "purely public charity." Philadelphia v. Masonic Home of Philadelphia (Pa.) 545

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also MASTER AND SERVANT

Charities; nature of; when public. 546

CHATTEL MORTGAGE. See MORTGAGE, 3, 4.

23 L. R. A.

CHECKS. See also BANKS, 4, 5, 7, 12-15, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

An instrument must be treated as a check, which is headed by the name of a bank and a date, and over the signature of the cashier directs the payment to the order of a third person of a certain amount of cash, while at the bottom of the paper it is directed to a banking firm. Exchange Bank v. Sutton Bank (Md.) 173

CIGAR-MAKER'S UNION. See TRADE-MARK.

CIVIL DEATH.

One convicted of a capital offense and sentenced to death in one state is not thereby prevented from maintaining a civil action in another state. Wilson v. King (Ark.) 802

COAL DEALERS. See CONSPIRACY, 7.

COMMERCIAL AGENCY. See MERCANTILE AGENCY, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

COMPROMISE. See INSOLVENCY, 1, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

CONDITION. See DEEDS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

CONFLICT OF LAWS. See also CIVIL DEATH; RECEIVERS, 6.

1. A contract for transportation from Liverpool to New York, made in England between a citizen of the United States and a British shipowner, is an English contract governed by the laws of England, in the absence of anything to show an intent that it is to be controlled by the laws of the United States. Potter v. The Majestic (C. C. App. 2d C.) 746

2. A contract made and to be performed in a certain state is to be tested by the law of that state. Orumlish v. Central Improv. Co. (W. Va.) 120

3. Attaching creditors, although nonresidents, who seek to question a preference in a prior assignment under an insolvent law of their own state, are entitled to the same protection and preference under attachment laws as if they were residents. Barth v. Backus (N. Y.) 47

4. The rule that a voluntary assignment for creditors is valid in other states when upheld by the law of the domicile of the owner does not apply to an assignment which, though voluntarily made, is made under a statute which provides for a discharge of the debts of all creditors who accept any dividends under the assignment or otherwise participate therein; but such an assignment is to be treated as a transfer in invitum under insolvency or bankruptcy laws. Id.

5. An attachment will be upheld as against a prior assignment for the benefit of creditors in another state, which is in fact a transfer in invitum under insolvent laws. Id.

6. A receiver of a foreign corporation, appointed in another state in proceedings to dissolve the corporation, has a right to a debt due the corporation, as against an attempt at garnishment of the debt by a nonresident creditor of the corporation, who is a citizen of the state in which the corporation existed and in which the receiver was appointed. Gilman v. Hudson River Boat & S. Mfg. Co. (Wis.) 52

7. Citizens of a foreign state will not be aided by the courts to obtain by garnishment preference of their claims against a foreign debtor in disregard of proceedings in his own country for the sequestration of his estate and the appointment of a trustee thereof in bankruptcy. Long v. Forrest (Pa.) 83

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also RECEIVERS.

Conflict of laws; as to insolvency transfers. 48

Transfer of property out of state by insolvency proceedings or assignment for creditors; (I.) personal property; (a) voluntary assignments; (1) place of assignment; (2) extraterritorial effect generally; (3) as against attachments in general; (4) discrimination in favor of residents; (5) as to nonresident attachment creditors generally; (6) as to attachment creditors residing in the state where the assignment was made; (7) effect of assignee's possession; (b) assignment under insolvency statutes; (1) in general; (2) as to resident creditors; (3) as to residents of state where insolvency transfer was made; (4) as to other nonresidents; (5) effect of assignee's possession; (6) right of assignee to sue in other state; (c) bankruptcy transfers; (1) English decisions; (2) American decisions; (II.) real property; (III.) ships on high seas. 83

CONSPIRACY.

1. Greed of profit or malice toward others is an essential element of an unlawful conspiracy at common law to restrain trade. Cote v. Murphy (Pa.) 185

2. A combination of employers to resist an advance in wages determined upon by an association of employes, by refusing to sell to any persons who concede such advance is not an unlawful conspiracy since the passage of the Pennsylvania statute making it lawful for employes to combine to raise wages, and to persuade by all lawful means others from working for a less sum, since such combination is not to lower the price of wages as regulated by supply and demand, but to resist an artificial price made by a combination, which by statute is lawful. Id.

3. That one whose business is injured by a combination of employers to resist a demand of workmen for an increase of wages is not a workman nor a member of a workmen's union will not entitle him to recover his damages from the members of the combine, if the combination was lawful as to the workmen and he had undertaken to aid their cause. Id.

4. Sending notices to wholesalers that members of an employers' organization formed to resist a demand by workmen for an increase in wages will withdraw their patronage if sales are made to persons acquiescing in the workmen's demand is not such coercion or threat as will render the combination unlawful. Id.

5. A combination of retail lumber dealers to destroy the business of brokers and commission dealers who do not keep a lumber-yard with an assorted stock of lumber, by coercing wholesalers to refuse to make sales to such brokers or lose the business of the members of such combination, is unlawful and renders a member who procures action by the association to the injury of brokers liable to the latter for damages. Jackson v. Stanfield (Ind.) 588

6. A policy calculated to destroy or injure the business of another by threats or intimidation is unlawful, and creates a liability for damages to the person injured. Id.

7. An organization of coal dealers, intended to prevent competition in prices, in pursuance of which the price of coal is raised, is a conspiracy; condemned by N. Y. Pen. Code, § 165 making it a misdemeanor to conspire to commit any act injurious to trade or commerce, and raising the price of coal is a sufficient overt act. People v. Sheldon (N. Y.) 221

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Conspiracy; to affect prices. 224

To affect business of another. 135

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW. See also CRIMINAL LAW, 4; TAXES, 7.

1. A statute allowing women to vote in town and city elections cannot be made to take effect in any city or town upon its acceptance by a majority vote of the voters of such city or town, since it is a matter of general, and not local, concern, to which the principle of local option cannot properly apply. Re Municipal Suffrage to Women (Mass.) 113

2. A statute providing that it shall take effect upon its acceptance by a majority vote of the people of the state cannot be upheld under the constitution of Massachusetts, which makes the senate and house of representatives the legislative department of the government, and does not reserve to the people any direct power of supervision. Id.

3. Articles 5 and 8 of the Amendments to the United States Constitution have no application to the states. People, Bradley, v. Illinois State Reformatory (Ill.) 189

Self-executing provisions.

4. A constitutional provision that property shall not be damaged for public use without compensation is self-enforcing. Hickman v. Kansas City (Mo.) 658

5. No formal assignment of a city to the class to which it belongs is necessary to make operative a constitutional provision limiting the amount of indebtedness of the city according to its classification on population. Beard v. Hopkinsville (Ky.) 402

State business.

6. The state cannot embark in any trade which involves the purchase and sale of any article of commerce for profit, even in the absence of express provision in the Constitution against it. McCullough v. Brown (S. C.) 410

7. The police power of the state does not extend to the entire prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors by private individuals, and the giving of a monopoly of such business to the state, without any attempt to restrict or discourage such sales. McCullough v. Brown (S. C.) 410

8. A statute prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors by any private individual and vesting in the state the exclusive right to manufacture and sell such liquors violates the provisions of S. C. Const. art. 1, §§ 1, 14, guaranteeing all men the right of "acquiring, possessing, and protecting property," and providing that no person shall be "despoiled or dispossessed of his property, immunities, or privileges . . . or deprived of his life, liberty, or estate, but by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land." Id.

Due process.

9. A statute attempting to make a corporation, on the discharge of an employé, pay the whole amount of his stipulated wages up to that date, although by his failure to perform his contract he has damaged the corporation, is unconstitutional as taking property from the corporation without due process of law. Leep v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Ark.) 264

10. Due process of law is not afforded by a statute allowing a railroad company to be charged with liability for stock killed by trains irrespective of negligence, and the amount of recovery to be established without proof of the value of the stock. Wadsworth v. Union P. R. Co. (Colo.) 812

11. A hearing of a property owner before the condemnation of his land as a nuisance by a board of health is not necessary to constitute due process of law, where the question of nuisance remains open to trial in the courts, notwithstanding the decision of the board of health. People, Copeutt, v. Yonkers Bd. of Health (N. Y.) 481; Yonkers Bd. of Health v. Copeutt (N. Y.) 485

12. Due process of law in respect to the removal of an officer does not mean a trial by a constitutional judiciary, but is furnished by the governor's investigation authorized by a state constitution, although he is given the power not only to decide on the removal, but to present the charges and employ counsel in the investigation. Attorney-General, Rich, v. Jochim (Mich.) 699

13. A public office is not property within the provision of the Federal Constitution against deprivation of property without due process of law, and therefore that provision is not violated by a clause in a state constitution giving the governor power to remove officers for gross neglect or misfeasance. Id.

Ex post facto laws.

14. A change in a statute by leaving out the minimum limitation of the term of imprisonment for a crime, so that the punishment may be for a less, but cannot be for a greater, term than before, cannot be regarded as an ex post facto law. People v. Hayes (N. Y.) 880

Regulation of contracts.

15. The right of an individual to contract to labor, with a period of credit for payment of his wages, is included in the constitutional right to acquire and possess property. Leep v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Ark.) 264

16. The legislature cannot interfere with the right of parties to contract on a subject which is purely and exclusively private, unaffected by any public interest or duty to person, to society, or government, where the parties are capable of contracting. Id.

17. Statutes regulating contracts between corporations and their employes may be enacted under the reserved power to amend corporate charters. Id.

18. The restriction by statute of contracts between corporations and employes is not unconstitutional because interfering with the right of the employes to contract. Id.

19. Corporations may by statute be compelled on the discharge of an employé to pay the wages then earned, and without discount for prepayment, although by the terms of his contract the wages would not have been yet payable, if power to amend their charters has been reserved. Id.

20. A penalty for the benefit of an individual is not imposed by a provision in a statute to protect wages of laborers, giving a right to the recovery of the debt, costs, expenses, and an attorneys' fee, in case the act is violated. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Fleming (Neb.) 210

Discrimination; inequality.

21. A railroad company is denied the equal protection of the laws by a statute attempting to create an absolute liability for stock killed or injured by trains, and allowing the amount of recovery to be determined without proof of the actual value of the animals. Wadsworth v. Union P. R. Co. (Colo.) 812

22. A statute allowing licenses for race-courses in counties, towns, and cities in which such race-courses already exist, in the discretion of the local authorities, but requiring a three-fourths vote for a declaration that it is a public necessity, in order to license any new race-course, is unconstitutional as granting exclusive "privileges, immunities, and franchises." State, Alexander, v. Elizabeth (N. J. Sup.) 523

23. A statute giving the right to a trademark in a label adopted by "any person, association, or union of workmen," is not a local or special law granting special privileges, immunities, or franchises, since it is not limited to associations of any particular class of persons. Cohn v. People (Ill.) 821

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Constitutional law; as to officers, see OFFICERS.

See also LEGISLATURE; STATUTES; TAXES.

Constitutional law; as to statutes creating absolute liability of railroad companies. 814

As to statutes creating absolute liability irrespective of negligence; as to diseased animals. 74

As to regulation of relations of employer and employé. 265

Necessity of notice of lunacy proceedings to the alleged lunatic; waiver of notice; collateral attack; sufficiency of notice; notice to others: English cases. 737

Due process in depriving of liberty. 140

Prohibition of business by citizens. 86

As to penalties, forfeitures, and fines. 210

Ex post facto laws. 630

CONTEMPT.

1. Courts have not unlimited power to determine what shall be regarded as contempts, but, in the absence of valid statutory specifications, they must be governed by the common law. People, Connor, v. Stapleton (Colo.) 787

2. A statutory enumeration of acts which shall constitute contempts of court does not deprive the court of jurisdiction over other contempts. Id.

3. It is a contempt of court for a newspaper to charge that persons stigmatized as boodlers and corruptionists have influence enough with the court to prevent the handing down of a decision in a case in which they had been convicted of crime, to charge the court from shielding them from punishment, and to state that it would be interesting to know what mysterious but powerful influence has retarded the machinery of justice so strikingly. Id.

4. Ratification by the publishers of an article constituting contempt of court, put into a newspaper by a reporter, will render them liable therefor. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Contempt; in publication as to court. 789

CONTRACTS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 15, 16; HOMESTEAD, 8; INJUNCTION, 1.

1. A contract may be implied and enforced in equity to leave to an adopted child as an heir the property of the adopting parent, where the proceedings for adoption were taken under a statute which was unconstitutional for defect in its title, but were supposed by the adopting parent as long as he lived to be valid. Wright v. Wright (Mich.) 196

2. The fact that an express contract contemplates another more formal contract with a corporation, in which the contractee is largely interested, does not affect its binding powers. Drummond v. Crane (Mass.) 707

3. A contract to take a supply of water for a term of years, though not specifying any building to which it should be supplied, does not require a personal taking of the water for the whole period, but is satisfied by a taking by other parties at the place contemplated by the parties to the contract. Id.

4. An explicit agreement to take and pay for a certain quantity of water per annum for ten years is not terminated by the death of the promisor, although he wanted the water, as the other party knew, for use in a mill held under a lease, and the lease was rightfully terminated by the lessor after his death,—especially where the contract was procured by the other party as a basis for making an investment in the waterworks. Id.

5. A contract to leave property to an adopted child as an heir is taken out of the statute of frauds by its complete performance on the part of the child. Wright v. Wright (Mich.) 196

6. The invalidity of a contract under the statute of frauds is no defense to a third person who wrongfully prevented the performance of the contract. Jackson v. Stanfield (Ind.) 588
23 L. R. A.

7. The privilege of purchasing given a lessee, in case the lessor makes a sale of the premises, is not invalid on the ground that it is wanting, in mutuality, since this privilege is part of the consideration for accepting the lease. Hayes v. O'Brien (Ill.) 555

8. An agreement in a lease, that the lessee shall have the privilege of purchasing the premises upon such terms and at the same price per acre as any other person or purchaser may have offered, although it does not bind the lessor to make any sale, is valid and binding in favor of the lessee if the lessor decides to sell, and is not incomplete or indefinite. Id.

9. A description of land as the portion of a specified farm east of the right of way of a certain railroad, which runs in a northerly and southerly direction, is sufficient to identify the land, where the range, township, and section on which the land is situated are given. Id.

10. The discounting of three notes amounting to more than $11,000, under a promise to "use, say $10,000 of the paper," does not constitute an entire transaction which will prevent a rescission of the contract as to one of the notes only, after learning of the insolvency of the maker. Bank of Antigo v. Union Trust Co. (Ill.) 611

11. The issuance of an injunction against violation of his agreement not to engage again individually in the business cannot be prevented on the ground that the contract tends to create a monopoly, by a manufacturer who for mutual advantage unites with other manufacturers of the same product in a combination of stocks, machinery, accounts, and goodwill, and the formation of a corporation to operate the combined business. Oakdale Mfg. Co. v. Garret (R. I.) 689

12. A contract will not be declared void for unreasonableness, which prevents the manufacturer of oleomargarine from again engaging in the business for five years upon his uniting with other manufacturers in the formation of a corporation for the production of that article. Id.

13. A contract by which one person is to plant and cultivate peach trees upon the land of another for a term of ten years, and to receive half of the proceeds during any two years of such term which he may select, is not invalid in respect to the interest given in such crops as a mortgage of a thing having no potential existence, since the contract is executed by the setting out and delivery of title to the trees, and the crops are the subject of sale or mortgage in the same manner as crops to be raised from seeds already planted. Dickey v. Waldo (Mich.) 449

14. A contract by which one person is to set out and cultivate for ten years peach trees upon the land of another, and to have half of the crops for any two years of such term which he may select, makes him a tenant in common with the owner of the land, of the peaches for the years which he may select. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Statute of frauds as affecting sale or mortgage of crops, see EMBLEMENTS.

Contracts; validity of; to create monopoly.	639
Mutuality of; sufficiency of description.	556
Divisibility of.	612
Effect on, of death of party thereto; generally; landlord and tenant; sale; guaranty; agency; notes, bills, and checks; attorney; personal services; apprentice.	707

CORPORATIONS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 9, 17, 19; SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM, 8; TAXES, 9, 11; WRIT AND PROCESS, 2-4.

1. A railroad company formed by consolidation of others, one of which was organized by purchasers of a railroad on foreclosure, is bound by the obligation of the original company to pay for land which it appropriated under a parol license and agreement to pay therefor. Chicago & I. Coal R. Co. v. Hall (Ind.) 281

2. Neither the president nor the other officers of a corporation are entitled to any compensation for official services on an implied promise, in the absence of any by-law or resolution of the directors allowing such compensation. Crumlish v. Central Improv. Co. (W. Va.) 120

3. The fact that the same persons constitute the majority stockholders in each of two companies does not enlarge the jurisdiction of equity to interfere with the management of one of those corporations in its relation with the other, at the suit of a minority stockholder. Shaw v. Davis (Md.) 294

4. A minority stockholder cannot invoke the jurisdiction of equity for himself and those who may subsequently join him, to prevent the majority stockholders from making a contract which is neither ultra vires, fraudulent, nor illegal. Id.

5. Corporations as well as natural persons are included within the provisions of the Wisconsin statute for a discharge of insolvent debtors. Barth v. Backus (N. Y.) 47

6. A corporation is insolvent within the rule as to preferring creditors, where its assets are insufficient to pay its debts and it has ceased to do business, or is in the act of taking a step which will practically incapacitate it for conducting the corporate enterprise with reasonable prospect of success, or its embarrassments are such that early suspension and failure must ensue. Corey v. Wadsworth (Ala.) 618

7. One of the governing body of an insolvent corporation cannot be made a preferred creditor for an unsecured debt. Id.

8. A foreign corporation will not be denied recognition by the courts of a state merely because composed exclusively of its own citizens. Oakdale Mfg. Co. v. Garst (R. I.) 639

9. A foreign corporation is subject to the laws of a state in which it does business, which prohibit garnishment or other proceedings to defeat the exemption of wages of a debtor on a contract to be performed in that state. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Fleming (Neb.) 210
23 L. R. A.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Service on foreign corporations, see GARNISHMENT; WRIT AND PROCESS.

Corporations; as persons. 785

Liability of a consolidated railroad company for the debts of its predecessor; in general; assumption of liability by contract; statutory liability; liens and priorities; pleading and practice. 231

Foreign, exclusion of. 86

Preference of debts to officers. 618

COTENANCY. See CONTRACTS, 14.

COURTS. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 8; CONTEMPT, 1; STATUTES, 1.

1. The judicial department has jurisdiction to decide which of two rival bodies, each claimed to be the state senate, is the constitutional body. Attorney-General, Werts, v. Rogers (N. J. Sup.) 354

2. A suit to compel the execution or cancellation of deeds to land may be within the jurisdiction of a court outside of the county in which the land lies, if it has jurisdiction of the person of the defendant. Hayes v. O'Brien (Ill.) 555

3. The circuit court in Wisconsin, having general jurisdiction, is not precluded from taking jurisdiction of a suit against trustees under a will by the fact that the will has been proved in the county court and the estate finally settled in that court, except the execution of the trust, although the county court is expressly given jurisdiction of such suits. Lamberton v. Perreles (Wis.) 824

4. General expressions in every opinion are to be taken in connection with the case in which those expressions are used, and, if they go beyond the case, ought not to control the judgment in a subsequent suit when the very point is presented for decision. Wadsworth v. Union P. R. Co. (Colo.) 812

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Courts; inquiry into conclusiveness of enrolled bill, see STATUTES.

COVENANT. See also LANDLORD AND TENANT.

1. An undertaking of a grantee in a deed poll to perform a condition therein expressed, such as to maintain fences, will run with the land and become obligatory upon subsequent purchasers. Hickey v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (Ohio) 396

2. The right of action against a grantee in a deed poll for breach of his implied undertaking to perform a condition contained in the deed, such as maintaining fences, is extinguished on his conveyances of the fee to another. Id.

CRIMINAL LAW. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 2; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 14; HOUSE OF CORRECTION; TRIAL, 3-5.

1. A statute authorizing a court to suspend sentence in a criminal case after conviction does not encroach upon the constitutional powers of the executive to grant reprieves and pardons. People, Forsyth, v. Monroe County Ct. of Sess. (N. Y.) 856

2. The power to suspend sentence after conviction is at common law inherent in a court of record possessing jurisdiction in criminal cases. Id.

3. A court cannot preclude itself or its successor from passing the proper sentence whenever such a course appears to be proper, by an order suspending sentence during good behavior. Id.

4. Mich. Laws 1898, Act No. 307, popularly known as the "Jag Cure Act," which authorizes a person convicted of drunkenness to be released on a recognizance conditioned that he will immediately take treatment for the cure of drunkenness of some corporation organized by law to make and file reports in reference thereto, and that he will obey all regulations prescribed by those administering such cure, with the further provision that he may be acquitted and discharged at the end of sixty days on proof that he has conformed to such conditions,—is unconstitutional as an attempt to permit unofficial persons to prescribe rules which shall acquit persons charged with crime, while these rules may be as variable as the corporations are numerous. Senate of the Happy Home Club v. Alpena County (Mich.) 144

5. A verdict of manslaughter in the first degree, which the court refuses to receive because there are no degrees of manslaughter, does not amount to an acquittal of the higher offense of murder, so as to prevent the jury, after retiring again, from rendering a verdict of murder in the first degree. Grant v. State (Fla.) 723

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Criminal law; suspension of sentence. 856

Correction of verdict in criminal cases:—(I.) general rules; (II.) by the court; (a) general doctrine; (b) to assess punishment; (c) to find degree of offense; (III.) by the jury under the court's direction; (IV.) sealed verdicts; (V.) effect of discharge; (VI.) effect of recording; (VII.) special verdicts; (VIII.) English decisions. 723

CROPS. See CONTRACTS, 13, 14; EMBLEMENTS, NOTES AND BRIEFS; LEVY AND SEIZURE, 2.

CURTESY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Curtsey; levy on estate by, see LEVY AND SEIZURE.

DAMAGES. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 5.

1. General damages are such as the jury may give when the judge cannot point out any measure by which they are to be ascertained except the opinion and judgment of a reasonable man. Special damages are such as by competent evidence are directly traceable to a failure to discharge a contract obligation or duty imposed by law. Bank of Commerce v. Goose (Neb.) 190

2. Damages for wrongful refusal of a bank 23 L. R. A.

to pay a check cannot include an allowance for injuries sustained by an arrest and imprisonment for giving an alleged fraudulent check and the publication of the fact, as these are not the natural result of the refusal to pay the check. Id.

3. The damages for loss of business caused by an illegal combination of other persons may include the profits which would have been made except for the unlawful interference. Jackson v. Stanfield (Ind.) 588

4. Expenses of travel to another place to purchase lumber are too remote to be included in damages for unlawfully preventing a person from procuring lumber from accustomed sources. Id.

5. The measure of damages recoverable on a contract by the promisee is not affected by the fact that it was for the benefit of a corporation of which he is a stockholder. Drummond v. Crane (Mass.) 707

6. A verdict for $10,000 is not excessive for an injury to a woman's knee, although it seemed of itself a comparatively small one, where it caused a nervous shock which resulted in the development of heart disease and left her a helpless invalid. Galloway v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. (Minn.) 443

7. Some proof of the amount of damages is necessary in order to recover anything more than nominal damages for an actionable wrong. Watts v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (W. Va.) 674

8. Entire damages, including those which will arise in the future, can be recovered for a nuisance only when the cause of injury is permanent and the recovery will confer a license for its continuance, but not where the injury is not permanent, but one which it may be presumed the defendant will remove rather than suffer the entire damages. Id.

9. Prospective damage by the impairment of plaintiff's capacity for earning a livelihood after his majority is a proper element in an action for personal injuries by a minor nine years old, although his petition contains no specific allegation in regard thereto, and there is no direct evidence on the subject. Schmitz v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Mo.) 250

10. Mental anguish of a boy nine years old, consisting of grief and sorrow over the loss of his limb and becoming a cripple for life, is a proper element of damages in an action by him for injuries sustained by the alleged negligence of a railway company at a highway crossing. Id.

11. Insanity resulting from the shock and excitement caused by a railroad accident to a passenger who sustained no bodily injury will not make the railroad company liable. Haile v. Texas & P. R. Co. (O. C. App. 5th C.) 774

12. Damage for change of grade of a street includes the injury resulting from the raising of a portion of the street by a railroad company in obedience to the ordinance fixing the grade. Hickman v. Kansas City (Mo.) 658

13. The rule that benefits deducted in measuring damages in a condemnation case must be special and peculiar and cannot include general benefits shared in common with other property in the neighborhood, instead of taking the difference between the value of the property before and after as the measure of damages,—applies as well to a case of damaging as to one of taking property. Hickman v. Kansas City (Mo.) 658

14. Damage occasioned by establishing a grade in a street, on first raising the grade above the natural surface, as well as damage by raising or lowering a grade previously established, must be compensated under a constitutional provision for compensation in case of property taken or damaged for public use. Hickman v. Kansas City (Mo.) 658

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Damages; for mental suffering; in cases of tort. 774

Measure of, for dishonor of check. 190

DAMS. See NUIRANCES, 1-3.

DEATH. See CONTRACTS, 4; INNKEEPERS.

DEEDS. See also COVENANT; ESTOPPEL, 1.

1. The word "divided," in a deed of one divided fourth of certain property, will not be rejected so as to make a deed of an undivided fourth, where the result would be to ignore the intention of the grantor by passing an after-acquired title. Ford v. Unity Church Soc. (Mo.) 561

2. A grantee by accepting a deed poll is deemed to have entered into an express undertaking to perform a condition contained in the deed, such as an obligation to maintain fences. Hickey v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. (Ohio) 896

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Deed; record of, see REAL PROPERTY.

Liability of grantee upon a condition of deed poll; doctrine against liability upon the covenant; contrary doctrine. 896

DEFENSE. See CONTRACTS, 6; HUSBAND AND WIFE.

DEFINITIONS. See also OFFICERS, 8.

1. The words "any asylum" at which persons are kept at public expense, within the meaning of the Michigan constitution providing that residence for voting purposes shall not be changed by staying in such institutions, includes a soldiers' home supported by the state. Wolcott v. Holcomb (Mich.) 215

2. The word "kindred," in a statute providing for the descent of property in the absence of kindred, means those who can lawfully inherit, and does not include illegitimate blood relatives, unless they are given the right by statute to inherit. Croan v. Phelps (Ky.) 753

DEPOSIT. See BANKS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

DEPOSITIONS.

A deposition of a witness, taken by plaintiff and filed in the suit, is properly excluded on plaintiff's objection that the witness is present, upon defendant's offering it in evidence, under 23 L. R. A.

the implication contained in Mo. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 4461, which makes no provision for the reading of the deposition of a witness not a party to the suit who is present at the trial. Schmitt v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Mo.) 250

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

See also DEFINITIONS, 2.

1. A statute providing that "bastards shall be capable of inheriting and transmitting an inheritance on the part of or to the mother" does not provide for the transmission of the estate through the mother to her collateral kindred. Croan v. Phelps (Ky.) 753

2. The rights of a person under an alleged contract to leave him as heir the property of the other party cannot be determined in proceedings, under Mich. Pub. Acts 1887, Act No. 278, to determine who are the legal heirs or legal representatives of such person. Wright v. Wright (Mich.) 196

3. Real property may descend to a child who, by adoption in another state, has become there the lawful heir of the owner of the property. Van Matre v. Sankey (Ill.) 663

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Descent and distribution; in case of succession of wife. 803

Inheritance by, through, or from illegitimate persons:—on the part of the mother: marriages null; legalizing illegitimacies by statute and recognition; inheritance by illegitimate from his mother; inheritance by illegitimate under will; inheritance by illegitimates from brothers and sisters; inheritance by illegitimates through mother or father; inheritance by brothers or sisters of mother or father of illegitimate; inheritance by mother from an illegitimate child; inheritance through illegitimate; inheritance by widow or husband of illegitimate; inheritance by legitimate from illegitimate child of the same mother. 753

DESCRIPTION. See CONTRACTS, 9.

DISPENSARY. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8.

DIVORCE. See HOMESTEAD; HUSBAND AND WIFE, NOTES AND BRIEFS; JUDGMENT, 16, 17, 19.

DOGS. See ANIMALS, 1, 2.

DOMICIL. See VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 2.

DOWER.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Dower; levy on estate of, see LEVY AND SEIZURE.

DRAFTS. See BANKS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

DRAINS. See WATERS, 2.

DRUNKENNESS. See CARRIERS, 8, 9; NEGLIGENCE, 1; RAILROADS, 8.

DUE PROCESS. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 9-12.

ELECTION. See VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

ELEVATORS.

A newsboy who attempts to ride in a passenger elevator after he has notice of the rule that newsboys are not allowed to ride in it, although they are permitted to enter the building to ply their vocation, is a trespasser as to any use of the elevator, so as to defeat his right to recover for injuries received in such attempt. Springer v. Byram (Ind.) 244

EMBLEMENTS. See also LEVY AND SEIZURE, 2, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Emblements; sale or mortgage of future crops:—(I.) how assignable; (a) sales; (b) statute of frauds; (c) mortgages; (d) upon sale of the land; (II.) general doctrine; (III.) necessity and effect of ratification; (IV.) necessity and effect of possession; (V.) potential interests; (VI.) equitable doctrine; (VII.) description; (a) general rules; (b) sufficient; (c) insufficient; (VIII.) parol evidence to identify; (IX.) notice; (a) general; (b) constructive; (X.) necessity and effect of recording; (XI.) to what crop or part of crop it extends; (XII.) title of a mortgage; (XIII.) effect of; (a) as against creditors; (b) as against purchasers; (c) as between husband and wife; (d) judgment against; (XIV.) severance of the property; (XV.) application of proceeds; (XVI.) to secure crop advances; (XVII.) crops raised upon shares; (XVIII.) upon whom binding; (XIX.) landlord and tenant; (XX.) conversion; (XXI.) special state doctrines and laws. 449

EMINENT DOMAIN. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 2, 4; DAMAGES, 12-14; HIGHWAYS, 8.

1. Damages to the residue of a tract of land, over which a railroad right of way is taken, arising from the construction of the road, are released so far as such damages could be taken into consideration in assessing the compensation for the right of way under proceedings for condemnation, although the land is granted to the company without such proceedings. Watts v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (W. Va.) 674

2. Injury to a dwelling-house upon the residue of land obtained for a railroad right of way caused by the careful blasting of rock in the construction of the road is not the subject of action; but rock so deposited on the land must be removed within a reasonable time, else it will form the basis of an action. Id.

3. Injury to a private way from the construction of a railroad on land granted for that purpose by the owner of the way is not the subject of an action; but injury to a public road peculiarly affecting such landowner is. Id.

4. Injury to a private ferry owned by one from whom the right of way had been obtained, arising from construction of a railroad obstructing an approach to the ferry, cannot be the subject of an action by such owner against the company. Id.

5. A fill or bar unnecessarily made in a stream by placing and throwing into it rock and other refuse material in constructing a railroad, to the injury of a millsite on the residue of the land over which the right of way is taken, constitutes a private nuisance and ground of action against the company. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Eminent domain; effect of condemnation on subsequent injury to property. 675

ENTIRETIES. See ADVERSE POSSESSION.

EQUITY. See TRIAL, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

ESCAPE.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Escape; liability of sheriff for. 861

ESTOPPEL.

1. A deed may pass a subsequently acquired title by virtue of 1 Mo. Rev. Stat. 1855, p. 355, § 3, where it appears to convey the fee-simple absolute, although it is on consideration of love and affection alone. Ford v. Unity Church Soc. (Mo.) 561

2. A statutory provision that a subsequently acquired title of a grantor in a deed purporting to convey a fee-simple absolute shall immediately pass to the grantee, and "that such conveyance shall be valid as if such legal estate had been in the grantor at the time of the conveyance," is not effectual to defeat a bona fide purchase by a subsequent grantee from the same grantor in reliance on the records, which do not show any conveyance by the grantor after acquiring title to the property. Id.

3. A person is not estopped from claiming damages because of the change of grade of a street, because after a portion of the street had been raised by a railroad company in accordance with the ordinance fixing the grade he requested that the grading of the street might be finished. Hickman v. Kansas City (Mo.) 558

4. A bank is so far concluded by the acts of its cashier authorized to draw a check upon the bank's funds, in drawing checks payable to fictitious payees or to customers whose names are used for fictitious purposes and indorsed by him upon the checks, as to be estopped from denying the validity of such acts as against the bank upon which the checks are drawn and which has paid them in good faith. Phillips v. Mercantile Nat. Bank (N. Y.) 584

5. A creditor who fails to state his intent to apply an existing claim against his debtor on a contract between them when a guaranty is made of the debtor's contract including the payment of men to be employed by him, and when the guarantor requires a change in the contract to make it payable in installments, is estopped as against such guarantor, who takes an assignment of the contract, to set off against it his claim against the debtor. Bratley v. Thompson Smith's Sons (Mich.) 805

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Estoppel; doctrine of, as affecting notice by record of deed before grantor has title. 561

EVIDENCE. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 16.*Judicial notice.

1. Judicial notice will not be taken of the effect which will be produced by releasing upon a grade the brake from a car propelled only by a previously acquired momentum. Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Champion (Ind.) 861

Presumptions and burden of proof.

2. It is not prima facie the fault of a passenger where he is injured by riding on the footboard of a trolley car. Elliott v. Newport Street R. Co. (R. I.) 208

3. An employer has the burden of proof to show that a servant wrongfully discharged might have obtained similar employment to reduce damages for breach of the contract. Van Winkle v. Satterfield (Ark.) 853

4. The finding of the body of a child on a railroad track, where it had been struck by a train, raises no presumption of negligence on the part of the company, although the track was straight and clear, where there is nothing to show the circumstances of the accident, or how long the child had been on the track when struck. Ward v. Southern P. Co. (Or.) 715

Documentary.

5. A copy of the proceedings of a court of another state is admissible in Minnesota if authenticated according to the statute of the latter state, though not according to the act of congress. Re Elliot's Appeal (Minn.) 287

6. An authenticated copy of a judgment roll is evidence of all that is properly contained in it, and is evidence prima facie that the judgment was properly entered in the judgment book. Id.

Parol as to writings.

7. The statements in a written assignment of a judgment cannot, in the absence of fraud or mistake, be contradicted by parol in a proceeding by the judgment debtor to set off against it a cross-judgment held by him against the assignor. Benson v. Haywood (Iowa) 885

Experiments.

8. Evidence of an experiment as to the action of a car propelled by a previously acquired momentum when suddenly released from the brake on a descending grade is admissible in an action for the mashing of an employe's hand by the alleged sudden starting forward of a car under such circumstances, when the experiment was made at the same place that the accident occurred, with a similar car, and at the same speed. Chicago, St. L. & P. Co. v. Champion (Ind.) 861

Opinions.

9. Testimony of a depositor that he regarded a check as deposited for collection is incompetent as a conclusion, where the indorsement was "for deposit." Ditch v. Western Nat. Bank (Md.) 164

Declarations.

10. The privilege as to confidential communications from a wife to her husband in letters is lost when he, after they have been received, gives them to a third person. People v. Hayes (N. Y.) 890

23 L. R. A.

11. Disinterested bystanders may testify to statements of a party, made in their presence, although they were made to his physician, in respect to the manner in which his injuries were received. Springer v. Byram (Ind.) 244

12. Statements of the brother of an injured person, made in his presence in an ambulance immediately after the injury, as to the manner in which it was received, and that it was the fault of no other person, may be proved against the injured person in an action for such injuries. Id.

Relevancy.

13. In an action upon a policy of insurance, evidence as to a loss and adjustment under a policy held by a firm of which the plaintiff was a member, upon the contents of the building covered by the policy sued on, is admissible to show the connection of the two losses and the relation of the parties to the suit in the two transactions, upon the question whether an adjuster who adjusted the loss of the firm had authority to waive proofs of loss under the policy in question. Slater v. Capital Ins. Co. (Iowa) 181

14. Evidence of fraud in the creation of a debt is immaterial in a proceeding by garnishment, where the creditor and debtor are both foreigners, and the estate of the latter has been sequestered in his country and placed in the hands of a trustee. Long v. Forrest (Pa.) 33

15. Evidence that a banker charged with negligence in loaning money of a customer on raised certificates of stock loaned large sums of his own money on similar certificates to the same borrower is admissible on the question as to his negligence. Isham v. Post (N. Y.) 90

16. Evidence that the identical raised certificates of stock have been used as collateral for years, and accepted by skillful bankers and brokers without suspicion, is admissible on the question of negligence in loaning a customer's money upon such certificate. Id.

17. Evidence that for a few days after an accident on a railroad trestle, trains were run quite slowly, and afterwards the former alleged dangerous speed was resumed, is inadmissible on the question of negligence in the speed of the train. Anderson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (Wis.) 203

18. In an action by a child for injuries sustained at a railway crossing, in attempting to cross between cars standing on the crossing, evidence that plaintiff saw others cross before him, and that there was no flagman at the crossing, is admissible on the issue of defendant's negligence in starting the train without warning. Schmitz v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Mo.) 250

19. Evidence that a newsboy had previously been refused permission to ride in an elevator is permissible in an action by him for injuries received on such elevator, claiming the rights of a passenger, where the rules of the establishment excluded newsboys from the elevator. Springer v. Byram (Ind.) 244

20. Parol evidence that a bond sued on was executed in blank and was filled up contrary to direction, may be given under a simple denial of execution and delivery. Richards v. Day (N. Y.) 601

Weight and sufficiency.

21. To support a finding that a deed absolute on its face was intended as a mortgage only, the evidence must be clear, convincing, and satisfactory, and of such a character as will leave in the mind of the chancellor no hesitation or substantial doubt. Jasper v. Hazen (N. D.) 58

22. Evidence of the age, health, and habits of a person, is not sufficient to sustain a verdict based on his probable earnings, without anything to show his earning power or his business habits or past earnings. McHugh v. Schlosser (Pa.) 574

23. Evidence to establish negligence must be sufficient to show facts which will warrant a reasonable man in inferring negligence. Omaha & R. V. R. Co. v. Clarke (Neb.) 504

24. The fact that a letter containing notice of the assignment of a note, placed in the mail properly stamped and directed, was never returned to the sender, whose address appeared upon the envelope, is not sufficient to sustain the burden of showing the receipt of notice when met by the positive denial of the addressee, whose testimony is in no way discredited. Jann v. Marlbury (Ala.) 325

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Evidence; confidential communications. 246

Sufficiency of, to show deed to be a mortgage. 58

EXECUTION. See also LEVY AND SEIZURE, 1.

A ieri facias is a lien under W. Va. Code, chap. 141, § 2, upon personal property not of such nature as to be leviable, owned by the debtor before its return day, if docketed as required in said section, without any further notice; but if not so docketed it is not a lien as against a bona fide purchaser, whether he purchased before or after the return day. Wiant v. Hays (W. Va.) 83

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS. See also ASSIGNMENT, 4.

1. Proof that a deceased party executed a will which he afterwards destroyed will not defeat an application for an administrator, unless its contents can be proved with such degree of certainty that it may be established as a will. Re Ellis's Appeal (Minn.) 287

2. A judgment creditor of a matrimonial community cannot, after the wife's death and the husband's qualification as the natural tutor of his minor children, compel an administration of the wife's succession, his remedy being to proceed against the surviving husband and the community property. Re Hooker's Succession (La.) 808

3. An assignee of the commissions of an executor has no such vested title, legal or equitable, to any share or interest in the assets of the estate to be distributed upon the account, as confers upon him the right to be made a party to the proceedings, or to be heard upon a settlement and entry of the decree. Re Worthington (N. Y.) 97

23 L. R. A.

EXPERIMENTS. See EVIDENCE, 3.

EX POST FACTO. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 14.

FENCE. See DEEDS, 2; RAILROADS, 2.

FERRY. See EMINENT DOMAIN, 4.

FIRES.

1. Reasonable or ordinary care is the measure of liability in respect to fire, as well as in other cases, although the care and caution required by this rule will be proportionate to the danger. Day v. H. O. Akeley Lumber Co. (Minn.) 513

2. Liability for fire used in manufacturing, which is communicated to and destroys property of another, depends on the manufacturer's negligence or misconduct. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fire; negligence in use of. 515

FORFEITURE. See LEVY AND SEIZURE, 1.

FORGERY. See BANKS, 14, 15; BILLS AND NOTES, 1.

FORMER JEOPARDY. See CRIMINAL LAW, 5.

FRAUD. See also EVIDENCE, 14.

A conveyance under parol trust to reconvey to the grantor's wife or other person named by him will not, as to the grantor's creditors, change the title before a reconveyance by the trustee. Polley v. Johnson (Kan.) 253

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Fraud; basis of action for; by agent of mercantile agency. 697

FREEHOLD. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 1.

FREIGHT. See CARRIERS, 3.

GARNISHMENT. See also ASSIGNMENT, 2; CONFLICT OF LAWS, 6, 7; CORPORATIONS, 9; JUDGMENT, 5, 10.

1. The situs of a debtor's earnings for the purpose of determining his right to exemption from garnishment is in the state of his residence, where they are payable. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Fleming (Neb.) 210

2. The situs of a credit for the purpose of garnishment, as between citizens of the state of Ohio, is fixed by statute at the residence of the debtor. Root v. Davis (Ohio) 445

3. A debt of a nonresident of the county who resides in the state, due from a resident of the county, may be garnished under the Ohio statute, on the ground of his nonresidence, without any other service on the principal defendant than by publication. Id.

4. The liability of a mortgagee in possession after condition broken, to account for the surplus, is a credit of the mortgagor, and may be attached as such by the process of garnishment. Id.

5. As between an assignor of a claim and the debtor whose wages are garnished in another state by the assignee, the proceedings are not res judicata. O'Connor v. Walter (Neb.) 650

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Garnishment; jurisdiction as to property beyond reach of process. 445

Of nonresident. 210

Service on foreign corporation in garnishment cases. 500

GIFT.

There is no such delivery of securities contained in a box as is essential to a valid donatio mortis causa, by the delivery of the key of the box by the donor on her deathbed to a sister, saying, "I give you the box and all it contains," where the box was itself in another room, locked in a closet, the key to which was in the possession of their mother, with whom the donor lived, while the donee lived elsewhere and made no attempt to take possession of the box during the donor's life. Keepers v. Fidelity Title & D. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 184

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Gifts; causa mortis; delivery of key. 185

GOODWILL. See also PARTNERSHIP, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

1. Where the legal representative of a deceased member of a partnership firm, as such, without words of limitation, joins in the sale of all the stock and fixtures of such firm to the surviving members thereof, such legal representative cannot maintain an action against such survivors for the goodwill of said firm, or for any portion thereof. Lobeck v. Lee-Clarke-Andresen Hardware Co. (Neb.) 795

2. Upon the dissolution of a partnership firm by the death of one of its members the surviving partners may carry on the same line of business, at the same place, that has been transacted by the firm, without liability to account to the legal representative of the deceased partner for the goodwill of said firm, in the absence of their own agreement to the contrary. Id.

GOVERNOR. See MANDAMUS; MILITIA, 2.

GUARANTEE AND ACCIDENT LLOYDS. See INSURANCE, 1

GUARANTY.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Guaranty; effect of death of party on. 707

HEALTH. See also CERTIORARI; INJUNCTION, 6; NUISANCES, 5.

1. On a division of the city of Yonkers into five wards, with a supervisor from each, by the amendment of 1892 to the city charter, the office of "the supervisor," who was a member of the board of health, disappeared, and the ward supervisors did not become members of the board of health. People, Copcutt, v. Yonkers Bd. of Health (N. Y.) 481

2. Yonkers, although excepted by N. Y. Laws 1885, chap. 270, § 1, from the provisions of the act, so far as it relates to the composition of boards of health and appointment of members thereof, is not excepted from § 3, conferring general powers upon such boards. Yonkers Bd. of Health v. Copcutt (N. Y.) 485

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Health; disobedience of order of board. 482

HIGHWAYS. See also DAMAGES, 14; ESTOPPEL, 8; RAILROADS, 13; TRIAL, 6.

1. An ordinance declaring that healthy growing trees on or near the edge of the roadway of a street constitute a nuisance and obstruction, and directing their removal, is void if they are neither obstructions nor nuisances to the street in fact. State, Avis, v. Vineland (N. J. Sup.) 685

2. It is not a valid excuse for the obstruction of a street by a railroad train, that the depot of the company is located at the corner of that and another street, and that trains coming from one direction and halted at the station will necessarily project to some extent into the street, as it is the company's duty so to locate its depot that trains can be stopped thereat without obstructing travel on the public thoroughfare. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Prescott (C. C. App. 8th C.) 654

3. A railroad company which assumes to stop a train across a public street in a large town or city, without express authority for so doing, must be prepared to show, as against one who has sustained a special injury by the obstruction of the street, that there was some overweening necessity rendering the blockade justifiable,—especially where the street is heavily burdened with traffic. Id.

4. A license to lay a railroad track across a street in a large city or town does not carry with it the right to use the crossing for the purpose of standing trains of cars thereon for such period as suits the convenience of the railroad company, or to use the highway as a depot yard. Id.

5. The doctrine of voluntary assumption of a risk as distinguished from contributory negligence is generally applied in cases arising between employer and employé, as to the voluntary use of a tool or appliance known to be defective, and does not apply to the case of one passing along a highway partially obstructed by a railroad train projecting across it. Id.

6. It cannot be held as a matter of law that a person who travels over a defective street, with knowledge of the defects therein, or who drives by an obvious obstruction in a public thoroughfare, thereby assumes the risk of injury, and is precluded from recovering against one who is responsible for the defect or who has negligently caused the obstruction. He is not deprived of the right to recover unless in view of all the circumstances he fails to exercise that degree of care which persons under similar circumstances ordinarily exercise, and is guilty of contributory negligence. Id.

7. A town which leases to an opera company a hall which is situated in a village wherein the town has no responsibility for the streets is not, because of such private use of the hall, charged with liability for the defective condition of a sidewalk in front of the hall, since the sidewalk is a part of the public street, for which the village alone is responsible. Buchanan v. Barre (Vt.) 498

8. The discontinuance of a road is not a taking or damaging of the property of an abutting owner within the constitutional provision as to compensation for property taken or damaged for public use. Leves Dist. No. 9 v. Farmer (Cal.) 888

9. An order to vacate a highway is not subject to collateral attack on the ground that the petition asked for two disconnected objects, being the vacation of one road and the opening of another,—especially where it does not appear that the new road is in fact an alteration of the old one. Id.

10. The inconvenience caused to an abutting owner on a street by discontinuing another portion of the street, making travel to and from his premises less direct, is damnum absque injuria being the same in kind that all the public suffers, and cannot be regarded as damages within the provision of a statute providing for the payment of all damages consequent on the closing of streets. Buhl v. Fort Street Union Depot Co. (Mich.) 892

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Highways; damage to abutting owner by first grading and improvement of street; liable for neglect or illegal act; the effect of statutes; constitutional provision giving damages for property injured or damaged; establishing grade on paper; what is regarded as establishing a grade; change from natural surface; building after establishment of grade; the Ohio doctrine. 658

Vacation of. 889, 892

HOMESTEAD.

1. Mere absence of a wife from the family homestead for three years without claiming any homestead interest in the property, while the husband remains in constant occupancy of the land and home, is not enough to show abandonment by the wife of her homestead rights. Rosholt v. Mehus (N. D.) 289

2. A family homestead will, on dissolution of the marriage, remain in possession of the party holding the legal title thereto, discharged from all homestead rights, if no other disposition is made of it by the decree. Id.

3. A contract by the owner of a homestead, under which a third person is to set out and cultivate peach trees in consideration of half of the crop for any two years during a term of ten years, the trees to become the property of such owner, is not invalid because not signed by his wife, as a conveyance of any homestead right or as an interruption of the possession of the homestead. Dickey v. Waldo (Mich.) 449

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Homestead; effect of divorce on homestead rights; husband's claim to homestead where 23 L. R. A.

decree of divorce is silent; wife's claim to homestead where decree of divorce is silent; decree awarding homestead. 289

HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

1. A constitutional provision that "all penalties shall be proportioned to the nature of the offense" is not violated by committing infants to a reformatory, with a maximum sentence for the crime, subject to be reduced on recommendation of the board of managers; while an adult convicted of the same crime has a statutory right to have the term of his imprisonment, within the limits fixed by statute, determined by a jury. People, Bradley, v. Illinois State Reformatory (Ill.) 139

2. The maximum term of imprisonment for a crime is to be taken as that for which an infant is sentenced to a reformatory, where the statute provides that the court shall not fix the limit of duration of the term, but that it shall not exceed the maximum term provided by law for that crime, and that it may be terminated by the board of managers on certain conditions. Id.

3. A sentence to a state reformatory, of an infant charged with crime, must be regarded as a penalty and punishment for crime, where the statute authorizes sentence only after conviction of crime, and requires the sentence to be "to imprisonment." Id.

4. The commitment to a reform school of a boy under sixteen years of age, without his consent and against objection of his parents, on the sole charge of committing the specific crime of burglary, without previous conviction by a court of competent jurisdiction, cannot be made by a probate court, under Kan. Sess. Laws 1881, chap. 129, § 4, as such a proceeding would be in the nature of a conviction for a specific crime by a court without criminal jurisdiction. Re Sanders (Kan.) 603

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

House of correction; constitutionality of commitment to. 604

HUSBAND AND WIFE. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 7; ADVERSE POSSESSION; ANIMALS, 2; EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS, 2; HOMESTEAD, 2; JUDGMENT, 16, 19.

The insufficiency of a deed by a married woman of her real estate to convey title, because not duly acknowledged by her, cannot be asserted by a creditor who obtains judgment against her and sells the property thereunder four months after the delivery of the deed and of possession of the property, where she subsequently joins her husband in a proper acknowledgment of the deed. Meads v. Clark (Pa.) 479

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Husband and wife; responsibility of married woman for use and safety of premises owned by her:—(I.) illegal use of premises; (II.) safety of premises. 629

Decree for separate maintenance as bar for divorce. 187

Effect of appearance by nonresident to give jurisdiction of divorce case; appearance generally; fraud and collusion. 287

IMPROVEMENTS.

The owner of improvements on school lands in Washington, who is entitled to compensation therefor on sale of the land, need not yield up possession before bringing an action to recover their value from the purchaser of the lands. Wilkes v. Davies (Wash.) 108

INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

1. A county court or its clerk cannot appoint a committee for a person as insane without notice to him. Such an appointment is void, and confers no authority. Evans v. Johnson (W. Va.) 737

2. The committee of an incompetent person cannot resign, unless authorized by statute to do so. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Incompetent persons; constitutional right of notice of lunacy proceedings, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

INDEBTEDNESS. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

INFANTS. See also RAILROADS, 9, 10.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Infants; constitutionality of commitment to reform school. 604

INJUNCTION. See also CONTRACTS, 11; PLEADING, 1, 2.

1. An injunction may be granted against enforcing an illegal agreement of dealers to injure the business of another person. Jackson v. Stanfield (Ind.) 588

2. An injunction against the leasing by a railroad company of another railroad without the court's leave is in excess of the power of the court, as the court cannot prescribe the terms of such a lease, and can, at the most, prevent only such a lease as is illegal, ultra vires, or fraudulent. Shaw v. Davis (Md.) 294

3. The fact that a person cannot be reinstated in his office in the masonic order by reversal of a judgment of suspension until after the term of his office has expired is not ground for an injunction against the suspension, the office not being one of profit. Mead v. Stirling (Conn.) 227

4. The fact that the grand master of a lodge, who is to try the question of misrepresentation as ground for the suspension of a worshipful master of a local lodge, is also the complainant, is not sufficient ground for an injunction from the courts to prevent the exercise of such quasi judicial authority. Id.

5. Wrongful acts for the prevention of which injunctions will be granted are those which affect property or its healthful and beneficial use, and never those which affect reputation merely. Id.

23 L. R. A.

6. The erection and creation of a nuisance dangerous to health may be restrained by injunction by a board of health, under the General Health Act of New York, as well as under the city charter of Yonkers. Yonkers Bd. of Health v. Copcutt (N. Y.) 485

7. A city invested by statute with plenary powers over streets, sewers, drainage, and sanitation, may be enjoined from creating and permanently maintaining a nuisance consisting of sewer manholes having perforated covers which emit poisonous gases in large quantities, in a public street contiguous to the dwelling of a citizen, at least where the dangerous character of the nuisance results, not from defects inherent in the general sewerage system, but from defective execution thereof in failing to adapt it to a steep grade in the particular street. Atlanta v. Warnock (Ga.) 301

8. An injunction is a proper remedy on behalf of taxpayers to prevent the use of public funds in a business under an unconstitutional statute. McCullough v. Brown (S. C.) 410

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Injunction; against breach of contract. 639

Against a nuisance maintained by a municipal corporation; drainage generally; drainage into watercourse; docks and navigation; market-houses and buildings; railroads and other uses of streets; cemetery; public urinals. 301

INNKEEPERS.

An innkeeper is liable for the death of a person who while sick is driven out into a storm without adequate covering, and left for about half an hour in a stream of melting ice and snow, where he falls from inability to stand on his feet, and it was reasonable to suppose that death might follow such sudden exposure in his condition. McHugh v. Schlosser (Pa.) 574

INSANE PERSONS. See DAMAGES, 11; INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

INSOLVENCY. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 3-5; CORPORATIONS, 5-7; SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM, 4, 5; TAXES, 4.

1. An assignee for creditors who, under the advice of his own counsel and after consultation with and by the consent of counsel employed by a creditor, compromises suits affecting the trust estate, is not chargeable by that creditor with lack of good faith and proper diligence which will render him liable for assets which upon the compromise the creditors suing are allowed to retain under attachment. Loucheimer v. Weil (N. C.) 578

2. A deed in trust for the benefit of creditors vests the title of personal property in the trustee, under Md. Code, art. 16, § 205, when the deed is recorded and the bond filed in the county in which the grantor resides; and such title is not affected by the fact that the bond is not filed in another county in which real estate of the grantor is located. Fidelity & D. Co. v. Haines (Md.) 652

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CONFLICT OF LAWS; SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

Insolvency; right of assignee of creditors to compromise claims; statutory provisions. 578

INSURANCE. See also EVIDENCE, 18; PLEADING, 8; TRIAL, 7.

1. Although there is no statutory authority for the Guarantee and Accident Lloyds, which is a voluntary association, unincorporated, to transact business without a license, a person who as its agent assists it in doing so is not guilty of any offense under Ga. act Oct. 24, 1887, to regulate the business of insurance, since that act applies only to incorporated companies. Fort v. State (Ga.) 86

2. A member of a mutual benefit society is personally liable for assessments regularly made during his membership, although there is no express promise on his part to pay them, where his certificate recites that it is in consideration, among other things, of his payment of such assessments, although it is made on the express condition of forfeiture of all his rights and that the contract shall be null and void if he fails to pay any assessment when due. Ellerbe v. Barney (Mo.) 435

3. The assumption of parental relations, although without any legal obligation, by a man who sends a girl to school and pays her expenses, is sufficient to give her an insurable interest in his life, so as to sustain a policy which he procures and assigns to her. Carzenter v. United States L. Ins. Co. (Pa.) 571

4. A simple-contract creditor has an insurable interest in a building belonging to the estate of his deceased debtor, which may be subjected to his debt because the personal property is insufficient to pay the debts of the estate. Creed v. Sun Fire Office (Ala.) 177

5. A threshing-machine is not "in use" within the meaning of an insurance policy covering the property "while not in use," when, not having been used for about two weeks, it is hauled near a farmhouse and left standing there preparatory to its intended use a few days later, and where the fire was not caused by any hazard incident to its actual use or operation. Minneapolis Threshing-Mach. Co. v. Firemen's Ins. Co. (Minn.) 576

6. The words "vacant or unoccupied," in an insurance policy, must be construed with respect to the use and adaptability of the building insured. Limburg v. German F. Ins. Co. (Iowa) 99

7. Both conditions need not be shown in order to avoid a policy of insurance, under a clause making it void when "vacant or unoccupied." Id.

8. An old counter not intended to be moved, but left for sale in an insured building on removal of the tenant, who had used it for a cigar store and factory, and a few bottles and jugs of liquor stored there under an arrangement with him without the knowledge of the owner of the building, do not constitute an occupancy of the building where the owner is seeking another tenant. Id.

9. Altering or repairing a building does not constitute occupancy within the meaning of an insurance policy which provides that mechanics may be employed for a certain number of days in such work. Id.

23 L. R. A.

10. Partition of the property among the devisees of the insured effects a change in the "interest, title, or possession" within the meaning of a clause in an insurance policy avoiding the contract if such change occurs. Trabus v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. (Mo.) 719

11. A clause making the "entire policy void in case of breach of condition in any respect" will not make the policy indivisible so as to preclude any recovery on it, although but one premium is paid, in case it is, for convenience, made to cover different kinds of property which are separately valued, and a condition is broken as to one kind. Id.

12. An insurance company cannot avoid a policy under a stipulation that it shall be void if the interest of the insured be other than the unconditional and sole ownership of the property, and because such interest was not truly stated, where true and full statements of such interest were made to its agent who knowingly and intentionally wrote down false answers. Creed v. Sun Fire Office (Ala.) 177

13. A waiver of proofs of loss under a policy upon a building, made by an adjuster sent by the same company to adjust a loss upon the contents of such building, under a policy held by a firm of which the holder of the former policy was a member, is binding upon the company, in the absence of notice to the insured of any limitation upon the authority of such adjuster. Slater v. Capital Ins. Co. (Iowa) 181

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Insurance; construction of policy.	576
Insurable interest in property.	179
Insurable interest in life.	571
Change of title.	720
Liability of member of benefit society to action for assessment.	485

INTERVENTION. See ACTION OR SUIT, 6; RECEIVERS, 5.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 7, 8.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Intoxicating liquor; legislative regulation of business in.	413
---	-----

INTOXICATION. See CARRIERS, 8, 9; NEGLIGENCE, 1; RAILROADS, 8.

IRON HALL. See BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

JAG CURE. See CRIMINAL LAW, 4.

JUDGE. See PROHIBITION.

JUDGMENT. See also EVIDENCE, 7; GARNISHMENT, 5; SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM, 9.

1. Collusion and agreement between the parties to an action for divorce, as to the judgment to be rendered, does not affect the jurisdiction or render the judgment entered void. Re Ellis's Appeal (Minn.) 287

2. A decision that the owner of improvements on school lands which have not been appraised as required by law cannot have an injunction against the consummation of the sale of the lands to the highest bidder until he has been paid for his improvements, because he has two other remedies, one of which is to sue the purchaser of the lands for the value of the improvements,—must be held conclusive, in a subsequent suit between the parties in interest, of the right of the owner of the improvements to bring an action for their value against such purchaser, the parties in the two suits being identical except for the omission in the latter suit of the officers against whom the injunction was sought, but who were not parties in interest. Wilkes v. Davies (Wash.) 103

3. A judgment against the former owner after a forfeiture of land under W. Va. Code 1868, chap. 81, § 84, for nonentry in the assessor's land books, is not a lien on the land, since the title is vested in the state upon a forfeiture by the mere force of the statutes. Wiant v. Hays (W. Va.) 83

4. The docket entry of a judgment against Edward Davis is not constructive notice that there is an incumbrance against either E. A. Davis or Edward A. Davis, and does not affect the rights of a person who has no notice of the actual identity of Edward Davis and the judgment debtor. Davis v. Steeps (Wis.) 818

5. An order made by a justice of the peace upon a garnishee in a proceeding in attachment, after service of notice upon him and the rendition of judgment for the plaintiff, to pay the money owing by him to the defendant into court, presupposes a finding that the garnishee is so indebted, and cannot be collaterally attacked on the ground that the transcript fails to show that such finding had been made. Root v. Davis (Ohio) 445

6. The judgment of a state court against a receiver appointed by a federal court is conclusive as to the existence and amount of the claim, but the time and manner of its payment must be controlled by the court appointing the receiver. Dillingham v. Hawk (C. C. App. 5th C.) 517

Of other state.

7. A judgment of a sister state is entitled to the same faith and credit that it has in the state where rendered. Crumlish v. Central Improv. Co. (W. Va.) 120

8. And it can be reviewed only so far as the jurisdiction to render it is concerned. Id.

9. When rendered without service of process in any manner, and without appearance, it is void. Id.

10. A judgment in garnishment obtained in another state to defeat the exemption laws of the state in which the debtor resides is not valid in the state of his residence, in which such garnishment to defeat his exemption is made unlawful by statute. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Fleming (Neb.) 210

11. A determination upon a direct proceeding, by the court of last resort of the state, that the trial court had jurisdiction to enter a decree of adoption, must be given full faith and credit in courts of another state, which will preclude impeachment for irregularities. Van Matre v. Sankey (Ill.) 665

12. The jurisdiction of proceedings for the adoption of a child in another state cannot be attacked collaterally on the ground that the adopting parent had only a temporary residence in that state, where this question was passed upon by the court in the adoption proceedings, and also on subsequent petition to set aside the decree of adoption. Id.

13. The character of a proceeding for the revocation of an adoption is not so summary as to prevent the decision from being conclusive upon the rights of the parties in the courts of another state, if all the parties interested were before the court, and with every material fact before it the court proceeded to adjudicate the questions raised upon their merits. Id.

14. The fact that a child adopted was not personally present in court or notified of the proceeding, where this is not required by statute, will not be ground for collateral attack on the decree of adoption, in another state. Id.

15. The jurisdiction of a court in another state to hear an appeal cannot be collaterally questioned, where it rendered a judgment of affirmance on the appeal. Id.

Of divorce.

16. The validity of a divorce cannot be collaterally attacked by parties who voluntarily appear and submit to the jurisdiction, on the ground that neither of the parties was subject to the jurisdiction of the court, although the divorce might not be effectual to protect them as against the state. Re Ellis's Appeal (Minn.) 287

17. That the wife was induced to bring an action for divorce by persuasion, ill treatment, and threats by the husband that he would continue such ill treatment unless she brought the action, does not affect the validity of the judgment, in a collateral proceeding. Id.

18. That an action was tried in a county other than that declared by statute the proper county for its trial does not go to the jurisdiction. Id.

19. A cause of action for divorce in favor of the husband on the ground of the wife's adultery is not barred by failure to set it up as a defense to a suit by the wife for a separate maintenance, in which she obtains a decree. Watts v. Watts (Mass.) 187

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also HUSBAND AND WIFE; SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

Judgment; incorrect name in docket. 819

JUDICIAL SALE. See ADVERSE POSSESSION; EXECUTION.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Actions for penalties, which are excluded from the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace, do not include an action by a discharged employé for wages, in which he is entitled to recover, under the statute, for wages after his discharge up to the day of payment, as the additional amount is in the nature of exemplary damages, rather than a statutory penalty. Leep v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Ark.) 264

KINDRED. See DEFINITIONS, 2

LABOR UNION. See TRADEMARK.

LANDLORD AND TENANT. See also CONTRACTS, 7, 8.

1. An implied covenant of a lessor of the lower part of a building, to make such repairs on the upper portion, not leased, as may be necessary for the protection of the enjoyment of the lessees of the lower portion, cannot be raised by the fact that the lessee expressly covenants to make certain extraordinary repairs and alterations in the portion leased for the accommodation of his business. Jones v. Millsaps (Miss.) 155

2. The lessor of the lower story of a building, retaining the upper story in his own possession and use, is not bound by an implied covenant to make any repairs on the upper portion of the building, in the absence of deceit, misrepresentation, or fraud. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Landlord and tenant; as to sale or mortgage of crops by, see EMBLEMENTS.

Effect of death on contract of. 707

Liability of landlord as to condition of part of premises not controlled by tenant; elevators; common entrance, passway, and yard, and access; halls and stairways; fire escapes; sidewalk; walls; falling articles; light and air; nuisances; roof used in common; water from roof; water, pipes, and plumbing controlled by landlord; water, pipes, and plumbing used by other tenants; water supply. 155

LEASE. See RAILROADS, 1.

LEGISLATIVE JOURNALS. See STATUTES, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

LEGISLATURE. See also COURTS, 1; QUO WARRANTO; WRIT AND PROCESS, 1.

The senate of New Jersey is not a permanent, continuous body, such that the old or hold-over members are entitled to pass upon the title of the newly elected members, but the latter are entitled to enter the body, since the constitution appoints a day on which "the two houses shall meet separately," imposing the duty of yearly organization, and also provides that the senate shall be composed of "one senator from each county," thus entitling each senator to a voice in all proceedings. Attorney-General, Werts, v. Rogers (N. J. Sup.) 854

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Legislature; organization of; de facto. 356
Power of, to make a statute contingent on approval by vote of the people. 118

LETTERS. See WITNESSES.
23 L. R. A.

LEVY AND SEIZURE. See also ATTACHMENT.

1. The right of the former owner of land forfeited for nonentry on the assessor's land books, to the excess of the proceeds after paying taxes, interest, and costs, which is accorded to him by W. Va. Const. art. 13, § 5, is personal property liable to the lien of a fiert facias and to recovery by his creditors if transferred in fraud of them, although it has a merely potential existence, since the law requires sale of the land and gives him a right to the surplus if any. Wiant v. Hays (W. Va.) 82

2. Annual crops which are the product of industry and care, sown by the owner of the soil, are, while growing and immature, personal property subject to attachment and sale for his debts. Polley v. Johnson (Kan.) 258

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Levy; crops as personal property for the purpose of levy and sale; general doctrine; sufficiency of sheriff's possession; possession of the purchaser; crops held upon shares: (a) tenants in common; (b) husband and wife; (c) cropper's share; (d) landlord and tenant; (e) state decisions. 258

What expectant and contingent interests in real property are subject to attachment or levy on execution; general rule; interest of an heir in his ancestor's lands; reversions, remainders, and executory devises; right of dower; tenancy by curtesy initiate. 643

LICENSE. See also RAILROADS, 5, 6.

A license coupled with an interest is irrevocable. Chicago & I. Coal R. Co. v. Hall (Ind.) 281

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also NEGLIGENCE.

License; of racing. 525

LIENS. See EXECUTION; JUDGMENT, 3; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 3.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

1. Neglect for more than twenty-five years to make an application for the setting aside of an order of naturalization is fatal to the application. Re McCarran (N. Y. C. P.) 835

2. A mortgage is a specialty within Ohio Rev. Stat. § 4980, limiting the time for an action upon a specialty to fifteen years, and an action for foreclosure is not for the recovery of real property within § 4977, giving twenty-one years for such actions. Kerr v. Lydecker (Ohio) 842

3. The statute of limitations has no application to bar a lien for purchase money reserved in a conveyance of land, though action on a note given for such purchase money be barred so as to defeat its collection out of other property of the debtor. Evans v. Johnson (W. Va.) 787

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Limitation of actions; on mortgage. 842

LLOYDS. See INSURANCE, 1.

LOCAL OPTION. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 1.

LUNATICS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Lunatics; constitutional right to notice of lunacy proceedings, see CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

MAILS. See EVIDENCE, 24.

MANDAMUS.

Mandamus will not lie to compel official action by the governor, whether the act is of the kind regarded as ministerial or otherwise, under constitutional provisions that the three departments of the government shall be distinct, and that neither branch can interfere with the duties of the others. State, Robb, v. Stone (Mo.) 194

MARRIED WOMEN. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

MASONS. See ASSOCIATIONS; CHARITIES; INJUNCTION, 8, 4.

MASTER AND SERVANT. See also CONSPIRACY, 2-4; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 15, 17-19; EVIDENCE, 8; JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

1. Disobedience by a brakeman of the company's rules, which contributes to an injury received by him, will constitute contributory negligence, although his disobedience was with the knowledge and consent of the conductor of the train. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Reesman (C. C. App. 8th C.) 768

2. The rule applicable to railroad companies, requiring them to inspect cars of other companies used for transporting freight, before permitting their employes to handle them, is not applicable to companies or persons on whose sidings loaded cars are delivered for the purpose of permitting them to unload the freight. McMullen v. Carnegie Bros. & Co. (Pa.) 448

3. A clerk or salesman employed by the year in a retail store, without any agreement for Sunday labor, cannot be discharged for refusal to attend the store during certain hours on Sunday to protect the goods while people are passing through it to a postoffice in the rear, although he has, before making the present contract, been in the habit of giving such Sunday services while employed in the store. Van Winkle v. Satterfield (Ark.) 858

4. A railroad company is not liable for the malpractice of physicians or the carelessness of attendants at a hospital maintained as a charitable enterprise by contributions of the company and small sums deducted monthly from the wages of its employes. Union P. R. Co. v. Artist (C. C. App. 8th C.) 581

5. A reform school under the control and oversight of the legislature, which is an agency of the state and maintained by taxation and state aid, is not liable to an action for damages for negligent or malicious injuries to an inmate by its servants or employes. Williamson v. Louisville Industrial School of Reform (Ky.) 200

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Master and servant; duty to furnish safe place for work. 768

Liability of charitable institution for negligence. 200

Wrongful discharge of servant. 853

MAXIMS.

1. Damnum absque injuria. Buhl v. Fort Street Union Depot Co. (Mich.) 892; Hickman v. Kansas City (Mo.) 658; Levee Dist. No. 9 v. Farmer (Cal.) 888

2. Omnia præsumentur legitime facta donec probetur in contrarium. People, Copeutt, v. Yonkers Bd. of Health (N. Y.) 481

3. Qui facit per alium. State, Robb, v. Stone (Mo.) 194

4. Qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus. Chicago & I. Coal R. Co. v. Hall (Ind.) 231

5. Stare decisis et non quieta movere. Anderson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (Wis.) 203

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Maxim; who shall bear loss as between innocent persons. 599

MENTAL ANGUISH. See DAMAGES, 10.

MERCANTILE AGENCY.

1. A mercantile agency is not liable for damages for a false report made by a subagent whose employment is contemplated by the contract of subscription, under which the agency merely agrees to transmit the information obtained by such subagent, where it has exercised due care in the selection of such subagent, since the latter is the agent of the subscriber. Dun v. City Nat. Bank (C. C. App. 2d C.) 687

2. A mercantile agency which agrees to transmit information to subscribers who may wish to contract with outside parties, under a condition that it is not to be responsible for loss by the negligence of subagents and in no manner guarantees the actual verity or correctness of the information given, is not liable to a subscribing bank for loss upon commercial paper bought by it in reliance upon information furnished by one of its subagents as to a party to such paper, although such agent, being connected in business with such party, knowingly gave false information, and such bank purchased the paper in reliance thereon. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mercantile agency; fraud by agent of. 687

MILITIA.

1. Military officers are within the provisions of the Kansas constitution forbidding the legislature to create any office the tenure of which is longer than four years. Lewis v. Lovelling (Kan.) 510

2. The governor has power to disband and muster out any company of the national guard at any time, under the Kansas constitution and Kan. Sess. Laws 1885, chap. 142, although the time of enlistment of the members has not expired. Id.

MONEY IN COURT. See TAXES, 12.

MONOPOLY. See CONTRACTS, 11, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

MORTGAGE. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 16; EVIDENCE, 21; GARNISHMENT, 4; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 2.

1. A contingent remainder may be charged by a deed of trust under a statute authorizing "any interest or claim to real estate" to be disposed of by deed or will. Young v. Young (Va.) 642

2. The purchaser of land mortgaged to secure notes the character of which is not described in the mortgage, who pays his money upon payment to, and satisfaction of the mortgage by, the one whom the record shows to be owner of the mortgage, without notice of the rights of any assignee, and upon the assurance that the notes are still owned by the mortgagee, takes free from any claim of the assignee, although the notes are not produced or surrendered. Vann v. Marbury (Ala.) 825

3. A mortgagee of personal property in possession after condition broken is the legal owner entitled to retain the possession, subject to a liability to account for the surplus of its value after the satisfaction of his own claim. Root v. Davis (Ohio) 445

4. Taking possession of mortgaged chattels and selling them at once is authorized by a chattel mortgage which provides that the mortgagee may take possession and sell whenever he "shall choose to do so."—especially when the statute provides that the mortgagee is entitled to possession in the absence of stipulation to the contrary,—notwithstanding the fact that the mortgage is given to secure notes which are payable at different times in the future. Robison v. Gray (Iowa) 780

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Mortgage; of future crops, see EMBLEMENTS.

See also LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Mortgage: effect of "danger," "safety," or "insecurity" clause in a chattel mortgage:—right to interfere with third persons; effect of taking possession; how far right is without control; effect of malice; facts which justify taking possession; selling; construction of different provisions and circumstances; other rights conferred. 780

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 1; BOUNDARIES; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 1, 5; HIGHWAYS, 7; VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 2; WATERS, 1-3.

1. The annual election for municipal officers is a general election within the meaning of a constitutional and statutory provision authorizing the submission of the question of re-organization, where the elections are classified 23 L. R. A.

only as general and special. People, Wells, v. Berkeley (Cal.) 888

2. An ordinance prohibiting the throwing of fish or offal into a river is void for lack of jurisdiction, where the boundary of the municipality is the low-water line of the river. State v. Eason (N. C.) 520

3. A contract by a city to pay an annual rental for the use of water hydrants and electric lights is a contracting of indebtedness within the meaning of a constitutional limitation, when the city is already indebted beyond the prescribed limit, although the usual and legal income from taxation and otherwise would be sufficient to pay all the current expenses including such rental. Beard v. Hopkinsville (Ky.) 403

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Municipal corporations; boundary of, on navigable waters, see BOUNDARY.

See also HIGHWAYS; INJUNCTION; TOWNS.

Municipal corporations: what constitutes an indebtedness within the meaning of constitutional and statutory restrictions of municipal indebtedness:—in general; must be voluntary; future indebtedness; future payments; current expenses and indebtedness payable out of current revenues; change of form of indebtedness; estimate of amount. 403

NAME. See also JUDGMENT, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Name; effect of omitting initial. 819

NATIONAL BANKS. See BANKS, 6.

NATIONAL GUARD. See MILITIA.

NATURALIZATION. See ALIENS; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS, 1.

NEGLIGENCE. See also BAILMENT, 2; CARRIERS, 5, 7, 10; ELEVATORS; EVIDENCE, 15-18, 23; FIRE; HIGHWAYS, 5, 6; RAILROADS, 3, 4, 8-15.

1. If intoxication contributes to an injury as a proximate cause thereof, it is a complete bar to any action for any damages sustained in consequence of it. Fisher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. (W. Va.) 758

2. The negligence of the driver of a private carriage is imputable to a woman of the age of discretion who voluntarily rides with him. Mullen v. Orosco (Mich.) 698

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also MASTER AND SERVANT.

Negligence; toward licensee or trespasser. 559

Liability for want of care to person who is negligent. 777

In respect to the use of fire. 515

Contributory, effect of. 159

NOTICE. See CARRIERS, 1, 2; EVIDENCE, 24; INSURANCE, 12; REAL PROPERTY.

NUISANCES. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 5; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 11; EMINENT DOMAIN, 5; HIGHWAYS, 1; INJUNCTION, 6, 7; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 2.

1. A dam erected in a floatable stream to furnish power to operate a mill useful to the public, under authority duly had from a county court, is not a public nuisance, though without sluice and though it obstruct navigation. Watts v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (W. Va.) 674

2. The fact that a dam was made when the water of a stream was clean and pure will not prevent its abatement as a nuisance when, by the growth of a city and the consequent pollution of the water, it has become an inevitable menace to the public health. Yonkers Bd. of Health v. Copeutt (N. Y.) 485

3. A pond in a city is a public nuisance, where foul and malarious exhalations arise from the stagnant water and from the sides and bed as the water is drawn off, and are intensified by the accumulation of filth, which no police vigilance can keep out of the stream, and which the dam retains and holds. Id.

4. Whoever abates an alleged nuisance, and thus destroys or injures private property or interferes with private rights, whether he be a public officer or private person, unless he acts under the judgment or order of a court having jurisdiction, does it at his peril; and when his act is challenged in the regular judicial tribunals, to protect him it must appear that the thing abated was in fact a nuisance. People, Copeutt, v. Yonkers Bd. of Health (N. Y.) 481

5. Boards of health in summary proceedings, without hearing the owner of the property, cannot make that a nuisance which is not in fact a nuisance, and have no jurisdiction to make any order or ordinance to abate an alleged nuisance, unless it is in fact a nuisance. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also INJUNCTION.

Nuisance; abatement of 482, 485

OFFICERS. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 1; CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 13, 18; MILITIA, 1.

1. A mayor's resignation of his office, to take effect on a certain day, which is more than thirty days before election, creates a vacancy at that date, within the meaning of Ohio Rev. Stat. § 1754, providing for the filling of vacancies which have occurred more than thirty days previous thereto, at a municipal election, although the resignation was not accepted until less than thirty days before the election. Reiter v. State, Durrell (Ohio) 681

2. The common-law rule that resignation of office does not take effect until acceptance is not in force in Ohio to its full extent; but in that state a resignation without acceptance creates a vacancy,—at least to the extent of giving jurisdiction to appoint or elect a successor, unless otherwise provided by statute. Id.

3. A notice by the governor to an officer of an investigation of grounds for his removal is not a judicial writ which must be in the name of the people, nor such an official act as needs
23 L. R. A.

authentication by the great seal,—especially when directed to the officer who is in charge of the seal. Attorney-General, Rich, v. Jochim (Mich.) 699

4. An express constitutional provision for the removal of officers by the governor for gross neglect is not nullified by the fact that the power of impeachment by the legislature does not extend to such cases. Id.

5. Gross neglect for which members of the board of canvassers may be removed from office may exist without willful misconduct, where they signed grossly incorrect returns, without examination, having turned over their preparation to an irresponsible clerk having no official relation to the canvass. Id.

6. Canvassing the returns of an election is a part of the duty of the secretary of state, for gross neglect of which he may be removed under the Michigan constitution, where he is one of three officers who ex officio constitute a board of canvassers. Id.

7. An office is held only during the pleasure of the appointing power, where the term as fixed by statute is longer than the constitution permits. Lewis v. Lewelling (Kan.) 510

8. Compensation of a public officer, consisting of a per diem allowance for attendance during the entire session of any regular meeting of a board, is not "salary" within the constitutional restriction of any change of salary during the term of an officer. Gobrecht v. Cincinnati (Ohio) 609

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Officers; validity of proceedings for removal. 700

Constitutional prohibition against change of salary during term as affecting fees. 609

Office; necessity of an acceptance to complete resignation; distinction between public and private interests; where acceptance is unnecessary; effect of statute law; what a sufficient acceptance; incompatible offices. 681

OPTION. See CONTRACTS, 7, 8.

PARDON. See CRIMINAL LAW, 1.

PARENT AND CHILD. See also CONTRACTS, 1; DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION, 8; JUDGMENT, 11-14.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Parent and child; validity of adoption in other state. 667

PARTNERSHIP. See also BANKS, 8; GOODWILL.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Partnership; goodwill of business on dissolution. 796

PAYMENT. See also ACCORD AND SATISFACTION, NOTES AND BRIEFS; ASSIGNMENT, 1; ASSUMPSIT; BANKS, 18; BILLS AND NOTES, 2; MORTGAGE, 8; SUBROGATION, 1.

1. Payment of a debt by a stranger discharges the debt so far as the creditor is concerned if he accepts it, and also as to the debt or if he ratifies it. Crumlish v. Central Improv. Co. (W. Va.) 120

2. A bank receiving a note for collection, which accepts in payment a check on the owner of the note, does so at its own risk, in case the check is not good. Bank of Antigo v. Union Trust Co. (Ill.) 611

PENALTIES. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 20; JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

PERJURY.

The trial of an indictment for perjury in a civil action is not outside the jurisdiction of the court because the civil action is not yet determined. People v. Hayes (N. Y.) 880

PETITION.

Signatures to a petition which are cut off and attached to another petition which is identical with the former cannot be counted in making the required number of signatures to the petition. People, Wells, v. Berkeley (Cal.) 888

PHYSICIANS. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 4.

PLEADING. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 18; EVIDENCE, 20.

1. An allegation of irreparable injury, without stating the facts on which it is based, is not sufficient for an injunction. Mead v. Stirling (Conn.) 227

2. An allegation of irreparable injury to financial credit, without stating that plaintiff has any credit, or needs any credit, or is engaged in any occupation in connection with which credit would be convenient, is insufficient to obtain an injunction. Id.

3. Plaintiffs in a suit upon an insurance policy are shown to have an insurable interest by a plea showing that the building and lot insured belonged to the estate of a decedent, and that neither of the assured are his legal heirs; and a replication averring that one of the plaintiffs was the widow of the decedent and that he owned no other real estate, followed by the conclusion that she owned a dower and homestead interest; and further averring that the other plaintiff was a creditor of the decedent, stating the amount of her claim, the insufficiency of personal assets to pay the debts, and that there was no other real property belonging to the estate,—as such replication shows a remainder interest in the real estate liable for the debts. Oreed v. Sun Fire Office (Ala.) 177

POND. See NUISANCES, 8.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT. See also ESTOPPEL, 4; INSURANCE, 18; MERCANTILE AGENCY, 1.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Principal and agent; notice of agent's authority. 181

Effect of death on contract of. 707

PRIVILEGE. See WRIT AND PROCESS, 1. 23 L. R. A.

PROHIBITION.

A writ of prohibition may be issued to prevent a judge from proceeding any further in a so-called suit for the appointment of a receiver, in which the application is made by the insolvent corporation for which the receiver is asked, and fails to state any lawful ground for such appointment. State, Merriam, v. Ross (Mo.) 534

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

The sudden shying of a horse driven past the rear end of a train projecting into and obstructing a highway cannot be regarded as the sole proximate cause of injury occasioned by the wagon coming into contact with the rear car and throwing the driver to the ground, but the obstruction directly contributes to the accident. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Prescott (C. C. App. 8th C.) 654

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Proximate cause; doctrine of. 245, 654

PUBLICATION. See GARNISHMENT, 8.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Public improvements; municipal assessment of state property:—general doctrine; distinction between assessment and taxation; liability to assessment; government property. 807

PUBLIC LANDS. See IMPROVEMENTS.

PUBLIC MONEY. See also INJUNCTION, 8.

A deposit in a bank of moneys belonging to the permanent educational funds of the state, under Neb. Laws 1891, chap. 50, subject to the treasurer's check and with an agreement for interest on the deposit, is in violation of Neb. Const. art. 8, § 9, prohibiting such funds to be "invested or loaned except on United States or state securities, or registered county bonds." State, Orets First Nat. Bank, v. Bartley (Neb.) 67

QUO WARRANTO.

The president of the senate is an officer whose title can be tested by quo warranto, under a statute providing that remedy in case of the usurpation of any office or franchise within the state. Attorney-General, Werts, v. Rogers (N. J. Sup.) 854

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Quo warranto; as to title of president of senate. 856

RAILROADS. See also ACTION OR SUIT, 2, 5; CORPORATIONS, 1; EMINENT DOMAIN, 1-4; HIGHWAYS, 2-5; INJUNCTION, 2; MASTER AND SERVANT, 1, 2; PROXIMATE CAUSE; RELEASE.

1. A railroad company chartered by the state cannot, without legislative authority, by lease or by any other contract or arrangement, turn over to another company its road and the use of its franchises, and thereby exempt itself from responsibility for the conduct and management of the road. Fisher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. (W. Va.) 758

3. A railroad company is liable to a brakeman on a train for its failure to maintain fences as required by statute, in consequence of which an animal gets upon the track, causing a derailment of the train and injury to the brakeman. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Reesman (C. C. App. 8th C.) 768

3. A railroad company is not liable for allowing the escape of steam from the valves of an engine, causing the frightening of a horse, unless the opening of the valves was unnecessary and was done under circumstances implying a lack of the care which a prudent and reasonable man would exercise under similar circumstances. Omaha & R. V. R. Co. v. Clarke (Neb.) 504

4. Blowing a whistle on a locomotive may constitute an actionable cause of injury by frightening a horse, although done at a place where the law requires the whistle to be blown, if it is done negligently, wantonly, and maliciously. Bittle v. Camden & A. R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 288

5. The mere fact that persons have frequently trespassed upon a railroad track, and that the company has resorted to no means to stop such trespasses, does not amount to a permission or license to use the track as a foot-path. Ward v. Southern P. Co. (Or.) 715

6. An implied license to cross a railroad trestle so narrow that there is no room on it outside of a passing train, and over which at least twelve regular trains cross each day, besides special trains and switch engines, is contrary to public policy,—especially where the statutes prohibit walking on railroad tracks, except along public roads. Anderson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (Wis.) 208

7. A railroad company owes to a trespasser upon its track no legal duty to keep a lookout or guard him against danger. Ward v. Southern P. Co. (Or.) 715

8. One who, while intoxicated, walked out on a railroad trestle to a position of great peril, and was there killed by a train, cannot be held free from contributory negligence. Anderson v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. (Wis.) 208

9. Ignorance of danger by reason of his youth and inexperience may properly be considered on the question of the contributory negligence of a child in attempting to pass between cars standing on a street crossing. Schmits v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Mo.) 250

10. A child who, by reason of his want of knowledge, is not guilty of negligence in attempting to follow the example of adults in passing between cars standing upon a street crossing, may recover damages if injured by the negligence of the company. Id.

11. In an action for personal injury sustained at a street crossing by the pushing of cars together while plaintiff was passing between them, the company's failure to ring the bell or sound the whistle before moving the cars, although not constituting a statutory 23 L. R. A.

cause of action, is properly considered in determining whether the company exercised due care in moving the cars. Id.

12. A railroad company which leaves a train standing for several minutes upon a much-used street crossing, with a slight space between the cars, as if to invite passage between them, is bound to use reasonable care, in closing up the opening, to avoid injury to one who is attempting to cross, although he has placed himself in such relation to the train that under other circumstances he would be regarded as a trespasser. Id.

13. One attempting to cross a railroad track at a street crossing situated at the end of the depot is not, as matter of law, guilty of contributory negligence because the rear end of a train occupies all but 14 feet of the width of the driveway, where other vehicles have safely passed through, and he is driving an old and gentle horse not in the habit of jumping or shying when in proximity to engines, and is invited by the flagman to make the crossing. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Prescott (C. C. App. 8th C.) 654

14. Willfulness is not shown by mere failure to provide for the protection of a possible trespasser in an archway covering railway tracks, leading into a manufacturing establishment, into which a car is propelled at a negligent speed, so as to render the railway company liable for his death, notwithstanding his contributory negligence. Parker v. Pennsylvania Co. (Ind.) 553

15. The act of one who, unacquainted with the plans and uses of an archway covering railway tracks leading into a manufacturing establishment, attempts to pass through it without license, notwithstanding obvious dangers from the narrowness of the arch and the obstructed view of the track, will prevent recovery from the railroad company for mere negligence in propelling into the archway at a speed prohibited by the city ordinance a car by which he is killed. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW; CORPORATIONS.

Railroads; injury of person at crossing. 654

Negligence in working on trestle. 205

Liability for negligence of mail agent. 443

Liability as to fences. 768

REAL PROPERTY. See also ATTACHMENT; ESTOPPEL, 2; JUDGMENT, 4; MORTGAGE, 1.

A recorded deed made by one who has then no title to the land is not within the chain of title so as to be constructive notice to a subsequent purchaser to whom the same grantor conveys after obtaining title by a recorded deed. Ford v. Unity Church Soc. (Mo.) 561

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Real property; effect of conveyance recorded before the grantor obtains title, as to notice; the doctrine of estoppel; the doctrine of notice from registration; comparison and limitation of the opposing principles. 561

RECEIVERS. See also CONFLICT OF LAWS, 6; JUDGMENT, 6; PROHIBITION; SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM, 6-8.

1. In a suit by general creditors of a bank who have no judgments or specific liens, a chancellor's appointment of a receiver is not so unauthorized and void as to be subject to collateral attack for want of jurisdiction,—especially where the managers of the bank had abandoned it, and the chancellor had previously attempted on their application to appoint a receiver, and the constitution of the state has provided that a chancellor may grant relief in equity cases although the legal remedy may not have been exhausted, and that any mistake in respect to the question whether the case was one for equity or common law shall not render the judgment or decree subject to reversal or annulment. Whitney v. Hanover Nat. Bank (Miss.) 531

2. The appointment of a receiver of a national bank on the ex parte application of the directors is utterly void. Id.

3. A receiver cannot be appointed for a corporation on its own petition, on the ground merely that suits have been, or are about to be, brought against it by small creditors for the purpose of injuring the corporation and doing great harm to its creditors and impairing the value of the property of the corporation, which is alleged to be sufficient to pay all its debts ultimately, if handled under the order of the court, where no cause of action against any other party is alleged, although trustees in a mortgage on the property of the corporation are made parties and appear in the suit, and consent to the appointment of the receiver. State, Merriam, v. Ross (Mo.) 584

4. A receiver appointed by a court of competent jurisdiction, in a suit brought by him as a creditor for himself and other creditors similarly situated, is in a position to make a collateral attack on a void order by another court attempting to appoint a receiver. Id.

5. A receiver of a foreign corporation appointed at its domicile, to whom all the assets of the corporation have been assigned as fully as can be done in accordance with the decree of the appointing court, may be allowed to intervene and be heard in a proceeding in Massachusetts for the appointment of a receiver of the property of the corporation found within the latter state. Buswell v. Supreme Sitting of Order of Iron Hall (Mass.) 846

6. A receiver of the property in Massachusetts of a benefit society incorporated in Indiana may, by the exercise of comity, be ordered, after paying his charges and expenses and the expenses of the suit, to pay over the balance to a receiver in Indiana, where the courts of both states have adopted the same principles governing the distribution of the fund, and it appears by the decree of the Indiana court that it will admit the proof of claims against the funds made in the Massachusetts court when it regularly certifies them, subject to such revision in Indiana as justice may seem to the court to require, and will distribute the fund so that benefit certificate members in Massachusetts will receive the same proportionate dividend as members in Indiana and other states. Id.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

Receiver; recognition of, in other state. 846

Rights of, as to property outside of the jurisdiction in which he is appointed; as to attachment; after receiver gets possession; right of foreign receiver to sue; title to land. 52

RECORDS. See REAL PROPERTY.

REFORMATORIES. See HOUSE OF CORRECTION, 1-4; MASTER AND SERVANT, 5.

RELEASE.

A release of claims against a railroad company for specified personal injuries will not include a claim for damages not then known to either party, for negligent treatment of such injuries in a hospital maintained by such company, although the release was expressly made to cover all claims and demands whatsoever in law or in equity "by reason of any matter, cause, or thing whatever, whether the same arose upon contract or upon tort, from the beginning of the world to this day." Union P. R. Co. v. Artist (C. C. App. 8th C.) 581

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Release; effect of. 582

REMAINDERS. See LEVY AND SEIZURE, NOTES AND BRIEFS; MORTGAGE, 1.

REPRIEVE. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 2; CRIMINAL LAW, 1.

RESCISSION. See CONTRACTS, 10.

RESIDENCE. See VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 3.

RESUME.

Subjects discussed and points decided. 865

SALARY. See OFFICERS, 3.

SALE.

A potential existence is sufficient to make personal property subject to sale. Wiant v. Hays (W. Va.) 83

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Sale; of future crops, see EMBLEMENTS.

SCHOOLS. See JUDGMENT, 2.

SECRETARY OF STATE. See OFFICERS, 6.

SENATE. See LEGISLATURE; QUO WARRANTO.

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM. See also ESTOPPEL, 5.

1. A creditor cannot set off against an assignee of an executory contract of the debtor with the creditor, on which nothing was due at the time of the assignment, a claim which is matured in favor of the creditor against the debtor at that time, where the statute allows a demand against an assignor to be set off against his assignee only where it might have been set off against the assignor while it belonged to him, and provides, further, that a set-off can be allowed only in actions founded upon demands which could themselves be the subject of a set-off. Bradley v. Thompson Smith's Sons (Mich.) 305

2. Negotiable paper held as collateral security for a pre-existing debt is open in the hands of the holder to all defenses which could have been made against it in the hands of the original owner, whether there was notice of them or not. Vann v. Marbury (Ala.) 325

3. Unless payable to bearer or indorsed, negotiable paper, although assigned before maturity, will be subject in the hands of the assignee to all equities which accrue before notice is given of the assignment. Id.

4. A note given for the purchase price of chattels is not a good set-off against a demand by the maker's assignee for creditors upon the seller for damages for wrongfully replevying the chattels after they have passed into his possession. Fidelity & D. Co. v. Haines (Md.) 352

5. A counterclaim existing against the assignor cannot be interposed to a claim arising in favor of the assignee after an assignment for the benefit of creditors. Id.

6. A receiver of a national bank takes immature notes belonging to the bank subject to the right of the maker to set off against them his deposit account in the bank. Adams v. Spokane Drug Co. (C. C. D. Wash.) 334

7. The receiver of an insolvent bank in settlement with a creditor should deduct from his credit all those sums for which he is debtor, either as principal or surety, and whether or not his liability has matured; and in settlement with a debtor to the bank, the receiver should allow him credit for all sums which the bank owed him when the receiver was appointed, whether the debts were then due or not. Davis v. Industrial Mfg. Co. (N. C.) 322

8. Set-off may be allowed in equity, of the dividend payable out of the assets of a corporation in the hands of a receiver, to a stockholder who, after the receiver's appointment, made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors of whom the corporation was one, upon the corporation's claim against the stockholder; the equities of the other stockholders represented by the receiver being superior to those of the insolvent's remaining creditors represented by his assignee. Merrill v. Cape Ann Granite Co. (Mass.) 318

9. An assignment of a verdict to secure the attorney's compensation does not relieve the judgment to be entered thereon from liability to offset of a judgment then existing in favor of the judgment debtor against the assignor. Ben-son v. Haywood (Iowa) 335

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Set-off; against receiver.
28 L. R. A.

Set-off; against assigned claim, of debtor's demand against assignor:—kinds of choses in action to which set-offs are applicable; assignment will not defeat set off; where rights become fixed; rights connected with assigned contract; effect of agreement to set off; assignee of bank; claims by and against corporations generally; what set-off proper; equitable causes for set-off; estoppel; counter set-off; what assignment may be sufficient; what notice of assignment sufficient; counterclaims. 305

Set-off; right to set off insolvent's obligation upon a claim in the hands of his receiver or assignee or trustee for creditors:—assignees; for creditors; receiver; limitation upon the rule; claims not due; set-off between corporation and stockholder; the effect of the doctrine of mutual credits; the English rule; claims not owned; special circumstances which will defeat right; contingent claims; commercial paper; equities connected with the assigned contract; character of demands which may be set off; effect of agreement. 313

Set-off; against assignee of commercial paper, of claim against assignor:—paper indorsed before maturity; transfer after maturity; paper negotiable in bank or payable without defalcation; what necessary to defeat right of set-off; paper not negotiable; paper irregularly transferred; fraudulent transfers or transfers without value; contingent liability and claims not owned; equities which will justify set-off; assignment will not defeat perfected right; claims not in the same right; effect of agreement; effect of new note; effect of assignment without recourse; counter set-off; attempt to compel set-off by statute; special contracts. 325

Set-off; against judgment in the hands of an assignee:—assignment of verdict; how far subject to set-off of demand not in judgment; where cross judgments are in same action; notice; set-off of claims against one who never had title not available; assignees protected; fraudulent assignment or for the purpose of defeating set-off; insolvency as an equity; where assignee the real party; assignment without consideration; want of legal title; judgment on note; rights of holder of assigned judgment; waiver; set-off of contingent liability; assignment in accordance with prior agreement; set-off on motion; assignment to attorney may defeat his lien. 335

SEWERS. See INJUNCTION, 7; WATERS, 2.

SHIPPING. See CARRIERS, 1, 2.

SHOCK. See DAMAGES, 11.

SIGNATURES. See PETITION.

SITUS. See GARNISHMENT, 1, 2.

SOLDIERS' HOME. See DEFINITIONS, 1; VOTERS AND ELECTIONS, 3.

SPECIAL LEGISLATION. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 23.

822 STARE DECISIS. See COURTS, 4.

STATE. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 6, 7; TAXES, 8.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

See also PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

State; right of, to carry on business. 412

STATUTE OF FRAUDS. See CONTRACTS, 5, 6.

STATUTES. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 2.

1. An enrolled bill on file in the office of the secretary of state must be accepted without question by the courts as having been regularly enacted by the legislature. State, Reed, v. Jones (Wash.) 840

2. The failure of a legislative journal to show that a bill was read on three different days, or the rule requiring it suspended, is not evidence that the necessary action was not taken, unless the constitution requires an entry of these facts to be made. Is Ellis's Appeal (Minn.) 287

3. The title of an act, "For the Organization and Management of the State Reform School," is broad enough to include provisions for placing boys under the age of sixteen in such school by order of a court. Re Sanders (Kan.) 603

4. The punishment of imitators or counterfeiters of trademarks may be provided for under the title of "An Act to Protect Associations, Unions of Workingmen, and Persons, in Their Labels, Trademarks, and Forms of Advertising." Cohn v. People (Ill.) 821

5. The title "An Act to Provide Better Protection for the Earnings of Laborers," etc., is sufficient to cover provisions for a remedy in favor of the laborers in case the act is violated. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Fleming (Neb.) 210

6. A statute should be so construed as to make all its parts harmonize with each other, and render them consistent with its general scope and object. State, Crete First Nat. Bank, v. Bartley (Neb.) 67

7. The unconstitutionality of a section as to the transfer of incorrigible infants from a reformatory to a penitentiary does not make the whole statute as to the commitment of infants to reformatories necessarily void. People, Bradley, v. Illinois State Reformatory (Ill.) 139

8. Where the sections of a statute must be construed together as dependent, and not as independent, provisions, the invalidity of one part invalidates other parts. Wadsworth v. Union P. R. Co. (Colo.) 812

9. The invalidity of an act, so far as it provides for a penalty, will not affect a provision in the statute giving a right of action for compensation to a person injured by violation of the statute. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Fleming (Neb.) 210

10. In a statute as to contracts with employes, unconstitutional provisions as to natural persons may be eliminated, where the remainder of the statute relates to corporations and is valid. Leop v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Ark.) 264

23 L. R. A.

11. A statute discriminating between towns and cities already having race-courses therein and those which have not, in respect to the licensing of such race-courses, is a special law regulating the internal affairs of towns and counties. State, Alexander, v. Elizabeth (N. J. Sup.) 525

12. A statute as to contracts with employes is general and uniform, where it applies to all corporations engaged in the business of operating or constructing railroads or railroad bridges. Leop v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. (Ark.) 264

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Statutes; special legislation. 526

Conclusiveness of enrolled bill:—the English rule; the effect of constitutional provisions; provisions as to quorum and recording votes; requirements as to special legislation; general expressions as to compliance with constitution; as to fact of passage; to contradict enrolled bill; how far journals may establish a law for which no enrolled bill is found; New York decisions; special circumstances; what evidence may be considered; evidence; collateral decisions; vacillation of judicial opinion. 840

STAY. See ACTION OR SUIT, 8.

STIPULATION. See TRIAL, 1, 2.

STREET RAILWAYS. See CARRIERS, 11, 12.

SUBROGATION.

1. A stranger who pays a debt without request by the debtor, when his payment is not ratified by the debtor, may bring a suit in equity praying relief in the alternative; that is, that if the debtor do not ratify such payment the debt may be enforced in his favor, as its equitable assignee, or, if so ratified, that he be decreed repayment of the amount paid for the use of the debtor. Crumlish v. Central Improv. Co. (W. Va.) 120

2. One who pays the debt of another voluntarily, without any constraint growing out of the necessity to protect his own interest or rights, cannot be subrogated to the rights of the debtor. Bank of Antigo v. Union Trust Co. (Ill.) 611

SUNDAY. See MASTER AND SERVANT, 3.

SUPERSEDEAS. See APPEAL AND ERROR, 7.

SUSPENSION OF SENTENCE. See CRIMINAL LAW, 1-3, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

TAXES. See also BAILMENT, 1; LEVY AND SEIZURE, 1.

1. A set of abstract books is personal property for the purpose of taxation, although the information therein contained is largely in the form of abbreviations and cipher peculiar to that set of books, which is understood by only five persons,—especially where there are certain maps connected with the business which have some general value. Booth & H. Abstract Co. v. Phelps (Wash.) 864

2. An institution of purely public charity, such as the American Sunday School Union, is not exempt from taxation on property used in carrying on a book store in which are sold, not only its own publications, but other standard works, in order to aid in making the business self-supporting, although the profits of the business are devoted to the purpose of the charity. American Sunday School Union v. Taylor (Pa.) 695

3. Land owned by the state and used by a court for judicial purposes, though not exempt from special assessment, under Ill. Const. art. 9, § 3, providing that the property of the state may be exempted from taxation by general law, and the Illinois General Revenue Law, § 2, exempting from taxation all property of every kind belonging to the state, cannot be assessed for such improvements, since Ill. Const. art. 4, § 26, provides that the state shall never be made defendant in any court of law or equity, and the calling of the state into court to defend a proceeding against its property is making it a defendant within the constitutional prohibition, and any judgment would be merely advisory without power to enforce it. Mt. Vernon v. People (Ill.) 807

4. Personal property held by the assignee of an insolvent, whose estate is being settled in the probate court, whether it is in the form of money, bills receivable, bonds, certificates of stock, or otherwise, is not subject to taxation in Ohio, although the statute provides that property held in trust must be listed by the trustee. McNeill v. Hagerty (Ohio) 628

5. Diligent inquiry required by statute for the owners of land sold for taxes before the expiration of the time for redemption is not shown by affidavits of diligent inquiry "in the county" where the land is situated. Van Matre v. Sankey (Ill.) 665

6. The deduction of debts from credits to be taxed is not an exemption within the meaning of constitutional and statutory provisions as to exemptions from taxation. Florer v. Sheridan (Ind.) 278

7. Deducting debts from the gross amount of credits on which a person is required to pay taxes does not violate a constitutional provision "for a uniform and equal rate of assessment for taxation," and authorizing the legislature to "prescribe such regulations as shall secure a just valuation for taxation of all property, both real and personal, excepting such only . . . as may be specially exempted by law," since the just value of credits is to be ascertained by subtracting from their gross amount the bona fide indebtedness of the taxpayer. Id.

8. A taxpayer's neglect for a series of years to place upon his personalty list credits from which he is entitled to deduct debts will not prevent him from claiming the deduction when notified to show cause why he should not be compelled to pay taxes upon the credits for those years as delinquent property. Id.

9. Foreign corporations are included within N. Y. Laws 1855, chap. 87, requiring assessment on all moneys invested in business by nonresidents. People, Thurber-Whyland Co. v. Barker (N. Y.) 95

23 L. R. A.

10. Debts cannot be deducted from funds invested by nonresidents, under N. Y. Laws 1855, chap. 87, providing for the taxation of funds invested in business by nonresidents, although it says they shall be assessed on funds invested "the same as if they were residents." Id.

11. A domestic corporation may be "prevented by absence or illness" from making complaint of a tax or assessment, under N. Y. Consolidation Act 1882, chap. 410, § 822, when all its officers and agents who have charge of the matter are prevented by absence or illness from making the complaint. People, New York Hotel & R. Co. v. Barker (N. Y.) 785

12. A proceeding for the sale of forfeited land by a commissioner of school lands under W. Va. Code 1887, chap. 105, is a judicial, and not merely an administrative proceeding, so that the court may determine the right to the surplus proceeds, on a petition filed in the suit. Wiant v. Hays (W. Va.) 82

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Taxes; listing of property; reduction of debts. 629

On foreign corporations. 95

On charitable institutions. 695

Nature of interest of former owner in prospective surplus from tax sale. 83

Constitutionality of provision for deduction of debts from credits or other property. 278

TEXAS FEVER. See ANIMALS, 3.

TICKET. See CARRIERS, 1, 2.

TOWN.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Town; liability of, for negligence. 468

TRADEMARKS. See also CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 23.

A label on cigars, stating that they are made by a firstclass workman, a member of a certain union, "an organization opposed to inferior, rat-shop, coolie, prison, or filthy tenement-house workmanship," is neither immoral nor against public policy, since it attacks no other manufacturer of cigars, and cannot be denied protection as a trademark on that ground. Cohn v. People (Ill.) 821

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trademark; protection of; of cigar-makers' union. 821

TREES. See CONTRACTS, 13, 14; HIGHWAYS, 1; HOMESTEAD, 8.

TRESPASS. See ELEVATORS; NEGLECT, NOTES AND BRIEFS; RAILROADS, 7.

TRIAL. See also CRIMINAL LAW, 5.

1. It is not error to refuse to strike out evidence admitted under an agreement of the parties. Long v. Forrest (Pa.) 33

2. Under a stipulation that the evidence of a witness taken upon a former trial, on the part of defendant, might be read subject to all legal objections, the defendant, who offers a portion of the direct examination in evidence, may be compelled to read it all, as the legal objections intended by the stipulation were those to be made only by the party against whom the evidence, either direct or on cross-examination, was offered. People v. Hayes (N. Y.) 830

3. The constitutional right of trial by jury does not extend in a criminal case to the determination of the term of imprisonment by the jury. People, Bradley, v. Illinois State Reformatory (Ill.) 139

4. A verdict does not become complete and final until recorded and affirmed by the jury. Grant v. State (Fla.) 728

5. There is no covert insinuation against the accused in a charge to the jury that he is not bound to go on the stand, but can say, "Prove your case against me. It is my judgment that the situation is such that I am not bound to take the witness stand; and the law gives me that right and the law gives me that privilege,"—where the judge also charges that no presumption can be taken against defendant for failure to take the witness stand. People v. Hayes (N. Y.) 830

6. The issue as to whether a street was rightfully obstructed by a railroad train should be submitted to the jury, if the circumstances attending the blockade are such that reasonable persons might entertain different views as to whether the action of the company was justifiable. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Prescott (C. C. App. 8th C.) 654

7. Upon the trial of an action upon an insurance policy, instructions that authority from the defendant to a certain adjuster to adjust and settle the loss of a firm of which the plaintiff was a member would not give him authority to bind the defendant as to the loss of the plaintiff under the policy in question, and that the fact that authority was given him to settle the firm loss is proper to be considered as a circumstance to show the relation existing between defendant and such adjuster, and that from that and from other facts and circumstances shown by the evidence the jury must say whether such adjuster was authorized to adjust and settle plaintiff's loss or not,—are not conflicting or erroneous as regards defendant. Slater v. Capital Ins. Co. (Iowa) 181

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trial; correction of verdict in criminal case, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Waiver of jury. 145

Effect of verdict in equity. 517

TROLLEY CAR. See CARRIERS, 11, 12.

TROVER. For crops, see EMBLEMENTS, NOTES AND BRIEFS.

TRUSTS. See also ASSIGNMENT, 8; COURTS, 8; FRAUD.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Trust; in personal property; assignment of. 826

VENDOR AND PURCHASER. See CONTRACTS, 8.

VENUE. See ACTION OR SUIT, 8; COURTS, 2.

VERDICT. See also TRIAL, 4.

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Verdict; correction of, see CRIMINAL LAW.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS. See also MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 1.

1. Inspectors of election have no right to reject a ballot offered by a registered voter who tenders the oath prescribed by statute, where the statute says that if the person challenged "shall take such oath his vote shall be received." Wolcott v. Holcomb (Mich.) 215

2. A constitutional requirement of a majority of the electors voting at a general election on the question of the reorganization of a municipality is not satisfied by a majority of those who vote on that question, if they are less than a majority of all who vote at the election. People, Wells, v. Berkeley (Cal.) 838

3. The residence of an elector is not changed by reason of his presence and support in a soldiers' home which is maintained by the state for disabled and dependent soldiers, under a constitutional provision that "no elector shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of being employed in the service of the United States or in this state, nor while a student at any seminary of learning, nor while kept at any almshouse or any asylum at public expense, nor while confined in any public prison." Wolcott v. Holcomb (Mich.) 215

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Voters and elections; majority vote. 838

Acquiring residence as a voter while attending school or public institution; inmates of soldiers' homes or occupants of government posts; inmates of almshouses and hospitals; students. 215

WAGES. See ASSIGNMENT, 2.

WATERS. See also CONTRACTS, 3, 4; EMINENT DOMAIN, 5; MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS, 2, 3.

1. The owner of a swamp which is the natural place of deposit of the surface waters and perennial streams for the higher adjoining territory cannot complain because a municipal corporation continues to deposit such waters on such swamp by means of mere storm sewers after such swamp has been improved. St. Paul & D. R. Co. v. Duluth (Minn.) 88

2. A municipal corporation is not liable to the owner of private premises within its boundaries for failing to provide a system of sewerage to carry away from such premises surface water and the water of perennial streams naturally coming thereon. Id.

3. The fact that a municipal corporation has diverted surface waters from natural ravines, and, through sewers, deposited them on a swamp at different points in the same swamp from those at which the ravines terminate, will not give the owner of the swamp any right to complain after he has adopted the change made by such diversion by building the roadbed of a railroad across the swamp, leaving no openings in the raised surface of such roadbed opposite to the ends of the ravines, and by putting in box culverts across such roadbed opposite the ends of some of the sewers, to carry off such waters. St. Paul & D. R. Co. v. Duluth (Minn.) 88

4. A water company is not liable to the owner of a house destroyed by fire, because of failure to furnish water under a contract with the municipality, although a special tax was provided for in the contract to pay part of the consideration to the water company, and an express provision made that the company should be liable for all damages occasioned by failure to furnish an adequate supply of water to extinguish any fire. Howsmon v. Trenton Water Co. (Mo.) 146

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Waters; boundary of municipal corporation on, see BOUNDARY.

Liability for loss by fire due to the lack of adequate water supply:—(I.) of city or municipality; (II.) of water company. 146

Right of city to turn surface water. 89

WILLS.

The estate of each daughter becomes indefeasible on arriving at the age of twenty-three years, under a will giving each a share of property on arriving at that age, and providing that in case of the death of either before that age the children of the deceased shall inherit the parent's share, or, in default of issue, that it shall go to the survivor. Keepers v. Fidelity Title & D. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 184

WITNESSES. See also APPEAL AND ERROR, 14.

Letters contradicting a witness for defendant on a trial for perjury, in respect to her belief as to the paternity of a child alleged to be that of defendant, are not inadmissible on the ground that the contradiction is on an immaterial matter. People v. Hayes (N. Y.) 830

WOMEN. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 1.

WRIT AND PROCESS. See also GARNISHMENT, 3; OFFICERS, 3.

1. The privilege of members of the legislature, under the Minnesota constitution, from arrest except in cases of treason, felony, and breach of the peace, does not extend to the 23 L. R. A.

service of summons in a civil action. Rhodes v. Walsh (Minn.) 633

2. A person who has full charge of the business of a foreign corporation dealing in lumber and merchandise at a particular place within the state, and subject to no authority from any other person or agent within the state, although the corporation has one or more other agents at other places in the state, but who corresponds with, accounts to, and receives instructions from, the main office of such foreign corporation in the foreign state, receives and disburses moneys, pays freight, makes contracts with customers as to terms of payment of accounts, issues receipts for money, employs all necessary temporary assistance for and in behalf of the corporation, and, with the knowledge and under the instructions of the corporation, holds himself out and advertises in the newspaper as manager, is, within the meaning of Dak. Comp. Laws, § 4898, the "managing agent" of such foreign corporation for the purpose of service of process. Foster v. Charles Betcher Lumber Co. (S. D.) 490

3. The failure of a foreign corporation to file a copy of its articles of incorporation, and the certificate of the appointment of an agent authorized to accept service of process, as required by Dak. Comp. Laws, §§ 8190, 8192, cannot be taken advantage of by such corporation to avoid service of summons upon a managing agent of such corporation within the state. Id.

4. Service on the auditor of state in Arkansas, in an action against a foreign insurance company which has not complied with the statute requiring as a condition of doing business that the auditor or some agent be appointed to receive service, is not authorized by the fact that certain persons have solicited insurance for the company within the state and forwarded applications to its office in another state, although they may be subject to penalties under the statute. Rothrock v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. (Mass.) 863

NOTES AND BRIEFS.

Writ and process; who may be served with process in suit against a foreign corporation: early doctrines; later doctrines; statutes authorizing service; where corporation is not engaged in business within the state; service on director; service on stockholder; effect of designating agent; failure to make designation; termination of agency; cashier; managing agent; other agents; service on state officer; admission of service; return of service; in garnishment cases; serving process of federal court; English cases. 490

Privileges of members of congress and legislature from suit; civil suits; arrest.

YONKERS. See HEALTH.

L. R. A. CASES AS AUTHORITIES.

CASES IN 23 L. R. A.

23 L. R. A. 33, LONG v. FORREST, 150 Pa. 413, 24 Atl. 711.

Conflicting claims of foreign creditors.

Cited in Hilliard v. Enders, 196 Pa. 594, 46 Atl. 839, holding preference over assignment creditors not obtainable by nonresident by foreign attachment of estate of citizen of foreign state; Paladini v. Maryland Silk Co. 18 Pa. Co. Ct. 175, denying nonresident's right to obtain preference over foreign receiver by foreign attachment; Witters v. Globe Sav. Bank, 171 Mass. 427, 50 N. E. 932, and Wing v. Bradner, 162 Pa. 77, 29 Atl. 291, holding preference against general creditors after assignment not permissible by attachment by foreign creditor of property of foreign debtor; DeTurck v. Woelfel, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 270, holding that debt of domestic corporation contracted in foreign state to foreign creditor passes to assignee thereof; McKean v. New York National Bldg. & L. Asso. 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 460, denying attachment to stockholder of foreign corporation, after appointment of foreign receiver thereof; Weil v. Bank of Burr Oak, 76 Mo. App. 38, dismissing attachment suit of foreign creditor on interpleader for property by foreign receiver; Williams v. Kemper, H. & McD. Dry Goods Co. 4 Okla. 150, 43 Pac. 1148, upholding voluntary foreign assignment as against foreign attaching creditor.

Cited in footnotes to Barth v. Backus, 23 L. R. A. 47, which denies validity of voluntary assignment though valid in state of assignor's domicil, requiring discharge of debts of creditors accepting dividends; Crippen v. Rogers, 25 L. R. A. 821, which holds that resident assignee of notes from nonresident against insolvent nonresident has no rights as attaching creditor superior to his assignor; Holbrook v. Ford, 27 L. R. A. 324, which holds rule against allowing preference to foreign receiver over resident creditor inapplicable to domestic receiver in suit instituted by nonresident; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Bankers' & M. Teleg. Co. 31 L. R. A. 403, which holds no lien obtained by attaching telegraph lines in property in other states after receiver appointed in state of which attaching creditor a citizen; Nathan v. Lee, 43 L. R. A. 820, which sustains, in state where land lies, mortgage by foreign corporation to nonresidents in other state to secure antecedent debt; Fenton v. Edwards, 46 L. R. A. 832, which holds voluntary assignment for creditors by foreign corporation in other state precludes garnishment of debt in state where debtor resides.

Cited in note (23 L. R. A. 54, 57) on rights of receiver as to property outside of jurisdiction in which he is appointed.

23 L. R. A. 47, BARTH v. BACKUS, 140 N. Y. 230, 55 N. Y. S. R. 561, 37 Am. St. Rep. 545, 35 N. E. 425.

Comity as to property of insolvent foreign debtor.

Cited in Marshall v. Sherman, 148 N. Y. 25, 34 L. R. A. 766, 51 Am. St. Rep. 654, 42 N. E. 419, holding statutory liability of domestic stockholder in foreign corporation not enforceable to injustice of citizens of state of forum; Rogers v. Pell, 154 N. Y. 526, 49 N. E. 75, holding that foreign corporation may make valid general assignment in New York if assignment is also valid under law of domicil; Stoddard v. Lum, 159 N. Y. 277, 45 L. R. A. 556, 70 Am. St. Rep. 541, 53 N. E. 1108, holding action maintainable by foreign assignee of foreign corporation to enforce common-law contractual liability of stockholders to pay subscription price of stock; Mosher v. Supreme Sitting, O. of I. H. 88 Hun, 399, 34 N. Y. Supp. 816, holding preference by creditor over receiver of foreign corporation not obtainable by attachment subsequent to receivership, although before actual possession by receiver; Dearing v. McKinnon Dash & Hardware Co. 33 App. Div. 40, 53 N. Y. Supp. 513, holding transfer of property for benefit of creditors by instrument valid at domicil, but void in New York, not valid as to property in New York; Re Hulbert Bros. & Co. 38 App. Div. 327, 57 N. Y. Supp. 38, holding title to insolvent foreign creditor's dividend from insolvent estate vested in foreign trustee under valid assignment by law of domicil; Hammond v. National Life Asso. 58 App. Div. 455, 69 N. Y. Supp. 585, upholding power of court to retain assets of dissolved foreign corporation for benefit of domestic creditor against receiver; Workum v. Caldwell, 27 Misc. 73, 58 N. Y. Supp. 175, upholding assignment in New York of Pennsylvania partnership association directing appropriation first to payment of debts, surplus to undissolved company; Weil v. Bank of Burr Oak, 76 Mo. App. 39; Townsend v. Coxe, 151 Ill. 67, 37 N. E. 689; Bloomington v. Weil, 29 Wash. 624, 70 Pac. 94,—upholding title of foreign assignee against attachment of foreign creditor; Moore v. Land, Title & T. Co. 82 Md. 290, 33 Atl. 641, holding claim of foreign assignee of foreign debtor superior to that of domestic attaching creditor; Thompson v. Tetley, 68 N. H. 482, 41 Atl. 179, holding funds of insolvent debtor, obtained by creditor bona fide by suit in foreign state, not recoverable by assignee in subsequent insolvency proceedings; Cross v. Brown, 19 R. I. 237, 33 Atl. 147, upholding attachment against title of foreign assignees in involuntary insolvency proceeding; Fowler v. Bell, 90 Tex. 160, 39 L. R. A. 257, 59 Am. St. Rep. 788, 37 S. W. 1058, refusing to uphold mortgage by foreign debtor for benefit of one of its creditors; Segnitz v. Garden City Bkg. & T. Co. 107 Wis. 175, 50 L. R. A. 329, 81 Am. St. Rep. 830, 83 N. W. 327, holding that state insolvency law, essentially a bankruptcy act, will not be given extraterritorial force; Security Trust Co. v. Dodd, 173 U. S. 629, 43 L. ed. 838, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 545, holding property of foreign debtor assigned under foreign insolvency law subject to subsequent attachment in Massachusetts by New York creditors; National Park Bank v. Clark, 92 App. Div. 266, 87 N. Y. Supp. 185, holding lien of attachment of domestic creditor superior to claim of foreign receiver of foreign corporation.

Distinguished in Vanderpoel v. Gorman, 140 N. Y. 567, 24 L. R. A. 549, 37 Am. St. Rep. 601, 35 N. E. 932, holding valid, assignment in New York of insolvent foreign corporation, valid under law of domicil.

Comity as to perjury.

Cited in People v. Martin, 175 N. Y. 322, 96 Am. St. Rep. 628, 67 N. E. 589, holding one taking false oath required or permitted by laws of sister state, guilty of perjury.

Voluntary assignment by lessee.

Cited in Medinah Temple Co. v. Currey, 58 Ill. App. 435, holding voluntary assignment under statute by lessee not breach of covenant not to assign lease.

Insolvency statutes providing for discharge of debtor.

Cited in Howland's Appeal, 67 N. H. 577, 35 Atl. 943, holding state insolvency law providing for distribution of debtor's property and his discharge, a bankruptcy law.

Equality of rights of foreign and domestic creditors.

Cited in Mabon v. Ongley Electric Co. 156 N. Y. 201, 50 N. E. 805, holding action not maintainable by foreign receiver for appointment of ancillary receiver.

Corporation considered as "person."

Cited in People ex rel. United Auctioneers v. Scully, 23 Misc. 733, 53 N. Y. Supp. 125, holding that city clerk with authority to grant auctioneer's license to persons cannot be compelled to license corporation.

23 L. R. A. 52, GILMAN v. HUDSON RIVER BOOT & SHOE MFG. CO. 84 Wis. 60, 36 Am. St. Rep. 899, 54 N. W. 395.

Comity as affecting foreign representatives and property rights.

Cited in Hughes v. Hunner, 91 Wis. 120, 64 N. W. 887, holding title to debenture bonds passes to foreign receiver subject to claims of domestic creditors; Parker v. Stoughton Mill Co. 91 Wis. 180, 51 Am. St. Rep. 881, 64 N. W. 751, upholding action by foreign receiver against domestic debtor; Swing v. White River Lumber Co. 91 Wis. 521, 65 N. W. 174, holding complaint of foreign trustee insufficient in failing to allege authority to sue under foreign law and appointment; Wyman v. Kimberly-Clark Co. 93 Wis. 559, 67 N. W. 932, upholding act limiting time within which foreign receiver may sue; Finney v. Guy, 106 Wis. 277, 49 L. R. A. 495, 82 N. W. 595, dismissing action against domestic stockholder to enforce double liability, under foreign statutes, after suit in foreign state; Iowa & C. Land Co. v. Hoag, 132 Cal. 629, 64 Pac. 1073, holding action maintainable by foreign trustee to foreclose mortgage; Castleman v. Templeman, 87 Md. 553, 41 L. R. A. 370, 67 Am. St. Rep. 363, 40 Atl. 275, holding action maintainable by foreign receiver to recover unpaid subscription to capital stock and referring with approval to annotation in 23 L. R. A. 52; Weil v. Bank of Burr Oak, 76 Mo. App. 38, dismissing attachment suit of foreign creditor on interpleader for property by foreign receiver; Barley v. Gittings, 15 App. D. C. 439, holding permission to foreign receiver to sue or intervene not a right, but privilege; Small v. Smith, 14 S. D. 624, 86 Am. St. Rep. 807, 86 N. W. 649, holding action maintainable by foreign receiver to recover realty from resident of state of forum; E. F. Kirwan Mfg. Co. v. Truxton, 2 Penn. (Del.) 60, 44 Atl. 427, holding action not maintainable by corporation in its own name after appointment of foreign receiver; Hale v. Harris, 112 Iowa, 375, 83 N. W. 1046, holding action maintainable by foreign receiver as assignee to foreclose mortgage; Hibernia Bank & T. Co. v. Lewis, 119 Fed. 397, holding that tendency of court is to recognize right of receiver to possession of property embraced in decree, although outside jurisdiction of appointing court; Eingartner v. Illinois Steel Co. 94 Wis. 84, 34 L. R. A. 508, 59 Am. St. Rep. 859, 68 N. W. 664 (dissenting opinion), majority holding citizens of one state have same right of action in courts of sister state as citizens thereof.

Cited in footnotes to Barth v. Backus, 23 L. R. A. 47, which denies validity of voluntary assignment though valid in state of assignor's domicil, requiring discharge of debts of creditors accepting dividends; Buswell v. Supreme Sitting. O. I. H. 23 L. R. A. 846, which upholds right of intervention of receiver of foreign corporation appointed at its domicil; American Waterworks Co. v. Farmers Loan & T. Co. 25 L. R. A. 338, which upholds receiver's right to object to prosecution by corporate officer of writ of error in other state; Holbrook v. Ford, 27 L. R. A. 324, which holds receiver of foreign corporation's property takes no title to debts due from persons in other state; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Matherwell Iron & Steel Co. 29 L. R. A. 164, which denies right of receiver to sue in other state for property never in his possession; Robertson v. Stead, 33 L. R. A. 203, which holds foreign receiver obtaining possession of property is entitled to protection anywhere; Guarantee Trust & S. D. Co. v. Philadelphia, R. & N. E. R. Co. 38 L. R. A. 804, which sustains jurisdiction of state court appointing railroad receiver to direct as to wages for operation within state, though services also performed in other state; Castleman v. Templeman, 41 L. R. A. 367, which denies receiver's power to consent to decree in other state for payment of assessments by stockholders to creditors; Ward v. Connecticut Pipe Mfg. Co. 42 L. R. A. 706, which requires attachment creditor to account for fair value of goods at time of attachment, before sharing in benefit of receivership in other state; Wyman v. Eaton, 43 L. R. A. 695, which denies foreign receiver's right to enforce stockholder's liability created by law of other state, when injurious to residents; Linville v. Hadden, 43 L. R. A. 222, which holds nonresident creditor of foreign corporation in hands of receiver entitled to same protection as resident creditors against receiver's claim to property; Price v. Ward, 46 L. R. A. 459, which denies administrator's right to sue to redeem from mortgage, land in other state, by setting off waste committed by mortgagee in possession; Segnitz v. Garden City Bkg. & T. Co. 50 L. R. A. 327, which holds money on deposit in bank of other state applicable to notes of assignor for creditors held by bank after their maturity.

Cited in notes (23 L. R. A. 33, 42) on transfer of property out of state by bankruptcy or insolvency proceedings or by assignment for creditors; (26 L. R. A. 218) on garnishment of money due from receiver.

23 L. R. A. 58, JASPER v. HAZEN, 4 N. D. 1, 58 N. W. 454.

Appellate jurisdiction as to questions of fact.

Cited in Christianson v. Farmers' Warehouse Asso. 5 N. D. 444, 32 L. R. A. 731, 67 N. W. 300, upholding constitutionality of act requiring supreme court, on appeal, to try anew all cases tried below.

Deed intended as mortgage.

Followed in McGuin v. Lee, 10 N. D. 169, 86 N. W. 714, holding evidence insufficient to show absolute deed intended as mortgage.

Cited in Rubo v. Bennett, 85 Ill. App. 488, holding that in case of doubt, court of equity prefers construing deed as mortgage.

Review of evidence on appeal.

Cited in Nichols & S. Co. v. Stangler, 7 N. D. 109, 72 N. W. 1089, holding that when evidence is evenly balanced, or nearly so, appellate court should adopt view of court below; Riley v. Riley, 9 N. D. 583, 84 N. W. 347, holding on appeal, evidence of material alteration not sufficiently strong and convincing to warrant annulling of deed; Paulson v. Ward, 4 N. D. 106, 58 N. W. 792, reviewing and holding evidence sufficient to show grantee's participation in fraud of grantor, warranting setting aside conveyance; Hostetter v. Brooks Elevator Co. 4 N. D. 361, 61 N. W. 49, holding appellate court not warranted in disturbing findings of fact upon examination of evidence; Re Eaton, 4 N. D. 518, 62 N. W. 597, holding fact that there is some evidence to support finding in disbarment proceeding not conclusive on appellate court; Axion Min. Co. v. White, 10 S. D. 202, 72 N. W. 462, refusing to disturb finding not against fair preponderance of testimony.

23 L. R. A. 67, STATE ex rel. FIRST NAT. BANK v. BARTLEY, 39 Neb. 353, 58 N. W. 172.

Deposits in banks.

Cited in Re State Treasurer's Settlement, 51 Neb. 131, 36 L. R. A. 751, footnote p. 746, 70 N. W. 532, holding deposit of public money by state treasurer in legally constituted depository a loan of such money; Bartley v. State, 53 Neb. 337, 73 N. W. 744, holding bank a debtor of state to amount of deposit of state moneys therein; Nichols v. State, 46 Neb. 719, 65 N. W. 774, holding that general deposit in bank by customer is in nature of loan.

Cited in footnotes to Marquette v. Wilkinson, 43 L. R. A. 840, which holds that city funds redeposited in other bank, under arrangement for sharing deposits, are held in trust for city as against original banker's assignee for creditors; Maloy v. Bernalillo County, 52 L. R. A. 126, which denies defaulting county treasurer's liability to county for interest paid to him by bank in which public money deposited, after he has paid county.

23 L. R. A. 73, FURLEY v. CHICAGO, M. & ST. P. R. CO. 90 Iowa, 146, 57 N. W. 719.

Violation of statutory regulations.

Cited in State v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 122 Iowa, 25, 101 Am. St. Rep. 254, 96 N. W. 904, holding penal statute requiring trains to stop at certain places not violated where failure to comply due to defective brakes.

Cited in note (26 L. R. A. 640) on validity and construction of statutory regulations as to infected animals.

23 L. R. A. 82, WIANT v. HAYS, 38 W. Va. 681, 18 S. E. 807.

Personal property subject to transfer.

Cited in Stevenson v. Kyle, 42 W. Va. 232, 57 Am. St. Rep. 854, 24 S. E. 886, holding that order on fund does not operate as assignment, unless fund has real or potential existence in hands of drawee.

Lien upon personal property.

Cited in footnote to Boisseau v. Penn, 57 L. R. A. 380, which holds execution not lien on interest of debtor in twenty-year distribution policy on his life, which ceases on failure to pay premiums.

Forfeiture proceedings.

Cited in Cecil v. Clark, 44 W. Va. 679, 30 S. E. 216, holding forfeiture proceeding for sale of lands for benefit of school fund, chancery suit; Cecil v. Clark, 44 W. Va. 680, 30 S. E. 216, holding heirs having interest in land, not made parties to forfeiture proceeding relating thereto, not bound thereby; King v. Mullins, 171 U. S. 432, 43 L. ed. 225, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 925, holding proceeding in circuit court of West Virginia for sale of forfeited lands, a judicial proceeding.

23 L. R. A. 86, FORT v. STATE, 92 Ga. 8, 18 S. E. 14.

Lloyds association.

Cited in Enterprise Lumber Co. v. Mundy, 62 N. J. L. 21, 55 L. R. A. 201. 42 Atl. 1063, upholding validity of "Lloyds" contract or policy of insurance.

Cited in footnote to Com. v. Reinæhl, 25 L. R. A. 247, which holds guarantee Lloyds not a "company" within provision as to acting as agent for foreign company.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 239) on restrictions on insurance by unincorporated associations or individuals; Lloyds associations.

23 L. R. A. 88, ST. PAUL & D. R. CO. v. DULUTH, 56 Minn. 494, 45 Am. St. Rep. 491, 58 N. W. 159.

Interference with natural flow of surface waters.

Cited in Dudley v. Buffalo, 73 Minn. 352, 76 N. W. 44, holding village not liable for overflow of private property by reason of inadequate drains.

Cited in footnotes to Albany v. Sikes, 26 L. R. A. 653, which holds no common law as to surface water established by adjudication before independence of country; Gilfillan v. Schmidt, 31 L. R. A. 547, which sustains power to deepen natural line of drainage of marsh fed entirely by surface water; Churchill v. Beethe, 35 L. R. A. 442, which sustains right of county to divert surface water in exercise of right of eminent domain; Jordan v. Benwood, 36 L. R. A. 519, which denies liability of city for change of street grade, preventing flow of surface water from lot; McAskill v. Hancock, 55 L. R. A. 738, which holds township liable for causing surface water to overflow private property; Franklin v. Durgee, 58 L. R. A. 112, which denies right to fill depressions in land, casting surface water back on highway to its injury.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 674) on duty and liability of municipality with respect to drainage.

23 L. R. A. 90, ISHAM v. POST, 141 N. Y. 100, 56 N. Y. S. R. 656, 38 Am. St. Rep. 766, 35 N. E. 1084.

Report of second appeal in 167 N. Y. 532, 60 N. E. 1113, Affirming 51 App. Div. 605, 64 N. Y. Supp. 1137.

Liability for negligence.

Cited in Price v. Ga Nun, 11 Misc. 75, 32 N. Y. Supp. 801, holding optician liable for negligence in making pair of glasses from prescription; Steube v. Christopher & S. Architectural Iron Foundry Co. 85 Mo. App. 650, holding that in action for personal injury, where negligence is in reasonable doubt, it is question for jury.

— Of banks and bankers.

Cited in First Nat. Bank v. German Bank, 107 Iowa, 545, 70 Am. St. Rep. 216, 78 N. W. 195, holding bank not liable for negligence of notary public, its assistant cashier; Clinton Nat. Bank v. National Park Bank, 37 App. Div. 607, 56 N. Y. Supp. 244, holding evidence as to custom of bankers as to examination of securities admissible on question of negligence; Watson v. Fagner, 208 Ill. 144, 70 N. E. 23, holding banker liable for negligence in loaning customer's money to unsafe borrower.

Cited in footnote to Grow v. Cockrill, 36 L. R. A. 89, which holds bank receiver not liable for president's loan of depositor's money.

23 L. R. A. 95, PEOPLE ex rel. THURBER-WHYLAND CO. v. BARKER, 141 N. Y. 118, 56 N. Y. S. R. 586, 35 N. E. 1073.

Taxable personalty, and deductions allowable.

Cited in People ex rel. Yellow Pine Co. v. Barker, 23 App. Div. 526, 48 N. Y. Supp. 553, holding foreign corporation taxable on credits and bills receivable on business done in New York; People ex rel. Barney v. Barker, 16 App. Div. 268, 44 N. Y. Supp. 718, holding nonresident not entitled to exemption from taxation of sum invested in New York, merely because of greater indebtedness to citizens of state; People ex rel. Lemmon v. Feitner, 167 N. Y. 9, 82 Am. St. Rep. 698, 60 N. E. 265, holding value of seat in stock exchange owned by nonresident not taxable; Sprague v. Fletcher, 69 Vt. 81, 37 L. R. A. 844, 37 Pac. 239, holding invalid, statute denying right to nonresidents only of deducting debts from taxable property; People ex rel. Bird v. Barker, 145 N. Y. 242, 39 N. E. 1065, holding nonresident special partner not entitled to deduction of partnership indebtedness from sum taxable.

Cited in note (60 L. R. A. 332) on constitutional equality in United States in relation to corporate taxation.

Limited in People ex rel. Hecker-Jones-Jewell Mill. Co. v. Barker, 147 N. Y. 34, 29 L. R. A. 395, footnote p. 393, 41 N. E. 435, Affirming 86 Hun, 152, 67 N. Y. S. R. 756, 33 N. Y. Supp. 1019, requiring deduction of unpaid part of purchase money for property bought in state by foreign corporation in determining sum invested.

23 L. R. A. 97, Re WORTHINGTON, 141 N. Y. 9, 56 N. Y. S. R. 561, 35 N. E. 929.

Assignments against public policy.

Cited in Woodbridge v. Bockes, 59 App. Div. 517, 69 N. Y. Supp. 417, holding release by cestui que trust of accrued income valid; Re King, 110 Mich. 207, 68 N. W. 154, holding assignment of compensation for services as executrix against public policy.

23 L. R. A. 99, LIMBURG v. GERMAN F. INS. CO. 90 Iowa, 709, 48 Am. St. Rep. 468, 57 N. W. 626.

Occupancy within terms of insurance policy.

Cited in Names v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 95 Iowa, 650, 64 N. W. 628, holding occupancy of house, with sole intent of burning property therein, not occupancy within terms of policy; Des Moines Ice Co. v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 99 Iowa, 200, 68 N. W. 600, holding ice house not vacant, as matter of law, within meaning of policy, because nothing therein in October except tools and small quantity of ice.

Cited in footnotes to Moody v. Amazon Ins. Co. 26 L. R. A. 313, which holds nonoccupancy without increase of risk or fraud insufficient to avoid policy; Henderson Trust Co. v. Stuart, 48 L. R. A. 49, which holds executor liable for loss of insurance from failure to apply for extension of vacancy permit; Home Ins. Co.

v. Hancock, 52 L. R. A. 665, which holds house not vacant because custodian has access to only one room; German Ins. Co. v. Russell, 58 L. R. A. 234, which holds policy absolutely forfeited by allowing premises to remain vacant time specified in policy; Hampton v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 52 L. R. A. 344, which holds church building kept for use for purposes for which designed not vacant and unoccupied.

Ignoring instruction of court.

Cited in World Mut. Ben. Asso. v. Worthing, 59 Neb. 589, 81 N. W. 620, holding failure of jury to follow court's instructions reversible error.

23 L. R. A. 103, WILKES v. DAVIES, 8 Wash. 112, 35 Pac. 611.

Rights of owner of improvements on school lands.

Cited in Brummett v. Campbell, 32 Wash. 368, 73 Pac. 403, holding that one lawfully in possession of school lands, and having improvements thereon, has right as against subsequent purchaser to retain possession until paid for.

Conclusiveness of prior decisions and judgments.

Cited in Furth v. Snell, 13 Wash. 665, 43 Pac. 935, holding that where evidence on second trial is substantially same as on first, law as established on facts on first appeal is binding; Isensee v. Austin, 15 Wash. 358, 46 Pac. 394, holding assignees barred by rule of res judicata as to defenses available to assignors in former action; Dunsmuir v. Port Angeles, Gas, Water, Electric Light & P. Co. 30 Wash. 592, 71 Pac. 9, holding action for recovery of taxes not barred by former action between same parties, in which controversy was not determined because remedy not deemed appropriate.

Cited in note (34 L. R. A. 327) on conclusiveness of prior decisions on subsequent appeals.

23 L. R. A. 111, ADAMS v. FIRST NAT. BANK, 113 N. C. 332, 18 S. E. 513.

Settlement of accounts with banks.

Cited in Hodgin v. Peoples' Nat. Bank, 124 N. C. 543, 32 S. E. 887, holding deposit of individual partner not applicable to indebtedness of firm to bank.

Distinguished in Davis v. Industrial Mfg. Co. 114 N. C. 333, 23 L. R. A. 325, 19 S. E. 371, holding receiver of insolvent bank in settling with creditor entitled to deduct all sums for which he is debtor, as principal or surety.

23 L. R. A. 113, Re MUNICIPAL SUFFRAGE TO WOMEN, 160 Mass. 586, 36 N. E. 488.

Statutes to take effect upon acceptance by vote of people.

Cited in Owen v. Baer, 154 Mo. 509, 55 S. W. 644, holding sewer tax law applicable to cities of fourth class, upon two-thirds vote in favor thereof, unconstitutional.

Cited in footnotes to State ex rel. Witter v. Forkner, 28 L. R. A. 206, which upholds statute requiring consent of city council and majority of electors to suspension of penalties of prohibitory liquor law; State ex rel. Childs v. Copeland, 34 L. R. A. 777, which holds void, local-option law granting charter power to cities of certain class, to take effect in city only on adoption thereby.

Delegation of power.

Cited in Brodbine v. Revere, 182 Mass. 600, 66 N. E. 607, upholding act giving metropolitan park commissioners power to make rules for regulation of boulevards within their care.

23 L. R. A. 120, CRUMLISH v. CENTRAL IMPROV. CO. 38 W. Va. 390, 45 Am. St. Rep. 872, 18 S. E. 456.

Payment of debt by volunteer.

Cited in Schoonover v. Osborne, 117 Iowa, 438, 90 N. W. 844, holding grantee of land redeeming same after execution sale on erroneous judgment not volunteer.

Cited in footnotes to United States use of Fidelity Nat. Bank v. Rundle, 52 L. R. A. 505, which holds money furnished to pay labor claims not within bond for paying persons supplying principal with labor or materials for prosecuting work; People's & D. Bank v. Craig, 52 L. R. A. 872, which holds remittance to owner of amount of note by one receiving for collection, out of his own funds, constitutes payment by volunteer; Marshall v. Bullard, 54 L. R. A. 862, which holds third person's part payment of judgment sufficient consideration for release of balance; Jackson v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 55 L. R. A. 87, which holds accord and satisfaction with third person, authorized or ratified by debtor, prevents action by creditor.

Right to subrogation.

Cited in Irvine v. Kearney County, 75 Fed. 767, holding purchaser of void bonds entitled to subrogation to rights of holders of warrants for which bonds were issued; Bates v. Swiger, 40 W. Va. 429, 21 S. E. 874, holding one officiously paying debt of another as stranger not entitled to subrogation; Hawker v. Moore, 40 W. Va. 52, 20 S. E. 848, upholding right of cosurety to subrogation; Davis v. Schlemmer, 150 Ind. 477, 50 N. E. 373, holding that replevin bail signing bond at request of one not a party may be entitled to subrogation on payment of judgment; Gray v. Zellmer, 66 Kan. 518, 72 Pac. 228, denying subrogation to rights of prior mortgagee, where mortgage paid without mortgagor's knowledge out of proceeds of subsequent invalid mortgage.

Cited in footnotes to Faires v. Cockrill, 28 L. R. A. 528, which denies right to contribution or subrogation between co-obligors on written contract; Union Mortg. Bkg. & T. Co. v. Peters, 30 L. R. A. 829, which authorizes subrogation of one advancing money at debtor's instance for use in paying prior security; Meeker v. Larson, 57 L. R. A. 901, which denies right of one furnishing money to discharge mortgage, to be subrogated to mortgagee's rights.

Effect to be given foreign judgment.

Cited in Wells-Stone Mercantile Co. v. Truax, 44 W. Va. 537, 29 S. E. 1006, holding foreign judgment, in absence of fraud, conclusive on collateral attack; Winham v. Kline, 77 Mo. App. 47, holding foreign judgment, obtained on personal service, binding on parties; American Mut L. Ins. Co. v. Mason, 159 Ind. 11, 64 N. E. 525, holding judgment of foreign court having jurisdiction of subject-matter and persons not open to collateral attack.

Erroneous judgments.

Cited in Maxwell v. Leeson, 50 W. Va. 369, 88 Am. St. Rep. 875, 40 S. E. 420, holding erroneous judgment on scire facias not void as original judgment where it awarded execution.

Question of payment for jury.

Cited in First Nat. Bank v. School Dist. No. 1, 6 Wyo. 491, 46 Pac. 1090, refusing to reverse verdict of payment of note, sustained by sufficient evidence.

Right of corporation officers to compensation.

Cited in Ravenswood & S. G. R. Co. v. Woodyard, 46 W. Va. 561, 33 S. E. 285, holding compensation for president or director of private joint stock corporation not allowable except by vote of stockholders.

Cited in footnotes to Eaton v. Robinson, 29 L. R. A. 100, which requires officers to account for salaries voted and paid to deprive stockholders of rights; Huffaker v. Germania Safety Vault & T. Co. 46 L. R. A. 384, which holds directors entitled to compensation for extraordinary services performed without contract, by which company saved from bankruptcy; Bassett v. Fairchild, 52 L. R. A. 611, which sustains director's right, without direct contract, to compensation for services not connected with office.

23 L. R. A. 135, COTE v. MURPHY, 159 Pa. 420, 39 Am. St. Rep. 686, 28 Atl. 190.

Lawful and unlawful combinations.

Followed in Buchanan v. Kerr, 159 Pa. 434, 28 Atl. 195, upholding action of association of employers refusing to sell material to person acceding to demand for advance in wages.

Cited in Macauley Bros. v. Tierney, 19 R. I. 263, 37 L. R. A. 461, 61 Am. St. Rep. 770, 33 Atl. 1, holding agreement of members of association not to deal with wholesalers selling to persons not members of association not conspiracy, Patterson v. Building Trades Council, 11 Kulp, 22, enjoining boycott by labor organization against manufacturer of building materials; Marietta Casting Co. v. Thuma, 20 Lanc. L. Rev. 192, 28 Pa. Co. Ct. 260, holding that court will enjoin organization of strikers from threatening or otherwise interfering with workmen taking their places.

Cited in footnotes to Ertz v. Produce Exchange, 48 L. R. A. 90, which holds malicious, conspiracy to injure dealer by inducing other people not to deal with him; Jackson v. Stanfield, 23 L. R. A. 588, which holds combination of retail lumber dealers to destroy business of brokers by compelling refusal of sales to them, actionable.

Cited in note (62 L. R. A. 711) on effect of bad motive to make actionable what would otherwise not be.

Distinguished in Temple Iron Co. v. Carmanoskie, 10 Kulp, 40, 7 Northampton Co. Rep. 261, and O'Neil v. Behanna, 182 Pa. 245, 38 L. R. A. 386, 61 Am. St. Rep. 702, 37 Atl. 843, holding display of force by strikers to intimidate newly employed men, illegal; Vegelahn v. Gunter, 167 Mass. 99, 35 L. R. A. 724, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443, 44 N. E. 1077, holding maintenance of patrol in front of factory, in connection with social pressure and threats, unlawful; Brown v. Jacobs' Pharmacy Co. 115 Ga. 450, 57 L. R. A. 557, 90 Am. St. Rep. 126, 41 S. E. 553, holding combination of merchants to compel another dealing in similar goods to sell at prices fixed by it, enjoinable; Martell v. White, 185 Mass. 262, 64 L. R. A. 264, 69 N. E. 1085, holding action for damages maintainable by quarry owner against members of voluntary association imposing fine on any member dealing with him.

23 L. R. A. 139, PEOPLE ex rel. BRADLEY v. ILLINOIS STATE REFORMATORY, 148 Ill. 413, 36 N. E. 76.

State reformatories.

Cited in Henderson v. People, 165 Ill. 611, 46 N. E. 711, holding state reformatory not a penitentiary; Marshall v. Illinois State Reformatory, 201 Ill. 16, 66 N. E. 314, holding state reformatory to be penal institution.

Cited in footnote to Re Sanders, 23 L. R. A. 603, which denies probate court's power to commit infant to reform school for specific crime without previous conviction.

Indeterminate sentences.

Cited in Murphy v. Com. 172 Mass. 275, 43 L. R. A. 159, 70 Am. St. Rep. 266, 52 N. E. 505, holding duration of indeterminate sentence not uncertain; People ex rel. Abrams v. Fox, 77 App. Div. 250, 79 N. Y. Supp. 56, upholding vagrancy law permitting prisoner's earlier discharge in case of not having been previously convicted; Miller v. State, 149 Ind. 616, 40 L. R. A. 112, 49 N. E. 894, holding that act providing for indeterminate sentence to reformatory does not authorize cruel and unusual punishment; State v. Page, 60 Kan. 667, 57 Pac. 514, upholding act providing for indeterminate sentence; People ex rel. Clark v. Sing Sing Prison, 39 Misc. 117, 78 N. Y. Supp. 907, upholding act providing for indeterminate sentence for felons, not to exceed maximum term.

Distinguished in Re Lorkowski, 94 Mo. App. 634, 68 S. W. 610, holding provision in act authorizing indefinite sentence of one convicted of crime unconstitutional.

Right of jury to fix punishment.

Cited in State v. Haméy, 168 Mo. 178, 57 L. R. A. 852, footnote p. 846, 67 S. W. 620, denying right under Constitution to have jury assess punishment in criminal cases.

Validity and construction of reformatory acts.

Cited in Bartley v. People, 156 Ill. 241, 40 N. E. 831, upholding constitutionality of Illinois reformatory act; George v. People, 167 Ill. 464, 47 N. E. 741, upholding right of legislature to grant penitentiary commissioners discretionary power to parol prisoners; People ex rel. Martin v. Mallary, 195 Ill. 589, 88 Am. St. Rep. 212, 63 N. E. 508, holding section of act authorizing transfer of prisoner in state reformatory to penitentiary, by managers of reformatory, unconstitutional; Sullivan v. People, 156 Ill. 96, 40 N. E. 288, holding provision in reformatory act, requiring finding of age of defendant by jury, applicable only to minors.

Acts partly unconstitutional.

Cited in Noel v. People, 187 Ill. 597, 52 L. R. A. 291, 79 Am. St. Rep. 238, 58 N. E. 616, upholding portion of pharmacy act requiring registration, although unconstitutional in another respect; Re Linden, 112 Wis. 525, 88 N. W. 645, holding that constitutionality of provision of act allowing transfer of prisoners from one institution to another may be considered independently of general statute relating to indeterminate sentences.

23 L. R. A. 144, SENATE OF HAPPY HOME CLUB v. ALPENA COUNTY, 99 Mich. 117, 57 N. W. 1101.

Treatment of persons convicted of drunkenness.

Cited in footnotes to Baltimore v. Keeley Institute, 27 L. R. A. 646, which holds valid, act authorizing treatment of habitual drunkard at expense of county or city of residence; Re House, 33 L. R. A. 832, which sustains right to use county funds to pay for cure of indigent inebriates in private establishment; Wisconsin Keeley Inst. Co. v. Milwaukee County, 36 L. R. A. 55, which holds invalid, statute for treatment of habitual drunkards at private institution at county expense.

Commitment of prisoners to private institutions or individuals.

Cited in footnotes to Farmer v. St. Paul, 33 L. R. A. 199, which denies right to select as workhouse, house under control of religious society; Simmons v. Georgia Iron & Coal Co. 61 L. R. A. 739, which denies right to work convicts in private chain gangs controlled by private individuals.

Delegation of power.

Distinguished in Hurst v. Warner, 102 Mich. 245, 26 L. R. A. 492, 47 Am. St. Rep. 525, 60 N. W. 440, sustaining right to delegate to state board of health power to establish quarantine system with inspection of persons and baggage from places where contagious disease is known to exist.

23 L. R. A. 146, HOWSMON v. TRENTON WATER CO. 119 Mo. 304, 41 Am. St. Rep. 654, 24 S. W. 784.

Rights and liabilities of third persons on contracts.

Cited in Porter v. Woods, 138 Mo. 554, 39 S. W. 794, holding action maintainable against third party by holder of note made solely for his benefit; Harberg v. Arnold, 78 Mo. App. 239, and Hicks v. Hamilton, 144 Mo. 500, 66 Am. St. Rep. 641, 46 S. W. 432, holding grantee assuming mortgage debt not liable for deficiency, if prior grantor is not liable therefor; Crone v. Stinde, 156 Mo. 268, 55 S. W. 863, holding contrary to and overruling the preceding case; McKay v. Ward, 20 Utah, 183, 46 L. R. A. 633, 57 Pac. 1024 (dissenting opinion), majority holding assumption of mortgage debt as part consideration for purchase renders grantee personally liable on debt, although prior grantor was not; St. Louis use of Glencoe Lime & Cement Co. v. Von Phul, 133 Mo. 572, 54 Am. St. Rep. 695, 34 S. W. 843, holding person laboring in or furnishing material for improvement of city streets entitled to benefit of bond by contractor to city; Devers v. Howard, 144 Mo. 678, 46 S. W. 625, holding action maintainable by material men against contractor's bondsmen on failure to pay for material used on city work; Montgomery v. Rief, 15 Utah, 500, 50 Pac. 623, holding contractor's bondsmen not liable to material men, where bond is given for benefit of state; United States use of Dishman v. Rundle, 27 Wash. 12, 67 Pac. 395, upholding right of action under Federal statute giving material men right to sue on contractor's bond in name of United States; Carpenter v. Reliance Realty Co. 103 Mo. App. 502, 77 S. W. 1004, holding adjacent owner not entitled to benefit of bond by contractor to protect adjoining property while excavating; Lewis v. Brookdale Land Co. 124 Mo. 685, 28 S. W. 324, holding action not maintainable for rescission by purchasers of lots on breach of contract between land company and third party; State v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 125 Mo. 617, 28 S. W. 1074, holding action not maintainable by third party on agreement by one to "save harmless" the other; American Bank v. Klock, 58 Mo. App. 347, holding that third party has no greater right against grantee of mortgage debt, assuming to pay on taking deed, than original grantor; Street v. Goodale, 77

Mo. App. 321, holding action by payee against bank not warranted by promise of bank to pay checks of customer; Rothwell v. Skinker, 84 Mo. App. 177, holding action maintainable by contractor against third person for whose benefit contract sued upon was made.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 260, 269) on right of third party to sue on contract made for his benefit.

Liability for failure to supply water or gas.

Cited in Boston Safe-Deposit & T. Co. v. Salem Water Co. 94 Fed. 240; House v. Houston Waterworks Co. 88 Tex. 239, 28 L. R. A. 533, footnote p. 532, 31 S. W. 179; Nichol v. Huntington Water Co. 53 W. Va. 354, 44 S. E. 290; Bush v. Artesian Hot & Cold Water Co. 4 Idaho, 622, 95 Am. St. Rep. 161, 43 Pac. 69,—denying liability under contract with city, of water company for loss of citizen's property by fire; Ukiah City v. Ukiah Water & Improv. Co. 142 Cal. 178, 64 L. R. A. 235, footnote p. 231, 100 Am. St. Rep. 107, 75 Pac. 773, holding contract to compensate municipality for loss of property by fire from negligent failure to furnish water not shown by mere acceptance of payment for furnishing of water for general fire purposes.

Cited in footnotes to Watson v. Needham, 24 L. R. A. 287, which holds municipality liable for failure to furnish water supply according to contract for steam heating in green house; Capital City Water Co. v. State, 29 L. R. A. 743, which upholds right to forfeit water-works charter for failure to supply water according to contract; Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Keeseville, 30 L. R. A. 660, which denies liability of city for damage by fire due to its failure to maintain sufficient water works; Du Bois v. Du Bois City Waterworks Co. 34 L. R. A. 92, which holds cancelation of contract by city for water supply not justified by inadequacy of supply; Coy v. Indianapolis Gas Co. 36 L. R. A. 535, which holds sickness and death of children from failure to furnish gas for fuel, element of damages; Gorrell v. Greensboro Water Supply Co. 46 L. R. A. 513, which sustains right of action by citizen for breach of water company's contract to supply sufficient water to prevent loss by fire; Middlesex Water Co. v. Knappmann Whiting Co. 49 L. R. A. 572, which holds water company failing to supply sufficient water for fire purposes liable to consumer for loss of property by fire.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 96, 98) on establishment and regulation of municipal water supply.

23 L. R. A. 152, ODOM v. ST. LOUIS SOUTHWESTERN R. CO. 45 La. Ann. 1201, 14 So. 734.

Injuries received in boarding and leaving trains.

Cited in Caruth v. Texas & P. R. Co. 45 La. Ann. 1231, 14 So. 736, holding carrier liable for injuries received by passenger while alighting from train suddenly starting; Brashear v. Houston C. A. & N. R. Co. 47 La. Ann. 738, 28 L. R. A. 812, 49 Am. St. Rep. 382, 17 So. 260, holding action maintainable for injury to passenger alighting from moving train at station called, at which train did not stop; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Hughes, 55 Kan. 500, 40 Pac. 919, holding question of plaintiff's contributory negligence in alighting from moving train upon invitation, for jury.

Cited in footnotes to Distler v. Long Island R. Co. 35 L. R. A. 762, which holds stepping from station platform onto slowly moving train not negligence per se;

Jones v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 41 L. R. A. 490, which denies right of one attempting to enter car of mixed train at distance from station, to recover for injury from sudden jolting of car in coupling; Brashear v. Houston C. A. & N. R. Co. 28 L. R. A. 811, which sustains right of recovery of passenger going on platform with intent to get off, when thrown off by sudden increase of speed.

23 L. R. A. 155, JONES v. MILLSAPS, 71 Miss. 10, 14 So. 440.

Maintenance and care of buildings and premises.

Cited in footnotes to Canandaigua v. Foster, 41 L. R. A. 554, which holds lessor required to keep sidewalk grate in repair, though tenant has exclusive right to use same; Olson v. Schultz, 36 L. R. A. 790, which holds lessor liable, without notice, for defects in elevator which he covenants to keep in repair.

Cited in notes (25 L. R. A. 34) on liability for injury to elevator passenger; (34 L. R. A. 558) on individual liability for falling walls or buildings; (34 L. R. A. 616) on liability of landlord for injury to tenant's guests and servants from defects in premises.

— Liability for condition of premises in control of landlord.

Cited in Kuhn v. Sol Heavenrich Co. 115 Wis. 452, 60 L. R. A. 587, footnote p. 585, denying implied contract obligation of one leasing building in sections, to keep in repair part remaining in his possession.

Cited in footnotes to McGinley v. Alliance Trust Co. 56 L. R. A. 334, which holds lessor of apartment house retaining control of stairways liable for injury to tenants from lack of repair of stair railing; Railton v. Taylor, 39 L. R. A. 246, which holds landlord not exempt by lease from liability for damage resulting from negligence in use of heating apparatus remaining under his own control.

— Fire escapes.

Cited in footnotes to Schmalzried v. White, 32 L. R. A. 782, which holds landlord not required to provide fire escapes for safety of tenant; Arms v. Ayer, 58 L. R. A. 277, which sustains statute requiring fire escapes on certain kinds of buildings, giving factory inspector discretion as to their number, location, etc.; Carrigan v. Stillwell, 61 L. R. A. 163, which holds owner of rented building liable for injury from lack of fire escapes.

Easement of light and air.

Cited in footnotes to Kennedy v. Burnap, 40 L. R. A. 476, which holds easement of light and air does not pass by implication on conveyance of building with windows looking over vacant lot; Baker v. Willard, 40 L. R. A. 754, which denies application to easement of light and air of doctrine that easement appurtenant to close is appurtenant to every portion of same; Townsend v. Epstein, 52 L. R. A. 409, which sustains abutter's right to relief against diminution of light and air by bridge over street.

23 L. R. A. 161, TYSON v. WESTERN NAT. BANK, 77 Md. 412, 26 Atl. 520.

Indorsement for collection and for deposit.

Cited in National Bank of Commerce v. Johnson, 6 N. D. 184, 69 N. W. 49, holding title not passed by indorsement of certificate of deposit for collection and credit.

Cited in note (32 L. R. A. 716) on trust in proceeds of collection made by bank when insolvent.

Distinguished in Ditch v. Western Nat. Bank, 79 Md. 204, 23 L. R. A. 167, 47 Am. St. Rep. 375, 29 Atl. 72, holding title to check indorsed for deposit passes to subsequent indorsee for value.

Judgment on agreed case.

Cited in Baltimore, C. & A. R. Co. v. Wicomico County, 93 Md. 128, 48 Atl. 853, holding provision prohibiting court of appeal from deciding any question not decided below not applicable to case tried on agreed statement of facts; Salfner v. State, 84 Md. 302, 35 Atl. 885, holding submission on agreed statement of fact should be accompanied by agreement permitting court to enter judgment.

23 L. R. A. 164, DITCH v. WESTERN NAT. BANK, 79 Md. 192, 47 Am. St. Rep. 375, 29 Atl. 72, 138.

Indorsement of commercial paper for collection and deposit.

Cited in Winfield Nat. Bank v. McWilliams, 9 Okla. 508, 60 Pac. 229, holding that upon proof that check indorsed in blank was deposited with bank for "collection," one receiving it from bank must as against one claiming to be real owner, show that he received it in good faith and for value.

Cited in footnotes to Tyson v. Western Nat. Bank, 23 L. R. A. 161, which holds that title to commercial paper does not pass to bank by depositing with indorsement "for collection;" Averell v. Second Nat. Bank, 25 L. R. A. 761, which holds bank receiving post-dated check on itself for collection liable to depositor where drawer had sufficient funds on morning of date of check.

23 L. R. A. 173, EXCHANGE BANK v. SUTTON BANK, 78 Md. 577, 28 Atl. 563.

Nature of cashier's check.

Cited in footnote to Phillips v. Mercantile Nat. Bank, 23 L. R. A. 584, which holds payment by drawee of cashier's checks on forged indorsements by cashier of payees' names, good as against his bank.

23 L. R. A. 177, CREED v. SUN FIRE OFFICE, 101 Ala. 522, 46 Am. St. Rep. 134, 14 So. 323.

Misstatements in application for insurance with agent's knowledge.

Cited in Pope v. Glens Falls Ins. Co. 130 Ala. 360, 30 So. 496; Triple Link Mut. Indemnity Asso. v. Williams, 121 Ala. 145, 77 Am. St. Rep. 34, 26 So. 19; Sellers v. Commercial F. Ins. Co. 105 Ala. 290, 16 So. 798,—holding policy not avoided by misstatements in application written by agent of company; Strause v. Palatine Ins. Co. 128 N. C. 65, 38 S. E. 256, holding that agent's knowledge of facts estops defense of lack of sole ownership of premises by insured.

23 L. R. A. 181, SLATER v. CAPITAL INS. CO. 89 Iowa, 628, 57 N. W. 422.

23 L. R. A. 184, KEEPERS v. FIDELITY TITLE & DEPOSIT CO. 56 N. J. L. 302, 44 Am. St. Rep. 397, 28 Atl. 585.

Gifts inter vivos and causa mortis.

Cited in Buecker v. Carr, 60 N. J. Eq. 305, 47 Atl. 34, and Snyder v. Harris, 61 N. J. Eq. 486, 48 Atl. 329, refusing to declare transaction a gift causa mortis, where sought to be proved mainly on testimony of donee; Knight v. Tripp, 121 Cal. 681, 54 Pac. 267, holding delivery of key to receptacle which is itself capable of delivery not sufficient to constitute delivery of its contents; Whalen v. Milholland, 89 Md. 211, 44 L. R. A. 213, 43 Atl. 45, holding deposit in joint name of depositor and sister, payable to order of either or survivor, not sufficient to constitute gift, depositor retaining bank book.

Cited in footnotes to Royston v. McCulley, 52 L. R. A. 899, which holds gift causa mortis of bank certificates made by donor asking to have trunks unlocked and certificates indorsed; Lord v. New York L. Ins. Co. 56 L. R. A. 597, which sustains gift of policy found among papers of insured at his death, on proof of his declarations that it was donee's.

23 L. R. A. 187, WATTS v. WATTS, 160 Mass. 464, 39 Am. St. Rep. 509, 36 N. E. 479.

Former action as bar to subsequent suit.

Cited in Clement Mfg. Co. v. Wood, 162 Mass. 175, 38 N. E. 444, holding parties bound by finding as to height of dam, necessarily involved in issues tried; Gilmore v. Williams, 162 Mass. 352, 38 N. E. 976, holding judgment by consent on note for purchase price of chattels, and payment of same not bar to action for breach of warranty; Cobb v. Fogg, 166 Mass. 477, 44 N. E. 534, holding judgment in former action between same parties not bar to subsequent action on entirely different issues; Walker v. Walker, 172 Mass. 84, 51 N. E. 455, holding wife's desertion not bar to her libel for husband's adultery committed before desertion by her; Nashua & L. R. Corp. v. Boston & L. R. Corp. 164 Mass. 226, 49 Am. St. Rep. 454, 41 N. E. 268 (dissenting opinion), majority holding former action between same parties not conclusive as to issue in pleadings on which record is silent; Waterhouse v. Levine, 182 Mass. 409, 65 N. E. 822, holding judgment on action because prematurely brought not bar to subsequent action between same parties involving same subject-matter.

23 L. R. A. 190, BANK OF COMMERCE v. GOOS, 39 Neb. 437, 58 N. W. 84.

Damages recoverable.

Cited in First Nat. Bank v. Railsback Bros. 58 Neb. 251, 78 N. W. 512, holding assessment of damages for wrongful refusal to pay check proper, although no special damages were proved; Svendsen v. State Bank, 64 Minn. 42, 31 L. R. A. 553, 58 Am. St. Rep. 522, 65 N. W. 1086, holding general compensatory damages recoverable for wrongful refusal of banker to honor check; J. M. James Co. v. Continental Nat. Bank, 105 Tenn. 12, 51 L. R. A. 259, 80 Am. St. Rep. 857, 58 S. W. 261, holding that law conclusively presumes damages from wrongful dishonor of check; American Nat. Bank v. Morey, 113 Ky. 863, 58 L. R. A. 958, 69 S. W. 759, holding punitive damages not recoverable for wrongful refusal to honor check; American Nat. Bank v. Morey, 113 Ky. 863, 58 L. R. A. 958, 101 Am. St. Rep. 379, 69 S. W. 759, holding one whose check is wrongfully dishonored entitled to compensatory damages, but not to damages for humiliation and mortification; Ellison v. Brown, 43 Neb. 71, 61 N. W. 97, holding instruction in effect leaving determination of general damages from malicious prosecution to jury, proper; Jensen v. Hallam, 51 Neb. 494, 70 N. W. 1121, holding $500 damages for loss of reputation and humiliation for wrongful attachment, excessive; Harvard v. Stiles, 54 Neb. 28, 74 N. W. 399, holding damages for future and permanent effect of personal injuries recoverable under general ad damnum clause; Hier v. Hutchings, 58 Neb. 335, 78 N. W. 638, holding amount of general damages of wrongful rearrest of prisoner after discharge in habeas corpus liquidated at $500 by statute.

23 L. R. A. 194, STATE ex rel. ROBB v. STONE, 120 Mo. 428, 25 S. W. 376.

Mandamus to executive and legislative officers.

Cited in State ex rel. North & South R. Co. v. Meier, 143 Mo. 443, 45 S. W. 306, Reversing 72 Mo. App. 620, holding that mandamus will lie to compel president of city council to perform ministerial duty; Albright v. Fisher, 164 Mo. 62, 64 S. W. 106, holding court powerless to restrain municipal assembly from passage of ordinance granting right of way to railway; Shipman v. State Live-Stock Sanitary Commission, 115 Mich. 491, 73 N. W. 817, denying mandamus to compel state live stock commission to appraise condemned cattle at market value; State ex rel. State Pub. Co. v. Smith, 23 Mont. 49, 57 Pac. 449, holding that governor cannot be compelled by mandamus to exercise duty not ministerial; People ex rel. Broderick v. Morton, 156 N. Y. 141, 41 L. R. A. 233, footnote p. 231, 66 Am. St. Rep. 547, 50 N. E. 791, denying right of mandamus to compel performance of act by governor; State ex rel. Wright v. Savage, 64 Neb. 698, 90 N. W. 898, holding that court may issue writ of mandamus to compel governor to perform ministerial duty.

Distinguished in State ex rel. Barricelli v. Noonan, 59 Mo. App. 526, holding that mandamus will lie to compel performance of duty by mayor of city.

Independence of different branches of government.

Cited in State ex rel. Crow v. Shepherd, 177 Mo. 236, 99 Am. St. Rep. 624, 76 S. W. 79, holding that legislature cannot abridge power of court to punish for contempt.

23 L. R. A. 196, WRIGHT v. WRIGHT, 99 Mich. 170, 58 N. W. 54.

Adoption of children.

Cited in Re Susman, 28 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 103, holding child adopted by parol agreement entitled to share in distribution of estate.

Distinguished in Renz v. Drury, 57 Kan. 88, 45 Pac. 71, holding rights of inheritance acquired by adopted children only by substantial compliance with statutes relating to adoption, where such statutes exist; Sarazin v. Union R. Co. 153 Mo. 486, 55 S. W. 92, holding that foster parent cannot recover for death of child, where deed of adoption is defective for want of acknowledgment.

Oral contract to convey property on death, or make will.

Cited in Svanburg v. Fosseen, 75 Minn. 359, 43 L. R. A. 431, footnote p. 427, 74 Am. St. Rep. 490, 78 N. W. 4, holding oral agreement to leave entire property at death to members of promisor's family rendered valid by their services and by selling land at sacrifice for promisor's benefit; Weeks v. Lund, 69 N. H. 83, 45 Atl. 249, holding performance by personal services insufficient to take oral contract to convey land out of statute of frauds; Quinn v. Quinn, 5 S. D. 336, 49 Am. St. Rep. 875, 58 N. W. 808, holding foster parent without power to deprive adopted child of property agreed to be given as consideration of adoption; Kofka v. Rosicky, 41 Neb. 347, 25 L. R. A. 213, 43 Am. St. Rep. 685, 59 N. W. 788, holding parol agreement by foster parents to leave adopted child all their property, enforceable; Owens v. McNally, 113 Cal. 449, 33 L. R. A. 372, footnote p. 369, 45 Pac. 710, holding oral contract to give niece property at death, enforceable after performance of services by her; Kofka v. Rosicky, 41 Neb. 347, 43 Am. St. Rep. 685, 59 N. W. 788, holding executed parol contract of foster parents to adopt and rear child and leave her their property upon death; enforceable; McCabe v. Healy, 138 Cal. 86, 70 Pac. 1008, holding executed oral contract to make will enforceable.

Cited in footnotes to Bryson v. McShane, 49 L. R. A. 527, which holds specifically enforceable, executed oral contract to give entire property for support during life and burial after death; Clancy v. Flusky, 52 L. R. A. 277, which authorizes specific performance of executed oral contract to convey land to son for taking care of father for life, though father left before death.

Disapproved in Martin v. Martin, 108 Wis. 289, 81 Am. St. Rep. 895, 84 N. W. 439, holding oral contract to convey property to adopted child void under statute of frauds.

23 L. R. A. 200, WILLIAMSON v. LOUISVILLE INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL OF REFORM, 95 Ky. 251, 44 Am. St. Rep. 243, 24 S. W. 1065.

Exemptions and liabilities of state and charitable institutions.

Cited in Herr v. Central Kentucky Lunatic Asylum, 97 Ky. 463, 28 L. R. A. 395, footnote p. 394, 53 Am. St. Rep. 414, 30 S. W. 971, authorizing injunction against nuisance maintained by charitable organization; Deaconess Home & Hospital v. Bontjes, 104 Ill. App. 492, sustaining injunction against continuance of charitable hospital next door to private residence on ground of nuisance, and referring particularly to annotation in 23 L. R. A. 200; State v. Laramie County, 8 Wyo. 134, 55 Pac. 451, holding state penitentiary not charitable institution within constitutional provision relating to exemption from taxation; Nicholson v. Detroit, 129 Mich. 256, 56 L. R. A. 605, 88 N. W. 695, holding city not liable for death of employee from smallpox contracted in tearing down smallpox hospital; Hearns v. Waterbury Hospital, 66 Conn. 121, 31 L. R. A. 231, footnote p. 224, 33 Atl. 595, denying liability of charitable hospital for wrongful neglect of servants; Powers v. Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital, 47 C. C. A. 128, 109 Fed. 300, holding charitable hospital not liable to pay patient for negligence of nurse; Williams v. Indianapolis, 26 Ind. App. 630, 60 N. E. 367, holding action not maintainable against city by patient of city hospital for damages for malpractice of hospital physician; White v. Alabama Insane Hospital, 138 Ala. 483, 35 So. 454, holding state insane hospital public charity not suable in tort under statute providing in general terms that it may be sued.

Cited in footnotes to Union P. R. Co. v. Artist, 23 L. R. A. 581, which holds railroad company not liable for malpractice of physician at hospital maintained for employees; Eighmy v. Union P. R. Co. 27 L. R. A. 296, which holds railroad company not liable for negligence of physicians in hospitals voluntarily maintained for injured employees; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 27 L. R. A. 840, which holds corporation gratuitously furnishing medical services to employees liable only for care in selecting physician; Hannon v. Siegel-Cooper Co. 52 L. R. A. 429, which holds department store estopped to deny responsibility for malpractice of dentist; Downs v. Harper Hospital, 25 L. R. A. 602, which denies liability of insane hospital for injury to inmate by negligence or tort of employees.

Distinguished in Gross v. Kentucky Bd. of Managers, 105 Ky. 846, 43 L. R. A. 704, 49 S. W. 458, holding Kentucky Board of Managers of World's Columbian Exposition liable for breach of contract; Texas & P. Coal Co. v. Connaughten, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 645, 50 S. W. 173, and Haggerty v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. 100 Mo. App. 443, 74 S. W. 456, holding master liable to servant for negligence of physician paid from compulsory fund raised by deduction from servants' wages.

23 L. R. A. 203, ANDERSON v. CHICAGO, ST. P. M. & O. R. CO. 87 Wis. 195, 58 N. W. 79.

Evidence of precautions to prevent repetition of accident.

Cited in Georgia Southern & F. R. Co. v. Cartledge, 116 Ga. 167, 59 L. R. A. 120, footnote p. 118, 42 S. E. 405, and Green v. Ashland Water Co. 101 Wis. 269, 43 L. R. A. 121, 70 Am. St. Rep. 911, 77 N. W. 722, holding evidence of precautions to prevent repetition of injuries inadmissible; Kreider v. Wisconsin River Paper & Pulp Co. 110 Wis. 650, 86 N. W. 662, holding evidence as to remedying of defects in machinery after accident incompetent on question of negligence.

Contributory negligence.

Cited in Vant v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 101 Wis. 367, 77 N. W. 713, holding it contributory negligence to cross railroad by much-frequented private way without looking.

Cited in footnote to Price v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 36 L. R. A. 213, which holds negligence of trespasser in sitting down on railroad track not excused by drunkenness.

Cited in note (40 L. R. A. 133) on intoxication as affecting negligence.

Implied licensees and trespassers on railroads.

Cited in Schug v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 102 Wis. 521, 78 N. W. 1090, holding unlawful use of tracks by pedestrians not proof of license by company; Felton v. Aubrey, 20 C. C. A. 446, 43 U. S. App. 278, 74 Fed. 361, holding higher degree of evidence requisite to establish license to walk on trestle or railroad bridge than on less dangerous place; Sheehan v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 22 C. C. A. 125, 46 U. S. App. 498, 76 Fed. 204, holding locomotive engineer not bound to be on lookout for trespassers.

Cited in footnotes to Ward v. Southern P. Co. 23 L. R. A. 715, which holds knowledge of frequent trespassing on railroad track without taking steps to prevent same not license to use track; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hammill, 24 L. R. A. 531, which holds duty owed to one using footway alongside railroad bridge in accordance with recognized custom; Neal v. Carolina C. R. Co. 49 L. R. A. 684, which denies liability for death of person on track by train running at excessive speed without ringing bell; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Potter, 56 L. R. A. 575, as to what constitutes license to cross railroad track at place other than public crossing.

Distinguished in Mason v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 89 Wis. 156, 61 N. W. 300, holding act making it unlawful to walk on railroad track inapplicable to licensed path about railroad grounds.

Last clear chance.

Cited in note (55 L. R. A. 463) on doctrine of last clear chance.

23 L. R. A. 208, ELLIOTT v. NEWPORT STREET R. CO. 18 R. I. 707, 28 Atl. 338, 31 Atl. 694.

Negligence causing injury to passenger.

Cited in Anderson v. City & Suburban R. Co. 42 Or. 509, 71 Pac. 659, holding it usually question for jury whether it is negligence in carrier to permit permanent obstructions to remain so close to tracks as to endanger safety of passengers.

Cited in footnote to Budd v. United Carriage Co. 27 L. R. A. 279, which holds burden of proving freedom from negligence on carrier on proof of injury to passenger from running and kicking of team on public carriage.

Contributory negligence.

Cited in Watson v. Portland & C. E. R. Co. 91 Me. 592, 44 L. R. A. 159, footnote p. 157, holding riding on front platform of electric car not negligence per se; Citizens Street R. Co. v. Hoffbauer, 23 Ind. App. 621, 56 N. E. 54, holding question of passenger's negligence in going upon running board at night to get transfer, while car was on wrong track, for jury; Cummings v. Worcester, L. & S. Street R. Co. 166 Mass. 223, 44 N. E. 126, holding that passenger on front platform of closed car, deliberately leaning out beyond car, cannot recover for injuries received thereby; Nicholas v. Peck, 21 R. I. 406, 43 Atl. 1038, holding it contributory negligence, as matter of law, knowingly to walk over unsafe portion of sidewalk; San Antonio Traction Co. v. Bryant, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 440, 70 S. W. 1015, holding passenger using running board of crowded open car, instead of aisle, to get to seat, not guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law.

Cited in footnotes to Fisher v. West Virginia & P. R. Co. 33 L. R. A. 69, which holds riding on car platform and refusing to go inside at request, negligence; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Baur, 45 L. R. A. 108, which holds standing on street car platform with back against dash-board not necessarily negligent; Sweetland v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 51 L. R. A. 783, which sustains rule forbidding passenger's riding on front platform of electric car; Third Ave. R. Co. v. Barton, 52 L. R. A. 471, which denies right of passenger on running board of street car to recover for injuries by contact with pillar near track, while passing around conductor, who was also on running board.

Amount of damages.

Cited in Blackwell v. O'Gorman Co. 22 R. I. 642, 49 Atl. 28, holding $10,000 verdict for severe and permanent injuries to woman not excessive.

23 L. R. A. 210, SINGER MFG. CO. v. FLEMING, 39 Neb. 679, 42 Am. St. Rep. 613, 58 N. W. 226.

Followed without special discussion in Bishop v. Middleton, 43 Neb. 12, 26 L. R. A. 447, footnote p. 445, 61 N. W. 129.

Title of act.

Cited in State ex rel. Green v. Power, 63 Neb. 499, 88 N. W. 769, holding title of act for "better protection of earnings of laborers, etc.," comprehensive enough to permit provisions for punishment of violations thereof.

Laws partly unconstitutional.

Cited in State ex rel. Wheeler v. Stuht, 52 Neb. 217, 71 N. W. 941, refusing to oust councilmen elected under act providing for government of metropolitan cities, on ground that detached portions were unconstitutional.

Rights of nonresident creditors.

Cited in Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. McDonald, 112 Ill. App. 402, holding foreign garnishment judgment obtained without personal service or appearance of debtor not bar to recovery of wages, exempt by law of state where earned.

Cited in footnotes to Ward v. Boyce, 36 L. R. A. 549, which holds trustee process in other state to reach note held by nonresident not personally served, ineffectual; Hawley v. Hurd, 52 L. R. A. 195, which sustains discrimination between banks in and out of state as to attachment of negotiable paper; Tootle v. Coleman, 57 L. R. A. 120, which holds right to garnish debtor not limited to situs of chose in action.

Cited in notes (36 L. R. A. 583) on debtor's right of action against creditor for debt in another jurisdiction in evasion of exemption laws of their domicile; (47 L. R. A. 134) on effect of judgment against garnishee to merge or satisfy liability of principal debtor.

23 L. R. A. 215, WOLCOTT v. HOLCOMB, 97 Mich. 361, 56 N. W. 837.

Charitable institutions.

Cited in State ex rel. Olsen v. Board of Control, 85 Minn. 193, 88 N. W. 533 (dissenting opinion), majority holding state normal schools charitable institutions within meaning of title to act.

Residence as affecting electoral and property rights.

Cited in Lawrence v. Leidigh, 58 Kan. 599, 62 Am. St. Rep. 631, 50 Pac. 600, and Re Registration of Voters, 21 Pa. Co. Ct. 478, 8 Pa. Dist. R. 17, holding that inmates of soldiers' home vote only in districts where they last resided; People ex rel. Saunders v. Hanna, 98 Mich. 516, 57 N. W. 738, and Powell v. Spackman, 7 Idaho, 705, 54 L. R. A. 383, 65 Pac. 503, holding inmates of soldiers' home from other townships not legal voters in township of home; Powell v. Spackman, 7 Idaho, 705, 54 L. R. A. 383, footnote p. 378, 65 Pac. 503, holding residence as voter not acquired by inmate of soldiers' home.

Cited in footnotes to People v. Cady, 25 L. R. A. 399, which denies power to gain residence as voter while irregularly committed to prison; Langhammer v. Munter, 27 L. R. A. 330, which denies necessity of voter having any particular "home;" Re Barry, 52 L. R. A. 831, which denies power of student for priesthood at Roman Catholic seminary to acquire residence as voter; Montgomery v. Lebanon, 54 L. R. A. 914, which holds farmer retaining country house as home not taxable in town where he goes to give children school privileges.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 480) on how far right to vote is absolute.

Distinguished in Cory v. Spencer, 67 Kan. 657, 63 L. R. A. 279, 73 Pac. 920, holding that inmate of soldiers' home may acquire residence there for voting purposes.

Ministerial duties of inspectors of election.

Cited in State ex rel. McMillan v. Sadler, 25 Nev. 175, 83 Am. St. Rep. 573, 58 Pac. 284, holding inspectors of election without power to refuse to receive vote of elector whose name is on check list, except on failure to prove identity.

23 L. R. A. 221, PEOPLE v. SHELDON, 139 N. Y. 251, 54 N. Y. S. R. 513, 36 Am. St. Rep. 690, 34 N. E. 785.

Combinations, agreements, and laws relating to trade.

Cited in Judd v. Harrington, 139 N. Y. 110, 34 N. E. 790, holding void, agreement for purpose of controlling market and suppressing competition in sale of meat; Cummings v. Union Blue Stone Co. 164 N. Y. 405, 52 L. R. A. 263, 79 Am. St. Rep. 655, 58 N. E. 525, Affirming 15 App. Div. 604, 44 N. Y. Supp. 787, holding agreement to sell all manufactured products of wholesale blue stone dealers and apportion profits void; People v. Milk Exchange, 145 N. Y. 272, 27 L. R. A. 440, 45 Am. St. Rep. 609, 39 N. E. 1062, Affirming 77 Hun, 437, 29 N. Y. Supp. 259, holding incorporated milk exchange, a combination of dealers and creamery men to control price of milk, illegal; People ex rel. Tyroler v. City Prison, 157 N. Y. 133, 43 L. R. A. 271, 68 Am. St. Rep. 763, 51 N. E. 1006, holding act prohibiting sale of tickets by scalpers unconstitutional; Re Davies, 168 N. Y. 101, 56 L. R. A. 860, 61 N. E. 118, holding that act of 1899 relating to suppression of monopolies authorized proceedings against illegal combinations formed before its passage; Drake v. Siebold, 81 Hun, 181, 30 N. Y. Supp. 697, holding agreement by association of retailers to fix uniform price of coal, followed by overt acts, criminal conspiracy; Cohen v. Berlin & J. Envelope Co. 38 App. Div. 500, 56 N. Y. Supp. 588, holding agreement to insure protection against ruinous competition valid; John D. Park & Sons Co. v. National Wholesale Druggists' Asso. 175 N. Y. 34, 62 L. R. A. 647, 96 Am. St. Rep. 578, 67 N. E. 136 (dissenting opinion), Affirming 54 App. Div. 231 note, Which Affirmed 30 Misc. 679, 64 N. Y. Supp. 276, majority upholding agreement between manufacturers of proprietary drugs and wholesalers, to fix prices and refrain from selling to dealers who would not comply with terms; Export Lumber Co. v. South Brooklyn Sawmill Co. 54 App. Div. 521, 67 N. Y. Supp. 626, upholding contract between lumber dealers to account for and divide profits of their export business; Re Atty. Gen. 21 Misc. 106, 47 N. Y. Supp. 20, upholding constitutionality of act to prevent monopolies in articles of general necessity; Excelsior Quilting Co. v. Creter, 36 Misc. 700, 74 N. Y. Supp. 361, holding valid, agreement to make no more of certain kind of machine, patents having all expired; Booth v. Seibold, 37 Misc. 103, 74 N. Y. Supp. 776, upholding agreement for discontinuance of fish business, limited as to territory and time; Brown v. Jacobs' Pharmacy Co. 115 Ga. 435, 57 L. R. A. 551, footnote p. 548, 90 Am. St. Rep. 126, 41 S. E. 553, sustaining right to injunction against combination of merchants to prevent sales to other dealers unless selling at fixed prices; State ex rel. Crow v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. 152 Mo. 47, 45 L. R. A. 377, 52 S. W. 595, upholding constitutionality of law forbidding combinations to fix insurance rates; West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Standard Oil Co. 50 W. Va. 620, 56 L. R. A. 809, 88 Am. St. Rep. 895, 40 S. E. 591, holding combination of several to do lawful act not actionable, although injury result; State ex rel. Durner v. Huegin, 110 Wis. 253, 62 L. R. A. 742, 85 N. W. 1046, upholding power of legislature to make civilly or criminally liable, participants in malicious combination to injure another; Continental Ins. Co. v. Fire Underwriters, 67 Fed. 318, upholding legality of combination of underwriters for regulation of premium rates, rebates, and compensation of agents; United States v. Addyston Pipe & Steel Co. 46 L. R. A. 134, 29 C. C. A. 157, 54 U. S. App. 723, 85 Fed. 288, holding agreement between iron pipe manufacturers, reserving territory to different members of association free from competition, illegal; People v. McFarlin, 43 Misc. 601, 89 N. Y. Supp. 527, holding agreement to purchase materials only from factories approved of by labor unions, illegal; Walsh v. Association of Master Plumbers, 97 Mo. App. 294, 71 S. W. 455 holding agreement between plumbers' association and dealers and manufacturers for purpose of fixing prices and limiting production, illegal; Ferd Heim Brewing Co. v. Belinder, 97 Mo. App. 70, 71 S. W. 691, holding illegal, agreement by breweries not to sell beer to anyone in debt to any other member of the combination; State ex rel. Crow v. Armour Packing Co. 173 Mo. 387, 61 L. R. A. 473, footnote p. 464, 96 Am. St. Rep. 515, 73 S. W. 645, holding unlawful combination to fix prices shown by acts of competing dealers.

Cited in footnotes to United States v. E. C. Knight Co. 24 L. R. A. 428, which holds monopoly not involved in control of business of refining and selling sugar; Hawarden v. Youghioghenny & L. Coal Co. 55 L. R. A. 828, which sustains retail coal dealer's right of action against wholesalers and favored retailers, combining to drive other retailers out of business; Com. v. Grinstead, 56 L. R. A. 709, which holds agreement not to resell goods at less than specified price not with statute for suppression of conspiracies.

Cited in notes (21 L. R. A. 798) on constitutionality of statutes restricting contracts and business; (64 L. R. A. 731) on illegal trusts under modern anti-trust laws.

23 L. R. A. 227, MEAD v. STIRLING, 62 Conn. 586, 27 Atl. 591.

Rights of members of voluntary associations to invoke aid of courts.

Cited in Lawson v. Hewell, 118 Cal. 619, 49 L. R. A. 402, 50 Pac. 763, holding that courts will not restrain voluntary society from trial of member according to its rules for breach of discipline.

Cited in footnote to Supreme Lodge, O. G. C. v. Simering, 41 L. R. A. 720, which sustains right to injunction against excluding representative from right to vote in supreme lodge of benefit society.

23 L. R. A. 231, CHICAGO & I. COAL R. CO. v. HALL, 135 Ind. 91, 34 N. E. 704.

Liabilities of consolidated and other corporations.

Cited in Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Robbins, 144 Ind. 678, 42 N. E. 916, holding corporation assuming liability of another to specified amount not bound beyond such amount; New York Security & T. Co. v. Louisville, E. & St. L. Consol. R. Co. 102 Fed. 393, holding that effect of consolidation of railroad corporation is to bind consolidated company for indebtedness of all constituent companies; Midland R. Co. v. Galey, 141 Ind. 486, 39 N. E. 940, holding consolidated corporation liable for damages for appropriation of land for right of way by old company; Southern R. Co. v. Gregg, 101 Va. 315, 43 S. E. 570, holding corporations purchasing railroad liable for unpaid award in condemnation proceedings instituted by company building road.

Cited in footnotes to Southern R. Co. v. Bouknight, 30 L. R. A. 823, which authorizes holding consolidated railroad company responsible for acts and neglects of constituent members; Austin v. Tecumseh Nat. Bank, 35 L. R. A. 444, which holds new corporation liable for obligations of predecessor only when transaction fraudulent; Lamkin v. Baldwin & L. Mfg. Co. 44 L. R. A. 786, which holds taxes against partnership not payable from assets of corporation subsequently formed, till corporate debts paid; Morgan v. Randolph-Clowes Co. 51 L. R. A. 653, which denies right of firm creditor to sue corporation assuming firm debts; Capital Traction Co. v. Offutt, 53 L. R. A. 390, which denies liability of street railway company for debts of other company whose property and franchises bought; Combes v. Milwaukee & M. R. Co. 27 L. R. A. 369, which denies right to sue corporation divested of property and franchises by judicial sale.

Cited in note (52 L. R. A. 391) on right of corporations to consolidate.

Claim for payment in condemnation proceeding.

Cited in Coburn v. Sands, 150 Ind. 146, 48 N. E. 786, holding claim for payment of appropriated land superior to any subsequent lien.

Remedies of owner after taking of land.

Cited in Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Harper, 11 Ind. App. 487, 37 N. E. 41, holding owner acquiescing in appropriation of land by railroad company not bound to proceed under special statute for assessment of damages; Chicago, I. & E. R. Co. v. Patterson, 26 Ind. App. 298, 59 N. E. 688, holding appearance in statutory proceeding and exception to award not waiver of right of independent action.

23 L. R. A. 239, ROSHOLT v. MEHUS, 3 N. D. 513, 57 N. W. 783.

Right to homestead.

Cited in Brady v. Kreuger, 8 S. D. 470, 59 Am. St. Rep. 771, 66 N. W. 1083, holding wife's homestead rights extinguished by divorce; Moore v. Ward, 107 Tenn. 734, 64 S. W. 1087, denying right of wife after divorce to assert right of homestead in independent suit; Barkman v. Barkman, 209 Ill. 275, 70 N. E. 652, holding that homestead estate remains in husband where divorce decree is silent as to its disposition.

Cited in footnotes to Stern v. Lee, 26 L. R. A. 814, which holds exemption of homestead continues after conveyance in fee during minority of youngest child; Duffy v. Harris, 40 L. R. A. 750, which holds homestead rights of widow not forfeited by her previous abandonment of husband and living with other man.

Binding effect of decree of divorce on property rights.

Cited in Baird v. Connell, 121 Iowa, 291, 96 N. W. 863, holding adjudication of property rights between husband and wife in divorce action, bar to subsequent action by wife to recover part of property.

23 L. R. A. 244, SPRINGER v. BYRAM, 137 Ind. 15, 45 Am. St. Rep. 159, 36 N. E. 361.

Right to affirm correct judgment on independent grounds.

Cited in Abbitt v. Lake Erie & W. R. W. Co. 150 Ind. 512, 50 N. E. 729, holding that decision of general term may be followed on appeal, if correct, although reasons given below be insufficient.

Privileged communications.

Cited in Warsaw v. Fisher, 24 Ind. App. 48, 55 N. E. 42, holding plaintiff not deprived of benefit of rule against admission of confidential communications to physician, by suing corporation for damages; Masons Union L. Ins. Asso. v. Brockman, 26 Ind. App. 188, 59 N. E. 401, holding conversations between patient and physician in presence of third persons not privileged.

Admissibility of statements made in presence of another.

Cited in Leach v. Dickerson, 14 Ind. App. 376, 42 N. E. 1031, holding statement made in presence of another not admissible unless made in his hearing Injury to elevator passengers.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 33) on liability for injury to elevator passengers.

23 L. R. A. 250, SCHMITZ v. ST. LOUIS, I. M. & S. R. CO. 119 Mo. 256, 24 S. W. 472.

Second appeal in 55 Mo. App. 577.

Degree of care required to prevent accidents on railroad track.

Cited in Covell v. Wabash R. Co. 82 Mo. App. 186, holding witness properly allowed to testify that no whistle was blown near crossing, although not required by ordinance.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 790) on care required of railroad companies to prevent injuring small children on track.

Distinguished in Melton v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 99 Mo. App. 287, 73 S. W. 231, holding carrier not bound to give warning of approaching train to one driving in highway parallel to railway.

Admissibility of depositions.

Cited in Benjamin v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 133 Mo. 287, 34 S. W. 590, holding fact that nonresident witness is within jurisdiction of court not ground for exclusion of deposition; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Ullman, 137 Mo. 571, 38 S. W. 458, holding deposition of witness present in courtroom properly excluded.

Contributory negligence of children.

Cited in Anderson v. Union Terminal R. Co. 161 Mo. 424, 61 S. W. 874, holding child of eleven not negligent in crossing tracks, if acting as might be reasonably expected of one of his age and capacity; Krenzer v. Pittsburg, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 151 Ind. 600, 68 Am. St. Rep. 252, 52 N. E. 220 (dissenting opinion), majority holding boy aged seven and a half years, going to sleep on railroad tracks, guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law; Rogers v. Meyerson Printing Co. 103 Mo. App. 688, 78 S. W. 79, holding lesser degree of care required of child than of adult.

Erroneous instruction invited by appellant.

Cited in Horgan v. Brady, 155 Mo. 670, 56 S. W. 294; Seckinger v. Philibert & J. Mfg. Co. 129 Mo. 602, 31 S. W. 957, holding that appellant cannot complain of erroneous instruction invited by himself.

Harmless instructions.

Cited in Green v. Cole, 127 Mo. 615, 30 S. W. 135, dissenting opinion by Barclay, J., who holds erroneous instruction not ground for reversal, where more favorable to appellant than he was entitled to; Blackwell v. Hill, 76 Mo. App. 52, holding that no ground for reversal exists where instructions, taken together, state correct principle of law.

Mental anguish as element of damages.

Cited in St. Louis Trust Co. v. Murmann, 90 Mo. App. 561, holding person entitled to recover for mental anguish caused by physical injury.

Prospective damages.

Cited in Schmitz v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 55 Mo. App. 577, sustaining verdict for loss of services of minor on proof of loss of earning capacity by injury; Blackwell v. Hill, 76 Mo. App. 55, holding direct evidence not necessary to establish amount parent entitled to for loss of services of child; Dunn v. Northeast Electric R. Co. 81 Mo. App. 44, holding value of boy's earning capacity after reaching maturity, question for jury, without direct proof; Pryor v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 85 Mo. App. 373, holding loss of prospective profits of contractor not element of damages resulting from injury.

Practice as to objection to excessiveness of verdict on finding.

Cited in Minton v. Steele, 125 Mo. 196, 28 S. W. 746, holding objection to excessive verdict in ejectment must be taken in trial court to be available on appeal; Lilly v. Menke, 126 Mo. 231, 28 S. W. 994, dissenting opinion by Barclay, J., who holds objection to excessive award in petition not available unless assigned on ground of motion for new trial; Corrigan v. Kansas City, 93 Mo. App. 176, holding that excessive finding as to damages must be called to trial court's attention to be available on appeal.

Crossing between cars extending over public way.

Cited in Littlejohn v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 49 S. C. 16, 26 S. E. 967, holding person injured while attempting to climb between cars at crossing, to be "person injured in his person or property by collision with engines or cars" at crossing.

23 L. R. A. 258, POLLEY v. JOHNSON, 52 Kan. 478, 35 Pac. 8.

Rights in growing crops.

Cited in Voils v. Battin, 6 Kan. App. 743, 50 Pac. 940, and Mabry v. Harp, 53 Kan. 400, 36 Pac. 743, holding growing crops to be personal property; Strawhacker v. Ives, 114 Iowa, 663, 87 N. W. 669, holding that leasehold interest of judgment debtor may be levied on after assignment of growing crops; Sims v. Jones, 54 Neb. 772, 69 Am. St. Rep. 749, 75 N. W. 150, holding that interest of landlord and tenant in growing crops, where portion is reserved for rent, may be levied on; Phillips v. Keysaw, 7 Okla. 681, 56 Pac. 695, holding one holding land by adverse possession entitled to growing crops harvested before ouster; Johns v. Kamarad, 2 Herdman (Neb.) 158, 96 N. W. 118, holding growing crops subject to levy irrespective of stage of growth.

Cited in footnotes to Bagley v. Columbus Southern R. Co. 34 L. R. A. 286, which holds growing crops part of land for purposes of jurisdiction; Riddle v. Dow, 32 L. R. A. 811, which holds rights of mortgagee of lessor's interest in crops raised by tenant superior to subsequent garnishment proceedings.

Cited in note (23 L. R. A. 477) on sale or mortgage of future crops.

Distinguished in Tipton v. Martzell, 21 Wash. 274, 75 Am. St. Rep. 838, 57 Pac. 806, holding growing crop planted by tenant under contract with landlord to harvest and deliver one third, not subject to levy under execution.

23 L. R. A. 264, LEEP v. ST. LOUIS, I. M. & S. R. CO. 58 Ark. 407, 41 Am. St. Rep. 109, 25 S. W. 75.

Statutes affecting property rights and right to contract.

Cited in Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 105, 29 L. R. A. 82, 46 Am. St. Rep. 315, 40 N. E. 454, holding statute forbidding women to work more than eight hours a day unconstitutional; Re Morgan, 26 Colo. 447, 47 L. R. A. 65, 77 Am. St. Rep. 269, 58 Pac. 1071, and Low v. Rees Printing Co. 41 Neb. 146, 24 L. R. A. 710, 43 Am. St. Rep. 670, 59 N. W. 362, declaring eight-hour law unconstitutional; State ex rel. Zillmer v. Kreutzberg, 114 Wis. 542, 58 L. R. A. 754, 91 Am. St. Rep. 934, 90 N. W. 1098, holding legislature without power to forbid discharge of employee because member of labor organization; Dugger v. Mechanics' & T. Ins. Co. 95 Tenn. 252, 28 L. R. A. 798, 32 S. W. 5, holding act making void, stipulations limiting insurance liability to three fourths of loss not interference with freedom to contract; McFadden v. Blocker (Ind. Terr.) 58 L. R. A. 896, 54 S. W. 873, upholding chattel mortgage registry act applicable to residents of territory only; Carson v. St. Francis Levee District, 59 Ark. 528, 27 S. W. 590, upholding constitutionality of delegation to levee board of power to tax property specially benefited by levee; Dennis v. Moses, 18 Wash. 592, 40 L. R. A. 314, 32 Pac. 333, holding act requiring mortgaged property to be appraised, and forbidding sale at less than 80 per cent of appraised value, constitutional; Callahan v. St. Louis, Merchants' Bridge Terminal R. Co. 170 Mo. 492, 60 L. R. A. 254, 94 Am. St. Rep. 746, 71 S. W. 208, upholding fellow-servant act imposing liability on railroads for injury to servants by negligence of fellow servants in operating railroad; Kansas City, P. & G. R. Co. v. Moon, 66 Ark. 413, 50 S. W. 996, reaffirming constitutionality of act requiring railroad corporations to pay employee wages due upon discharge; Woodson v. State, 69 Ark. 528, 65 S. W. 465, upholding constitutionality of act requiring corporations to weigh coal before screening; Com. v. Brown, 8 Pa. Super. Ct. 355, 43 W. N. C. 75, 8 Atl. 339, holding act requiring weighing of coal before screening unconstitutional; Bienville Water Supply Co. v. Mobile, 186 U. S. 221, 46 L. ed. 1136, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 820, upholding right of legislature to amend or revoke charter not granting exclusive water privileges.

Cited in footnote to People ex rel. Nechamcus v. City Prison, 27 L. R. A. 718, which upholds act requiring examination of and certificate from employing or master plumbers.

Cited in notes (28 L. R. A. 344) on validity and effect of statutes regulating time of payment of wages; (60 L. R. A. 323) on constitutional equality in United States in relation to corporate taxation.

Distinguished in Opinion of Justices, 163 Mass. 591, 28 L. R. A. 345, 40 N. E. 713, holding that legislature may require employers to pay employees weekly; Tullis v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 175 U. S. 351, 44 L. ed. 194, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 136, upholding constitutionality of Indiana employers' liability act of 1893; State v. Haun, 61 Kan. 176, 47 L. R. A. 379, 59 Pac. 340 (dissenting opinion), Reversing 7 Kan. App. 520, 54 Pac. 130, majority holding act requiring payment of employees in money, draft, or check, unconstitutional; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Paul, 173 U. S. 406, Affirming 64 Ark. 85, 37 L. R. A. 505, 62 Am. St. Rep. 154, 40 S. W. 705, holding equal protection of law not denied by act imposing penalty on railroad corporation for failure to pay employees on day of discharge.

Laws partly good and partly bad. •

Cited in Verdin v. St. Louis, 131 Mo. 138, 33 S. W. 480, holding ordinance providing for paving and maintenance thereof, though void as to maintenance should be upheld as to paving.

Disapproved in Ballard v. Mississippi Cotton Oil Co. 81 Miss. 572, 62 L. R. A. 417, 34 So. 533, holding court only authorized to sever parts of statute, where constitutional and unconstitutional provisions, not interdependent, exist on its face.

Reasonable doubt as to validity of statute.

Cited in State v. Foster, 22 R. I. 172, 50 L. R. A. 343, 46 Atl. 833, holding that reasonable doubt as to validity of statute must be resolved in favor of its validity.

Actions for statutory damages.

Cited in St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Pickett, 70 Ark. 228, 67 S. W. 870, holding separate action maintainable by railway employee to recover statutory damages for failure of company to pay wages on day of discharge.

23 L. R. A. 278, FLORER v. SHERIDAN, 137 Ind. 28, 36 N. E. 365.

Collection of omitted personalty taxes.

Cited in Reynolds v. Bowen, 138 Ind. 451, 36 N. E. 756, refusing cancelation of taxes against decedent's estate under act permitting assessments of omitted property.

Deduction of debts from credits.

Cited in First Nat. Bank v. Turner, 154 Ind. 465, 57 N. E. 110, holding bona fide indebtedness of national bank stockholder not deductible from assessed value of stock for taxation; State ex rel. Lewis v. Smith, 158 Ind. 553, 63 L. R. A. 121, 63 N. E. 25, holding statute authorizing deduction of mortgage indebtedness not exceeding $700, from assessed valuation of real estate for purpose of taxation, constitutional.

Cited in note (60 L. R. A. 321) on constitutional equality in United States in relation to corporate taxation.

Distinguished in Deniston v. Terry, 141 Ind. 684, 41 N. E. 143, holding paid-up stock in building association taxable.

23 L. R. A. 283, BITTLE v. CAMDEN & A. R. CO. 55 N. J. L. 615, 28 Atl. 305.

Liability for frightening horses by operation of railroad.

Cited in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 107 Ky. 183, 53 S. W. 269, holding carrier's continuing to blow whistle after noticing horses would thereby be frightened not justified when statute permitted ringing of bell; Weil v. St. Louis S. W. R. Co. 64 Ark. 538, 43 S. W. 967, holding railroad company liable for frightening horse by needless and negligent blowing of whistle; Race v. Easton & A. R. Co. 62 N. J. L. 538, 41 Atl. 710, holding that in case of indirect injury resulting from blowing of whistle, facts showing negligence should be pleaded.

Cited in footnotes to Mitchell v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 40 L. R. A. 426, which holds blowing locomotive whistle under much used bridge, negligence; Omaha & R. Valley R. Co. v. Clarke, 23 L. R. A. 504, which holds railroad company not liable for frightening horse by escape of steam from engine; McCann v. Consolidated Traction Co. 38 L. R. A. 236, which holds running tank car on street railway track, with black coats waving from it, frightening horse, negligence; Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Montgomery, 57 L. R. A. 781, which requires railroad company operating railroad bridge as toll bridge, to keep lookout to prevent frightening teams by trains.

When question of negligence is for jury.

Cited in State Consolidated Traction Co., Prosecutor, v. Reeves, 58 N. J. L.

577, 34 Atl. 128, holding proper, trial court's refusal to take disputable question of negligence from jury; Day v. Donohue, 62 N. J. L. 382, 41 Atl. 934, holding nonsuit improper where conclusion of fact one about which reasonable men might honestly differ.

Proximate cause of injury.

Cited in footnote to Snyder v. Philadelphia Co. 63 L. R. A. 896, which holds negligent blowing off of gas well proximate cause of injury to teamster whose horses were frightened, although one of his lines broke because of insufficiency.

23 L. R. A. 287, ELLIS'S APPEAL, 55 Minn. 401, 43 Am. St. Rep. 514, 56 N. W. 1056.

Foreign divorces.

Cited in Andrews v. Andrews, 176 Mass. 95, 57 N. E. 333, holding, under statute, that Dakota decree of divorce may be held void on collateral attack; Starbuck v. Starbuck, 173 N. Y. 508, 93 Am. St. Rep. 631, 66 N. E. 193, holding that plaintiff in action for dower cannot impeach decree of divorce, obtained by her in another state, husband not appearing; Re Swales, 60 App. Div. 603, 70 N. Y. Supp. 220, holding decree of divorce obtained by woman in court of another state not impeachable by her to obtain administration on former husband's estate.

Cited in footnotes to Clutton v. Clutton, 31 L. R. A. 160, which authorizes divorce on cross-bill to nonresident defendant in suit by resident; Lynde v. Lynde, 48 L. R. A. 679, which holds binding judgment authorized against defendant voluntarily appearing without reservation in divorce proceeding; Arrington v. Arrington, 52 L. R. A. 201, which holds foreign decree for alimony after defendant's appearance entitled to full faith and credit; Kempson v. Kempson, 58 L. R. A. 484, which sustains jurisdiction in state where parties married and wife resides, of suit to enjoin fraudulent divorce suit by husband in other state.

Cited in notes (57 L. R. A. 593) on right to contest validity of divorce decree after death of one or both of parties; (59 L. R. A. 144, 183, 185) on conflict of laws on subject of divorce.

Domicil of wife for purpose of divorce.

Cited in footnote to Atherton v. Atherton, 40 L. R. A. 291, which holds matrimonial domicil of wife leaving husband for cruelty may be changed by removal to other state.

23 L. R. A. 294, SHAW v. DAVIS, 78 Md. 308, 28 Atl. 619.

Power of courts over corporations or associations.

Cited in DuPuy v. Transportation & Terminal Co. 82 Md. 426, 33 Atl. 889, upholding power of courts to protect stockholder from fraudulent, illegal, and ultra vires acts of corporation officers; Dailey v. Wight, 94 Md. 276, 51 Atl. 38, refusing to remove trustee of stock, because he was voted salary as president of corporation; Ryan v. Williams, 100 Fed. 174, refusing preliminary injunction to restrain measures for consolidation in anticipation of statute authorizing it; Supreme Lodge, O. G. C. v. Simering, 88 Md. 288, 41 L. R. A. 722, 71 Am. St. Rep. 409, 40 Atl. 723, upholding power of court to enjoin supreme lodge of fraternal association from excluding qualified representatives from right to vote; United States Steel Corp. v. Hodge, 64 N. J. Eq. 816, 60 L. R. A. 748, footnote p. 742, 54 N. E. 1, holding all stockholders bound by all proceedings sanctioned by vote of majority stockholders, taken and ascertained according to law.

Distinguished in Urner v. Sollenberger, 89 Md. 333, 43 Atl. 810, holding defense of fraudulently created debts not available on suit against stockholder for unpaid subscription.

Personal interest of stockholders in matters voted on.

Cited in Worth Mfg. Co. v. Bingham, 54 C. C. A. 125, 116 Fed. 791, holding stockholder not forbidden to vote upon propriety of sale of property merely because interested in it.

23 L. R. A. 301, ATLANTA v. WARNOCK, 91 Ga. 210, 44 Am. St. Rep. 17, 18 S. E. 135.

Nuisances.

Cited in Holmes v. Atlanta, 113 Ga. 962, 39 S. E. 458, holding discharge of polluted surface waters by city drainage system upon premises of private citizen, actionable; Waycross v. Houk, 113 Ga. 965, 39 S. E. 577, holding nuisance by discharge of sewage from sewerage system of city, actionable; Carmichael v. Texarkana, 94 Fed. 572, holding municipal corporation liable for discharge of sewage on land of individual; Pierce v. Gibson County, 107 Tenn. 233, 55 L. R. A. 481, 89 Am. St. Rep. 946, 64 S. W. 33, holding that county may be enjoined from construction and operation of sewer system discharging upon private property; Fuchs v. St. Louis, 167 Mo. 637, 57 L. R. A. 141, 67 S. W. 610, holding city not bound to open vents leading to sewers to permit escape of gases.

Cited in footnotes to Lowe v. Prospect Hill Cemetery Asso. 46 L. R. A. 237, which authorizes injunction against interment in cemetery when likely to pollute and poison water in wells in vicinity; Hughes v. Auburn, 46 L. R. A. 636, which denies city's liability for disease due to neglect of proper sanitary precautions as to sewer system.

Injunction to prevent diversion of stream.

Cited in Goodrich v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 115 Ga. 345, 41 S. E. 659, holding that injunction may issue to prevent wrongful diversion of stream by upper proprietor.

23 L. R. A. 305, BRADLEY v. THOMPSON SMITH'S SONS, 98 Mich. 449, 39 Am. St. Rep. 565, 57 N. W. 576.

Right of set-off.

Cited in Koegel v. Michigan Trust Co. 117 Mich. 544, 76 N. W. 74, holding assignment of rent to become due in future, not subject to have debt due from assignor before assignment set off against it; Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Woodell, 38 Or. 313, 61 Pac. 837, holding instalment due on contract for raising sugar beets subject to set-off of damages at maturity of instalment for failure to care for crop.

Cited in footnote to Bacon v. Reich, 49 L. R. A. 311, which holds original cause of action for breach of contract not merged in judgment preventing set-off.

Cited in note (23 L. R. A. 313) on right to set off insolvent's obligation on claim in hands of his receiver, assignee, or trustee for creditors.

Distinguished in Johnston v. Humphrey, 91 Wis. 81, 51 Am. St. Rep. 873, 64 N. W. 317, allowing debtor of insolvent bank set-off of certificates purchased after bank had closed doors.

23 L. R. A. 313, MERRILL v. CAPE ANN GRANITE CO. 161 Mass. 212, 36 N. E. 797.

Right of set-off or counterclaim.

Cited in Colton v. Drivers' Perpetual Bldg. & L. Asso. 90 Md. 91, 46 L. R. A. 391, 78 Am. St. Rep. 431, 45 Atl. 23, holding depositor entitled to set off amount of deposit against indebtedness on note after appointment of receiver of bank.

Cited in footnotes to Davis v. Industrial Mfg. Co. 23 L. R. A. 322, which requires receiver of insolvent bank to give debtor credit for sums due from bank; Fidelity & D. Co. v. Haines, 23 L. R. A. 652, which denies right to interpose existing counterclaim against assignor for creditors, to subsequent claim in favor of assignee; Niblack v. Park Nat. Bank, 39 L. R. A. 159, which denies bank's right to appropriate fund to own claim against deposit after presentation by holder of check constituting equitable assignment of fund; Re Hatch 40 L. R. A. 664, which holds claim accruing in favor of assignee for creditors on contract with assignor subject to set-off against claim due from assignor before assignment; Lauraglen Mills v. Ruff, 49 L. R. A. 448, which denies stockholder's right to set off corporate obligation against liability as shareholder in action at law; Meherin v. Ambrose, 54 L. R. A. 272, which denies right of creditor bidding in debtor's property at execution sale to set off claim against amount of bid; Fidelity Ins. Trust & S. D. Co. v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank, 56 L. R. A. 228, which sustains stockholder's right to set off, in action to enforce liability in Federal court in other state, debt due him from corporation.

Cited in notes (25 L. R. A. 548) on exceptions to prohibition of preferences by insolvent national banks; (55 L. R. A. 77) on set-off in bankruptcy cases.

23 L. R. A. 322, DAVIS v. INDUSTRIAL MFG. CO. 114 N. C. 321, 19 S. E. 371.
Necessity of notice or demand.

Cited in Arnold v. Hart, 75 Ill. App. 172, holding right to notice or demand by depositors for deposit waived by discontinuance of bank; Meadowcroft v. People, 163 Ill. 83, 35 L. R. A. 186, 54 Am. St. Rep. 447, 45 N. E. 303, holding proof of demand not necessary in criminal prosecution of banker receiving deposit with knowledge of insolvency.

Rights adjustable in single action.

Cited in Parrish v. Graham, 129 N. C. 231, 39 S. E. 825, holding that issue whether indorsers were cosureties should be submitted in action against maker and indorser of note.

Right to set-off.

Cited in Thompson v. Union Trust Co. 130 Mich. 513, 97 Am. St. Rep. 494, 90 N. W. 294, upholding right of depositor to set off deposit against his unmatured notes to insolvent bank.

Actions maintainable by receivers.

Cited in Smathers v. West Carolina Bank, 135 N. C. 413, 47 S. E. 893, holding action maintainable by receiver to enforce double liability of stockholders of corporation.

23 L. R. A. 325, VANN v. MARBURY, 100 Ala. 438, 46 Am. St. Rep. 70, 14 So. 273.

Negotiable paper held as collateral.

Cited in footnote to Birket v. Elward, 64 L. R. A. 568, which holds indorsee of negotiable note taken as collateral security for pre-existing debt, holder for value in due course of business.

Purchase of property mortgaged to secure payment of notes.

Cited in First Nat. Bank v. Sproull, 105 Ala. 281, 16 So. 879, holding buyer of part of property mortgaged to secure payment of notes, without inquiry as to ownership or payments of notes and mortgage, not bona fide purchaser.

Right to set-off.

Cited in footnotes to Adams v. Spokane Drug Co. 23 L. R. A. 334, which holds bank receiver takes immature notes subject to maker's right to set off deposit; Niblack v. Park Nat. Bank, 39 L. R. A. 159, which denies bank's right to appropriate fund to own claim against deposit after presentation by holder of check constituting equitable assignment of fund.

Cited in notes (23 L. R. A. 306) on set-off against assigned claim of debtor's demand against assignor; (23 L. R. A. 320) on right to set off insolvent's obligation on claim in hands of his receiver or assignee or trustee for creditors.

23 L. R. A. 334, ADAMS v. SPOKANE DRUG CO. 57 Fed. 888.

Right to set-off.

Cited in Thompson v. Union Trust Co. 130 Mich. 513, 97 Am. St. Rep. 494, 90 N. W. 294, upholding right of depositor to set off deposit against his unmatured notes to insolvent bank.

23 L. R. A. 335, BENSON v. HAYWOOD, 86 Iowa, 107, 53 N. W. 85.

Rule as to parol evidence offered to vary written instrument.

Distinguished in De Goey v. Van Wyk, 97 Iowa, 496, 66 N. W. 787, holding rule prohibiting parol evidence to vary consideration shown by written instrument not applicable to third persons not parties thereto.

Attorneys' liens and right of set-off against judgments.

Cited in footnotes to Roberts v. Mitchell, 29 L. R. A. 705, which holds right to set off independent judgments subject to attorney's liens; Cleveland v. McCanna, 41 L. R. A. 852, which denies set-off of judgment, where entire property of one debtor less than statute exempts from seizure; Bacon v. Reich, 49 L. R. A. 311, which holds original cause of action for breach of contract not merged in judgment preventing set-off; Loofbourow v. Hicks, 55 L. R. A. 874, which holds lien for attorney's fees allowed by judgment of foreclosure enforceable against land bid in by mortgagee or assignee.

23 L. R. A. 340, STATE ex rel. REED v. JONES, 6 Wash. 452, 34 Pac. 231.

Conclusiveness of enrolled bills and elections.

Cited in State ex rel. Bray v. Long, 21 Mont. 35, 52 Pac. 645, holding that courts will not go behind enrolled bill to ascertain whether legislative forms have been observed; Narregang v. Brown County, 14 S. D. 365, 85 N. W. 602; State ex rel. Osburn v. Beck, 25 Nev. 81, 56 Pac. 1008; Lafferty v. Huffman, 99 Ky. 90, 32 L. R. A. 206, footnote p. 203, 35 S. W. 123,—holding duly enrolled bill not impeachable by reference to house journals; Coler v. Stanly County, 89 Fed. 263, holding, under constitutional provision, fact that legislative journals contain yea and nay vote on tax law must be affirmatively shown; Parmeter v. Bourne, 8 Wash. 56, 35 Pac. 586 (distinguished in dissenting opinion), majority holding court without jurisdiction to enjoin removal of county seat on ground of fraud in election; Krieschel v. Snohomish County, 12 Wash. 440, 41 Pac. 186 (dissenting opinion), majority upholding court's jurisdiction to enjoin county commissioners from declaring result of election contrary to law.

Cited in footnotes to Carr v. Coke, 28 L. R. A. 737, which denies power of court to interfere with printing statute on ground of fraud in procuring enrollment of bill and signature thereto; Cohn v. Kingsley, 38 L. R. A. 74, which requires journals to show compliance with mandatory provision as to enacting bills by yea and nay vote after three several readings; Stanly County v. Snuggs, 39 L. R. A. 439, which holds fatal, omission to enter yeas and nays in journal on second and third readings on bill authorizing tax; State ex rel. Cheyenne v. Swan, 40 L. R. A. 195, which sustains court's right to examine journals to determine whether alleged statutes properly passed; People v. Dettenthaler, 44 L. R. A. 164, which holds void, bill in which enacting clause added without authority by clerk of one branch of legislature; Montgomery Beer Bottling Works v. Gaston, 51 L. R. A. 396, which holds permanent record delivered to secretary of state to be legislative journal.

Unconstitutionality of statute as defense to mandamus.

Cited in note (47 L. R. A. 519) on unconstitutionality of statute as defense against mandamus to compel its enforcement.

23 L. R. A. 354, ATTY. GEN. ex rel. WERTS v. ROGERS, 56 N. J. L. 480, 28 Atl. 726, 29 Atl. 173.

Judicial powers.

Cited in Wanser v. Hoos, 60 N. J. L. 524, 64 Am. St. Rep. 600, 38 Atl. 449, holding construction and force to be given constitutional provisions, question for court; Bott v. Wurts, 63 N. J. L. 294, 45 L. R. A. 254, 43 Atl. 744, 881, upholding power of court to consider whether legislative department and agencies have observed requirements of Constitution in attempting amendments; State ex rel. McClurg v. Powell, 77 Miss. 571, 48 L. R. A. 656, 27 So. 927, holding question whether submission or adoption of amendment to Constitution is legal, for the court.

Cited in footnote to Norwalk Street R. Co.'s Appeal, 39 L. R. A. 794, which holds approval and adoption or modification of plan for street railway not a judicial power.

23 L. R. A. 388, LEVEE DIST. NO. 9 v. FARMER, 101 Cal. 178, 35 Pac. 569.

Proceedings and judgments not open to collateral attack.

Cited in Re Camp, 131 Cal. 470, 82 Am. St. Rep. 371, 63 Pac. 736, holding proceedings and order of adoption not open to collateral attack upon contest for letters of administration; Sutter County v. Tisdale, 136 Cal. 478, 69 Pac. 141, holding determination of supervisors as to necessity of road not open to collateral attack in condemnation proceedings.

Rights of abutters in highway.

Cited in Long v. Wilson, 119 Iowa, 271, 60 L. R. A. 722, 97 Am. St. Rep. 315, 93 N. W. 282, holding abutter who is not made party not bound by decree in suit against city to change and fix boundaries of highway.

Cited in footnotes to Buhl v. Fort Street Union Depot Co. 23 L. R. A. 392, which denies recovery for inconvenience to abutter by discontinuing other portions of street; Van Witsen v. Gutman, 24 L. R. A. 403, which denies right to take away for private use abutter's easement in public alley; Re Melon Street, 38 L. R. A. 275, which holds abutting owners entitled to recover for vacating other portion of street, leaving remaining portion a cul de sac; Cram v. Laconia, 57 L. R. A. 282, which denies right to recover for injury by discontinuing part of street on which property abuts.

23 L. R. A. 392, BUHL v. FORT STREET UNION DEPOT CO. 98 Mich. 596, 57 N. W. 829.

Obstruction or discontinuance of highway.

Cited in Dantzer v. Indianapolis Union R. Co. 141 Ind. 609, 34 L. R. A. 772, 50 Am. St. Rep. 347, 39 N. E. 223, holding action not maintainable for obstruction not substantially impairing or depriving lot owner of access to property; Cram v. Laconia, 71 N. H. 48, 57 L. R. A. 286, 51 Atl. 635, holding action not maintainable for obstruction of highway not depriving lot owner of access to general system of streets; Baudistel v. Michigan C. R. Co. 113 Mich. 688, 71 N. W. 1114, holding that vacation of street under authorizing statute, on notice to persons interested, requires notice to only such as have right to compensation; Henry v. Ann Arbor R. Co. 116 Mich. 319, 75 N. W. 886, holding that railroad cannot be restrained by private individuals from discontinuance of track, injury not being specific to them; Kinnear Mfg. Co. v. Beatty, 65 Ohio St. 283, 87 Am. St. Rep. 600, 62 N. E. 341, holding abutting owner without remedy for obstruction of highway not in front of premises, access not being cut off; Dennis v. Mobile & M. R. Co. 137 Ala. 659, 97 Am. St. Rep. 69, 35 So. 30, holding abutting owner not entitled to injunction against maintenance of freight depot across street by railroad company, access to lot not being cut off.

Cited in footnotes to Van Witsen v. Gutman, 24 L. R. A. 403, which denies right to take away for private use abutter's easement in public alley; Jacksonville, T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Thompson, 26 L. R. A. 410, which denies right to maintain private action for inconvenience from obstruction of highway in common with others; O'Brien v. Central Iron & Steel Co. 57 L. R. A. 508, which authorizes private action for permanent obstruction of street within 200 feet of abutter.

23 L. R. A. 396, HICKEY v. LAKE SHORE & M. S. R. CO. 51 Ohio St. 40, 46 Am. St. Rep. 545, 36 N. E. 672.

Covenants running with land.

Cited in Borgman v. Spellmire, 4 Ohio N. P. 418, holding last grantee of leasehold and immediate grantee liable to assignee of reversion on covenant to pay taxes, etc.

Cited in footnotes to Bald Eagle Valley R. Co. v. Nittany Valley R. Co. 29 L. R. A. 423, which holds intention of parties controlling in determining whether covenant runs with land; Brown v. Southern P. Co. 47 L. R. A. 409, which holds covenant by grantors for railroad to build fences, or not hold company liable for injury to stock, personal only; Doty v. Chattanooga Union R. Co. 48 L. R. A. 160, which holds covenant for running certain trains binding on subsequent purchaser of railroad.

23 L. R. A. 402, BEARD v. HOPKINSVILLE, 95 Ky. 239, 44 Am. St. Rep. 222, 24 S. W. 872.

Constitutional limitations as to municipal indebtedness; municipal contracts.

Cited in Covington v. McKenna, 99 Ky. 513, 36 S. W. 518, holding bond issue in anticipation of collection of future local assessments, indebtedness, within meaning of Constitution; La Porte v. Gamewell Fire Alarm Teleg. Co. 146 Ind. 469, 35 L. R. A. 688, footnote p. 686, 58 Am. St. Rep. 359, 45 N. E. 588, holding that city contract for water or light does not create indebtedness for aggregate sum of all instalments; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Spates, 41 W. Va. 30, 56 Am. St. Rep. 828, 23 S. E. 681, holding county court without power to bind tax levies for future years for courthouse repairs without submission to vote of people; Windsor v. Des Moines, 110 Iowa, 194, 80 Am. St. Rep. 280, 81 N. W. 476, holding sums due from city on contract for erection of electric light plant, not provided for in levy, indebtedness within meaning of Constitution; State ex rel. Helena Waterworks Co. v. Helena, 24 Mont. 532, 55 L. R. A. 341, footnote p. 336, 81 Am. St. Rep. 453, 63 Pac. 99, holding contract for water supply for term of years within provision as to limitation of city indebtedness; Earles v. Wells, 94 Wis. 298, 59 Am. St. Rep. 885, 68 N. W. 964, holding contract by city indirectly assuming payment of waterworks bonds to amount beyond constitutional debt limit, void; Ottumwa v. City Water Supply Co. 56 C. C. A. 233 note, 119 Fed. 315 note, holding indebtedness within meaning of Constitution created by ordinance authorizing issuance of bonds to build water-works plant and referring particularly to annotation in 23 L. R. A. 402; Walla Walla v. Walla Walla Water Co. 172 U. S. 19, 43 L. ed. 349, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 77, holding contract for supply of water for twenty-five years, payable in instalments, not objectionable because aggregate of indebtedness exceeded constitutional limit; Swanson v. Ottumwa, 118 Iowa, 176, 59 L. R. A. 626, 91 N. W. 1048, holding issuance of bonds for water supply, payable out of sinking fund provided for by special tax, not indebtedness within meaning of Constitution; Crogster v. Bayfield County, 99 Wis. 16, 74 N. W. 635, holding contract to bond county to aid in construction of railroad upon performance by railroad of its part of agreement, contract for indebtedness within Constitution; Chicago v. Galpin, 183 Ill. 406, 55 N. E. 731, holding that contract for specified number of street lamps, more or less, fixes amount of city's liability from its date; McAleer v. Angell, 19 R. I. 694, 36 Atl. 588, holding judgment for damages for defective highways not debt within statutory provision limiting indebtedness of town; Eaton v. Mimnaugh, 43 Or. 470, 73 Pac. 754, holding void act to compel county to create indebtedness beyond constitutional limit; Mayfield Woolen Mills v. Mayfield, 111 Ky. 177, 61 S. W. 43, holding indebtedness within Constitution created by contract by city with water company for payment of water rent.

Cited in footnotes to Brooke v. Philadelphia, 24 L. R. A. 781, which holds certificates of indebtedness placed in sinking fund not part of city indebtedness; Linn v. Burgess, 25 L. R. A. 217, which holds burden of showing municipal indebtedness exceeded, on one seeking to enjoin incurring further indebtedness; Howard v. Huron, 26 L. R. A. 493, which denies right to set up invalidity of alleged city indebtedness to defeat mandamus to enforce judgment; Kelly v. Minneapolis, 30 L. R. A. 281, which requires deduction of amount of sinking fund from total apparent debt to ascertain actual debt; McBean v. Fresno, 31 L. R. A. 794, which holds limitation of city indebtedness not violated by contract to pay annual sum for term of years, if annual sum within limit; Lamar Water & Electric Light Co. v. Lamar, 32 L. R. A. 157, which holds contract for term of years, with annual payments, creates indebtedness for only amount falling due yearly; Grand Island & N. W. R. Co. v. Baker, 34 L. R. A. 835, which requires compulsory obligations imposed by legislature to be included in determining whether limitation of county indebtedness exceeded; Kiehl v. South Bend, 36 L. R. A. 228, which holds indebtedness for hydrant rentals invalid where limitation of indebtedness exceeded when rentals become due; Rauch v. Chapman, 36 L. R. A. 407, which holds necessary expenditures imposed by Constitution not within limitation of county indebtedness; National L. Ins. Co. v. Mead, 48 L. R. A. 785, which holds new indebtedness not created by refunding bonds; South Bend v. Reynolds, 49 L. R. A. 795, which holds limitation of city debt not exceeded by contract for erection of city hall, for which yearly rent to be paid with option to purchase; Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Harrisburg, 29 L. R. A. 401, which holds city liable under contract for cost of paving streets, when assessment proves invalid; Indianapolis v. Wann, 31 L. R. A. 743, which holds contract for street lights for five years, payable monthly, void; Brashear v. Madison, 33 L. R. A. 474, which authorizes appropriation to buy fire alarm apparatus when sufficient on hand appropriated for fire purposes, though city already indebted beyond constitutional limit; McGillivray v. Joint School Dist. No. 1, 58 L. R. A. 100, which denies district's liability as on implied contract for material used in building schoolhouse, if express contract void because debt limit exceeded.

Cited in note (59 L. R. A. 614) on effect of limitation of municipal indebtedness on acquisition of water supply or sewer system.

Disapproved in Saleno v. Neosho, 127 Mo. 640, 27 L. R. A. 773, footnote p. 769, 48 Am. St. Rep. 653, 30 S. W. 190, holding contract by city to pay fixed price annually for water supply not a debt for aggregate amount.

Self-executing constitutional provisions.

Cited in O'Mahoney v. Bullock, 97 Ky. 779, 31 S. W. 878, holding constitutional limit of indebtedness of counties and taxing districts, self-executing; Russell v. Ayer, 120 N. C. 196, 37 L. R. A. 251, 27 S. E. 133 (dissenting opinion), majority holding that revenue act fixing poll tax, being unconstitutional, executive department cannot levy poll tax at constitutional rates.

Cited in footnotes to Anderson v. Whatcom County, 33 L. R. A. 137, which holds constitutional provision for justices of peace receiving salary instead of fees, self-executing; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Ihlenberg, 34 L. R. A. 393, which holds constitutional provision that employee's knowledge of defect shall be no defense to action for injury, self-executing; Criswell v. Montana C. R. Co. 33 L. R. A. 554, which holds act imposing liability on domestic railroad companies for fellow servant's negligence abrogated by adopting Constitution against special privileges to foreign corporations; State v. Kyle, 56 L. R. A. 115, which holds self-operating. constitutional amendment for criminal prosecution by indictment or information only.

Special legislation.

Cited in Pearce v. Mason County, 99 Ky. 365, 35 S. W. 1122, holding special acts already in operation not affected by adoption of Constitution forbidding special legislation.

Conclusiveness of census.

Distinguished in O'Bryan v. Owensboro, 113 Ky. 686, 68 S. W. 858, holding census taken by city under statute, conclusive, in absence of fraud or mistake.

23 L. R. A. 410, McCULLOUGH v. BROWN, 41 S. C. 220, 19 S. E. 458.

Police power of state.

Cited in Darlington v. Ward, 48 S. C. 578, 38 L. R. A. 337, 26 S. E. 906 (dissenting opinion), majority upholding ordinance prohibiting keeping of hogs within corporate limits of town.

Cited in footnote to Bennett v. Pulaski, 47 L. R. A. 278, which sustains ordinance for closing saloons between 10 P. M. and 4 A. M. and on Sundays, but not requirement for removing curtains on front doors and windows.

Overruled in State ex rel. George v. Aiken, 42 S. C. 225, 26 L. R. A. 349, footnote p. 345, 20 S. E. 221, holding valid, act giving state exclusive control of liquor traffic.

Right to attack constitutionality of law.

Cited in Butler v. Ellerbe, 44 S. C. 283, 22 S. E. 425, dissenting opinion by McIver, Ch. J., who upholds right of taxpayer to test constitutionality of law relating to application of moneys arising from taxation.

Right of state or municipality to embark in trade.

Cited in Lowenstein v. Evans, 69 Fed. 911, holding state assuming monopoly of sale of liquor not violation of Federal anti-trust law of 1890.

Cited in footnotes to Farmville v. Walker, 61 L. R. A. 125, which sustains legislative power to permit town to establish dispensary for exclusive sale of liquor; Lofton v. Collins, 61 L. R. A. 150, which denies municipal authority to organize dispensary by appointing commissioners authorized to sell liquor.

Power to grant liquor licenses after dispensary act.

Cited in Barringer v. Florence, 41 S. C. 503, 19 S. E. 745, holding no authority in state vested with power to grant liquor licenses after passage of dispensary act of 1892.

Injunction to restrain governmental or political action.

Cited in footnotes to State ex rel. Taylor v. Lord, 31 L. R. A. 473, which denies power of court to interfere with location by governor of site for public institution; State ex rel. Cranmer v. Thorson, 33 L. R. A. 582, which denies right to enjoin certifying of proposed constitutional amendment.

Power of state to grant monopoly.

Cited in note (53 L. R. A. 764) on constitutionality of statute attempting to grant monopoly.

23 L. R. A. 435, ELLERBE v. BARNEY, 119 Mo. 632, 25 S. W. 384.

Liability of members of mutual insurance companies on assessments.

Cited in Fulton v. Stevens, 99 Wis. 316, 74 N. W. 803, holding member of benefit association liable under contract for assessments made before membership ceased; Provident Mut. Relief Asso. v. Pelissier, 69 N. H. 608, 45 Atl. 562, holding member of mutual insurance company liable for assessments levied after suspension, but during continuance of membership; Calkins v. Angell, 123 Mich. 82, 81 N. W. 977, holding member of mutual benefit association liable for assessments for death claims during membership; L'Union St. Jean Baptiste v. Ostiguy 25 R. I. 480, 64 L. R. A. 159, footnote p. 158, 56 Atl. 681, denying right of benefit society to sue former member for dues for nonpayment of which he had been expelled.

Cited in note (32 L. R. A. 481) on liability of members of mutual fire insurance companies.

Distinguished in Lehman v. Clark, 174 Ill. 289, 43 L. R. A. 653, footnote p. 648, 51 N. E. 222, Reversing 65 Ill. App. 251, denying liability of member of mutual benefit association to pay assessment after policy lapses; Ellerbe v. Faust, 119 Mo. 656, 25 L. R. A. 150, 25 S. W. 390, holding action not maintainable against expelled member of association for assessment after expulsion.

Disapproved in Gibson v. Megrew, 154 Ind. 285, 48 L. R. A. 367, footnote p. 362, 56 N. E. 674, holding assessments of mutual benefit association not collectable by suit.

Construction of contract.

Cited in D. M. Osborne & Co. v. Henry, 70 Mo. App. 27, holding defense of breach of warranty in action on notes for purchase price of harvesting machine not defeated by its retention, under contract for its purchase; Folkens v. Northwestern Nat. L. Ins. Co. 98 Mo. App. 486, 72 S. W. 720, holding policy of life insurance not providing for assessments on persons holding similar policies, old line contract.

23 L. R. A. 442, GALLOWAY v. CHICAGO, M. & ST. P. R. CO. 56 Minn. 346, 45 Am. St. Rep. 468, 57 N. W. 1058.

Liability of carriers for acts of persons not employees or agents.

Cited in McGrath v. Eastern R. Co. 74 Minn. 365, 77 N. W. 136, holding carrier not liable to person on platform of station struck by bundle thrown from moving train by news agent; West Memphis Packet Co. v. White, 99 Tenn. 270, 38 L. R. A. 432, 41 S. W. 583, holding ferry company liable to passenger negligently shot by fellow passenger; Shaw v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 123 Mich. 635, 49 L. R. A. 310, footnote p. 308, 81 Am. St. Rep. 230, 82 N. W. 618, denying railroad company's liability for mail agents' unknown practice of throwing mail from moving train; Williams v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 98 Ky. 252, 41 S. W. 1100, holding carrier liable to person assisting shipper, for injury by being struck by mail pouch thrown from passing train; St. Louis, C. & St. P. R. Co. v. Waggoner, 90 Ill. App. 558, holding railroad liable only for negligent act of mail clerk which is so frequent as to charge it with notice; Carver v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 120 Iowa, 348, 94 N. W. 862, holding railroad liable for injury due to negligent throwing of mail bag from train by mail clerk, where practice known to it.

Cited in footnotes to Cleghorn v. Western R. Co. 60 L. R. A. 269, which holds railroad liable for frightening of horse by mail crane erected in or beside highway; Poling v. Ohio River R. Co. 24 L. R. A. 215, which holds carrier not liable to bystander for postal clerk's negligence in catching mail pouch from crane; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Russ, 26 L. R. A. 283, which denies carrier's liability for mail agent's negligence in throwing off mail bag.

23 L. R. A. 445, ROOT v. DAVIS, 51 Ohio St. 29, 36 N. E. 669.

Followed without comment in National Bank v. Lawler, 62 Ohio St. 649, 58 N. E. 1100.

Garnishment against nonresident debtor.

Cited in Goebel v. Kanauha Valley Bank, 3 Ohio N. P. 110, holding credits of nonresident debtor, served by publication, attachable in garnishment proceeding; Olcott v. Guerinck, 19 Ohio C. C. 35, holding situs of attachable debt owed to nonresident, to be state where writ of attachment is given; Ashley v. Quintard, 90 Fed. 97, holding that stock of foreign corporation owned by nonresident cannot be reached by service of garnishment on corporation agent and of summons on defendant stockholder by publication.

Cited in footnote to Tootle v. Coleman, 57 L. R. A. 120, which holds right to garnish debtor not limited to situs of chose in action.

Cited in note (59 L. R. A. 370) on garnishment of unliquidated claims.

23 L. R. A. 448, McMULLEN v. CARNEGIE BROS. 158 Pa. 518, 27 Atl. 1043.

Liability for injuries due to defective cars or appliances.

Cited in Anderson v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. 5 Pa. Dist. R. 402, 26 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 472, holding carrier not liable to employee of furnace company, injured by collision due to defective brakes of cars delivered on tracks of furnace company; Rehm v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 164 Pa. 94, 30 Atl. 356, holding neither railroad nor coal company liable for killing of employee of latter through negligence of coservant in placing defective car on trestle; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Bates, 146 Ind. 570, 45 N. E. 108, holding carrier not required to make impracticable or unreasonable inspection of foreign cars; McGill v. Maine & N. H. Granite Co. 70 N. H. 127, 85 Am. St. Rep. 618, 46 Atl. 684, holding shipping company not liable for death of employee, due to defective appliance on cars delivered on its tracks by railroad company.

Cited in note (41 L. R. A. 102) on knowledge as element of employer's liability to injured servant.

23 L. R. A. 449, DICKEY v. WALDO, 97 Mich. 255, 56 N. W. 608.

Mortgages of personal property.

Cited in footnotes to Riddle v. Dow, 32 L. R. A. 811, which holds rights of mortgagee of lessor's interest in crops raised by tenant superior to subsequent garnishee proceedings; Wilson v. Donaldson, 43 L. R. A. 524, which denies superiority of statutory lien for harvesting grain over chattel mortgage given before grain ripe; Jones v. Adams, 50 L. R. A. 388, which holds purchaser of land on foreclosure entitled to growing crops covered by chattel mortgage; Battle Creek Valley Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 56 L. R. A. 124, which holds provision in mortgage giving mortgagee lien on increase thereafter begotten, agreement only for lien.

Exemptions against claim for rent.

Cited in note (24 L. R. A. 812) on availability of exemptions against claim for rent.

Crops as personal property for purposes of levy and sale.

Cited in footnote to Bagley v. Columbus Southern R. Co. 34 L. R. A. 286, which holds growing crops part of land for purposes of jurisdiction.

23 L. R. A. 479, MEADE v. CLARK, 159 Pa. 159, 39 Am. St. Rep. 669, 28 Atl. 214.

Contracts of married women.

Cited in Erdelyi v. Bernat, 27 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 175, rescinding contract of married woman for exchange of real estate, without separate acknowledgment, and induced by fraud; Simon's Estate, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 469, holding deed by married woman, executed without husband joining, satisfied after she was declared feme sole trader, by her becoming party to partition action involving land conveyed by such deed.

23 L. R. A. 481, PEOPLE ex rel. COPCUTT v. BOARD OF HEALTH, 140 N. Y. 1, 37 Am. St. Rep. 522, 35 N. E. 320.

Summary action on ground of public necessity.

Cited in Health Department v. Trinity Church, 145 N. Y. 48, 27 L. R. A. 713, 45 Am. St. Rep. 579, 39 N. E. 833, upholding act of board of health requiring owner of tenement to provide sufficient water facilities; Egan v. Health Department, 20 Misc. 40, 45 N. Y. Supp. 325, upholding power of health board to order unsanitary buildings vacated without notice to owner; Cartwright v. Cohoes, 39 App. Div. 73, 56 N. Y. Supp. 731, holding that health board had power to order privy-vault nuisance abated, without notice or hearing; Gunning System v. Buffalo, 62 App. Div. 499, 71 N. Y. Supp. 155, restraining destruction of high signboards until termination of action determining reasonableness of ordinance authorizing such destruction; Stone v. Heath, 179 Mass. 387, 60 N. E. 975, refusing injunction to prevent board of health from abating alleged nuisance; Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Buffalo, 158 N. Y. 271, 53 N. E. 44, Affirming 4 App. Div. 568, 38 N. Y. Supp. 510, holding city had right summarily to remove, at their peril, railroad bridge abutments as obstruction to street.

Cited in footnotes to Board of Health v. Copcutt, 23 L. R. A. 485, which authorizes board of health to enjoin maintenance of malarious pond in city; Valparaiso v. Bozarth, 47 L. R. A. 487, which holds notice or request to remove building encroaching on street unnecessary before action to abate it; Western & A. R. Co. v. Atlanta, 54 L. R. A. 294, which holds power to abate nuisance in city in police court only.

Cited in notes (36 L. R. A. 598, 613) on power of municipal corporations to define, prevent, and abate nuisances; (38 L. R. A. 166, 168) on municipal power over buildings and other structures as nuisances.

Distinguished in People ex rel. Ordway v. St. Saviour's Sanitarium, 34 App. Div. 372, 56 N. Y. Supp. 431, holding summary commitment of inebriate female to institution for treatment and reformation, not due process of law.

Redress of person summarily proceeded against.

Cited in Fire Department v. Gilmour, 149 N. Y. 459, 52 Am. St. Rep. 747, 44 N. E. 177, upholding right of defendant in action for penalty, to contest reasonableness of order of fire department as to storage of combustibles; Eckhardt v. Buffalo, 19 App. Div. 15, 46 N. Y. Supp. 204, holding owner of premises entitled to contest reasonableness of health board order to abate nuisance in action to set aside assessment, the result thereof; Smith v. Irish, 37 App. Div. 222, 55 N. Y. Supp. 837, reversing judgment for plaintiff in action for damages for removal of top story of building by order of board of health, as against weight of evidence; Westchester Electric R. Co. v. Angevine, 52 App. Div. 241, 65 N. Y. Supp. 376, affirming judgment for plaintiff for killing of three horses by officer of society for prevention of cruelty to animals; Sahr v. Scholle, 89 Hun, 43, 35 N. Y. Supp. 97, holding common-law action for damages open to owner of horse killed by officer of society for prevention of cruelty to animals, if unwarranted; Golden v. Health Department, 21 App. Div. 424, 47 N. Y. Supp. 623, upholding action in equity to restrain health department from interfering with plaintiff's use of buildings, and for damages for ordering same vacated and demolished.

Limit of powers of health boards.

Cited in Re Smith, 146 N. Y. 77, 28 L. R. A. 823, 48 Am. St. Rep. 769, 40 N. E. 497, holding health commissioner without power to quarantine person for refusal to be vaccinated.

Review by certiorari.

Cited in Chittenden v. Wurster, 152 N. Y. 398, 37 L. R. A. 826, 46 N. E. 857, dissenting opinion by O'Brien, J., who held erroneous civil service classification not reviewable by certiorari; People ex rel. Kennedy v. Brady, 166 N. Y. 47, 59 N. E. 701, holding removal of subordinate in department of public buildings on written charges, with opportunity for hearing, not reviewable by certiorari; People ex rel. Mack v. Burt, 65 App. Div. 159, 72 N. Y. Supp. 567, holding action of municipal civil service commissioners in classifying positions not reviewable by certiorari; People ex rel. Howe v. Conway, 59 App. Div. 331, 69 N. Y. Supp. 837, holding removal of school commissioner of city by mayor, without charges or hearing, not reviewable by certiorari; People ex rel. Greenleaf v. Board of Health, 83 App. Div. 574, 82 N. Y. Supp. 21, holding action of board of health in imposing fine on person, without notice, not reviewable by certiorari; Re Donovan, 89 App. Div. 58, 85 N. Y. Supp. 406 (dissenting opinion), majority holding decision of municipal civil service commission as to character of duties of newly created position not reviewable by mandamus.

Compulsory holding over under quarantine.

Cited in Regan v. Fosdick, 19 Misc. 495, 47 N. Y. Supp. 1102, holding renewal of lease not implied by compulsory holding over under quarantine ordered by health board.

Power of municipalities as to nuisances.

Cited in Waters Pierce Oil Co. v. New Iberia, 47 La. Ann. 867, 17 So. 343, upholding power of municipality to regulate storage of petroleum and other highly inflammatory substances.

Distinguished in Flushing v. Carraher, 87 Hun, 64, 33 N. Y. Supp. 951, holding health ordinance of village, requiring permit for keeping cows within 200 feet of dwelling, invalid.

23 L. R. A. 485, BOARD OF HEALTH v. COPCUTT, 140 N. Y. 12, 55 N. Y. S. R. 422, 35 N. E. 443.

Power to remedy conditions affecting safety, health, and personal comfort.

Cited in Health Department v. Trinity Church, 145 N. Y. 48, 27 L. R. A. 716, 45 Am. St. Rep. 579, 39 N. E. 833, upholding act authorizing health boards to require tenement houses to be properly supplied with water; Golden v. Health Department, 21 App. Div. 424, 47 N. Y. Supp. 623, upholding right of action in equity to restrain demolition of building by order of health department, and for damages for loss of rents by ordering same vacated; Cartwright v. Cohoes, 39 App. Div. 72, 56 N. Y. Supp. 731, holding rule of health board prohibiting privy vaults within 25 feet of door or window of residence, reasonable.

Cited in footnotes to People ex rel. Copcutt v. Board of Health, 23 L. R. A. 481, which holds board of health liable for destroying private property in abating, as nuisance, what is not such; Western & A. R. Co. v. Atlanta, 54 L. R. A. 294, which holds power to abate nuisance in city in police court only.

Cited in notes (36 L. R. A. 613) on power of municipal corporation to define, prevent, and abate nuisance; (38 L. R. A. 168) on municipal power over buildings and other structures as nuisances; (38 L. R. A. 327) on municipal power over nuisances affecting safety, health, and personal comfort; (51 L. R. A. 662) on right of municipality to maintain suit to enjoin or abate public nuisance; (59 L. R. A. 849) on liability for damming back water of stream.

Necessity of notice and hearing.

Cited in footnote to Valparaiso v. Bozarth, 47 L. R. A. 487, which holds notice or request to remove building encroaching on street unnecessary before action to abate it.

23 L. R. A. 488, BUCHANAN v. BARRE, 66 Vt. 129, 44 Am. St. Rep. 829, 28 Atl. 878.

Ejectment action against town.

Cited in Lynch v. Rutland, 66 Vt. 573, 29 Atl. 1015, holding ejectment not maintainable against town to recover land within limits of highway.

23 L. R. A. 490, FOSTER v. CHARLES BETCHER LUMBER CO. 5 S. D. 57, 49 Am. St. Rep. 859, 58 N. W. 9.

Actions against foreign corporations and service of process.

Cited in Lubrano v. Imperial Council, O. U. F. 20 R. I. 30, 38 L. R. A. 548, footnote p. 546, 37 Atl. 345, denying jurisdiction of foreign insurance company acquired by service on insurance commissioner; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Roller, 49 L. R. A. 81, 41 C. C. A. 26, 100 Fed. 742, holding service in state on general passenger and freight agent of foreign railroad valid; Mars v. Oro Fino Min. Co. 7 S. D. 611, 65 N. W. 19, holding service upon attorney in fact to apply for patent not service upon "managing agent" of corporation; Modern Woodmen v. Noyes, 158 Ind. 506, 64 N. E. 21, holding service of chief officers of local lodge of foreign fraternal corporation sufficient, where corporation failed to file consent that service might be made on state auditor.

Cited in footnotes to Rothrock v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co. 23 L. R. A. 863, which holds unauthorized service on auditor of state in action against foreign insurance company; Sullivan v. Sullivan Timber Co. 25 L. R. A. 543, which holds corporation not doing business in county, so as to subject it to suit by having agent therein, who pays taxes on unemployed railroad and machinery; Craig v. Gunn, 27 L. R. A. 511, which holds foreign corporation with principal office in other state not subject to garnishment; Hilary v. Great Northern R. Co. 32 L. R. A. 448, which authorizes service of process on assistant ticket agent in union depot; George v. American Ginning Co. 32 L. R. A. 764, which denies right to serve foreign corporation by serving papers on officer who is in fact plaintiff or plaintiff's attorney; Carstens & Earles v. Leidigh & H. Lumber Co. 39 L. R. A. 548, which holds service of process on officer of foreign corporation temporarily in state will not authorize personal judgment against corporation; Hammond Beef & Provision Co. v. Best, 42 L. R. A. 528, which holds foreign corporation not bound by discharge of debtor by state insolvency proceedings, although statutory service made upon it; National Bank v. Furtick, 44 L. R. A. 115, which requires service on foreign insurance company as garnishee to be made on president, treasurer, cashier, or paying clerk; Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Spratley, 44 L. R. A. 442, which authorizes service on agent of foreign insurance company coming into state to examine conditions under which death occurred; Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. v. Boyer, 50 L. R. A. 538, which denies right to serve process on state officer designated by foreign insurance company which has ceased to do business in state; Abbeville Electric Light & P. Co. v. Western Electrical Supply Co. 55 L. R. A. 146, which authorizes service on traveling salesman of foreign corporation, sent to investigate controversy out of which cause of action arose; Buie v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 55 L. R. A. 861, which authorizes service of railroad company by serving in other state, officers of company organized to construct extension of system.

Cited in notes (24 L. R. A. 297) on recognition or exclusion of foreign corporations; (50 L. R. A. 589, 590) on what service of process is sufficient to constitute due process of law.

Effect of failure of foreign corporation to comply with statutes.

Cited in Barricklow v. Stewart, 31 Ind. App. 451, 68 N. E. 316, holding bond of foreign surety company not invalid because of failure of corporation to comply with statutes authorizing it to do business in state.

23 L. R. A. 504, OMAHA & R. VALLEY R. CO. v. CLARKE, 35 Neb. 867, 53 N. W. 970.

Injury due to blowing of whistle or escape of steam.

Cited in Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Cummings, 24 Ind. App. 199, 53 N. E. 1026, and Rodgers v. Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. 150 Ind. 401, 49 N. E. 453, holding complaint alleging unnecessary, negligent, and reckless blowing of whistle, resulting in injury to person without his fault, sufficient.

Cited in footnotes to Mitchell v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 40 L. R. A. 426, which holds blowing locomotive whistle under much used bridge, negligence; Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Montgomery, 57 L. R. A. 781, which requires railroad company operating railroad bridge as toll bridge, to keep lookout to prevent frightening teams by trains.

Inference of negligence from facts.

Cited in Omaha Street R. Co. v. Craig, 39 Neb. 614, 58 N. W. 209, holding question whether plaintiff was negligent in stepping on platform of moving car, preparatory to alighting, for jury; Dunn v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 124 N. C. 261, 32 S. E. 711 (dissenting opinion), majority holding unnecessary keeping of engine in close proximity to highway, strong evidence of negligence.

Cited in footnote to McCann v. Consolidated Traction Co. 38 L. R. A. 236, which holds running tank car on street railway track, with black coats waving from it, frightening horse, negligence.

General allegations of negligence.

Cited in note (59 L. R. A. 230) on sufficiency of general allegations of negligence.

Proximate cause of injury.

Cited in footnote to Snyder v. Philadelphia Co. 63 L. R. A. 896, which holds negligent blowing off of gas well, proximate cause of injury to teamster whose horses were frightened, although one of his lines broke because of insufficiency.

23 L. R. A. 510, LEWIS v. LEWELLING, 53 Kan. 201, 36 Pac. 351.

Unconstitutional tenure of office.

Disapproved in Indianapolis Brewing Co. v. Claypool, 149 Ind. 202, 48 N. E. 228, holding provision in act fixing term of park commissioners at five years unconstitutional.

Law partly good and partly bad.

Cited in State ex rel. Wheeler v. Stuht, 52 Neb. 220, 71 N. W. 941, upholding act creating municipal corporation, although detached portions were unconstitutional.

State militia.

Cited in footnotes to Nixon v. Reeves, 33 L. R. A. 506, which denies right of captain of company of National Guard summarily to imprison member for disobedience; Devlin v. Dalton, 41 L. R. A. 379, which holds unreviewable on certiorari, decision of military examining board as to competency of militia officer.

23 L. R. A. 513, DAY v. H. C. AKELEY LUMBER CO. 54 Minn. 522, 56 N. W. 243.

Liability for injuries by fire or nuisance.

Cited in Shute v. Princeton Twp. 58 Minn. 339, 59 N. W. 1050, holding town not liable for negligence of contractor in destroying brush by fire under its authority.

Cited in footnotes to Cook v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 40 L. R. A. 457, which denies liability of one negligently causing fire, for property burned after joinder with other fire; Owen v. Cook, 47 L. R. A. 646, which holds one starting back fire to protect own property not liable for loss which would have resulted from original fire.

Distinguished in Berger v. Minneapolis Gaslight Co. 60 Minn. 300, 62 N. W. 336, holding corporation liable without proof of negligence for escape of crude petroleum, creating nuisance upon premises of another.

Evidence as to changes after accident.

Cited in Hammargren v. St. Paul, 67 Minn. 7, 69 N. W. 470, and Lally v. Crookston Lumber Co. 82 Minn. 410, 85 N. W. 157, holding erroneous, admission of evidence as to changes after accident.

23 L. R. A. 517, DILLINGHAM v. HAWK, 9 C. C. A. 101, 23 U. S. App. 273, 60 Fed. 494.

Actions and judgments against receivers.

Followed in St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Holbrook, 19 C. C. A. 387, 41 U. S. App. 33, 73 Fed. 114, holding judgment in state court against Federal receiver for personal injuries conclusive as to plaintiff's right therein and amount of claim.

Cited in New York Security & T. Co. v. Equitable Mortg. Co. 71 Fed. 560, holding that Missouri court could properly determine amount of creditor's claim against corporation under New York receivership; State v. Port Royal & A. R. Co. 84 Fed. 68, holding judgment against one receiver binding on successor; Fidelity Ins. Trust & S. D. Co. v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. 114 Fed. 391, holding judgment for tort against railroad company after receivership in suit to foreclose mortgage not entitled to preference over claims of mortgage bondholders; Reinhart v. Sutton, 58 Kan. 728, 51 Pac. 221, holding judgment in state court against Federal receiver conclusive, except as to time and manner of satisfaction; Garrison v. Texas & P. R. Co. 10 Tex. Civ. App. 137, 30 S. W. 725, holding judgments in state courts against Federal receivers conclusive as to amount; Malott v. Shimer, 153 Ind. 41, 74 Am. St. Rep. 278, 54 N. E. 101, upholding right of action for tort against Federal receiver of railroad in state court, without previous leave of appointing court; Cowen v. Merriman, 17 App. D. C. 199, holding plaintiff entitled to proceed at law for judgment against receivers for tort after order directing return of property to road, but not finally discharging receivers.

23 L. R. A. 520, STATE v. EASON, 114 N. C. 787, 41 Am. St. Rep. 811, 19 S. E. 88.

Navigable streams.

Cited in State v. Baum, 128 N. C. 605, 38 S. E. 900, holding public cove used by fishing boats, some from 18 to 20 feet long, navigable stream.

Cited in note (42 L. R. A. 322) on navigable waters.

23 L. R. A. 525, STATE, ALEXANDER, PROSECUTOR, v. ELIZABETH, 56 N. J. L. 71, 28 Atl. 51.

Special immunities and privileges.

Cited in Burlington v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 56 N. J. Eq. 264, 38 Atl. 849, holding act discriminating between railroads already located in cities and roads to be located in future, as to consent of abutting owners to laying of tracks, unconstitutional; Schmalz v. Wooley, 56 N. J. Eq. 653, 39 Atl. 539, holding act providing special remedies to associations and unions of workingmen against persons counterfeiting their trade labels unconstitutional.

Racing and race courses.

Cited in footnotes to State ex rel. Matthews v. Forsyth, 33 L. R. A. 221, which holds unlawful, race meeting continued on other track near first, after holding thereon for time allowed; State v. Walsh, 35 L. R. A. 231, which holds void, statute against bookmaking, etc., containing proviso exempting persons within limits of regular race course; People ex rel. Lawrence v. Fallon, 37 L. R. A. 227, which holds test of speed or endurance of horses for prizes not lottery or gambling; State v. Thompson, 54 L. R. A. 950, which sustains statute prohibiting pool selling elsewhere than where races run, or by other than licensed persons.

Classification by legislature.

Cited in footnote to Sutton v. State, 33 L. R. A. 589, which holds classification of counties according to previous census, without respect to actual population, void.

Delegation of power.

Cited in Albright v. Sussex County Lake & Park Commission, 68 N. J. L. 537, 53 Atl. 612, holding act authorizing, subject to referendum, the acquiring of lands for public fisheries, to be under control of park commissioners, not unconstitutional delegation of power.

Special and local legislation.

Cited in State ex rel. Board of Health v. Diamond Mills Paper Co. 63 N. J. Eq. 113, 51 Atl. 1019, holding statute prohibiting discharge of sewage into river used by cities, etc., for water supply, not special and local legislation.

Internal affairs of municipalities.

Cited in Ex parte Braun, 141 Cal. 211, 74 Pac. 780, upholding power of city to impose license tax on liquor dealers under charter conferring power of taxation for revenue.

23 L. R. A. 531, WHITNEY v. HANOVER NAT. BANK, 71 Miss. 1009, 15 So. 33.

Receiverships of individuals and corporations.

Cited in Pennsylvania Co. v. Finney, 145 Ind. 551, 42 N. E. 816, holding appointment of receiver of all property of individual upon complaint of holder of chattel mortgage, invalid; State ex rel. Johnston v. District Court, 21 Mont. 160, 69 Am. St. Rep. 645, 53 Pac. 272, holding stranger not punishable for contempt for interfering with invalid order of receivership; Taber v. Royal Ins. Co. 124 Ala. 689, 26 So. 252, holding court of equity cannot exempt assets of insolvent corporation under receivership, from actual debts, duly established.

Cited in footnotes to State ex rel. Merriam v. Ross, 23 L. R. A. 534, which upholds right of receiver duly appointed, collaterally to attack void appointment by other court; Sternberg v. Wolff, 39 L. R. A. 762, which authorizes appointment of receiver of trading corporation in case of deadlock from dissensions of stockholders; Phillips v. Providence Steam Engine Co. 45 L. R. A. 560, which refuses to appoint receiver in suit by minority stockholder for corporation unable to continue business.

23 L. R. A. 534, STATE ex rel. MERRIAM v. ROSS, 122 Mo. 435, 25 S. W. 947.

Contempt proceeding in 136 Mo. 265, 31 S. W. 600.

Receiverships of individuals and corporations.

Cited in Merriam v. St. Louis, C. G. & Ft. S. R. Co. 126 Mo. 447, 29 S. W. 152, holding order appointing receiver and directing delivery of property to him pending suit not appealable; Miller Bros. v. Perkins, 154 Mo. 637, 55 S. W. 874, holding void, appointment of receiver in action at law to recover money judgment; Steele Lumber Co. v. Laurens Lumber Co. 98 Ga. 348, 24 S. E. 755, holding that corporation cannot, as party plaintiff, file petition in equity to marshal its own assets; State v. Union Nat. Bank, 145 Ind. 551, 57 Am. St. Rep. 209, 44 N. E. 585, holding appointment of receiver over all of individual's property, upon complaint of chattel mortgage holder, void; Hay v. McDaniel, 26 Ind. App. 687, 60 N. E. 729, holding action not maintainable by owner of real estate against life tenant for appointment of receiver; Wallace v. Pierce-Wallace Pub. Co. 101 Iowa, 332, 38 L. R. A. 128, 63 Am. St. Rep. 389, 70 N. W. 216, holding mere dissensions between equal owners of corporation stock, also corporation officers, not ground for receivership.

Cited in footnotes to Whitney v. Hanover Nat. Bank, 23 L. R. A. 531, denying right collaterally to attack appointment of receiver in suit by general creditors; Sternberg v. Wolff, 39 L. R. A. 762, which authorizes appointment of receiver of trading corporation in case of deadlock from dissensions of stockholder; Phillips v. Providence Steam Engine Co. 45 L. R. A. 560, which refuses to appoint receiver in suit by minority stockholder for corporation unable to continue business.

Disapproved in McNary v. Bush, 35 Or. 121, 56 Pac. 646, holding appointment of receiver of corporation by court of competent jurisdiction not open to collateral attack.

Prerogative writs and superintending control.

Cited in note (51 L. R. A. 59) on superintending control and supervisory jurisdiction of superior over inferior and subordinate tribunal.

Distinguished in State ex rel. Hofmann v. Scarritt, 128 Mo. 340, 30 S. W. 1026, holding that writ of prohibition will not issue to stop investigation of alleged contempt, because of defect in petition for receivership, court having jurisdiction.

Commencement of action.

Cited in Moore v. Ruxlow, 83 Mo. App. 53, holding, under statutes, suit commenced in court of record on filing petition therein; Vila v. Grand Island Electric Light, Ice & Cold Storage Co. (Neb.) 63 L. R. A. 796, 97 N. W. 613, holding action not commenced by filing of petition containing no prayer for specific relief, other than appointment of receiver.

23 L. R. A. 545, PHILADELPHIA v. MASONIC HOME, 160 Pa. 572, 40 Am. St. Rep. 736, 28 Atl. 954.

Public charities and exemption from taxation.

Cited in Grubb v. Weaver, 19 Pa. Co. Ct. 611, holding school founded as public charity not exempt from taxation after ceasing to be maintained as such; Foulke v. Long Institute, 26 Pa. Co. Ct. 562, holding institute supporting orphan girls generally, public charity exempt from taxation; Re Blair County, 8 Pa.

Dist. R. 42, holding land leased by county commissioners for industrial home for poor children not exempt from taxation; Philadelphia v. Franklin Cemetery, 2 Pa. Super. Ct. 571, holding cemetery property not exempt from municipal assessments of water pipe; Mullen v. Juenet, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 7, holding Roman Catholic school not exempt from taxation; Haverford College v. Rhoads, 6 Pa. Super. Ct. 80, holding nonsectarian college a public charity exempt from taxation; Kentucky Female Orphan School v. Bell, 100 Ky. 505, 40 L. R. A. 127, 36 S. W. 921, holding school primarily for education of orphan girls exempt from taxation; Louisville v. Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, 100 Ky. 517, 36 S. W. 995, holding free theological seminary not refusing young men from any denomination exempt from taxation; Fitterer v. Crawford, 157 Mo. 59, 50 L. R. A. 193, footnote p. 191, 57 S. W. 532, denying exemption of Masonic lodge building, first and second stories of which are rented to pay debt and current expenses of lodge; Mason v. Perry, 22 R. I. 490, 48 Atl. 671, holding lodge of ancient free and accepted Masons not charitable institution; Newport v. Masonic Temple Asso. 108 Ky. 338, 49 L. R. A. 253, footnote p. 252, 56 S. W. 405, denying exemption of charity confined exclusively to members of Masonic order and their families; Troutman v. De Boissiere Odd Fellows' Orphans' Home, 66 Kan. 44, 71 Pac. 286, holding gift to provide orphan home and school for children of members of secret society not one for public charity; Hastings v. Long, 19 Lanc. L. Rev. 74, holding asylum for indigent white women, either single or widows, public charity.

Cited in footnotes to Webster v. Wiggin, 28 L. R. A. 510, which holds charitable, gift to promote efficiency of public schools; Alden v. St. Peter's Parish, 30 L. R. A. 232, which holds gift to rector, etc., of unincorporated religious society, for church purposes, for charitable use; Gray Street Infirmary v. Louisville, 55 L. R. A. 270, which denies exemption of infirmary maintained by proprietors of medical college.

Distinguished in Hibernian Benev. Soc. v. Kelly, 28 Or. 190, 30 L. R. A. 169, 52 Am. St. Rep. 769, 42 Pac. 3, holding benevolent society organized for paying sick and death benefits, "charitable institution."

23 L. R. A. 552, PARKER v. PENNSYLVANIA CO. 134 Ind. 673, 34 N. E. 504. Negligent and wilful injury.

Cited in Evans v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 142 Ind. 269, 41 N. E. 537, holding allegation in complaint that brakeman signaled engineer to stop, insufficient to show engineer's knowledge of plaintiff's peril; Conner v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 146 Ind. 436, 45 N. E. 662, holding knowledge by driver of plaintiff's dangerous position essential to charge carrier with wilful injury to plaintiff by sudden starting of car; Fisher v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 146 Ind. 562, 45 N. E. 689, holding finding of wilful killing not warranted by mere fact that deceased could be seen from cab for half a mile, and that no signals were given; Ullrich v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 151 Ind. 362, 51 N. E. 95, holding mere allegation that, as deceased was on trestle, he could be seen from train for 2,000 feet, and was run down before he could escape, insufficient to charge wilful killing; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Young, 153 Ind. 165, 54 N. E. 791, holding complaint charging engineer with failure to stop engine by reversing, after seeing plaintiff's danger at crossing, insufficient allegation of wilfulness; McCollum v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 154 Ind. 100, 55 N. E.

1024, holding that wilfulness signifies presence of intention to injure, and negligence signifies its absence; Linton Coal & Min. Co. v. Persons, 15 Ind. App. 75, 43 N. E. 651, holding punitive damages not recoverable for mere negligence not wilful; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Brafford, 15 Ind. App. 663, 43 N. E. 882, holding finding of wilful intent to injure justified by evidence of continuance of train at unlawful speed after engineer saw men signaling deaf mute to get off track; Hancock v. Lake Erie & W. R. Co. 21 Ind. App. 19, 51 N. E. 369, holding complaint for wilful injury insufficient in failing to allege that injury itself was wilfully inflicted; Dull v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 21 Ind. App. 578, 52 N. E. 1013, holding that there is no such thing as wilful negligence; Huff v. Chicago, I. & L. R. Co. 24 Ind. App. 496, 79 Am. St. Rep. 274, 56 N. E. 932, holding wilfulness not constituted by mere unlawful speed and omission of signals; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Schmitt, 100 Ill. App. 503, holding act done through mistake in judgment not negligent; Pennsylvania Co. v. Meyers, 136 Ind. 258, 36 N. E. 32, holding that there is no middle ground between negligent injury and wilful injury; Brooks v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 158 Ind. 70, 62 N. E. 694, holding carrier not guilty of wilful injury where no opportunity was offered engine crew after discovery of decedent's peril, to change from attitude of heedlessness to that of vigilance; Indianapolis Street R. Co. v. Taylor, 158 Ind. 277, 63 N. E. 456, holding that intention to injure one after falling under fender of car must be shown to render company liable for wilful injury; Indiana Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. O'Brien, 160 Ind. 273, 65 N. E. 918, holding negligence and wilfulness inconsistent and incompatible with each other; Walker v. Wehking, 29 Ind. App. 66, 63 N. E. 128, holding complaint charging "reckless disregard of human life," and "wilful intent to injure" by refusing to place proper guards, insufficient to support claim of wilful injury; Manlove v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 29 Ind. App. 700, 65 N. E. 212, holding wilful injury of licensee not established, where carrier's knowledge of his presence in place of danger not shown; McGuire v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co. 46 La. Ann. 1559, 16 So. 457 (dissenting opinion), as to distinction between wilfulness and negligence.

Trespassers and licensees on railroad property.

Cited in Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adair, 12 Ind. App. 594, 40 N. E. 822, holding that railroad company owed boy trespasser on tracks no duty to protect him from negligence; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cronbach, 12 Ind. App. 673, 41 N. E. 15, holding carrier's servants have right to presume that person walking in front of moving train will leave track in time to avoid danger; Citizens Street R. Co. v. Merl, 26 Ind. App. 292, 59 N. E. 491, holding that carrier owes trespasser only reasonable care against injury after inability to avoid danger is known; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Stephenson, 139 Ind. 643, 37 N. E. 720, holding that carrier owes no duty of protection against its negligence to licensee loading hogs on car; Baltimore & O. & C. R. Co. v. Paul, 143 Ind. 27, 28 L. R. A. 218, 40 N. E. 519, holding carrier not liable for injuries to brakeman of another road by negligence of fellow servant while operating master's train on defendant's road.

Cited in footnotes to Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tartt, 49 L. R. A. 99, which denies duty towards trespassers on track before discovery; Becker v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 53 L. R. A. 268, which requires stopping to enable trespasser discovered on railroad bridge to escape.

Proximate cause of injury.

Cited in Cleveland C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Stewart, 24 Ind. App. 380, 56 N. E. 917, holding damages not recoverable for nervous shock to woman, caused by impending danger to daughter.

Cited in footnote to Schreiner v. Great Northern R. Co. 58 L. R. A. 76, which holds failure to build fence not proximate cause of injury to one pushed on track by cow.

23 L. R. A. 555, HAYES v. O'BRIEN, 149 Ill. 403, 37 N. E. 73.

Suits involving freehold.

Cited in McDole v. Kingsley, 62 Ill. App. 30, holding freehold involved in suit for specific performance of contract to sell land.

Construction and enforcement of contracts.

Cited in Guyer v. Warren, 175 Ill. 335, 51 N. E. 580, holding optional contract to convey land enforceable when optional vendee accepts within time limit therefor; Gibbs v. People's Nat. Bank, 198 Ill. 311, 64 N. E. 1060, construing word "net" in contract of sale as used in its ordinary sense; Hardesty v. Forest City Ins. Co. 77 Ill. App. 418, holding policy not avoided by change of title in premises by death of insured; Manning v. Ayres, 23 C. C. A. 412, 46 U. S. App. 537, 77 Fed. 697, refusing specific performance of optional contract for sale of land, no price having been fixed or terms agreed on; Fowler v. Fowler, 204 Ill. 104, 68 N. E. 414, holding service by publication not sufficient to authorize decree of specific performance for sale of land against nonresident vendor; Forthman v. Deters, 206 Ill. 167, 99 Am. St. Rep. 145, 69 N. E. 97, holding that contract under seal to convey land must be regarded as having been made upon sufficient consideration.

Cited in footnotes to Dyer v. Duffy, 24 L. R. A. 339, which holds proposal to sell land not sale, till notice of acceptance given.

Indefinite contracts.

Cited in footnotes to Hoffman v. Maffioli, 47 L. R. A. 427, which holds that agreement to furnish paving contractor crushed stone in "such quantities as may be desired" does not require furnishing of all stone needed; Hickey v. O'Brien, 49 L. R. A. 594 which sustains contract by sellers of ice to purchase all ice necessary to carry on business for five years.

Options for sale of commodities.

Cited in footnotes to Booth v. People, 50 L. R. A. 762, which sustains statute making unlawful, options for sale of commodities which have been subject of gambling operations; Cold Blast Transp. Co. v. Kansas City Bolt & Nut Co. 57 L. R. A. 696, which holds void, accepted offer to deliver at specified prices during specified period, articles in such amounts as acceptor may desire; Loudenback Fertilizer Co. v. Tennessee Phosphate Co. 61 L. R. A. 402, which sustains contract for purchase of entire consumption for term of years of phosphate rock in manufacturing fertilizer, estimated at specified amount, with right to demand double.

Cited in note (53 L. R. A. 294) on effect on contract of leaving price indefinite.

Construction of statutes.

Cited in People ex rel. Akin v. Loeffler, 175 Ill. 596, 51 N. E. 785, holding subordinates in offices of city clerk, city comptroller, and city treasurer subject to civil service classification; Davison v. Hough, 165 Mo. 578, 65 S. W. 731, holding statute prohibiting injunction except in county where judgment is rendered or suit pending applicable only where main purpose of suit is annulling judgment or enjoining suit at law.

Option to renew lease, or purchase.

Cited in Hawes v. Favor, 161 Ill. 446, 43 N. E. 1076, holding coverture not bar to specific performance of agreement to sell at expiration of lease, lessee having performed conditions; Thompson v. Seavor, 91 Ill. App. 504, construing option to renew lease according to plain intent thereof, where language admitted of two interpretations; Martens v. Reilly, 109 Wis. 477, 84 N. W. 840, holding agreement in lease giving lessees first right to purchase, nugatory.

Defective description of land.

Cited in Marske v. Willard, 68 Ill. App. 85, holding defective description cured by proof that vendor put purchaser in possession of premises defectively described; Fowler v. Fowler, 204 Ill. 100, 68 N. E. 414, holding contract not void if, from words employed, description can be made certain by extrinsic evidence of facts, physical conditions, measurements, or monuments referred to in deed.

Powers of municipalities.

Cited in Park Ridge v. Robinson, 198 Ill. 585, 92 Am. St. Rep. 276, 65 N. E. 104, upholding power of municipality to limit liability for improvement to particular fund raised therefor.

23 L. R. A. 561, FORD v. UNITY CHURCH SOC. 120 Mo. 498, 41 Am. St. Rep. 711, 25 S. W. 394.

Description of land in deeds and wills.

Cited in Briant v. Garrison, 150 Mo. 667, 52 S. W. 361, construing word "between," used in describing land, to mean "through;" Mudd v. Dillon, 166 Mo. 121, 65 S. W. 973, holding that court will not enforce deed of gift, township and range being omitted in description.

Effect of conveyance as to after-acquired interests.

Cited in Ely v. Pingry, 56 Kan. 27, 42 Pac. 330, holding purchase-money mortgage superior to prior mortgage by purchaser before acquiring title; Wilson v. Fisher, 172 Mo. 22, 72 S. W. 665, holding that sheriff's deed does not pass an after-acquired interest of defendant in execution.

Cited in footnote to New England Nat. Bank v. Northwestern Nat. Bank, 60 L. R. A. 256, which holds mortgage of chattels to be acquired invalid against one taking possession under other mortgage executed by mortgagor after acquiring.

23 L. R. A. 571, CARPENTER v. UNITED STATES L. INS. CO. 161 Pa. 9, 41 Am. St. Rep. 880, 28 Atl. 943.

Report of second appeal in 174 Pa. 639, 34 Atl. 211.

Persons who may take proceeds of life insurance policies.

Cited in McGraw v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 490, 28 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 171, 41 W. N. C. 62, holding insurable interest of niece in life of uncle by whom she was brought up, proper question for jury; Clement v. New York L. Ins. Co. 101 Tenn. 36, 42 L. R. A. 251, 70 Am. St. Rep. 650, 46 S. W. 561, holding assignment of policy by insured to persons not creditors, and not having insurable interest in his life, mere wager; Grand Lodge, A. O. U. W. v. McKinstry, 67 Mo. App. 88, holding that infant, delivered to stranger on promise to adopt, and reared and educated by him, may be designated as beneficiary of fraternal benefit certificate.

Cited in footnote to Adams v. Reed, 35 L. R. A. 692, which holds woman has insurable interest in life of son-in-law.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 630) on right to take life insurance for benefit of stranger.

Distinguished in Foster v. Preferred Acci. Ins. Co. 125 Fed. 538, holding that insured paying his own premiums may have policy payable to any beneficiary.

Testimony as to transaction with dead person.

Cited in Danner v. Hess, 8 Northampton Co. Rep. 317, holding payee, in action against maker, competent to testify that deceased person who furnished consideration made him present of the note.

23 L. R. A. 574, McHUGH v. SCHLOSSER, 159 Pa. 480, 39 Am. St. Rep. 699, 28 Atl. 291.

Damages for personal injury.

Cited in Goodhart v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 177 Pa. 16, 38 W. N. C. 548, 55 Am. St. Rep. 705, 35 Atl. 191, holding that age, health, business habits, and manner of living should be considered on question of earning capacity; O'Reilly v. Monongahela Street R. Co. 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 629, and Wallace v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 195 Pa. 129, 52 L. R. A. 34, 45 Atl. 685, holding that evidence of impairment of earning capacity must be produced to entitle jury to fix damages therefor; McKenna v. Citizens' Natural Gas Co. 198 Pa. 40, 47 Atl. 990, holding erroneous, instruction to allow for earning power, in absence of evidence as to such power; Waters v. Atlantic Ref. Co. 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 352, 9 Pa. Dist. R. 473, setting aside verdict of $47,000 for loss of eyes by boy, no evidence having been given as to earning power; Aiken v. Philadelphia, 9 Pa. Super. Ct. 507, 43 W. N. C. 503, holding refusal to charge that profits from business are not earnings not erroneous, court having instructed jury to compensate for loss of earning power; Birkel v. Chandler, 26 Wash. 247, 66 Pac. 406, holding that in action for loss of services of minor, evidence as to past earnings and as to what they would have been worth in future properly admitted; Martachowski v. Orawitz, 14 Pa. Super. Ct. 186, holding instruction in action in trespass for false representation, leaving amount of damages to caprice of jury, erroneous.

Cited in note (55 L. R. A. 259) on liability for ejecting sick tenant, lodger, or other occupant from building, when right of occupancy has terminated.

23 L. R. A. 576, MINNEAPOLIS THRESHING MACH. CO. v. FIREMEN'S INS. CO. 57 Minn. 35, 47 Am. St. Rep. 572, 58 N. W. 819.

Construction of insurance policies.

Cited in Slinkard v. Manchester Fire Assur. Co. 122 Cal. 597, 55 Pac. 417, holding that policy on combined harvester "while in use" does not cover same while dismantled and stored.

Cited in footnote to Thurston v. Burnett & B. D. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 41 L. R. A. 316, which denies liability on policy, where wood was used with coal in running threshing engine.

Cited in notes (26 L. R. A. 241) on location of movable property as affecting fire insurance thereon; (30 L. R. A. 636) on effect of riders or slips attached to insurance policy.

23 L. R. A. 578, LOUCHEIMER v. WEIL, 113 N. C. 181, 18 S. E. 103.

23 L. R. A. 581, UNION P. R. CO. v. ARTIST, 9 C. C. A. 14, 19 U. S. App. 612, 60 Fed. 365.

Followed without comment in Pierce v. Union P. R. Co. 13 C. C. A. 324, 32 U. S. App. 48, 66 Fed. 45.

Release of damages.

Cited in Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. McCarty, 94 Tex. 303, 53 L. R. A. 510, 86 Am. St. Rep. 854, 60 S. W. 429, Reversing 21 Tex. Civ. App. 572, 54 S. W. 421, holding release of damages for personal injuries not avoidable for mistake

Cited in footnote to Och v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. 36 L. R. A. 442, which holds release by woman while dazed and nervous from shock in railway accident binding on her, though obtained by misrepresenting contents.

Distinguished in Green v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 35 C. C. A. 74, 92 Fed. 870, holding parol evidence inadmissible to modify terms of release.

Limitation of general by particular words.

Cited in Board of Education v. McLean, 45 C. C. A. 659, 106 Fed. 819, holding general words in bond act limited by preceding particular recital of purpose of act.

Liability for negligence of medical or surgical attendants charitably furnished.

Cited in Powers v. Massachusetts Homeopathic Hospital, 47 C. C. A. 126, 109 Fed. 294, Affirming 101 Fed. 898, denying right of patient in charitable hospital to recover for negligence of nurse; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Foard, 104 Ky. 463, 47 S. W. 342; Quinn v. Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. 94 Tenn. 718, 28 L. R. A. 555, 45 Am. St. Rep. 767, 30 S. W. 1036; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Zeiler, 54 Kan. 351, 38 Pac. 282,—holding railroad company not liable to employee for mistake of surgeons furnished by it; Texas & P. Coal Co. v. Connaughten, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 645, 50 S. W. 173, and Haggerty v. St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. 100 Mo. App. 445, 74 S. W. 456, holding railroad company making compulsory reduction in employee's wages for support of hospital liable for negligence of physician thereof; Richardson v. Carbon Hill Coal Co. 10 Wash. 656, 39 Pac. 95, holding corporation maintaining hospital out of money retained from wages of employees not liable for malpractice or negligence of physician; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 141 Ind. 91, 27 L. R. A. 843, footnote p. 840, 50 Am. St. Rep. 313, 40 N. E. 138, holding corporation gratuitously furnishing medical services to employees liable only for care in selecting physician; Downes v. Harper Hospital, 101 Mich. 560, 25 L. R. A. 604, 45 Am. St. Rep. 427, 60 N. W. 42, and Hearns v. Waterbury Hospital, 66 Conn. 122, 31 L. R. A. 232, footnote p. 224, 33 Atl. 595, denying liability of charitable hospital for wrongful neglect of servants; Collins v. New York Post Graduate Medical School, 59 App. Div. 68, 69 N. Y. Supp. 106, holding post graduate school and hospital not liable for negligence in operating on patient paying only for board and attendance; Long v. Rosedale Cemetery, 84 Fed. 136, holding cemetery companies, under statute, not exempt from liability for negligence of servants; Brown v. La Societe Franchise De Bienfaisance Mutuelle, 138 Cal. 478, 71 Pac. 516, holding private hospital run by mutual benefit society liable to pay patient not member of society, for negligence of surgeon.

Cited in footnotes to Eighmy v. Union P. R. Co. 27 L. R. A. 296, which holds railroad company not liable for negligence of physicians in hospitals voluntarily maintained for injured employees; Hannon v. Siegel-Cooper Co. 52 L. R. A. 429, which holds department store estopped to deny responsibility for malpractice of dentist.

Cited in note (28 L. R. A. 549) on master's duty to furnish medical aid to servant.

Statutes requiring payment of wages in lawful money.

Cited in note (28 L. R. A. 275) on validity and effect of statutes requiring wages to be paid in lawful money.

23 L. R. A. 584, PHILLIPS v. MERCANTILE NAT. BANK, 140 N. Y. 556, 37 Am. St. Rep. 596, 35 N. E. 982.

Commercial paper and frauds upon banks.

Cited in Goshen Nat. Bank v. State, 141 N. Y. 388, 36 N. E. 316, refusing to compel comptroller to refund money received for taxes paid by county treasurer, by misappropriation of funds of bank of which he was cashier; Nassau Bank v. National Bank, 159 N. Y. 459, 54 N. E. 66, upholding right of bank receiving money in restitution for undetected fraud to retain it as against bank from which fraudulently obtained; Kelley v. Chenango Valley Sav. Bank, 21 Misc. 244, 79 N. Y. S. R. 654, 45 N. Y. Supp. 651, holding savings bank liable for misappropriation of deposits by treasurer who, when taking same, exchanged depositor's books for pass books of national bank; Wiggins v. Stevens, 33 App. Div. 87, 53 N. Y. Supp. 90, holding giving of check by bank cashier upon fund in bank in his name as assignee, to correct cash account, not payment of deposit.

Cited in notes (26 L. R. A. 570) on negotiability of check; (50 L. R. A. 83) on who must bear loss where check or bill issued or indorsed to impostor.

Distinguished in Fifth Nat. Bank v. Central Nat. Bank, 82 Hun, 560, 31 N. Y. Supp. 541, and Egner v. Corn Exch. Bank, 42 Misc. 554, 86 N. Y. Supp. 107, holding rule as to effect of checks to fictitious persons not applicable to check not intended to be so drawn, and paid on forged indorsement; Dundee Nat. Bank v. Huntington, 20 App. Div. 108, 46 N. Y. Supp. 1003, holding note held by bank not paid by discharge of mortgage held by maker as executor, against president of bank.

23 L. R. A. 588, JACKSON v. STANFIELD, 137 Ind. 592, 36 N. E. 345, 37 N. E. 14.

Lawful and unlawful combinations; actions against.

Cited in Barr v. Essex Trades Council, 53 N. J. Eq. 116, 30 Atl. 881, holding damage to newspaper through "boycott," actionable; State ex rel. Durner v. Huegin, 110 Wis. 253, 62 L. R. A. 742, 85 N. W. 1046, holding combinations of several independent publishers to compel another publisher to reduce rates or lose customers, criminal conspiracy; Master Builders' Asso. v. Domascio, 16 Colo. App. 33, 63 Pac. 782, holding mere refusal of builders' association to compete in bidding if plaintiff's bid received by architect not actionable; Brown v. Jacobs'

Pharmacy Co. 115 Ga. 442, 57 L. R. A. 554, footnote p. 548, 41 S. E. 553, 90 Am. St. Rep. 126, 41 S. E. 553, holding action of combination of merchants to compel another to sell goods at prices fixed by it, enjoinable; West Virginia Transp. Co. v. Standard Oil Co. 50 W. Va. 620, 56 L. R. A. 809, footnote p. 804, 88 Am. St. Rep. 895, 40 S. E. 591, holding malicious conspiracy to get customers from rival and obtain business for one's self, permissible, though carried out with malicious intent to ruin such rival; Walsh v. Association of Master Plumbers, 97 Mo. App. 290, 71 S. W. 455, holding agreement between plumbers' association, dealers and manufacturers, for purpose of fixing prices and limiting production, unlawful; Martell v. White, 185 Mass. 263, 64 L. R. A. 265, footnote p. 260, 69 N. E. 1085, holding action maintainable on behalf of quarry owner against members of association to which he does not belong, enforcing by-law imposing fine on members dealing with nonmembers.

Cited in footnotes to Cote v. Murphy, 23 L. R. A. 135, which holds lawful, combination of employers to prevent advance in wages; Macauley v. Tierney, 37 L. R. A. 455, which holds lawful, agreement by members of association of plumbers not to deal with wholesalers selling to nonmembers; Hartnett v. Plumber's Supply Asso. 38 L. R. A. 194, which holds plumbers' supply association subject to quo warranto for assuming to prevent giving credit by members to delinquent dealer; Brewster v. C. Miller's Sons, 38 L. R. A. 505, which sustains agreement between undertakers to refuse to render services to anyone failing to pay bill to any of them; Doremus v. Hennessy, 43 L. R. A. 797, which holds members of trade association combining to prevent other persons dealing with nonmember liable for resulting injury; Ertz v. Produce Exchange, 48 L. R. A. 90, which holds malicious, conspiracy to injury dealer by inducing other people not to deal with him; Gatzow v. Buening, 49 L. R. A. 475, which holds by-law of liverymen's association, prohibiting furnishing hearse or carriages to nonunion liverymen, illegal; Ertz v. Produce Exchange, 51 L. R. A. 825, which holds produce exchange discriminating against nonmembers and controlling delivery of goods an illegal combination; Downs v. Bennett, 55 L. R. A. 560, which denies right of one only remotely affected, to injunction against fining or expelling member for violation of by-law with nonmembers or those dealing with them.

Cited in note (62 L. R. A. 702) on effect of bad motive to make actionable what would otherwise not be.

Measure of damages.

Cited in Chicago & S. E. R. Co. v. Yawger, 24 Ind. App. 463, 56 N. E. 50, holding that on breach of contract for work and labor by employers, clear, certain, and usual profits arising from such work are recoverable.

Cited in note (52 L. R. A. 50) on damages for tort as affected by loss of profits.

23 L. R. A. 599, SIMMONS v. ATKINSON & L. CO. 69 Miss. 862, 12 So. 263.

Alteration of written instruments.

Cited in Exchange Nat. Bank v. Bank of Little Rock, 22 L. R. A. 690, 7 C. C. A. 121, 19 U. S. App. 152, 58 Fed. 143, holding bank, maker of draft, not liable for raising of same by confidential clerk to whose order it was drawn.

Cited in footnotes to Richards v. Dey, 23 L. R. A. 601, which holds signer of blank bond filled up with unauthorized terms not bound thereby; Brown v. Johnson Bros. 51 L. R. A. 403, which holds maker released by payee's addition of name of other person as comaker; Rochford v. McGee, 61 L. R. A. 335, which holds removal of note written below perforated line on application for insurance, material alteration rendering it void; Foxworthy v. Colby, 62 L. R. A. 393, which holds unauthorized insertion of word "gold" before word "dollars," in instrument, material alteration.

Cited in note (35 L. R. A. 470) on alteration of note as affecting bona fide holders.

23 L. R. A. 601, RICHARDS v. DAY, 137 N. Y. 183, 33 Am. St. Rep. 704, 33 N. E. 146.

23 L. R. A. 603, Re SANDERS, 53 Kan. 191, 36 Pac. 348.

Title of act.

Cited in Lynch v. Chase, 55 Kan. 376, 40 Pac. 666, holding title to act providing for investigation of state institutions and officers, broad enough to authorize committee investigation of such institutions and officers thereof; Rathbone v. Hopper, 57 Kan. 245, 34 L. R. A. 676, 45 Pac. 610, construing words "municipal corporations," used in title of act, to include townships; Otto Gas-engine Works v. Hare, 64 Kan. 81, 67 Pac. 444, construing title of act authorizing regulation of conditional sales, to include power of making and preserving record of them.

Construction of statutes.

Cited in Lewis v. Lewelling, 53 Kan. 205, 23 L. R. A. 513, 36 Pac. 351, upholding power of governor to disband militia under statute providing for organization, government, and compensation of same; Re Stokes, 67 Kan. 669, 73 Pac. 911, holding justice of peace, under statute authorizing him to sentence only, without power to commit boy to reform school.

23 L. R. A. 606, GRAEFF v. PHILADELPHIA & R. R. CO. 161 Pa. 230, 41 Am. St. Rep. 885, 28 Atl. 1107.

Liability of railroad for wrongful acts of strangers.

Cited in Kiernan v. Manhattan R. Co. 28 Misc. 519, 59 N. Y. Supp. 626, holding carrier not liable for negligent act of passenger in swinging door against plaintiff; Hansen v. North Jersey Street R. Co. 64 N. J. L. 701, 46 Atl. 718, holding evidence that plaintiff was injured in alighting from car by its overcrowding sufficient for jury as to question of due care.

Cited in footnote to Haines v. Atlantic City R. Co. 50 L. R. A. 862, which denies liability for trespasser's unauthorized act in raising, and then lowering, railroad gates injuring passing team.

Cited in note (24 L. R. A. 711) on duty of carrier permitting cars to become overcrowded.

23 L. R. A. 609, GOBRECHT v. CINCINNATI, 51 Ohio St. 68, 36 N. E. 782.

Compensation of public officers.

Cited in footnote to Henderson v. Koenig, 57 L. R. A. 659, which holds void, statute requiring probate judge of one county only, to accept salary instead of fees.

23 L. R. A. 611, BANK OF ANTIGO v. UNION TRUST CO. 149 Ill. 343, 36 N. E. 1029.

Effect of payment by volunteer.

Cited in Bouton v. Cameron, 99 Ill. App. 621, holding volunteer without right of subrogation.

Cited in footnote to United States use of Fidelity Nat. Bank v. Rundle, 52 L. R. A. 505, which holds money furnished to pay labor claims not within bonds for paying persons supplying principal with labor or materials for prosecuting work.

Entire and divisible contracts.

Cited in Keeler v. Clifford, 165 Ill. 548, 46 N. E. 248, holding contract for removal of dirt, payable in definite instalments, severable; Spring v. Slayden-Kirksey Woolen Mills, 106 Ill. App. 582, and Rothschild Bros. v. Wise, 81 Ill. App. 99, holding contract for different articles bought at same time for different prices, severable.

Limit of power of agent for collection.

Cited in Cooney v. United States Wringer Co. 101 Ill. App. 474, holding agent to collect powerless to bind principal by anything except actual collection of money; National Bank v. American Exch. Bank, 151 Mo. 329, 74 Am. St. Rep. 527, 52 S. W. 265, holding that collecting bank takes check in payment of draft at its own risk; Gowling v. American Exp. Co. 102 Mo. App. 372, 76 S. W. 712, holding liability of collecting agency fixed by receiving draft instead of money in payment of check.

Assignment of fund in bank by check.

Cited in Gage Hotel Co. v. Union Nat. Bank, 171 Ill. 535, 39 L. R. A. 481, 63 Am. St. Rep. 270, 49 N. E. 420, holding that depositor cannot, by arrangement with bank, prevent application of future deposits in payment of check; Merchants Nat. Bank v. Maple, 65 Ill. App. 487, upholding right of bank to apply deposit to payment of note of drawer and another before presentment of checks withdrawing deposit; Staninger v. Tabor, 103 Ill. App. 336, holding delivery of check for payment of money, assignment pro tanto of funds on deposit; Henderson v. United States Nat. Bank, 59 Neb. 283, 80 N. W. 898, holding check for larger amount than sum on deposit not assignment thereof.

Cited in footnotes to Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Metropolitan Nat. Bank, 31 L. R. A. 653, which holds acceptance of check necessary to give holder right of action against bank for refusal to pay; Raesser v. National Exch. Bank, 56 L. R. A. 174, which holds bank's authority to pay check, working assignment pro tanto of fund, not revoked by depositor's death.

Distinguished in Pullen v. Placer County Bank, 138 Cal. 174, 94 Am. St. Rep. 19, 71 Pac. 83, holding check, without consideration, presented after death of drawer not assignment pro tanto of fund on deposit; First Nat. Bank v. Selden, 62 L. R. A. 561, 56 C. C. A. 534, 120 Fed. 214, holding assignment by check not such as to entitle holder to preference over creditors of national bank after insolvency.

23 L. R. A. 615, IRON CITY NAT. BANK v. FT. PITT NAT. BANK, 159 Pa. 46, 28 Atl. 195.

Payment of forged paper.

Cited in Land Title & T. Co. v. Northwestern Nat. Bank, 196 Pa. 235, 50 L. R.

A. 81, 79 Am. St. Rep. 717, 46 Atl. 420, holding bank not liable for payment of forged check, where drawer delivered same to forger believing him to be payee; United Security Co. v. Central Nat. Bank, 42 W. N. C. 149, holding bank liable to corporation for payment of check on forged indorsement by corporation agent; State v. First Nat. Bank, 203 Pa. 73, 52 Atl. 13, holding bank not liable for payment of forged draft, drawn by mistake of executor in favor of dead legatee.

Cited in footnote to Critten v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 57 L. R. A. 530, which holds bank paying plainly altered check to clerk of drawer, without asking explanation, liable for loss from subsequent payment of similar checks.

23 L. R. A. 618, COREY v. WADSWORTH, 99 Ala. 68, 42 Am. St. Rep. 29, 11 So. 350.

Report of second appeal in 118 Ala. 526, 44 L. R. A. 779, 25 So. 503.

Preferences by insolvents.

Cited in Sabin v. Columbia River Lumber & Fuel Co. 25 Or. 30, 42 Am. St. Rep. 756, 35 Pac. 854, and O'Bear Jewelry Co. v. Volfer, 106 Ala. 213, 28 L. R. A. 710, 54 Am. St. Rep. 31, 17 So. 525, upholding right of going corporation to prefer creditors; Berney Nat. Bank v. Guyon, 111 Ala. 503, 20 So. 520, holding sale of corporation assets, in effect an unlawful preference of controlling directors, void; Corey v. Wadsworth, 118 Ala. 526, 44 L. R. A. 779, footnote p. 766, 25 So. 503, sustaining preference to stockholder, director, and president of insolvent corporation; Gay v. Brierfield Coal & I. Co. (omitted from official report in 94 Ala. 332), 16 L. R. A. 576, 11 So. 353, holding paid-in capital stock, pledge in trust primarily for security of all creditors; Ingwersen Bros. v. Edgecombe, 42 Neb. 744, 60 N. W. 1032, and W. P. Noble Mercantile Co. v. Mount Pleasant Co-op. Inst. 12 Utah, 235, 42 Pac. 869, holding preference of director of insolvent corporation over other creditors void; Adams & W. Co. v. Deyette, 8 S. D. 147, 31 L. R. A. 508, footnote p. 497, 59 Am. St. Rep. 751, 65 N. W. 471 (dissenting opinion), majority denying right to prefer debt for money borrowed by corporation to purchase its own stock; Lyons Thomas Hardware Co. v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co. 86 Tex. 165, 22 L. R. A. 815, holding preferential deed of trust by private trading corporation after insolvency void as against unsecured creditors; State v. Bank of Ogalalla, 65 Neb. 24, 90 N. W. 961, holding certificates of deposit issued to stockholders of insolvent bank void as to creditors.

Cited in footnotes to Illinois Steel Co. v. O'Donnell, 31 L. R. A. 265, which holds valid, securities given to directors by insolvent going concern to obtain money loaned at same time; American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Ward, 55 L. R. A. 356, which sustains chattel mortgage to secure just demands of directors of insolvent corporation; National Wall Paper Co. v. Columbia Nat. Bank, 56 L. R. A. 121, which denies right to prefer debt on which officers and directors bound as sureties; Nappanee Canning Co. v. Reid, M. & Co. 59 L. R. A. 199, which sustains right to prefer unsecured claims of directors and obligations on which they are liable.

Distinguished in Mary Lee Coal & R. Co. v. Knox, 110 Ala. 637, 19 So. 67, upholding preference of creditor corporation by going debtor corporation, directors and stockholders of both being same persons; American Nat. Bank v. Dallas Tinware Mfg. Co. 15 Tex. Civ. App. 635, 39 S. W. 955, upholding right to acquire preference by attachment on assets of going, although insolvent, corporation; Smith-Dimmick Lumber Co. v. Teague, 119 Ala. 393, 24 So. 4, holding that relief from mortgages as improper preferences will not be granted where not demanded on ground of such preference.

Allegation of insolvency.

Distinguished in Coal City Coal & Coke Co. v. Hazard Powder Co. 108 Ala. 223, 19 So. 392, holding allegation that alleged fraudulent grantor is and was insolvent at time of grant, sufficient allegation of insolvency.

23 L. R. A. 622, STROUSE v. LEIPF, 101 Ala. 433, 46 Am. St. Rep. 122, 14 So. 667.

Contracts and torts of married woman.

Cited in note (30 L. R. A. 521) on liability of husband and wife for wife's libel and slander.

Qualified and held obiter in Strauss v. Glass, 108 Ala. 549, 18 So. 526, holding that married woman not engaged in trade or business, without power to make verbal contract, either with or without husband's consent.

Liability for harboring vicious dog.

Cited in Speckmann v. Kreig, 79 Mo. App. 381, holding that knowingly keeping vicious dog is at owner's peril.

Cited in footnotes to Martinez v. Bernhard, 55 L. R. A. 671, which denies liability for bite by dog not known to bite before; Crowley v. Groonell, 55 L. R. A. 876, which holds owner liable for assault by dog, due to known playful propensity.

Pleading inconsistent defenses.

Cited in note (48 L. R. A. 197, 209) on right to plead inconsistent defenses.

23 L. R. A. 628, McNEILL v. HAGERTY, 51 Ohio St. 255, 37 N. E. 526.

Insolvent estates.

Cited in Havens v. Horton, 53 Ohio St. 345, 41 N. E. 253, holding jurisdiction of probate court under deed of assignment not ousted by action by mortgagee to foreclose mortgage; Wambaugh v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 59 Ohio St. 246, 52 N. E. 839, holding that legal title to property upon removal of assignee and appointment of trustee vests in latter; Re Pettibone Mfg. Co. 3 Ohio N. P. 43, upholding jurisdiction of probate court or its successor to entertain petition to set aside assignment of claim against insolvent estate, induced by fraud; Re Jones, 5 Ohio N. P. 107, holding deed conveying all of grantor's property for creditors, ordinary deed of assignment; Re Jackson Brewing Co. 4 Ohio N. P. 244, holding personal property in hands of general assignee not taxable, although assignor's business continued by assignee; Sandheger v. Banner Brewing Co. 6 Ohio N. P. 411, upholding right of county treasurer to collect taxes on personal property in receiver's hands.

Distinguished in French v. Bobe, 64 Ohio St. 338, 60 N. E. 292, holding personal property in hands of assignee, held for manufacturing purposes, not exempt from taxation; Re Robb, 5 Ohio N. P. 53, holding funds of insolvent estate in hands of administrator subject to taxation; Baker v. French, 18 Ohio C. C. 422, holding real estate in hands of general assignee not exempt from taxation.

23 L. R. A. 632, RHODES v. WALSH, 55 Minn. 542, 57 N. W. 212.

Report of later appeal in 58 Minn. 200, 59 N. W. 1000.

Privileges from service of process or arrest.

Cited in State ex rel. Isenring v. Polacheck, 101 Wis. 434, 77 N. W. 708, holding exemption of legislator from arrest a mere personal privilege, entitling him to discharge on pleading it; Berlett v. Weary (Neb.) 60 L. R. A. 613, footnote p. 609, 93 N. W. 238, authorizing service of summons on member of legislature during legislative session; Greenleaf v. People's Bank, 133 N. C. 300, 63 L. R. A. 503, 93 Am. St. Rep. 709, 45 S. E. 638, upholding service of summons on nonresident attorney in state representing clients in matter pending in Federal court.

Cited in footnote to Worth v. Norton, 45 L. R. A. 563, which denies privilege from service in civil action to Congressman absent on private business.

Disapproved in effect in Central Trust Co. v. Milwaukee Street R. Co. 74 Fed. 444, setting aside service of subpoena on attorney coming within jurisdiction on business of client, made before he had had reasonable time to depart.

23 L. R. A. 639, OAKDALE MFG. CO. v. GARST, 18 R. I. 484, 49 Am. St. Rep. 784, 28 Atl. 973.

Contracts in restraint of trade.

Cited in Tillinghast v. Boothby, 20 R. I. 60, 37 Atl. 344, upholding contract not to practise dentistry in specified county; Lanzit v. J. W. Sefton Mfg. Co. 83 Ill. App. 179, upholding portion of contract in restraint of trade, in so far as it limited operation to two states named; Anchor Electric Co. v. Hawkes, 171 Mass. 106, 41 L. R. A. 192, 68 Am. St. Rep. 403, 50 N. E. 509, upholding agreement by officers of corporation not to engage in business for five years; Anderson v. Rowland, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 462, 44 S. W. 911, upholding validity of deed binding grantor not to permit running of saloon in same block for five years.

Cited in footnotes to Kramer v. Old, 34 L. R. A. 389, which sustains contract restricting seller from engaging in milling business in vicinity of certain city; Clark v. Needham, 51 L. R. A. 785, which holds void, lease of manufacturing machinery with agreement against lessor engaging in business for five years; Bancroft v. Union Embossing Co. 64 L. R. A. 298, which sustains contract by one selling right to manufacture and sell machine invented by him not to make, or transfer to others right to make, such machines.

Recognition or exclusion of foreign corporations.

Cited in note (24 L. R. A. 292) on recognition or exclusion of foreign corporations.

23 L. R. A. 642, YOUNG v. YOUNG, 89 Va. 675, 17 S. E. 470.

Contingent and expectant interests in property.

Cited in Methodist-Protestant Church v. Young, 130 N. C. 13, 40 S. E. 691, holding testator and daughter without interest in land so that it could be willed at their death, where church had received the fee subject to condition which was not broken until after their death; Perrigo v. Milwaukee, 92 Wis. 242, 65 N. W. 1025, holding expectancy of payment of balance of purchase price of land sold city not taxable; Howbert v. Cauthorn, 100 Va. 658, 42 S. E. 683, holding contingent remainder not subject to attachment for debt; Nichols v. Guthrie, 109 Tenn. 541, 73 S. W. 107, and Taylor v. Taylor, 118 Iowa, 416, 92 N. W. 71.

holding contingent interest in land not subject to levy and sale under execution, and referring particularly to annotation in 23 L. R. A. 642; McDonald v. Bayard Sav. Bank, 123 Iowa, 418, 98 N. W. 1025, holding, under statute, that contingent interest in estate may be conveyed by deed.

Cited in footnotes to Chase v. York County Sav. Bank, 32 L. R. A. 785, which holds interest in trust for division of proceeds of sales not subject to levy; Hardy v. Gunn, 45 L. R. A. 804, which holds homestead not subject to execution on judgment for use and occupation of other land.

Cited in note (32 L. R. A. 595) on validity of transaction between heir and ancestor, relating to former's expectancy.

23 L. R. A. 650, O'CONNOR v. WALTER, 37 Neb. 267, 40 Am. St. Rep. 486, 55 N. W. 867.

Evasion of exemption laws of debtor's domicile.

Cited in Singer Mfg. Co. v. Fleming, 39 Neb. 691, 23 L. R. A. 214, 42 Am. St. Rep. 613, 58 N. W. 226, holding wages due citizens of Nebraska, garnished in foreign state, recoverable under statute; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Sturm, 174 U. S. 718, 43 L. ed. 1147, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 797, holding that full faith should be given garnishment proceedings begun in courts of foreign states.

Cited in notes (36 L. R. A. 582) on debtor's right of action against creditor for collecting debt in another jurisdiction in evasion of exemption laws of their domicile; (47 L. R. A. 134) on effect of judgment against garnishee to merge or satisfy liability of principal debtor.

23 L. R. A. 652, FIDELITY & D. CO. v. HAINES, 78 Md. 454, 28 Atl. 393.

Statutes requiring trustees to file bonds.

Cited in Talbott v. Leatherbury, 92 Md. 169, 48 Atl. 733, holding deed to hold until given time and convey to cestuis que trusts, with incidental power of sale, not within statute requiring trustee to file bond; Keane v. Chamberlain, 14 App. D. C. 107, holding passing of title to land in foreign state to assignee subject to statute requiring filing of approved bond.

Distinguished in Moore v. Land Title & T. Co. 82 Md. 290, 33 Atl. 641, holding statute requiring general assignee to file approved bond not applicable to nonresident conveying personal property in state.

23 L. R. A. 654, CHICAGO & N. W. R. CO. v. PRESCOTT, 8 C. C. A. 109, 19 U. S. App. 291, 59 Fed. 237.

Proximate cause of injury.

Cited in footnote to Shields v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 27 L. R. A. 680, which holds obstruction of highway by excursion train not proximate cause of injury to travelers on highway by passenger's misconduct.

Duty of traveler to look at railroad crossings.

Cited in footnotes to Western & A. R. Co. v. Ferguson, 54 L. R. A. 803, which holds that failure to look when within 30 feet of track does not prevent recovery; Keenan v. Union Traction Co. 58 L. R. A. 217, which holds failure to look for train when within 35 feet of track, negligence.

Questions for jury.

Cited in Lundeen v. Livingston Electric Light Co. 17 Mont. 37, 41 Pac. 995, holding question whether post and guy wire obstruct use of street, for jury; Laible v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 13 App. Div. 580, 43 N. Y. Supp. 1003, holding question whether carriers negligently obstructed highway and exercised due care in operation of trains, for jury.

Knowledge of defect as proof of contributory negligence.

Cited in footnote to Wheat v. St. Louis, 64 L. R. A. 292, which holds recovery for injury due to overturning of wagon by driving on manhole projecting above surface of street, prevented by knowledge of injured person of its existence.

23 L. R. A. 658, HICKMAN v. KANSAS, 120 Mo. 110, 42 Am. St. Rep. 684, 25 S. W. 225.

Self-executing constitutional provisions.

Cited in State v. Kyle, 166 Mo. 302, 56 L. R. A. 120, footnote p. 115, 65 S. W. 763, holding self-operating, constitutional amendment for criminal prosecution by indictment or information only.

Cited in footnotes to Anderson v. Whatcom County, 33 L. R. A. 137, which holds constitutional provision for justices of peace receiving salary instead of fees, self-executing; Criswell v. Montana C. R. Co. 33 L. R. A. 554, which holds act imposing liability on domestic railroad companies for fellow servant's negligence abrogated by adopting Constitution prohibiting special privileges to foreign corporations; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Ihlenberg, 34 L. R. A. 393, which holds constitutional provision that employee's knowledge of defect shall be no defense to action for injury, self-executing.

Cumulative remedies.

Cited in Smith v. St Joseph, 122 Mo. 646, 27 S. W. 344, holding failure to appropriate money for damages to abutting owner by change of street grade as required by statute, no defense to action therefor; Markowitz v. Kansas City, 125 Mo. 489, 46 Am. St. Rep. 498, 28 S. W. 642, holding statutory remedy to ascertain damages by reason of changed street grade not exclusive; MacMurray-Judge Architectural Iron Co. v. St. Louis, 138 Mo. 618, 39 S. W. 467, holding damages not recoverable in injunction proceeding restraining city from changing grade of street; People's R. Co. v. Grand Avenue R. Co. 149 Mo. 253, 50 S. W. 829, holding statutory remedy, if adequate, must be pursued, where new duty or cause of action is created by such statute; Bowles v. Abrahams, 65 Mo. App. 13, holding statutory remedy for damage by animals running at large not exclusive; Walker v. Sedalia, 74 Mo. App. 74, upholding common-law right of action, independent of statute, for damages to abutting owner by change of street grade; Johnson v. Johnson, 72 Mo. App. 390, holding heirs not prevented from objecting to final settlement of administrator's accounts because of cumulative remedy on bond; St. Louis v. Hollrah, 175 Mo. 85, 74 S. W. 996, holding common-law action for necessities furnished lunatic not taken away by statute providing for presenting such claims to probate court; Walsh v. Association of Master Plumbers, 97 Mo. App. 295, 71 S. W. 455, holding prior remedy not taken away by statute providing additional remedy for combinations in restraint of trade.

Taking or damaging private property for public use.

Cited in Ruckert v. Grand Ave. R. Co. 163 Mo. 278, 63 S. W. 814, holding action for damages for laying of street railway not maintainable by abutting owner, unless specially injured; St. Louis, K. & N. W. R. Co. v. Knapp-Stout & Co. Co. 160 Mo. 414, 61 S. W. 300, holding rule as to taking of property for public use not affected by addition in Constitution of words "or damaged;" Waldron v. Kansas City, 69 Mo. App. 52, holding failure to instruct that consequential damages are recoverable only for material change of grade, immaterial where evidence showed 10-foot cut; Eachus v. Los Angeles Consol. Electric R. Co. 103 Cal. 621, 42 Am. St. Rep. 149, 37 Pac. 750, holding action maintainable by abutting owner against railroad for damages caused by excavation in street in front of premises; Paris Fountain Water Co. v. Greenville, 53 S. C. 89, 30 S. E. 699, holding damages recoverable by water company for change of grade of street; Blair v. Charleston, 43 W. Va. 65, 35 L. R. A. 855, footnote p. 852, 64 Am. St. Rep. 837, 26 S. E. 341, sustaining right of purchaser after paper grade line established to recover damages for change of grade; Less v. Butte, 28 Mont. 32, 61 L. R. A. 603, footnote p. 601, 98 Am. St. Rep. 545, 72 Pac. 140, requiring compensation for injury to abutting property by original establishment of street grade; Barfield v. Gleason, 111 Ky. 521, 63 S. W. 964, holding ordinance for street improvement not void because of failure to provide for compensation for injury to abutting property.

Cited in footnotes to Ressegieu v. Sioux City, 28 L. R. A. 389, which upholds right to recover for injury to building by change of street grade, established by ordinance only; Searle v. Lead, 39 L. R. A. 345, which denies right to grade street in front of premises without making compensation.

Interference with vested rights.

Cited in Westport v. Mulholland, 159 Mo. 97, 53 L. R. A. 444, 60 S. W. 77, Reversing 84 Mo. App. 322, holding railroad taken into city on extension of limits of municipality not exempt from municipal police regulation.

Rule as to deduction of "benefits."

Cited in Cole v. St. Louis, 132 Mo. 640, 34 S. W. 469, holding general benefits not deductible from damages to property by change of street grade; Hook v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 133 Mo. 321, 34 S. W. 549, holding that greater convenience of access of people to other local road leading to railroad station does not show peculiar benefit to company from opening of highway over its track; St. Louis, O. H. & C. R. Co. v. Fowler, 142 Mo. 680, 44 S. W. 771, holding switching privileges which railroad is bound by statute to provide to be special benefits; Kent v. St. Joseph, 72 Mo. App. 44, holding proper instruction that deductible benefits are such as especially inured to plaintiff's property; Clay v. Board, 85 Mo. App. 242, holding substantial damages, less special benefits, recoverable against city officers changing street grade without ordinance therefor; Pochila v. Calvert, W. & B. Valley R. Co. 31 Tex. Civ. App. 400, 72 S. W. 255, holding that benefits not peculiar to specific property cannot be deducted from damages caused by excavating for right of way.

Cited in footnotes to Schroeder v. Joliet, 52 L. R. A. 634, which authorizes consideration of benefit from improvement in assessing damages from cutting down street; Beveridge v. Lewis, 59 L. R. A. 581, which denies right to deduct benefits from damages in exercise of eminent domain by individual.

Measure of damages.

Cited in Slattery v. St. Louis, 120 Mo. 188, 25 S. W. 521, holding as measure of damages caused by building of bridge, difference in value of property before and after injury; Kansas City & N. Connecting R. Co. v. Shoemaker, 160 Mo. 434, 61 S. W. 205, holding failure to instruct that damage not difference between market value of land before and after taking not error; Hampton v. Kansas City, 74 Mo. App. 134, holding measure of damages for injury to abutting owner by change of street grade, to be injury at that time; McElroy v. Kansas City & I. Air Line, 172 Mo. 556, 72 S. W. 913, holding measure of damages for taking of land for right of way to be value of land taken, and damage to remainder, less benefits.

23 L. R. A. 665, VAN MATRE v. SANKEY, 148 Ill. 536, 36 N. E. 628.

Effect of foreign statutes and judgments.

Cited in Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Thompson, 155 Ill. 209, 46 Am. St. Rep. 355, 40 N. E. 488, holding judgment of foreign state on question of jurisdiction cannot be attacked for fraud; binding in sister state; Bell v. Farwell, 176 Ill. 495, 42 L. R. A. 807, 68 Am. St. Rep. 194, 54 N. E. 346, holding construction given foreign statutes by foreign courts binding in sister state; Fred Miller Brewing Co. v. Capital Ins. Co. 111 Iowa, 599, 82 Am. St. Rep. 529, 82 N. W. 1023, holding default judgment in compliance with Wisconsin statutes binding elsewhere; Schmaltz v. York Mfg. Co. 204 Pa. 18, 59 L. R. A. 914, 93 Am. St. Rep. 782, 53 Atl. 522, holding construction of statute by lower courts of state of enactment not binding in sister state; Wanamaker v. Poorbaugh, 91 Ill. App. 561, holding that foreign statutes must be strictly complied with where constructive service in foreign state is relied on; Schmaltz v. York Mfg. Co. 204 Pa. 18, 59 L. R. A. 914, 93 Am. St. Rep. 782, 53 Atl. 522, holding that construction of statute of state by its highest tribunal will ordinarily be received as conclusive by courts of other states.

Attack upon court's jurisdiction.

Cited in Swift v. Yanaway, 153 Ill. 203, 38 N. E. 589, holding finding of court of general jurisdiction as to its jurisdiction not assailable by evidence outside record in collateral proceeding; Maher v. Title Guarantee & T. Co. 95 Ill. App. 373, holding mere irregularities of procedure not ground for interference with judgment in equity; Parsons v. Parsons, 101 Wis. 80, 70 Am. St. Rep. 894, 77 N. W. 147, holding insufficiency of proof in adoption proceedings not jurisdictional error.

Status and rights of adopted children.

Cited in Melvin v. Martin, 18 R. I. 651, 30 Atl. 467, holding status of adopted child determinable by law of domicile; Gray v. Holmes, 57 Kan. 220, 33 L. R. A. 208, footnote p. 207, 45 Pac. 596, sustaining right of inheritance of child adopted in sister state; Bray v. Miles, 23 Ind. App. 465, 55 N. E. 446 (dissenting opinion), majority holding adopted child of deceased daughter entitled to take under bequest to testator's children with provision that share of any deceased child should go to her children; Re McKeag, 141 Cal. 411, 74 Pac. 1039, holding adoption proceedings not subject to collateral attack for mere irregularities.

Cited in footnotes to Hartwell v. Tefft, 34 L. R. A. 500, which holds adopted child "lawful issue" within meaning of will; Clarkson v. Hatton, 39 L. R. A. 748, which holds adopted child not within statute giving remainder to children or heirs of life tenant; Butterfield v. Sawyer, 52 L. R. A. 75, which holds adopted child within deed to woman for life, with remainder to her "child," if any, otherwise to her "heirs generally;" Glascott v. Bragg, 56 L. R. A. 258, which holds will in favor of third person revoked by marriage and adoption of child.

Distinguished in New York Life Ins. & T. Co. v. Viele, 161 N. Y. 18, 76 Am. St. Rep. 238, 55 N. E. 311, holding adopted child not entitled to take under bequest to "lawful issue" of daughter, where testatrix intended property to go to descendants.

Affidavits in tax proceedings.

Cited in Hammond v. Carter, 155 Ill. 591, 40 N. E. 1019, holding statutory affidavit of "diligent inquiry" not required to specify particular persons to whom inquiry was made; Sullivan v. Eddy, 164 Ill. 397, 45 N. E. 837, holding exclusion of tax proceedings and deeds to show title not reversible error in ejectment action, where affidavits required by revenue law, upon which deeds were issued, were defective; Glos v. Boettcher, 193 Ill. 536, 61 N. E. 1017, holding void, affidavit of "diligent inquiry" in specified county only.

23 L. R. A. 674, WATTS v. NORFOLK & W. R. CO. 39 W. Va. 196, 45 Am. St. Rep. 894, 19 S. E. 521.

Grant or release of right of way.

Cited in Nunnamaker v. Columbia Water Power Co. 47 S. C. 487, 34 L. R. A. 222, 58 Am. St. Rep. 905, 25 S. E. 751, holding damages which would have been obtainable on condemnation of right of way, conclusively presumed to be included in purchase price; Uhl v. Ohio River R. Co. 51 W. Va. 111, 41 S. E. 340 (dissenting opinion), majority holding grant of right of way, taken alone, passes easement only.

Cited in footnote to Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. v. Harlin, 36 L. R. A. 417, which holds damage by negligent construction of railroad ditches not included in release of damages from "construction, building, or use" of railroad.

Intermittent and permanent injuries.

Cited in Henry v. Ohio River R. Co. 40 W. Va. 243, 21 S. E. 863, holding nuisance caused by closing culvert, causing overflow, not permanent but recurring injury; Guinn v. Ohio River R. Co. 46 W. Va. 154, 76 Am. St. Rep. 806, 33 S. E. 87, holding injury to abutting owner by construction of railroad in street, original and permanent; Ohio River R. Co. v. Johnson, 50 W. Va. 505, 40 S. E. 407, upholding second action for damages to gravel bank by washing away, due to construction of railroad; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. King, 23 Ind. App. 577, 55 N. E. 875, holding injury caused plaintiff's property by dumping offensive material into pond not permanent; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Morris, 28 C. C. A. 58, 55 U. S. App. 211, 83 Fed. 995, holding evidence in action for damages from surgical operation insufficient to warrant consideration of probability of permanent impairment of health; Rowe v. Shenandoah Pulp Co. 42 W. Va. 560, 57 Am. St. Rep. 870, 26 S. E. 320 (dissenting opinion by Bannon, J.), who holds overflowing of land by building of permanent dam to be permanent injury; Ridley v. Seaboard & R. R. Co. 118 N. C. 1007, 32 L. R. A. 711, footnote p. 708, 24 S. E. 730, authorizing recovery in single action of present and future damages from insufficient passageway in railroad embankment; Hollenbeck v. Marion, 116 Iowa, 79, 89 N. W. 210, raising, but not deciding, question whether recovery in action for damages for pollution of stream by sewage would bar another action.

Cited in footnotes to Doran v. Seattle, 54 L. R. A. 532, which authorizes recovery for damages from continuing nuisance accruing within statutory period, regardless of time nuisance has existed; Church of Holy Communion v. Paterson Extension R. Co. 55 L. R. A. 81, which holds that receipt given in satisfaction for past damages, railroad agreeing to build retaining wall to prevent further damages, does not include future injuries due to insufficiency of retaining wall.

Way of necessity.

Distinguished in Uhl v. Ohio River R. Co. 47 W. Va. 63, 34 S. E. 934, holding way of necessity implied to pipe to residence, natural gas discovered after grant of right of way in fee to railroad.

Damages.

Cited in Douglass v. Ohio River R. Co. 51 W. Va. 528, 41 S. E. 911, holding that plaintiff must furnish jury tangible data for determining actual damages in order to recover for breach of covenant by carrier to fence.

Obstruction of floatable and navigable streams.

Cited in State v. Elk Island Boom Co. 41 W. Va. 799, 24 S. E. 590, affirming conviction of boom company for unreasonably obstructing floatable stream; Leitzsey v. Columbia Water Power Co. 47 S. C. 484, 34 L. R. A. 222, 25 S. E. 744, holding complaint for damages for maintenance of dam authorized by law, demurrable for failure to allege negligence.

Cited in notes (59 L. R. A. 51) on right to obstruct or destroy rights of navigation; (64 L. R. A. 984) on liability for injuries caused by attempted exercise of rights of navigation.

Removal of rock by blasting.

Cited in Cary v. Morrison, 65 L. R. A. 663, 129 Fed. 180, holding blasting by dynamite and gun powder reasonable method of removing rocks in bringing railroad to grade.

23 L. R. A. 681, REITER v. STATE, 51 Ohio St. 74, 36 N. E. 943.

Public offices and vacancies therein.

Cited in State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Thompson, 9 Ohio C. C. 166, holding vacancy created in office of county recorder by act postponing beginning of successor's term.

Cited in note (24 L. R. A. 494) on compelling citizen to accept office.

23 L. R. A. 685, STATE, AVIS, PROSECUTOR, v. VINELAND, 56 N. J. L. 474, 28 Atl. 1039.

Municipal control of highways.

Cited in State, Tallon, Prosecutor, v. Hoboken, 59 N. J. L. 393, 36 Atl. 693, holding subsequently purchasing lot owners bound by reservation of right to lay tracks in streets, in dedication to municipality.

Cited in footnotes to Carmel v. Shaw, 27 L. R. A. 580, which holds city has complete control over shade trees in public street; Bradley v. Southern New England Teleph. Co. 32 L. R. A. 280, which denies power of selectmen to cut and trim trees overhanging highway, without owner's consent; Vanderhurst v. Tholcke, 35 L. R. A. 267, which holds determination of city council that trees on sidewalk are obstruction, conclusive; Wyant v. Central Teleph. Co. 47 L. R. A. 497, which sustains telephone company's right to do necessary trimming of trees in highway without giving owner opportunity to do so; Stretch v. Cassopolis, 51 L. R. A. 345, which denies right to remove shade trees from street without notice to abutter; Miller v. Detroit, Y. & A. A. R. Co. 51 L. R. A. 955, which sustains street railway company's right to remove obstructing shade trees without compensation to abutter.

Cited in notes (36 L. R. A. 595) on power of municipal corporations to define, prevent, and abate nuisances; (39 L. R. A. 670) on municipal power over nuisances affecting highways and waters.

23 L. R. A. 687, DUN v. CITY NAT. BANK, 7 C. C. A. 152, 14 U. S. App. 695, 58 Fed. 174.

Liability for default of agent.

Cited in Irwin v. Reeves Pulley Co. 20 Ind. App. 110, 48 N. E. 601 (dissenting opinion), majority holding bank not liable for default of correspondent selected with due care.

Liability of subagent to principal.

Cited in footnote to Milton v. Johnson, 47 L. R. A. 529, which holds subagent applying proceeds of debt collected, to payment of claim due him from principal agent, liable to principal therefor.

23 L. R. A. 693, MULLEN v. OWOSSO, 100 Mich. 103, 43 Am. St. Rep. 436, 58 N. W. 663.

Imputable negligence.

Cited in Fye v. Chapin, 121 Mich. 679, 80 N. W. 797, holding negligence of parents in admitting dog to house not imputable to child injured by it; Hartley State Bank v. McCorkell, 91 Iowa, 660, 60 N. W. 197, holding question whether driver's negligence was imputable to plaintiff properly submitted to jury on conflicting evidence.

Cited in footnote to Koplitz v. St. Paul, 58 L. R. A. 74, which holds negligence of omnibus driver not imputable to member of picnic party carried.

Negligence of person riding with another.

Cited in footnotes to Howe v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 30 L. R. A. 684, which holds negligence of one riding with another when injured at railroad crossing, question for jury; Illinois C. R. Co. v. McLeod, 52 L. R. A. 954, which holds hirer of driver and team bound to check driver's attempt to cross track without stopping and listening for train.

23 L. R. A. 695, AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION v. TAYLOR, 161 Pa. 307, 29 Atl. 26.

Property exempt from taxation.

Cited in Pennsylvania Hospital v. Delaware County, 169 Pa. 308, 36 W. N. C. 547, 32 Atl. 456, holding real estate used for benefit of charitable hospital, exempt; Sisters of St. Francis v. Delaware County, 7 Del. Co. Rep. 220, holding farm lands used for benefit of charitable corporation, not exempt; Re Historical Soc. 13 Montg. Co. L. Rep. 207, holding real estate of charitable historical society, exclusively used for purposes of the organization, exempt; Re Blair County, 8 Pa. Dist. R. 42, holding land leased by county commissioners for purposes of industrial home for poor children, not exempt; Yale University v. New Haven, 71

Conn. 329, 43 L. R. A. 494, 42 Atl. 87, holding college dormitories exempt: Sisters of Peace v. Westervelt, 64 N. J. L. 513, 45 Atl. 788, and Parker v. Quinn, 23 Utah, 341, 64 Pac. 961, holding rented property of charitable organization not exempt; Lancaster County v. Warfel, 19 Lanc. L. Rev. 79, holding land devised to trustees for indigent women, and held for sale, unused and unoccupied, not exempt.

Cited in footnotes to Fitterer v. Crawford, 50 L. R. A. 191, which denies exemption of Masonic lodge building, first and second stories of which are rented to pay debt and current expenses of lodge; Young Men's Christian Assn. v. Douglas County, 52 L. R. A. 123, which denies exemption to part of Y. M. C. A. building rented for business purposes; Protestant Episcopal Church v. Prioleau, 57 L. R. A. 606, which holds exempt, church parsonage rented, the rent being used to procure other residence for parson.

23 L. R. A. 699, ATTY. GEN. ex rel. RICH v. JOCHIM, 99 Mich. 358, 41 Am. St. Rep. 606, 58 N. W. 611.

Followed without comment in Atty. Gen. ex rel. Rich v. Berry, 99 Mich. 379, 58 N. W. 617, and Atty. Gen. ex rel. Rich v. Hambitzer, 99 Mich. 380, 58 N. W. 617.

Legislative powers and due process of law.

Cited in Osborn v. Charlevoix Circuit Judge, 114 Mich. 666, 72 N. W. 982, upholding act authorizing seizure and destruction of nets used in illegal fishing; Detroit Citizens' Street R. Co. v. Detroit, 125 Mich. 709, 84 Am. St. Rep. 589, 85 N. W. 96, holding city council not obliged to notify corporation objecting to assessment, which has been heard before its committee, to attend when it sits on appeal; Atty. Gen. v. Sullivan, 163 Mass. 451, 28 L. R. A. 457, 40 N. E. 843, holding president of common council in trial of title to office, without right of jury; Wilkinson v. Police Commrs. 107 Mich. 397, 65 N. W. 668, upholding right to mandamus police commissioners to reinstate wrongfully dismissed police officer; People ex rel. Mitchell v. Sturges, 21 Misc. 607, 47 N. Y. Supp. 999, upholding power of legislature to shorten term of village president; Moore v. Strickling, 46 W. Va. 519, 50 L. R. A. 280, footnote p. 279, 33 S. E. 274, holding public office not property within constitutional provision for due process of law; Pratt v. Police & Fire Comrs. 15 Utah, 12, 49 Pac. 747, holding summary dismissal of chief of police by police and fire commissioners void; Taylor v. Beckham, 178 U. S. 577, 44 L. ed. 1200, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 890, holding public office not title, right, privilege, or immunity secured by Constitution of United States; The Judges' Cases, 102 Tenn. 635, 46 L. R. A. 598, 53 S. W. 134 (dissenting opinion by Snodgrass, Ch. J.), who holds legislature without power wholly to deprive constitutional judges of jurisdiction and territory; Adsit v. Smith, 129 Mich. 9, 88 N. W. 65, upholding power of supervisors fixing additional compensation of judges, under statute, to revoke same; Mial v. Ellington (State ex rel. Mial v. Ellington), 134 N. C. 149, 65 L. R. A. 704, 46 S. E. 961, holding that public officer appointed by legislature has no vested interest in office, of which legislature may not deprive him; People v. Detroit United R. Co. (Mich.) 63 L. R. A. 750, 97 N. W. 36, holding ordinance requiring equipment of street cars with air brakes not invalid as taking of property without due process of law.

Who are public officers.

Cited in Lyons v. Rutland R. Co. 74 Vt. 19, 51 Atl. 1059, holding railroad company operating railroad not "public officer."

23 L. R. A. 707, DRUMMOND v. CRANE, 159 Mass. 577, 38 Am. St. Rep. 460, 35 N. E. 90.

Construction of, and actions on, contracts.

Cited in Walsh v. Packard, 165 Mass. 192, 40 L. R. A. 345, 52 Am. St. Rep. 508, 42 N. E. 577, upholding right of administrator to sue on covenant to pay rent to intestate; Edge Moor Bridge Works v. Bristol County, 170 Mass. 533, 49 N. E. 918, holding acceptance of bid and vote to avoid contract not agreement to enter into contract; American Lighting Co. v. McCuen, 92 Md. 706, 48 Atl. 352, holding contract made by acceptance of bid and awarding of contract for street lighting; Brown v. Cushman, 173 Mass. 370, 53 N. E. 860, holding contract of agency terminated by death of principal; Rotch v. French, 176 Mass. 3, 79 Am. St. Rep. 292, 56 N. E. 893, holding that guaranty to deceased of stock dividend did not run to executor; Lydig v. Braman, 177 Mass. 221, 58 N. E. 696, upholding right of trustee of bonds to maintain action for damages for refusal to repurchase same; Wabasha Electric Co. v. Wymore, 60 Neb. 202, 82 N. W. 626, refusing injunction to restrain city from discontinuance of certain lights contracted for.

Cited in footnotes to Marvel v. Phillips, 26 L. R. A. 416, which holds contract by assignee of invention, to advance funds for joint benefit, discharged by his death; Hughes v. Gross, 32 L. R. A. 620, which holds contract of employment by firm not dissolved by death of member; Gay v. Ward, 32 L. R. A. 818, which holds continuing guaranty revoked by notice of guarantor's death; Cox v. Martin, 36 L. R. A. 800, which holds executory contract requiring peculiar skill or trust terminated by death; Deweese v. Muff, 42 L. R. A. 789, which sustains payment of note after principal's death to agent having it in possession, indorsed for collection; Madden v. Jacobs, 50 L. R. A. 827, which holds clerk's employment for year not terminated by burning of property and dissolution of employing firm.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 433) on sufficiency of contract by offer and acceptance without execution of contemplated formal instrument.

Measure of damages for breach of contract.

Cited in Smith v. Brown, 164 Mass. 586, 42 N. E. 101, upholding finding of substantial damages for breach of contract not to engage in drug business; Cutter v. Gillette, 163 Mass. 97, 39 N. E. 1010, upholding right of wrongfully discharged employee to recover for contract period subsequent to trial; Grime v. Borden, 166 Mass. 201, 44 N. E. 216, holding substantial damages recoverable by trustee for wife on breach of separation agreement; Farr v. Rouillard, 172 Mass. 305, 52 N. E. 443, holding damages for breach of common-law bond measurable by interest of cestui que trust.

Municipal water supply.

Cited in note (61 L. R. A. 108) on establishment and regulation of municipal water supply.

23 L. R. A. 715, WARD v. SOUTHERN P. CO. 25 Or. 433, 36 Pac. 166.

Duty of carrier to licensees.

Cited in Young v. Clark, 16 Utah, 50, 50 Pac. 832, holding carrier bound to use reasonable care to prevent injury to child on bridge used as foot crossing by public for seventeen years; Mills v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 5 App. Div. 19, 39

N. Y. Supp. 280, holding carrier not liable for injury to mail clerk hurt while walking under coal trestle; Cahill v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 20 C. C. A. 187, 46 U. S. App. 85, 74 Fed. 288, holding permissive use of crossing by several thousands of persons daily imposes duty upon carrier of reasonable precautions to prevent their injury.

Cited in footnotes to Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hammill, 24 L. R. A. 531, which holds duty owed to one using footway alongside railroad bridge in accordance with recognized custom; Ashworth v. Southern R. Co. 59 L. R. A. 592, which holds company liable for injury to young child while riding on running board of engine according to known custom of children.

Distinguished in Cederson v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. 38 Or. 359, 62 Pac. 637, holding duty of active vigilance owed by carrier to licensee by invitation.

Duty of carrier to trespassers.

Cited in Rathbone v. Oregon R. Co. 40 Or. 227, 66 Pac. 909, holding carrier only bound to use reasonable care to avoid injury to trespasser on hand car after discovery; Egan v. Montana C. R. Co. 24 Mont. 574, 63 Pac. 831, holding engineer not bound to keep lookout for trespassers; Schug v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 102 Wis. 522, 78 N. W. 1090, holding carrier running train at high speed not liable for injury to boy trespasser; Bias v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 46 W. Va. 359, 33 S. E. 240 (dissenting opinion), majority holding carrier liable for negligent killing of trespasser.

Cited in footnotes to Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tartt, 49 L. R. A. 99, which denies duty towards trespassers on track before discovery; Becker v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 53 L. R. A. 268, which requires stopping of train to enable trespasser discovered on railroad bridge to escape; Schreiner v. Great Northern R. Co. 58 L. R. A. 76, which holds that persons walking on tracks for their own convenience cannot require carrier to protect them from apparent dangers.

Cited in notes (25 L. R. A. 290) on duty to maintain lookout on railroad train; (25 L. R. A. 787) on care required of railroad companies to prevent injuring small children on track.

License by acquiescence.

Cited in Ewing v. Rhea, 37 Or. 587, 52 L. R. A. 142, 82 Am. St. Rep. 783, 62 Pac. 790, holding license by acquiescence in construction of ditch revocable at will; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Potter, 64 Kan. 22, 56 L. R. A. 580, footnote p. 575, 67 Pac. 534, defining what constitutes license to cross railroad track at place other than public crossing.

Last clear chance.

Cited in note (55 L. R. A. 458) on doctrine of last clear chance.

23 L. R. A. 719, TRABUE v. DWELLING HOUSE INS. CO. 121 Mo. 75, 42 Am. St. Rep. 523, 25 S. W. 848.

Change of interest as affecting insurance policy.

Distinguished in Collings v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 70 Mo. App. 17, holding deed by heirs to widow for life, of interest in ancestor's homestead, not change of title avoiding policy to widow and heirs.

Entire and divisible contracts.

Followed in Hollaway v. Dwelling House Ins. Co. 121 Mo. 88, 25 S. W. 850, holding policy covering real estate and personal property, divisible; Stephens v.

German Ins. Co. 61 Mo. App. 199, holding insurance on contents not invalidated by breach of warranty as to building; Fowler v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 35 Or. 567, 57 Pac. 421, holding entire policy avoided by false swearing as to proof of loss of part of it; Southern F. Ins. Co. v. Knight, 111 Ga. 634, 52 L. R. A. 74, footnote p. 70, 78 Am. St. Rep. 216, 36 S. E. 821, holding policy on different classes of property for premium payable in gross sum, indivisible.

Cited in footnotes to Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 30 L. R. A. 633, which holds insurance on personalty as well as on building avoided by nonoccupancy; Dumas v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. 40 L. R. A. 358, which holds entirely void, for breach of condition as to part, policy for certain amount on furniture as a whole.

Distinguished in Pettit v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 69 Mo. App. 321, holding claims for burning of house and furniture by same fire under same policy, constitute single demand; Huttig Sash & Door Co. v. M'Mahon, 81 Mo. App. 447, holding promissory notes illegal in part, wholly void.

Pleading.

Distinguished in Rissler v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 150 Mo. 373, 51 S. W. 755, upholding refusal to require plaintiff to elect on which cause of action he will rely under petition alleging loss, by one fire, of two classes of property insured in designated amounts.

23 L. R. A. 723, GRANT v. STATE, 33 Fla. 291, 14 So. 757.

Criminal verdicts and sentences.

Cited in Jenkins v. State, 35 Fla. 835, 48 Am. St. Rep. 267, 18 So. 182, holding verdict in case involving charge of murder, of guilty as charged, with recommendation of one defendant to mercy, a nullity; State v. McCaffery, 16 Mont. 39, 40 Pac. 63, holding plea of former jeopardy inadmissible where jury in former trial did not return verdict as required by Code.

Cited in footnote to Hechter v. State, 56 L. R. A. 457, which holds sealed verdict of guilty on some counts of indictment not invalidated by adding not guilty as to others before recording.

Cited in note (45 L. R. A. 136) on effect of excessive sentence.

Change in form of verdict.

Cited in Bryant v. State, 34 Fla. 298, 16 So. 177, holding direction of court to jury to substitute for words "the prisoner," the name of defendant, proper.

23 L. R. A. 737, EVANS v. JOHNSON, 39 W. Va. 299, 45 Am. St. Rep. 912, 19 S. E. 623.

Proceedings without due notice.

Cited in Goff v. Price, 42 W. Va. 390, 26 S. E. 287, holding that judgment on affirmative matter in answer cannot be taken against codefendant without service of process to reply to such answer; South Penn Oil Co. v. McIntire, 44 W. Va. 305, 28 S. E. 922, holding appointment of committee of insane person, without notice, void; Re Wellman, 3 Kan. App. 104, 45 Pac. 726; Jones v. Learned, 17 Colo. App. 78, 66 Pac. 1071; Stewart v. Taylor, 111 Ky. 254, 63 S. W. 783,—holding adjudication of insanity, without notice, void; Cox v. Von Ashlefeldt, 105 La. 582, 30 So. 175, holding that one cannot be denied status of person sui juris without formal proceedings based on notice; People ex rel. Ordway v. St. Savour's Sanitarium, 34 App. Div. 373, 56 N. Y. Supp. 431, holding commitment of inebriate, without notice, void.

Cited in footnotes to Porter v. Ritch, 39 L. R. A. 353, which upholds order by judge for temporary confinement of alleged lunatic pending proceedings to determine question of sanity; Re Lambert, 55 L. R. A. 856, which holds void, statute authorizing commitment to insane hospital without notice to alleged insane person.

Enforcement of vendor's lien.

Cited in Shields v. Tarleton, 48 W. Va. 346, 37 S. E. 589, refusing enforcement of vendor's lien because of laches; Burbridge v. Sadler, 46 W. Va. 43, 32 S. E. 1028, holding vendor's lien presumed paid after lapse of twenty years.

Statute of limitations.

Cited in Seymour v. Alkire, 47 W. Va. 304, 34 S. E. 953, holding personal decree against defendant, on claim barred by statute, erroneous, although lien exists for same on land.

23 L. R. A. 746, POTTER v. THE MAJESTIC, 9 C. C. A. 161, 20 U. S. App. 503, 60 Fed. 624.

Denial of petition to certify cause to supreme court in Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Potter, 13 C. C. A. 676, 14 U. S. App. 710, 69 Fed. 844.

Conflict of laws.

Cited in Wupperman v. The Carib Prince, 63 Fed. 268, upholding foreign contract limiting liability for damages from latent defects, under foreign law; Southern R. Co. v. Harrison, 119 Ala. 545, 43 L. R. A. 387, 72 Am. St. Rep. 936, 24 So. 552, holding contract of shipment from one state to another governed by law of state where made.

Cited in note (63 L. R. A. 529) on conflict of laws as to carrier's contracts.

Distinguished in The New England, 110 Fed. 417, holding stipulation in foreign contract exempting carrier from liability for loss of baggage from negligence of its servant, void.

Stipulations limiting carrier's liability.

Reversed in 166 U. S. 375, 41 L. ed. 1039, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 597, holding "conditions" on back of ticket to be notices, and not, as matter of law, part of contract, though words "See back," are printed on face of ticket.

Cited in Calderon v. Atlas S. S. Co. 16 C. C. A. 333, 35 C. C. A. 587, 69 Fed. 575, Reversing 64 Fed. 876, upholding stipulation limiting liability for goods above value of $100, unless special agreement made with reference thereto; The Kensington, 36 C. C. A. 535, 94 Fed. 887, upholding stipulation in ticket limiting liability for loss of baggage to 250 francs; Aiken v. Wabash R. Co. 86 Mo. App. 15, and The Priscilla, 106 Fed. 740, upholding contract on ticket limiting liability for loss of baggage to $100; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Turner, 100 Tenn. 222, 43 L. R. A. 142, footnote p. 140, 47 S. W. 223, holding mere stamping or printing of limitation on railroad ticket or posting of notice in waiting rooms insufficient to bind passenger.

Cited in footnotes to Rogers v. Kennebec S. B. Co. 25 L. R. A. 491, which holds one traveling with friend on pass of latter bound by unknown condition as to risks; O'Rourke v. Citizens' Street R. Co. 46 L. R. A. 614, which holds void, conditions on transfer check requiring passengers to ascertain correctness of date, time, and direction; Watson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 49 L. R. A. 454, which holds condition requiring return coupon of round-trip ticket to be stamped, reasonable; Crary v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 59 L. R. A. 815, which requires proof of negligence causing injury to passenger using excursion ticket, by which passenger assumes risk of accident.

Loss by perils of the sea.

Cited in Bancroft-Whitney Co. v. The Queen, 78 Fed. 167, holding evidence leaving in doubt question of how leak occurred not sufficient to bring carrier within exceptions of loss by perils of sea.

23 L. R. A. 753, CROAN v. PHELPS, 94 Ky. 213, 21 S. W. 874.

Rights of parents and children as affected by illegitimacy.

Cited in Adams v. Sneed, 41 Fla. 158, 25 So. 893, holding children of slave marriages not ratified after emancipation, neither legitimates nor bastards within statutes of descent; Johnson v. Bodine, 108 Iowa, 599, 79 N. W. 348, upholding right of children of illegitimate daughter of testator's brother to share in devise to his heirs; McCully v. Warrick, 61 N. J. Eq. 610, 46 Atl. 949, holding illegitimate brothers and sisters not entitled to take under statute providing for payment of personal estate of intestate illegitimate to mother, where such illegitimate survives the mother.

Cited in footnotes to Williams v. Kimball, 26 L. R. A. 746, which denies right of offspring of slave marriages to inherit property acquired by ancestors after emancipation; Murphy v. Portrum, 30 L. R. A. 263, which denies right of inheritance, as next of kin of father, of illegitimate child adopted but not legitimated; McDonald v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 32 L. R. A. 309, which denies right of action to father for death of illegitimate child; Leonard v. Braswell, 36 L. R. A. 707, which sustains right of offspring of bigamous marriage, void where entered into, to inherit lands in state declaring such issue legitimate; Van Horn v. Van Horn, 45 L. R. A. 93, which holds recognition of illegitimate son in other state sufficient to make him heir under Iowa statute; Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Williams, 51 L. R. A. 836, which denies mother's right to recover for death of illegitimate child; Moore v. Moore, 58 L. R. A. 451, which sustains bastard's right to inherit from brother of deceased mother.

23 L. R. A. 758, FISHER v. WEST VIRGINIA & P. R. CO. 39 W. Va. 366, 19 S. E. 578.

Second appeal in 42 W. Va. 201, 33 L. R. A. 76, 24 S. E. 570.

Lease of railroads and resulting liabilities.

Cited in footnotes to Van Steuben v. Central R. Co. 34 L. R. A. 577, which holds void, unauthorized lease of railroad; Lee v. Southern P. R. Co. 38 L. R. A. 71, which holds lessor of railroad liable to employee of lessee for injury due to defects of rails and track.

Cited in note (44 L. R. A. 739) on liability of lessor of railroad for injury caused by negligence of another company using road under lease, license, or other contract.

Distinguished in State v. Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. S. Co. 106 La. 524, 31 So. 115, holding lessor railroad not bound by judgment in action in which it was not made a party.

Carrier's duty toward passengers.

Cited in Wheeler v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 70 N. H. 620, 54 L. R. A. 959, footnote p. 955, 50 Atl. 103, holding carrier liable for fall of drunken passenger permitted to dance and stagger near door of baggage car; Burke v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 108 Ill. App. 573, holding carrier liable for injury resulting from negligently depositing passenger known to it to be helplessly intoxicated, in dangerous place.

Cited in footnotes to Price v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 38 L. R. A. 213, which holds negligence of trespasser sitting down on railroad track not excused by drunkenness; Bageard v. Consolidated Traction Co. 49 L. R. A. 424, which denies carrier's liability for injury to sick passenger supposed to be intoxicated, while going towards back of station after being helped to front, where way open to street; Southern P. Co. v. Tarin, 54 L. R. A. 240, which holds carrier liable for injury to unwarned passenger in car left standing till undermined by freshet; Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Saulsberry, 56 L. R. A. 580, which denies liability to drunken passenger ejected at station where ticket expires, for injuries in attempting to re-enter train; Southern R. Co. v. Hobbs, 63 L. R. A. 68, which holds carrier liable to partially blind passenger carried beyond her station without having reasonable opportunity to alight, despite conductor's promise to assist her; Korn v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 63 L. R. A. 873, which holds conductor not negligent in ejecting a short distance from the station, for refusal to pay fare, one who, while apparently intoxicated, was able to walk, and converse intelligently.

Cited in note (40 L. R. A. 131) on intoxication as affecting negligence.

Instructions to jury.

Cited in Webb v. Big Kanawha & O. R. Packet Co. 43 W. Va. 809, 29 S. E. 519, holding instruction containing abstract propositions of law, applicable to only one of two conflicting theories in case, erroneous; McVey v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 46 W. Va. 119, 32 S. E. 1012, holding instruction that carrier is bound to same degree of care towards person using its right of way, as if tracks ran through public street, erroneous; McVey v. St. Clair Co. 49 W. Va. 418, 38 S. E. 648, holding instruction failing to negative contributory negligence, erroneous.

Contributory negligence.

Cited in Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moneyhun, 146 Ind. 155, 34 L. R. A. 143, 44 N. E. 1106, holding boy going on lower step of car platform to vomit, guilty of contributory negligence.

23 L. R. A. 768, ATCHISON, T. & S. F. R. CO. v. REESMAN, 9 C. C. A. 20, 19 U. S. App. 596, 60 Fed. 370.

Master's duty to provide safe places and appliances.

Cited in Deserant v. Cerillos Coal R. Co. 178 U. S. 420, 44 L. ed. 1133, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 967, and Sommer v. Carbon Hill Coal Co. 32 C. C. A. 160, 59 U. S. App. 519, 89 Fed. 58, holding master liable for injury to servant, due to failure to remove gas from mine; Cudahy Packing Co. v. Anthes, 54 C. C. A. 506, 117 Fed. 120, holding master liable for injury to servant for failure to provide safe rope for elevator; Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Williams, 172 Ill. 382, 64 Am. St. Rep. 44, 50 N. E. 116, Affirming 60 Ill. App. 394, holding carrier liable for failure to erect fences, causing death of engineer through derailment of train by striking stray cattle.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 321) on obligation of railroad company to employee as to fencing track.

Vice principalship.

Cited in note (54 L. R. A. 65) on vice principalship as determined with reference to character of act which caused injury.

Rebuttal of incompetent testimony.

Cited in Roark v. Greeno, 61 Kan. 310, 59 Pac. 655, holding that incompetent testimony, erroneously admitted, may be rebutted.

Violation of master's rules by servant.

Cited in Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Finley, 12 C. C. A. 599, 25 U. S. App. 16, 63 Fed. 231, holding engineer without power to waive rule of master requiring brakeman to use stick in coupling; Kansas & A. Valley R. Co. v. Dye, 16 C. C. A. 608, 36 U. S. App. 23, 70 Fed. 28, holding section foreman failing to flag hand car as required by rule, guilty of contributory negligence; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Craig, 25 C. C. A. 591, 47 U. S. App. 647, 80 Fed. 495, holding master not liable for injury to servant, due to violation of rules in going between cars to uncouple them; Erie R. Co. v. Kane, 55 C. C. A. 141, 118 Fed. 235, denying recovery for death of fireman while cleaning number on front of engine in violation of rules.

Cited in note (43 L. R. A. 349) on duties of master to servant as to rules promulgated for safe conduct of business.

Proximate cause of injury.

Cited in Pittsburg, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hood, 36 C. C. A. 429, 94 Fed. 624, holding blowing off of steam and moving of train, which frightened horses, proximate cause of resulting injuries to driver.

23 L. R. A. 774, HAILE v. TEXAS & P. R. CO. 9 C. C. A. 134, 23 U. S. App. 80, 60 Fed. 557.

Injuries due to mere fright or mental disturbance.

Cited in Haas v. Metz, 78 Ill. App. 52, denying right of recovery for physical injuries caused by mental disturbance due to words spoken by defendant; Kalen v. Terre Haute & I. R. R. Co. 18 Ind. App. 207, 63 Am. St. Rep. 343, 47 N. E. 694, holding damages not recoverable for fright and mental anguish unaccompanied by physical injury; Mitchell v. Rochester R. Co. 151 N. Y. 109, 34 L. R. A. 783, 56 Am. St. Rep. 604, 45 N. E. 354; Braun v. Craven, 175 Ill. 411, 42 L. R. A. 203, 51 N. E. 657; Spade v. Lynn & B. R. Co. 168 Mass. 290, 38 L. R. A. 514, 60 Am. St. Rep. 393, 47 N. E. 88,—denying right of recovery for injury due to mere fright and mental disturbance; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Stewart, 24 Ind. App. 382, 56 N. E. 917, holding damages for impairment of health by fright, due to impending danger to plaintiff's daughter through defendant's negligence, not recoverable; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Ferguson, 26 Ind. App. 220, 59 N. E. 416, holding action maintainable against telegraph company for mental anguish due to its failure to deliver message.

Cited in footnotes to Smith v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 47 L. R. A. 323, which denies right of recovery for sickness due to fright caused by grossly negligent act of one knowing such result would follow; Homans v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 57 L. R. A. 291, which holds carrier liable for nervous shock to passenger resulting from jar to nervous system, accompanying blow, caused by being negligently thrown on seat; Watson v. Dilts, 57 L. R. A. 559, which holds one liable for frightening woman, causing nervous prostration, by stealthily entering her home in nighttime; Kline v. Kline, 58 L. R. A. 397, which sustains right to damages for mental suffering for assault by pointing gun, with threat to shoot unless house abandoned; Sanderson v. Northern P. R. Co. 60 L. R. A. 403, which denies right to recover for fright resulting in physical injury, but without contemporaneous injury, unless fright proximate result of legal wrong; Reed v. Maley, 62 L. R. A. 900, which holds that merely soliciting woman to have sexual intercourse gives her no right of action because of wounded feelings and humiliation.

Disapproved in effect in Watkins v. Kaolin Mfg. Co. 131 N. C. 543, 60 L. R. A. 620, 42 S. E. 983, and Mack v. South Bound R. Co. 52 S. C. 334, 40 L. R. A. 684, 68 Am. St. Rep. 913, 29 S. E. 905, holding damages for injury caused by fright due to negligence, recoverable; Cowan v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 122 Iowa, 382, 64 L. R. A. 549, 101 Am. St. Rep. 268, 98 N. W. 281, holding damages for mental pain and suffering, resulting from negligent transmission of telegram, recoverable.

Proximate cause of injury.

Cited in Stone v. Boston & A. R. Co. 171 Mass. 542, 41 L. R. A. 798, 51 N. E. 1, holding railroad company carelessly storing oil not liable for negligent act of stranger igniting it, fire spreading to adjacent buildings.

23 L. R. A. 777, BOGGESS v. CHESAPEAKE & O. R. CO. 37 W. Va. 227, 16 S. E. 525.

Risks of employment.

Cited in Woodell v. West Virginia Improv. Co. 38 W. Va. 46, 17 S. E. 336, holding risk of dangerous limb of tree projecting over railroad assumed by employee, continuing in service after knowledge of it.

Contributory negligence.

Cited in footnotes to Distler v. Long Island R. Co. 35 L. R. A. 762, which holds stepping from station platform on to slowly moving train not negligence per se; Jones v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 41 L. R. A. 490, which denies right of one attempting to enter car of mixed train at distance from station, to recover for injury from sudden jolting of car in coupling.

Rights of persons riding on freight trains.

Cited in footnotes to Richmond v. Southern P. Co. 57 L. R. A. 616, which holds unenforceable, agreement by purchaser of mileage ticket at reduced rate not to hold carrier liable for injury on freight train; Purple v. Union P. R. Co. 57 L. R. A. 700, which holds one riding on train prohibited from carrying passengers, a trespasser.

23 L. R. A. 780, ROBINSON v. GRAY, 90 Iowa, 699, 57 N. W. 614.

Right of chattel mortgagee to immediate possession of property.

Cited in footnote to Singer Mfg. Co. v. Rios, 60 L. R. A. 143, which sustains provision authorizing mortgagee to take possession of chattels on default in payment.

Distinguished in Koster v. Seney, 100 Iowa, 564, 69 N. W. 868, holding that right of chattel mortgagee to take possession of mortgaged property does not include right to sell until debt, or some part of it, becomes due.

23 L. R. A. 785, PEOPLE ex rel. NEW YORK HOTEL & RESTAURANT CO. v. BARKER, 140 N. Y. 437, 55 N. Y. S. R. 796, 35 N. E. 657.

Corporations as persons.

Cited in footnote to Fleming v. Texas Loan Agency, 26 L. R. A. 250, which holds corporation a "person" within statute creating liability for death of one person by another.

23 L. R. A. 787, PEOPLE ex rel. CONNOR v. STAPLETON, 18 Colo. 568, 33 Pac. 167.

Contempt of court.

Cited in Bloom v. People, 23 Colo. 420, 48 Pac. 519, holding mere disclaimer of improper motives will not purge publisher of contempt; People ex rel. Alexander v. District Court, 29 Colo. 220, 68 Pac. 242, holding as contempt of court, assessment by board of assessors pending hearing in supreme court of application for writ to prohibit district court from enforcing injunction forbidding assessment; State ex rel. Haskell v. Faulds, 17 Mont. 145, 42 Pac. 285, holding publication of editorial charging supreme court judges with dealing out injustice, and entering into "dirty deal" to do so, contempt of court; State v. Bee Pub. Co. 60 Neb. 295, 50 L. R. A. 197, footnote p. 195, 83 Am. St. Rep. 531, 83 N. W. 204, sustaining punishment for contempt of newspaper publishing articles threatening judges with public odium if they decide pending cause in certain way; Re Hughes, 8 N. M. 241, 43 Pac. 692, upholding punishment by imprisonment for publication of article charging supreme court judges with improper motives in institution of disbarment proceedings; Burke v. Territory, 2 Okla. 521, 37 Pac. 829, holding published statement charging action of court as "attempt to browbeat grand jury," contempt of court; State v. Tugwell, 19 Wash. 255, 43 L. R. A. 723, footnote p. 717, 52 Pac. 1056, holding publication of embarrassing articles within time allowed for modification of opinion, a contempt; Taylor v. Goodrich, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 116, 40 S. W. 515, raising, but not deciding, question whether libelous criticism of judicial action after final disposition of case is punishable as contempt; State ex rel. Crow v. Shepherd, 177 Mo. 235, 99 Am. St. Rep. 624, 76 S. W. 79, holding legislature powerless to take away, abridge, impair, limit, or regulate power of courts to punish for contempt.

Cited in footnotes to State ex rel. Ashbaugh v. Circuit Court, 38 L. R. A. 554, which denies power to punish for criminal contempt, newspapers charging candidate for re-election as judge with corruption and partiality in actions already ended; Ex parte Foster, 60 L. R. A. 631, which denies court's power to adjudge, on own motion, publisher in contempt for disobeying oral order not to publish testimony in pending case.

Cited in note (36 L. R. A. 255) on legislative power to abridge power of court to punish for contempt.

23 L. R. A. 795, LOBECK v. LEE-CLARK-ANDREESSEN HARDWARE CO. 37 Neb. 158, 55 N. W. 650.

23 L. R. A. 802, WILSON v. KING, 59 Ark. 32, 26 S. W. 18.

23 L. R. A. 803, HOOKE'S SUCCESSION, 46 La. Ann. 353, 15 So. 150.

Matrimonial community of acquets and gains.

Cited in Verrier v. Loris, 48 La. Ann. 722, 19 So. 677, holding that administrator of succession of deceased wife cannot take control of property held in community between deceased and surviving husband and usufructuary; Messick v. Mayer, 52 La. Ann. 1175, 27 So. 815, holding entire community assets liable for debts of husband and partner, leaving widow and heir.

23 L. R. A. 805, HOPSON v. FOWLKES, 92 Tenn. 697, 36 Am. St. Rep. 120, 23 S. W. 55.

Tenancy by entirety.

Cited in Russell v. Russell, 122 Mo. 238, 26 S. W. 677, holding woman divorced from husband entitled to partition of land held by entirety during marriage.

Cited in note (30 L. R. A. 334) on tenancy by entireties.

Distinguished in Cole Mfg. Co. v. Collier, 95 Ten. 120, 30 L. R. A. 318, 49 Am. St. Rep. 921, 31 S. W. 1000, refusing possession to purchaser of estate by entirety, at execution sale for husband's debts, wife being alive.

23 L. R. A. 807, MT. VERNON v. PEOPLE, 147 Ill. 359, 35 N. E. 533.

Local assessments.

Cited in note (35 L. R. A. 38) on liability to local assessments for benefits, of property exempt from general taxation.

23 L. R. A. 812, WADSWORTH v. UNION P. R. CO. 18 Colo. 600, 36 Am. St. Rep. 309, 33 Pac. 515.

Followed without comment in Union P. R. Co. v. Kerr, 19 Colo. 273, 35 Pac. 47, action for killing of live stock.

Appealable orders and judgments.

Distinguished in Monteith v. Union P. D. & G. R. Co. 13 Colo. App. 423, 58 Pac. 338, holding order granting or refusing new trial not appealable.

Correct judgment based on erroneous reasons.

Cited in Home Ins. Co. v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 19 Colo. 48, 34 Pac. 281, holding correct judgment not reversible because based on erroneous reason.

Obiter dictum.

Cited in Olin v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 25 Colo. 184, 53 Pac. 454, holding dictum of court on question not involved in case not controlling; Rupert v. People, 20 Colo. 431, 38 Pac. 702 (dissenting opinion by Elliott, J.), who holds that general expressions in opinions are to be taken in connection with case in which used; Crissey & F. Lumber Co. v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 17 Colo. App. 302, 68 Pac. 670, holding that general expressions in opinion, going beyond case, may be disregarded.

Validity of statutes and ordinances.

Cited in Valverde v. Shattuck, 19 Colo. 110, 41 Am. St. Rep. 208, 34 Pac. 947, upholding statute authorizing submission of question of annexation of town, to voters who were taxpayers at next preceding election; Denver v. Coulehan.

20 Colo. 478, 27 L. R. A. 754, 39 Pac. 425, holding provision in act for annexation to city of uncontiguous territory, void; Smith v. Seattle, 25 Wash. 308, 65 Pac. 612, holding constitutional limit on indebtedness to be incurred for water, light, and sewers, not applicable to local assessments for laying water mains; Re Morgan, 26 Colo. App. 441, 47 L. R. A. 63, 77 Am. St. Rep. 269, 58 Pac. 1071, holding eight-hour law unconstitutional.

Cited in note (21 L. R. A. 789, 791) on constitutionality of statutes restricting contracts and business.

— Acts relating to fires and killing of stock by railroads.

Followed in Sweetland v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 22 Colo. 220, 43 Pac. 1006, and Rio Grande Western R. Co. v. Vaughn, 3 Colo. App. 466, 34 Pac. 264, holding stock-killing act unconstitutional; Rio Grande Western R. Co. v. Chamberlin, 4 Colo. App. 150, 34 Pac. 1113; Rio Grande Western R. Co. v. Whitson, 4 Colo. App. 427, 36 Pac. 159; Union P. R. Co. v. Bullis, 6 Colo. App. 65, 39 Pac. 897; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Wheatley, 7 Colo. App. 286, 43 Pac. 450; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Thompson, 12 Colo. App. 3, 54 Pac. 402,—holding Colorado stock-killing act unconstitutional.

Cited in Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Tanner, 19 Colo. 563, 36 Pac. 541, holding act imposing double liability for killing of live stock, penal; Burlington & M. River R. Co. v. Campbell, 14 Colo. App. 143, 59 Pac. 424, holding complaint failing to charge defendant with negligence in killing of stock, under statute, defective.

Cited in note (25 L. R. A. 163) on constitutionality of statutes making railroad companies absolutely liable for damage by fires set out by them, or for stock killed by them, regardless of negligence.

23 L. R. A. 818, DAVIS v. STEEPS, 87 Wis. 472, 41 Am. St. Rep. 51, 58 N. W. 769.

Mistakes in records and in writing of names.

Cited in Western Sav. Co. v. Currey, 39 Or. 412, 87 Am. St. Rep. 660, 65 Pac. 360, holding entry of judgment not stating when docketed not sufficient to create lien.

Cited in footnotes to State v. Higgins, 27 L. R. A. 74, which holds second initial a material part of name where only initial of first name given; Stuyvesant v. Weil, 53 L. R. A. 562, which holds mistake in Christian name of defendant, duly served and notified that he is person intended, not prevent jurisdiction.

Fraudulent indorsement of one's own name.

Cited in footnote to Beattie v. National Bank, 43 L. R. A. 654, which holds forgery not committed by fraudulently indorsing own name on paper belonging to other person with same name.

23 L. R. A. 821, COHN v. PEOPLE, 149 Ill. 486, 41 Am. St. Rep. 304, 37 N. E. 60.

Trademarks and labels.

Cited in Lippman v. People, 175 Ill. 109, 51 N. E. 872, holding trademark act for protection of manufacturers, bottlers, and dealers in certain beverages, unconstitutional; Hetterman Bros. v. Powers, 102 Ky. 141, 39 L. R. A. 213, 80

Am. St. Rep. 348, 43 S. W. 180, upholding right of labor union to selection and exclusive use of particular trade label; Tracy v. Banker, 170 Mass. 271, 39 L. R. A. 510, 49 N. E. 308, holding trade union entitled to benefit of act for protection of "manufacturers from use of counterfeit labels and stamps;" State v. Bishop, 128 Mo. 383, 29 L. R. A. 207, 49 Am. St. Rep. 569, 31 S. W. 9, upholding constitutionality of statute making it a misdemeanor to use label adopted by trade union; State v. Berlinsheimer, 62 Mo. App. 175, reversing conviction for use of counterfeit label, because of failure to prove that goods sold were not entitled to bear genuine label; Schmalz v. Wooley, 56 N. J. Eq. 655, 39 Atl. 539, holding act relating to labels, trademarks, etc., adopted by associations or unions of workingmen, unconstitutional as granting exclusive privileges.

Cited in note (29 L. R. A. 206) on protection of trade union labels or trademarks.

Construction of statutes.

Cited in Hogan v. Akin, 181 Ill. 453, 55 N. E. 137, construing word "void" as used in chattel mortgage statute not to mean "absolutely void;" Thompson v. Akin, 81 Ill. App. 64, construing word "void" as used in chattel mortgage statute to mean "absolutely void."

Title to statutes.

Cited in Cook v. Marshall County, 119 Iowa, 399, 93 N. W. 372, holding section providing for tax against persons dealing in cigarettes sufficiently expressed in title of act relating to "crimes and their punishment;" State ex rel. Smith v. Board of Dental Examiners, 31 Wash. 498, 72 Pac. 110, holding act to regulate dentistry, and providing a penalty, not unconstitutional because of failure of title to specify that penalty was provided.

23 L. R. A. 824, LAMBERTON v. PERELES, 87 Wis. 449, 58 N. W. 776.

Jurisdiction.

Cited in Kruczinski v. Neuendorf, 99 Wis. 270, 74 N. W. 974, holding action maintainable in equity by owners of title to land not in possession, to remove clouds from title; Wells, F. & Co. v. Walsh, 88 Wis. 538, 60 N. W. 824, upholding jurisdiction of circuit court to entertain action to enforce trust of trustee appointed by county court; Hill v. True, 104 Wis. 301, 80 N. W. 462, upholding jurisdiction of circuit court in action to determine rights of cestui que trust in real estate.

Express trusts.

Cited in Boyd v. Mutual Fire Asso. 116 Wis. 179, 61 L. R. A. 928, 96 Am. St. Rep. 948, 54 N. W. 171, holding officers of corporation not express trustees.

Exemption of trust estate from debts.

Cited in Williams v. Smith, 117 Wis. 148, 93 N. W. 464, holding statute exempting income of trust from liability for debt not applicable to personal property.

Common-law rule as to perpetuities.

Cited in Becker v. Chester, 115 Wis. 143, 91 N. W. 87 (dissenting opinion), majority holding common-law rule as to perpetuities not in force in Wisconsin.

23 L. R. A. 830, PEOPLE v. HAYES, 140 N. Y. 484, 56 N. Y. S. R. 456, 37 Am. St. Rep. 572, 35 N. E. 951.

Trial of criminal charge during pendency of civil action.

Cited in Greene v. People, 182 Ill. 283, 55 N. E. 341, and Hereford v. People, 197 Ill. 231, 64 N. E. 310, holding that trial for perjury may proceed before conclusion of proceeding in which it is charged to have been made.

Ex post facto laws.

Cited in footnotes to State v. Kyle, 56 L. R. A. 115, which sustains statute authorizing prosecution by information of crimes already committed; People ex rel. Chandler v. McDonald, 29 L. R. A. 834, which holds statute not ex post facto for abrogating provision for change of magistrate or of venue for prejudice.

Confidential communications.

Cited in Lecour v. Importers & T. Nat. Bank, 61 App. Div. 169, 70 N. Y. Supp. 419, holding communication made openly to lawyer's clerk in presence of two other persons not confidential.

23 L. R. A. 835, Re McCARRAN, 8 Misc. 482, 29 N. Y. Supp. 582.

23 L. R. A. 836, FLANNAGAN v. CALIFORNIA NAT. BANK, 56 Fed. 959.

Powers of banks.

Cited in Cox v. Robinson, 27 C. C. A. 132, 48 U. S. App. 388, 82 Fed. 289, holding jury justified in finding vice president of bank had authority to assign judgment, having been held out to public as invested with authority to manage affairs of bank; Bowen v. Needles Nat. Bank, 36 C. C. A. 559, 94 Fed. 931, Affirming 87 Fed. 439 (dissenting opinion), majority holding agreement of national bank to guarantee payment of debt of third party for his benefit, ultra vires.

Cited in footnote to Thomas v. City Nat. Bank, 24 L. R. A. 263, which upholds national bank's power to guarantee payment of commercial paper.

23 L. R. A. 838, PEOPLE ex rel. WELLS v. BERKELEY, 102 Cal. 298, 36 Pac. 591.

Number of votes necessary to carry election.

Cited in Re Denny, 156 Ind. 119, 51 L. R. A. 728, footnote p. 722, 59 N. E. 359, requiring majority of all votes cast for any purpose at election, to adopt constitutional amendment; Davis v. Brown, 46 W. Va. 719, 34 S. E. 839, holding vote for relocation of county seat carried by three fifths of votes on question, although less than three fifths of whole number cast.

Cited in footnotes to Belknap v. Louisville, 34 L. R. A. 256, which requires two thirds of all votes cast for any purpose necessary to authorize municipal indebtedness; Bryan v. Stephenson, 35 L. R. A. 752, which requires majority of all votes cast at election to authorize issue of bonds; Citizens & Taxpayers v. Williams, 37 L. R. A. 761, which holds only majority of taxpayers actually voting at election necessary to authorize increase of taxes; Montgomery County Fiscal Court v. Trimble, 42 L. R. A. 738, which holds two thirds of those voting on question of creating county indebtedness sufficient; State ex rel. McClurg v. Powell, 48 L. R. A. 652, which requires majority of all electors voting at election for any purpose, to adopt constitutional amendment.

23 L. R. A. 842, KERR v. LYDECKER, 51 Ohio St. 240, 37 N. E. 267.

Followed without comment in Gray v. Clyde, 53 Ohio St. 673, 44 N. E. 1137, and Walling v. Humble, 51 Ohio St. 628.

Statute of limitations.

Cited in Zuellig v. Hemerlie, 60 Ohio St. 33, 71 Am. St. Rep. 707, 53 N. E. 447, holding action by surety for subrogation to mortgage subject to ten-year statute of limitations; Bradfield v. Hale, 67 Ohio St. 322, 65 N. E. 1008, holding twenty-one-year statute of limitations applicable to mortgagee's action in ejectment; Teegarden v. Burton, 62 Neb. 641, 87 N. W. 337, holding that right of action on mortgage accrues within ten years after date of last payment on note secured by it; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Lord, 40 C. C. A. 591, 100 Fed. 23, holding title not rendered unmarketable by uncanceled mortgages of record, forty-seven and forty-nine years old; Waterfield v. Rice, 49 C. C. A. 509, 111 Fed. 625, holding suit to enforce lien established upon land by direction in will for payment of annuity not barred in six years; Wilson v. Pickering, 28 Mont. 440, 72 Pac. 821, holding mortgage barred only when debt it secures is barred.

Foreclosure as affecting wife's dower.

Cited in Sprague v. Law, 17 Ohio C. C. 737, holding judgment debtor cannot set up foreclosure proceedings to defeat wife's right of dower in land mortgaged by husband before marriage.

23 L. R. A. 846, BUSWELL v. SUPREME SITTING, O. OF I. H. 161 Mass. 224, 36 N. E. 1065.

Comity of states as to insolvent estates.

Cited in Ewing v. King, 169 Mass. 100, 47 N. E. 597, holding question of foreign receiver's right to sue waived by failure to raise it on demurrer or argument; Witters v. Globe Sav. Bank, 171 Mass. 426, 50 N. E. 932, upholding rights of trustee under foreign assignment over title of foreign creditor by subsequent attachment; Howarth v. Lombard, 175 Mass. 579, 49 L. R. A. 307, 56 N. E. 888, holding legal assessment against domestic holder of shares in foreign corporation recoverable by foreign receiver; Homer v. Barr Pumping Engine Co. 180 Mass. 164, 91 Am. St. Rep. 269, 61 N. E. 883, holding action not maintainable by foreign receiver in his own name, unless actually or virtually assignee of the claim; Baldwin v. Hosmer, 101 Mich. 132, 25 L. R. A. 743, footnote p. 739, 59 N. W. 432, denying right of local branch of foreign society to refuse to turn over assessments to ancillary receiver; Cowen v. Failey, 149 Ind. 384, 49 N. E. 270, allowing foreign claimants to intervene and prove claims, although portion of claims had been paid by local receiver under order of foreign court; MacMurray v. Sidwell, 155 Ind. 566, 80 Am. St. Rep. 255, 58 N. E. 722, refusing to prefer claims of domestic stockholders of insolvent foreign corporation as to funds in hands of domestic receiver; Hale v. Harris, 112 Iowa, 375, 83 N. W. 1046, upholding right of foreign receiver to foreclose mortgage assigned to him; Mosher v. Supreme Sitting, O. I. H. 88 Hun, 400, 34 N. Y. Supp. 816, upholding power of court to order transfer of funds in hands of domestic receiver to foreign receiver; Barley v. Gittings, 15 App. D. C. 439, holding that foreign receiver may be permitted to sue or intervene in suit in District of Columbia as a privilege; Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Miller, 55 C. C. A. 198, 118 Fed.

372, and Smith v. Taggart, 30 C. C. A. 567, 57 U. S. App. 493, 87 Fed. 98, holding that local state receivers should be directed to transmit assets of insolvent mutual benefit association to receiver in principal action; Sands v. E. S. Greeley & Co. 31 C. C. A. 426, 59 U. S. App. 610, 88 Fed. 133, refusing to order claims of domestic creditors paid before turning over assets in hands of domestic to foreign receiver; Shinney v. North American Sav. Loan & Bldg. Co. 97 Fed. 11, upholding power of court of equity to appoint receiver of foreign corporation assets within its jurisdiction.

Cited in footnotes to Fawcett v. Supreme Sitting, O. I. H. 24 L. R. A. 815, which refuses to turn over to foreign receiver of foreign corporation funds in hands of local receiver; Failey v. Fee, 32 L. R. A. 311, which requires payment of established debts before sending assets to receiver at domicil of foreign insolvent corporation; Castleman v. Templeman, 41 L. R. A. 367, which denies receiver's power to consent to decree in other state for payment of assessments by stockholders to creditors.

Cited in note (38 L. R. A. 98, 108) on distribution of assets of insolvent insurance company.

Rules and laws of benefit associations.

Cited in Palmer v. Northern Mut. Relief Asso. 175 Mass. 397, 78 Am. St. Rep. 503, 56 N. E. 828, holding that death benefit fund of mutual benefit association not subject to attachment in action to enforce judgment founded on death benefit certificate; Garham v. Mutual Aid Soc. 161 Mass. 367, 37 N. E. 447, holding membership of organization is to be determined according to constitution and by-laws of the supreme lodge and subordinate lodges.

Priority of payment of insolvency claims.

Cited in American Loan & T. Co. v. Northwestern Guaranty Co. 166 Mass. 344, 44 N. E. 340, holding claimants of trust fund not entitled to priority as between themselves, because of written demand on trustee; National Park Bank v. Clark, 92 App. Div. 269, 87 N. Y. Supp. 185, holding funds collected by assessments for death claims not impressed with trust in favor of beneficiaries.

23 L. R. A. 853, VAN WINKLE v. SATTERFIELD, 58 Ark. 617, 25 S. W. 1113.

Actions against employers for wrongful discharge.

Cited in Bassett v. French, 10 Misc. 675, 31 N. Y. Supp. 667, holding that wrongfully discharged servant cannot recover damages beyond date of trial; Lee v. Dow, 71 N. H. 328, 51 Atl. 1072, upholding right of wrongfully discharged servant to recover for remainder of term beyond time of trial; Weil v. Finneran, 70 Ark. 511, 69 S. W. 310, holding wrongfully discharged attorney, engaged on percentage basis, entitled to recover expenses and for value of services, where suit was brought before termination of original action.

Cited in footnote to Edgecomb v. Buckhout, 28 L. R. A. 816, which denies right to discharge housekeeper for marriage or contemplated marriage.

23 L. R. A. 856, PEOPLE ex rel. FORSYTH v. COURT OF SESSIONS, 141 N. Y. 288, 57 N. Y. S. R. 404, 36 N. E. 386.

Criminal sentences, pardons, and paroles.

Cited in People ex rel. Dunnigan v. Webster, 14 Misc. 618, 36 N. Y. Supp. 745, upholding power of courts of special sessions to suspend sentence; Neal v.

State, 104 Ga. 513, 42 L. R. A. 192, footnote p. 190, 69 Am. St. Rep. 175, 30 S. E. 858, holding void, attempt to suspend execution of sentence after pronouncing it; People ex rel. Boenert v. Barrett, 202 Ill. 295, 63 L. R. A. 85, 95 Am. St. Rep. 230, 67 N. E. 23, holding court's jurisdiction to pronounce sentence lost by two years' delay after conviction; Miller v. Evans, 115 Iowa, 103, 56 L. R. A. 102, footnote p. 101, 91 Am. St. Rep. 143, 88 N. W. 198, denying defendant's right to relief or failure to execute mittimus under judgment sentencing to imprisonment on failure to pay fine, until lapse of time of imprisonment; Re Webb, 89 Wis. 357, 27 L. R. A. 357, footnote p. 356, 46 Am. St. Rep. 846, 62 N. W. 177, denying authority to suspend sentence already pronounced.

Cited in footnotes to State v. Crook, 29 L. R. A. 260, which holds power of court after suspension of sentence not lost by committing for refusal to pay costs as ordered; Miller v. State, 40 L. R. A. 109, which upholds statute for indeterminate sentence of criminals; Weber v. State, 41 L. R. A. 472, which sustains power of court to suspend sentence and set aside suspension at any time during term; Re Conditional Discharge of Convicts, 56 L. R. A. 658, which sustains statute empowering board to grant paroles after expiration of minimum sentence provided for; Parker v. State, 23 L. R. A. 859, holding granting of stay of execution pending appeal not reprieve; Territory v. Richardson, 49 L. R. A. 440, which holds invalid, statutory limitations and pardoning power of governor; People ex rel. Boenert v. Barrett, 63 L. R. A. 82, which denies court's power to indefinitely suspend sentence after conviction.

Cited in note (34 L. R. A. 255) on legislative power to grant pardon or amnesty.

Review by mandamus.

Cited in People ex rel. Sackett v. Woodbury, 70 App. Div. 421, 75 N. Y. Supp. 236, holding action of surrogate in refusing to issue execution without notice to administrator not reviewable by mandamus.

Restoration to civil rights.

Cited in Singleton v. State, 38 Fla. 304, 34 L. R. A. 255, 56 Am. St. Rep. 177, 21 So. 21, holding ability to testify not restored by act of legislature providing that person convicted of larceny should be restored to civil rights.

23 L. R. A. 859, PARKER v. STATE, 135 Ind. 534, 35 N. E. 179.

Reprieves and pardons.

Cited in footnotes to People ex rel. Forsyth v. Court of Sessions, 23 L. R. A. 856, which holds valid, act authorizing court to suspend sentence; Rich v. Chamberlain, 27 L. R. A. 573, which holds valid, act establishing board of pardons to investigate facts on petition for pardon and to make recommendations to governor; Territory v. Richardson, 49 L. R. A. 440, which holds invalid, statutory limitations and pardoning power of governor; Re Conditional Discharge of Convicts, 56 L. R. A. 658, which sustains statute empowering board to grant paroles after expiration of minimum sentence provided for.

Cited in note (34 L. R. A. 255) on legislative power to grant pardon or amnesty.

Interest on judgments.

Cited in Hoyt v. Beach, 104 Iowa, 260, 65 Am. St. Rep. 461, 73 N. W. 492, holding interest allowable on judgment for costs and attorney's fees from date of entry of judgment.

23 L. R. A. 861, CHICAGO, ST. L. & P. R. CO. v. CHAMPION (Ind.) 32 N. E. 874.

Proof of experiments.

Cited in Byers^o v. Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. 94 Tenn. 354, 29 S. W. 128, holding competent, proof of ex parte experiment by locomotive engineer after accident.

Cited in footnote to People v. Searcey, 41 L. R. A. 157, which holds box of sand containing tracks made with shoes of accused person admissible.

23 L. R. A. 863, ROTHROCK v. DWELLING-HOUSE INS. CO. 161 Mass. 423, 42 Am. St. Rep. 418, 37 N. E. 206.

Service of process upon corporations.

Cited in Union Guaranty & T. Co. v. Craddock, 59 Ark. 607, 28 S. W. 424, holding service of foreign insurance corporation complying with statutes, not made on state auditor or designated agent, void; Sparks v. National Masonic Acci. Asso. 100 Iowa, 466, 69 N. W. 678, upholding power of state to designate method of service upon corporations doing business therein.

23 L. R. A. 864, BOOTH & H. ABSTRACT CO. v. PHELPS, 8 Wash. 549, 40 Am. St. Rep. 921, 36 Pac. 489.

Property capable of sale.

Cited in Washington Bank v. Fidelity Abstract & Secur. Co. 15 Wash. 490, 37 L. R. A. 116, footnote p. 115, 55 Am. St. Rep. 902, 46 Pac. 1036, authorizing sale under mortgage thereon of books and maps containing record of land titles in certain county; Hanley v. Fidelity Ins. Trust & S. D. Co. 8 Pa. Dist. R. 207, 24 Pa. Co. Ct. 503, holding secret formula and process capable of sale.

Cited in note (51 L. R. A. 358, 381) on common-law rights of authors and others in intellectual productions.

2

